HERSCHEL, WILLIAM, a distinguished astronomer, was born at Hanover on the 15th November, 1738. He was the second of five sons, who were all educated as musicians, following the same profession as their father. At the early age of fourteen William was placed in the band of Hanoverian foot guards; but seeing that the little prospect of promotion in his native country he resolved to try his fortune in England, where he arrived about the end of 1757. After experiencing the difficulties to which early genius is frequently exposed, he was engaged by the earl of Darlington to instruct a military band which was then forming in the county of Durham. When he had fulfilled this engagement he established himself as a teacher of music in the vicinity of Louth, Pontefract, and Doncaster, and conducted the public concerts and oratorios in these towns. In 1763 he obtained the situation of organist at Halifax, and soon afterwards a more lucrative appointment in the Octagon chapel in Bath, where he was successful as a teacher of music, and a director of the public concerts. During his residence at Bath he acquired a considerable knowledge of mathematics, and having studied astronomy in the popular writings of James Ferguson, he was anxious to see with his own eyes the wonderful celestial phenomena disclosed by the telescope. Unfortunately for science he was unable to purchase an instrument for this purpose, and he thereupon resolved to construct one with his own hands. After surmounting the difficulties which attended the practice of grinding and polishing specula, he completed in 1774 a five feet Newtonian reflector with which he could see the satellites of Jupiter and the ring of Saturn. Not contented with this instrument he made for himself several two feet, five feet, seven feet, eighteen feet, and twenty feet Newtonian telescopes, besides Gregorian ones of six inches, one foot, two feet, three feet, and ten feet focal length, and in order to get a good specimen he ground and polished a large number upon the same tool, and selected the one which happened to have the best figure. In this way he made no fewer than 200 seven feet, 150 ten feet, and about twenty feet telescopes. His mechanical amusements were carried on along with his optical ones, and he invented and executed a number of stands of different forms for these instruments.—His first regular observations with the telescope were made in 1781 and subsequent years. They were published in the Philosophical Transactions for 1780, and related to the periodical star in the neck of the whale and the height of the lunar mountains. In 1781 he discovered what he at first thought a comet, but turned out to be a new planet, which he called Georgium Sidus, but which has now received the name of Uranus, from its being next to Saturn. After this discovery, which extended his reputation over Europe, George III. munificently enabled him, by the grant of a salary, to devote the whole of his time to astronomy. He thereafter took up his residence at Datchet, near Windsor, where he made many discoveries on double and triple stars, on the proper motion of the sun ar system, the spots at the pole of Mars, and the nebulae and cluster of stars observed by Messier and Mechain. On the 11th January, 1787, he discovered a second and fourth satellite of the Georgium Sidus, and in 1790 and 1799, five satellites, viz., the first, third, fifth, and sixth, all of which move in a retrograde direction, orbits almost perpendicular to the plane of the ecliptic.—Thus successful as an observer, he began in 1781 to construct a thirty feet reflector, but a mirror, which was no less than three feet diameter, cracked in the cooling, and frustrated his plan. This disappointment induced him to seek for extraneous assistance in carrying out his views; and on the recommendation of Sir Joseph Banks, George III. offered to defray the expense of a forty feet telescope, with a mirror four feet diameter, three and a-half inches thick, and weighing 2118 pounds. With this magnificent instrument he discovered the sixth and seventh satellites of Saturn, and also the spots, belts, and flattening, at the poles of that planet. Till the year 1820 Sir William Herschel communicated most every year important papers to the Royal Society on nebulae, clusters of stars, the construction of the heavens, the motion of the solar system, double stars, and on the four new planets between Mars and Jupiter. We owe to him also the discovery of invisible heating rays beyond the red extremity of the spectrum. Sir William Herschel was elected an honorary member of most of the scientific institutions in Europe and America. In 1806 he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws, and in 1816 he was presented with the decorations of the Guelphic order. In 1820 he was elected the first president of the Astronomical Society, and he published in the 1st volume of its Transactions, a paper on 145 new double stars. He had not reached that age when the mind as well as the body requires a cessation from labour. His health had begun to decline, and on the 25th August, 1822, he died in the eighty-fourth year of his age. In the year 1788 Sir William married the widow John Pitt, Esq., and left behind him only one son, the present Sir John Herschel. [D.B.]

[Herschel's Tomb in Upton Church.]

HERSCHEL, CAROLINE LUCRETIA, sister of the great Herschel, distinguished for the arduous assistance she rendered her brother in his astronomical pursuits, as well as for her own numerous and important observations, 1750-1848.

HERSCHELL, DR. SOLOMON, a Jewish rabbi, celebrated for his learning and benevolence, 1760-1842.

HERSENT, G., a French divine, 1590-1660.

HERTIUS, J. N., a Germ. civilian, 1651-1710.

HERTSBERG, EWALD FREDERIC VON, a Prussian statesman, distinguished under Frederick the Great, 1725-1795.

HERVAS, L., a Spanish savant, 1735-1809.

HERVAY, NOEL, a schol. philosopher, d. 1323.

HERVET, G., a French savant, 1499-1584.

HERVEY, JAMES, a pious clergyman of the Church of England, an. of 'Meditations and Contemplations,' 'Theron and Aspasias,' &c., 1714-58.

HERVEY, JOHN, Lord Hervey of Ickworth, a poet and political writer, author of 'Memoirs of George II.,' only recently published, 1694-1743.

HÉRY, THIÉRY DE, a med. author, d. 1599.

HESHUSIUS, T., a Germ. divine, 1526-1588.

HESIOD, an ancient Greek poet of uncertain date, whose works are chiefly valuable so far as they illustrate the Orphic philosophy and the mythology of the ancients. The ascertained fragments of his writings are the 'Theogony' or generation of the gods, and the 'Works and Days.' The latter is a kind of rude pastoral or calendar of agriculture, with occasional reflections. The fragment of another poem attributed to him entitled 'The Shield of Hercules,' and containing an account of the most celebrated heroines of antiquity, is considered doubtful. [E.R.]

HESNAULT, J., a French poet, 17th century.

HESS, J. J., a Swiss theologian, 1761-1828.

HEUMAN, CHR. A., a Ger. theolog., 1681-1764.

HEUSINGER, J. M., a Ger. critic and philologist, 1690-1751. His nephew, JAS. FREDERIC, a philologist and classical scholar, 1718-1778.

HEVELIUS, JOHN, a celebrated astronomer of Dantzic, author of 'Machina Cœlestis,' 1611-1687.

HEVIN, P., a French juriconsult, 1621-1692.

HEYDEN, J. VANDER, a Dut. pain., 1637-1712.

HEWSON, W., a disting. physiologist, 1739-74.

HEYLIN, PETER, an Eng. historian, 1600-62.

HEYM, J., a Ger. lexicographer, 1759-1821.

HEYNE, CHRISTIAN GOTTLÖB, was born in 1729, at Chemnitz, in Saxony, where his father was a poor linen-weaver. His education was gained through struggles as severe and protracted as any that have ever been undergone by men of letters; and it was in the midst of great poverty that he was able, in 1755, to publish his edition of 'Tibullus,' the first work that made him known as a classical scholar. So obscure was his position long after this, that, when he was appointed to the professorship of eloquence at Göttingen on the recommendation of Ruhnken, it cost some trouble to discover where he was. Entering on his duties at Göttingen in 1763, he passed nearly fifty years in that university, with unwearied industry, distinguished and varied usefulness, and brilliant and increasing reputation. In classical studies, his own peculiar department, he was especially noted for the fine spirit which he breathed into criticism, and for the richness of illustration which he threw on the ancient masterpieces of poetry from history and topography, and from the existing monuments of the fine arts. His 'Opuscula Academica' contains many admirable treatises; and there is great value in the critical apparatus embodied in his editions of Virgil, Pindar, Homer, and Apollodorus. Heyne died in 1812. [W.S.]

HEYWOOD, ELIZA, a novelist, 1693-1756.

HEYWOOD, JOHN, a dramatic poet of the age of Henry VIII., author of an apologue in verse, entitled 'The Parable of the Spider and the Fly,' and of some plays and epigrams, died 1565.

HEYWOOD, OLIVER, a nonconf. div., 1629-1702.

HEYWOOD, THOMAS, an English actor and dramatist, author of 'A Woman Killed with Kindness,' and a great number of plays, of which the most part are lost, beginning of the 17th century.

HIERNE, URBAN, a Swd. nat. phil., 1641-1724.

HIBBERT, GEORGE, a merchant of London, distinguished for his public spirit as one of the founders of the West India Docks, and as a public speaker and member of parliament, 1757-1837.

HICKERINGILL, E., a military officer, afterwards in holy orders, kn. as a pamphleteer, 1630-1708.

HICKES, DR. GEORGE, a Saxon scholar and antiquarian writer, 1642-1715. JOHN, his brother, a nonconf. minister, exec. as a traitor 1685.

HICKS, FR., a classical editor, 1566-1630.

HICKS, W., a fifth monarchy man, 1620-1659.

HIDALGO, J. G., a Spanish artist, born 1656.

HIDALGO Y CASTILLA, DON MIGUEL, a priest, dist. as a patriot in Mexico, executed 1811.

HIEROCLES, an eclectic philosopher, 5th cent.

HIEROCLES, a topographical writer, 6th cent.

HIEROCLES, a Grk. grammarian, 7th century.

HIEROCLES OF BITHYNIA, governor of Alexandria, a writer against Christianity, and a great persecutor of the Christians in the time of Diocletian, 4th century.

HIERON, the first of the name king or tyrant of Syracuse, 478-467 B.C.; the second, 269-215 B.C.

HIERONYMUS, grandson and suc. of the preceding, murdered after reign. ten months, 214 B.C.

HIERONYMUS, ST. See JEROME.

HIFFERNAN, P., an Irish author, 1719-1777.

HIGDON, RALPH, an Engl. historian, d. 1863.

HIGGINS, G., an antiquarian wr., 1771-1833.

HIGGINS, J., an editor and divine, 16th cent.

HIGGONS, SIR THOMAS, an English ambassador and man of letters, 1624-1691. His younger son, BEVIL, a dramatist and historian, died 1735.

HIGGS, G., an English theologian, 1589-1659.

HIGHMORE, J., an Eng. painter, 1692-1780.

HIGHMORE, NATHANIEL, a celebrated English anatomist and physiologist, 1618-1684.

HIGUERA, J. R., a Span. Jesuit, 1538-1611.

HILARION, ST., a monastic founder, 292-372.

HILARY, a pope of Rome, suc. 461, d. 467.

HILARY, ST., a bishop of Arles, 401-449.

HILARY, ST., (HILARIUS PICTAVIENSIS), was born at Poitiers in France, and became bishop of his native town about the year 350. Though he had been trained in paganism, and did not embrace Christianity till he had arrived at manhood, yet his convictions were founded on enlarged intelligence, and his life was spent in earnest, powerful, and successful support of Trinitarian orthodoxy against the innovations of Arianism. At the synod of Bessieres, 356, he so provoked the Arian deputies, that on their application to the emperor Constantius, he was banished into Phrygia. He remained in exile about four years, and composed his principal works. But his uncompromising position to Asiatic Arianism so enraged his opponents, that they petitioned for his recall, and champion returned in triumph to Poitiers, where he died in 367. Four years before his death had impeached Auxentius, bishop of Milan, the accused unexpectedly proved his orthodoxy face to face with his accuser before the emperor Valentinian, and Hilary was expelled from Milan as an enemy to the peace of the church.

His principal works are—Twelve Books 'De Trinitate,' a 'Tract upon Synods,' and 'Two Addresses to Constantius,' one a petition, and the other a censure. In his commentaries on the gospel of Matthew, and on the Psalms, the chief portion taken from Origen. Jerome compares his style to the Rhone, not for its copiousness, but for its quickness. But it is rugged, verbose, elaborate, and occasionally obscure. The best edition the Benedictine, improved by Maffei, Verona, 1743, 2 vols. folio.

HILDEBERT, an archp. of Tours, 1057-1134.

HILDEBRAND, the proper name of Gregory VII. See GREGORY.

HILDEBRAND, a Lombard king, 736-744.

HILDEBRAND, G. F., a Ger. phy., 1754-1818.

HILDEBRAND, J., a Ger. theol., 1623-1693.

HILDEGARDE, SAINT, a German visioness, ab. of St. Rupert's Mt., on the Rhine, 1098-1179.

HILDERIC, a king of the Vandals, 528-531.

HILDESHAM, a puritan divine, 1563-1633.

HILDIBALD, king of the Ostrogoths, 540-548.

HILKIAH, a high priest of the Jews, 7th cent.

HILL, AARON, an English poet, 1685-1751.

HILL, ABRAHAM, an Eng. scholar, 1633-1703.

HILL, GEORGE, a Scottish divine, 1748-1818.

HILL, SIR JOHN, a miscell. writer, 1716-1803.

HILL, JOSEPH, a lexicog. and antiq., 1625-1703.

HILL, SIR RICHARD, Bart., eld. bro. of the Rev. Rowland Hill, kn. as a polemical wr., 1733-1818.

HILL, ROBERT, a self-taught Oriental scholar and critic, author of 'Remarks on Berkeley's Essay on Spirit,' &c., 1699-1777.

HILL, REV. ROWLAND, A.M., a popular and pious, though eccentric minister, was born at Hawkstone, Shropshire, in the year 1745.

He was the sixth son of Sir Rowland Hill, Bart. of Hawkstone, in the parish of Hodnet. His parents were early directed towards the ministry in connection with the Church of England; not, however, as a profession, but as affording him the most influential means of communicating to others those saving truths he felt of such interest and importance to his own soul. He was a very pious youth; and his strong impressions of religion were all the more remarkable that he belonged to higher classes generally in England at that time, were either indifferent to religion, or held false and defective views as to the leading principles of Christianity. Sir Rowland's family distinguished for the regard they cherished for genuine piety. Richard, the eldest son, in particular, had early received serious impressions; and it was through his influence and correspondence that his younger brother, while a scholar at Eton, was brought to attend one thing needful. From Eton, Rowland received to Cambridge, and the principles which had been sown in his mind at Eton, acquired greater power and vitality during his residence at a university. He was a devoted and successful student, for his intense application to his studies appeared at his examination for his degree of bachelor of arts, and he carried off the palm over his competitors by his superior acquirements in physical science, particularly in optics, mechanics, and astronomy. But his mind at the same time was ardently bent towards the ministry; and he began to exercise the sacred functions during his collegiate career, by not only holding meetings for some young friends of congenial views for their mutual improvement, but even forming plans of Christian usefulness beyond the walls of the university. They visited, exhorted, and prayed in various parts of the town of Cambridge, particularly in the hovels of the poor and sick, and with the prisoners in the jail. Conduct, so much at variance with the propriety of established academic rules, drew down upon him and his friends, the indignation of the college authorities. Six of the young preachers, amongst whom were Whitfield and Beveridge, received sentence of expulsion from the university, and Hill was saved from a similar fate only by the weight of his family influence. Rowland loved to itinerate, and he retained the same fondness for open-air preaching after he was ordained. He was appointed to the parish of Kingston, Somersetshire, in 1773, and there in accordance with his favourite habits, he was instant in teaching almost every day in the week. The freshness and originality of his addresses attracted crowds to hear him. Nor was he admired by a vulgar and uneducated class only. Sheridan used to say 'I often go to hear Rowland Hill, because his ideas come red-hot from the heart;' and Dean Milner, the church historian, was so affected by hearing one of his sermons, that he went to the pulpit on the conclusion of the service and said, 'Mr. Hill, I felt to-day—'tis this slapdash preaching, say what they will, that does all the good.'—Mr. Hill had a country house in Wales, where he erected a chapel, and was constantly engaged in preaching throughout the neighbourhood during his summer residence. His wife kept a note of his various engagements; and when announcing them from the pulpit, he used to look to her on naming every place to see if he was correct. And so much as he was accustomed to confide in her accuracy, that he used to say at the breakfast table, 'Where do I reach to-day?' Many persons of rank and fortune having become his stated hearers, Surrey chapel was built for him in 1782, and in that chapel a vast congregation assembled every Sabbath. His eccentricities of manner, his quaintness of expression, his anecdotes, and even witticisms in the pulpit, were quite forgotten and overlooked by the regular frequenters of this place of worship in the rich vein of sterling piety and spiritual instruction that ran through the service. In 1798, Mr. Hill came to Scotland on the invitation of Robert Hall, and preached to crowds in Edinburgh in the Circus and on the Calton Hill, as well as in various parts of the country. In 1824, he made another 'Gospel Tour,' as he called it, in Scotland, and after a brief stay, returned to his labours in Surrey chapel. He was a truly evangelical preacher, and he used to say 'Were I to live my life over again, I would preach just the same.' He closed his life and labours on 11th April, 1833. [R.J.]

HILL, ROWLAND, Lord, a British general distinguished in the late war, particularly in the peninsula, and at the battle of Waterloo, born 1772, appointed commander-in-chief 1828, created a viscount, and died 1842. Lord Hill was the son of Sir John Hill, who succeeded to the title of Sir Richard Hill, Bart., elder brother of him and of the celebrated minister of Surrey chapel.

HILLEL, SIR TH. NOEL, a younger brother of Lord Hill, known as a peninsular officer, 1784-1832.

HILLEL, called 'the Elder' to distinguish him from the subject of the following notice, is regarded by Jewish writers as the most eminent among their ancient rabbis. He was born at Babylon, commencement of the 1st century B.C., and when about 40 years of age removed to Jerusalem, where he became chief of the Sanhedrim, and lived to the extraordinary age of 120 years. He was the first to classify the oral or traditional laws, subsequently embodied in the Mishna, or first part of the Talmud, and the transmission of which is verified in the work itself, at the commencement of the treatise Aboth or 'Ethics of the Fathers.' The other portion of the Talmud, called 'The Gemara,' contains expositions of the Mishna; the latter, therefore, is really the text-book of rabbinical lore, and hence the importance of its arrangement in a comprehensive digest. Hillel is always spoken of with respect for his humanity and patience, as well as his profound wisdom as a moralist. See SHAMMAI. [E.R.]

HILLEL, 'the Younger,' lived in the time of Origen, who is said to have been acquainted with him, about the middle of the 3d century. He was a great reformer of the Jewish calendar, his arrangement of which was nearer by far to astronomical exactness than that of Julian, which remained in use among Christians until its reform by Pope Gregory. Hillel has the reputation, also, of reforming the equinoctial and solstitial periods, and leaving behind him a correct text of the Bible, which he wrote with his own hand, besides contributing to the Talmud. He bears the title of Nasi, or prince of the captivity, and there is a tradition that he was privately baptized before his death by the bishop of Tiberias. [E.R.]

HILLER, M., a Ger. Orientalist, 1646-1725.

HILLIARD, N., an English painter, 1547-1619.

HILPART, JOHN, a Ger. divine, born 1627.

HILTON, WALTER, an English ascetic, 15th c.

HILTON, WILLIAM, R.A., an English historical painter, distinguished for his refined taste in design, and a harmonious and rich style of colouring, was born at Lincoln, 3d June, 1786, and died in London 30th December, 1839. He succeeded Fuseli in 1825 as keeper of the Royal Academy. Owing to the too great quantity, or bad quality of his vehicle, his pictures are already going to pieces. 'Serena,' and 'The Red Cross Knight,' presented to the National Gallery in 1841, is in too bad a condition to be exhibited. The morbid search after nostrums and glazing media, has been one of the most fatal obstructions to the establishment of a great school of painting in England.—(Art Union Journal, 1840.) [R.N.W.]

HILTZ, JOHN, a German architect, 15th c.

HIMERIUS, a Greek sophist, 4th century.

HIMLY, C., a German physician, 1772-1837.

HIMMEL, F. H., a Ger. musician, 1765-1804.

HINCHCLIFFE, JOHN, the son of a stable-keeper, rose to be bishop of Peterborough, 1731-94.

HINCKLEY, JOHN, an Engl. theol., 1617-95.

HINCMAR, archbishop of Rheims, known as a controversial and learned writer, 9th century.

HINDMARSH, ROBERT, a minister and controversial writer of the 'New Church,' author of 'A Seal on the Lips of Unitarians,' &c., died 1835.

HIPPARCHUS, a tynt. of Athens, 528-514 B.C.

HIPPARCHUS, the greatest Astronomer of Antiquity; or rather the founder of Astronomical Science. The dates of the birth and death of Hipparchus are lost; Ptolemy speaks of him as alive between 160 and 125 B.C.: neither do any of his writings remain, excepting the Commentary on Aratūs,—a production of his youth. It has often been asserted that he observed at Alexandria; but the careful criticism of Delambre leaves no ground for such a supposition: he laboured most probably in Bithynia; certainly at Rhodes. It is to Ptolemy that we owe our knowledge of Hipparchus, who in the fulness of his admiration applies to him the epithet—εὐλαβέστερος καὶ φιλαλήθερος (the lover of labour and truth); nor do we think that his successor has ever done him injustice, or sought, as Delambre would insinuate, to absorb a part of his glory into his own. As a pure observer, Hipparchus was probably never surpassed. Of course he wrought with rude instruments, affected by large errors; but all that the Observer himself had to do, was achieved with highest probity and sagacity, and shaped by a rare philosophic spirit. To collect and describe facts exactly, is a service always valuable to Science; more especially when Inquiry is in its infancy; but Hipparchus added the loftier faculty of knowing the precise description of facts, which ought to be observed—the facts pregnant with laws; and he succeeded, therefore, in laying the sure foundation of Astronomical Theory. The Ancients, it is well known, imagined the Earth motionless, and that all celestial bodies move uniformly in circles around it; but, as motions had been detected in the sky which are not uniform, it became the question, how, on the ground of these suppositions, can the observed irregularities be explained? A very fertile idea had been started by Plato and Eudoxus, that a heavenly body moving uniformly on a small circle, might be carried round the earth by a larger circle; and that apparent irregularities, would issue from the combination of these uniform motions. (See article PTOLEMY). Hipparchus appropriated the idea, and realized it; i.e. he laid down the actual machinery which would account for the precise irregularities observed. In this way he constructed a theory of the Sun and Moon; and originated that refined scheme which endured until the period of Copernicus. Knowing where to stop as well as how far to adventure, he only collected materials for the Planetary Theory,—afterwards completed by Ptolemy. We owe besides, to this great Observer the discovery of the Precession of the Equinoxes—a first essential to a knowledge of the motions of the Fixed Stars: he may be said to have invented Trigonometry, plane and spherical; and to have originated our graphical Geography. The reign of Induction in Physical Science properly began with Hipparchus.

[J.P.N.]

HIPPASUS, a Pythagorean philos., 5th c. B.C.
HIPPIAS, an Athenian prince, killed 490 B.C.
HIPPIAS OF ELIS, a sophist, 5th century B.C.
HIPPISELEY, SIR J. C., a magistr., 1765-1821.
HIPPO, a Pythagorean philoso., 5th cent. B.C.
HIPPOCRATES, a Gr. geometrician, 500 B.C.
HIPPOCRATES. A name common to at least four physicians of antiquity, but generally reserved for Hippocrates the 2d, who was in many respects the most celebrated physician of ancient or modern times, and to whom the title of 'Father of Medicine' has been applied. He was the son of Heracleides, a physician of Cos, in which island he was born, in the year 460 B.C. His mother's name was Phænarete, by race a Heracleid, while his father belonged to the Asclepiade, as the descendants of Esculapius were called. His ancestors for generations had resided in Cos, where they all seem to have practised the healing art; but little is known that can be relied upon of the incidents of his own life, and what we have to say of him must be therefore scanty and unsatisfactory.—Hippocrates received his elementary medical education from his father, and subsequently studied under Herodicus, a physician of Selymbria in Thrace, who was one of the first persons to apply gymnastic exercises to the cure and prevention of diseases; and his instructions in general science and philosophy from Gorgias of Leontini, in Sicily, a distinguished sophist and orator of those times, who would appear to have been the brother of Herodicus. The period at which he lived was also favourable to the development of his powers, for he was the contemporary of Socrates, Plato, Pericles, Herodotus, and Thucydides; and we may perhaps attribute to this circumstance, as well as to the complete general and professional education he had received, the purity and elegance of his style. On the death of his father he left Cos, and travelled for twelve years through Greece and Asia Minor, passing much of his time in Macedonia, Thrace, and Thessaly; but as dates are wholly wanting, it is impossible to say in what years of his life these travels were performed. The same uncertainty attaches itself to all the subsequent movements of his life, nor is it possible to determine whether he lived permanently in Cos, the medical school of which he raised to the highest pitch of eminence, or whether he selected some city of extra-Peloponnesian Greece as his fixed place of abode. He died at Larissa, in Thessaly, though in what year is unknown, as his age at the time of his death has been variously stated at eighty-five, ninety, one hundred and four, and one hundred and nine years. He left two sons, Thessalus and Dracon, both of whom were medical men; and a daughter whose name has not been preserved, but who married Polybus, also a medical man.—An account of the medical system of Hippocrates would be unsuited to a work of this kind, but we may state generally that he was a diligent and sagacious observer of nature, and that his practice was regulated very much by the indications which a disease presented; hence he has been considered the founder of the dogmatists, or rationalists, in medicine, a sect of great antiquity and which is not perhaps wholly extinct at the

That the humoral pathology, which maintained its ascendancy in Europe for twenty centuries, was originally derived from his theory of the fluids, which he divided into blood, phlegm, black bile, and yellow bile, is certain; and there can be no doubt that many of his opinions on climate, diet, individual temperament, and the constitution of the atmosphere in the four different seasons of the year, influenced the belief of the medical world down even to the age of Sydenham. He knew little or nothing of anatomy, and was not only unacquainted with the circulation of the blood, but with the distinction between arteries and veins, which he arranges in the same class with nerves and tendons; but in spite of this his name was great, and numerous stories were invented after his death to illustrate his extraordinary celebrity. Thus he was said to have stayed the plague of Athens, though Thucydides, who has described it, and was himself a sufferer from it, makes no mention of him whatever. It has been recorded that he was solicited by the inhabitants of Abdera to visit their city and to cure Democritus the philosopher of insanity, and there extant a letter which is urged as a proof of this, though it be a manifest forgery; and that nothing might be wanting to impress upon posterity a sense of his universal authority, it is related of him that he refused an invitation from Artaxerxes Longimanus, king of Persia, to visit that country, together with a large sum of money, but that he declined to do so because Artaxerxes was the enemy of Greece. These and similar stories are now disregarded, and he is looked upon as the fictions of a subsequent age.—Hippocrates wrote in the Ionic dialect of Greek, and is considered by modern scholars a classical authority in that tongue. His works are generally published in two folio volumes with Latin translations; but there is considerable difference of opinion among critics as to what properly belongs to him in the Hippocratic collection, and what should be assigned to others, probably members of his own family. Those treatises which are believed as the genuine compositions of Hippocrates are—I. The 1st and 3d Books of the Epidemics; II. The Prognostics; III. The Aphorisms; IV. The 1st and 2d Books of the Predictions; V. The Treatise on Air, Water, and Places; VI. The Regimen in Acute Diseases; VII. The Treatise on Wounds of the Head. [J.M.C.]

HIPPOLYTUS. Our space does not suffice to recount the numerous and contradictory theories which have been formed regarding this remarkable man. Eusebius, Jerome, Gelasius, and Photius, in earlier times, have referred to him, but with an indistinct and inaccurate knowledge of him; the Benedictine monks could not dispel the obscurity which hung over him, and the hypotheses of Baronius, Tillemont, Fabricius, Le Moine, Basnage, Cave, and others, still left the subject in mist and confusion. A very common opinion prevailed that he was a bishop in the East, and specially in some part of Arabia. It is now ascertained that he was a disciple of Irenæus, was a bishop of Portus Romanus—the harbour of Rome, after the reign of Trajan; and suffered martyrdom under Maximus about the year 236. His statue was accidentally dug up in 1551, and on its sides were inscribed a list of his works and the Paschal Cycle. All this is confirmatory of the description given of him by the Christian poet Prudentius. His works, so called, were published by Fabricius, in 2 vols. folio, and by Gallandi in the second volume of his Bibliotheca Patrum. Hippolytus, as attested by all antiquity, was a voluminous writer on a vast variety of subjects, the majority of which were of a polemical character. A list of his polemical, doctrinal, historical, and exegetical works, the greater part of which are lost, will be found in the first volume of 'Bunsen's Hippolytus and his Age.' A MS. was brought from Mount Athos in 1842, which was called a treatise 'On all Heresies,' and was deposited in the royal library in Paris. In 1846, M. Millar having looked into the book, considered it to be a lost work of Origen, and had it printed in 1851 by the Oxford University Press, under the title of 'Origen Philosophumena.' The Chevalier Bunsen eagerly read the publication, and brought to bear upon it the peculiar sagacity and tact of his critical erudition. The result is, that he has proved that the treatise belonged not to Origen as its author but to Hippolytus. In the course of his discussions he has thrown great light on the times and creed of Hippolytus, as well as upon the theology and government of the Roman Church in the times of Severus and Commodus. Hippolytus was more a man of labour than of original thought; rather an honest and learned compiler than a writer of independent vigour. [J.E.]

HIPPONAX, a Greek satirist, 6th century B.C.
HIRAM, a king of Tyre, 1025-985 B.C.

HIRE, L. DE LA, a French painter, 1606-1656. His son, PHILIP, cel. as an astronomer, 1640-1719.
GABRIEL PHILIP, son of the latter, and successor in his employments, 1677-1719.

HIRSCHING, F. C. G., a Ger. savant, au. of a 'Dictionary of Celebrated Men,' &c., 1762-1800.

HIRT, ALOYS, a Ger. archaeologist, born 1759.

HIRT, J. F., a German theologian, 1719-1783.

HIRZEL, H., a German author, 1766-1833.

HJELM, P. J., a Swed. mineralog., 1746-1813.

HOADLEY, BENJAMIN, a prelate of the English Church, and a chief of the party whose principles were brought into fashion by the revolution of 1688, and the accession of the house of Hanover, was born at Westerham, in Kent, in 1676, and died at his palace in Chelsea, 1761. His ability as a controversialist, and his love of civil and religious liberty, became conspicuous in the strife of parties at the beginning of the last century, when he entered the field against Bishop Atterbury, and the High Church party. His share in this debate, and its intimate connection with the settlement of the new dynasty and the liberties of the country, was recognized by the House of Commons, who addressed the queen in his favour, and thus paved the way for his rapid promotion to the sees of Bangor, Hereford, Salisbury, and Winchester, which he held in succession. In 1717, while bishop of Bangor, he preached the sermon before the king which gave rise to the famous Bangorian controversy, in which Hoadley was assailed by the chiefs of the non-jurors, and with most effect by William Law, the doughty champion of authority, both in church and state. This controversy was brought to a close about 1720, without conciliating either the high church party, on the one hand, or the dissenters on the other, and without adding much to Hoadley's character for consistency. With a fine intellect, he was constitutionally compliant and easy, and seems to have been wanting in fidelity to his conscientious convictions. In a word, it is most difficult to justify the career of such a man on any other principles than those of a worldly policy, and of that preference for the good and the true which may often be indulged in as a kind of luxury. Besides his numerous controversial publications, Hoadley was author of 'An Account of the Life, Writings, and Character of Dr. Samuel Clarke,' prefixed to the posthumous works of the latter, published 1732; 'A Plain Account of the Nature and End of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper,' 1735; and a 'Letter' Addressed to Clement Chevalier, in 1756. [E.R.]

HOADLEY, BENJAMIN, eldest son of the preceding, was a physician and philosophical writer. He assisted Hogarth in composing his 'Analysis of Beauty,' and is well known as the auth. of a comedy entitled 'The Suspicious Husband,' 1706-1757.

HOADLEY, JOHN, the youngest son of Bishop Hoadley, was educated for the law, but finally entered the church, and enjoyed several valuable preferments. He is the author of several dramatic works and poems, 1711-1776.

HOAI-TSONG, an emperor of China, 1627-44.

HOARE, P., F.S.A., a dram. au., 1764-1834.

HOARE, SIR R. C., a county hist., 1758-1838.

HOARE, W., an English divine, died 1657.

HOARE, W., an ingenious artist, 1707-1792.

HOBBEMA, M., a Dutch painter, 1611-1699.

HOBBES, THOMAS, born at Malmesbury on the 5th April, 1588, died on 4th December, 1679:— 'a great name in philosophy, on account both of the value of what he taught and the extraordinary impulse which he communicated to the spirit of free inquiry in Europe.' Criticism of Hobbes's speculations is here beyond our reach: the statement of a few facts regarding him will enable the student to judge whether the high eulogy just quoted, probably surpasses his deserts. So soon as Hobbes left Magdalen Hall, Oxford, we find those connections beginning which bound him, during a long life, in amity and confidence with the best families of England. Tutor to Lord Cavendish heir of the princely house of Devonshire, he travelled with him through France and Italy. Death struck the pupil only two years after the demise of his father the earl of Devonshire. Hobbes, stung with grief, travelled again; but returned in 1631, at the entreaties of the dowager countess, to teach the young earl, then only thirteen. An inmate of this noble house, which he virtually continued until his own decease, he mingled with all their extensive and distinguished circle; and lived in intercourse with the most celebrated literary men of his own and other nations. Kennet in his 'Memoirs of the Cavendish Family' offers an interesting glimpse of the philosopher's daily life. He dedicated the morning to exercise; the afternoon to study. Having climbed a hill and breakfasted, he went his rounds in the family, waiting also on distinguished strangers, and conversing on the themes which occupied him. At twelve o'clock he dined unceremoniously alone, and then returned to his study, where, with the companionship of his pipe, he devoted the hours to meditation and writing.

The subjects occupying him were the most solemn that engage the human mind; and for the first time had they engrossed the thoughts of a great man in England. Loving truth, in the sense coveting the grounds of it—not in that of acceptance without grounds, and averring without understanding—he sought in an analysis of the human Intellect and Affections, the basis of man's duties, personal, social, and political: in other words, he longed to discern his place in the Universe as a reasonable being, and like a brave and conscientious man to assert it. The enterprise was novel, bold and hazardous: novel, for in psychology he had not one predecessor: hazardous, because no man save one of the first order, would have preserved the necessary freedom, under pressure of the enthroned and inveterate Ignorance amid which he lived, and of influences insidious and therefore more alarming, springing from his social attachments. But Hobbes surmounted all dangers. He can be said of him with perfect truth, that neither in his life nor writings, did he fail in integrity. effect on him of circumstances we discern not trace; he thought as a freeman, irrespective of seductions or frowns; nay,—the chances of life having given him Charles II. as a temporary patron—he perilled the royal favour, as if he made a sacrifice; to the honour of Charles be it recorded that the philosopher's uprightness did not cost him the monarch's regard. It is easy to see that long life of such a kind, thrown into the midst of those ages, could be no welcome apparition; no need Cromwell himself have dreaded a more urgent contemporary appreciation than Hobbes: but it is our grief and shame, that contemporary slander has its voices still; that men in modern times will never read one page of this illustrious thinker, who desire their criticisms to be palatable, persist in making him a bugbear. Surely something more than evil lay at the root of his extraordinary power. No man ever excited a wider and more lasting commotion. Clarendon, Cudworth, Bramhall, Tenison, Harrington, Henry More,—nay, in the words of Warburton—'every young Churchman Militant would try his arms in thundering on Hobbes's stomach.' Now as then, men will repudiate many of his opinions: that searcher for Truth had no help, and he erred like others. Few thoughts are pure—unaffected by much that will perish; but nevertheless, abides the Thinker,—a veritable force of nature, formidable, incorruptible, fresh still after all these centuries, gnarled it may be like an English oak, but also with roots profound—holding by the Earth, while slighter generations flourish and disappear. Hobbes's style is a model of the didactic; clear and deep as the pen of an engraver.' Hallam says truly, that one could no more change a word or expression in it, than in the exactest mathematical formula. It does its duty in distinctly expressing distinct thought; and duty alone is its aim. No more acceptable present has recently been made to the student of English philosophy and literature, than the superb edition of Hobbes's works in 16 volumes 8vo, which we owe to Sir William Molesworth. [J.P.N.]

HOBBS, CHARLOTTE DE, a French poetess, distinguished for her sweetness and sensibility, 1792-1821.

HOBHOUSE, SIR BENJAMIN, a member of the House of Commons and of the government in the

of Mr. Addington, distinguished as the adversary of Pitt, and especially of his action against the French republic, 1757-1831.

OBLE, FRANCIS, the well-known clerk of Mansion House, London, 1766-1844.

OCCLEVE, THOMAS, an English poet, 15th c.

OCHE. LAZARE HOCHÉ was born in 1768 at Montreuil, near Versailles, where his father was master of the royal stag-hounds. Hoche entered the army at the age of sixteen, and studied the military sciences with great diligence. He was a strong supporter of the republican principles which the French revolution called into activity, and he rose rapidly into distinction in the wars against the allied sovereigns. He behaved with peculiar skill and courage at the siege of Dunkirk in 1793, and materially aided General Soult in defending that city from the English army under the duke of York. He then received the command of the army of the Moselle, and on the 26th and 27th December, 1793, gained an important victory at Weissenburg. He now fell under the suspicion of Robespierre and St. Just. He was recalled from his command and sent to prison. The overthrow of Robespierre on the 9th Thermidor, saved Hoche from the guillotine; and he was placed at the head of one of the armies of the Convention, that acted against the Vendéens in the sanguinary civil war by which the west of France was desolated. Hoche here displayed the abilities of a statesman, as well as those of a general. He reorganized his own army, which had become under his predecessors as disorderly as was ferocious. He practised, and he made his troops practise, humanity and good faith towards the peasantry. He won the confidence of the peasant priests; and by these means, and by dealing with the greatest skill and energy against the royalist bands as held out against him, Hoche accomplished the pacification of La Vendée and Brittany; an achievement more difficult, and more truly glorious than the most showy successes of the other French generals of the revolutionary wars. In 1795 Hoche defeated at Quiberon an attempt made by the French emigrants, with the aid of the English, to renew the war in Brittany; and in 1796 he was placed at the head of an expedition by which the French directory deemed to drive the English from Ireland, and to make her a sister republic of France. Hoche sailed on the 15th December, 1796, from Brest with a fleet of forty-three sail, and an army nearly 1000 strong; but this noble armament was shattered by storms, and the frigate on board of which Hoche himself had embarked, was separated from the rest of the squadron, and with difficulty regained the French coast. In 1797 Hoche received the command of the army of the Sambre and the Meuse, and prepared to invade Germany, and to strike as deep blows against Austria in her eastern provinces, as Buonaparte was then dealing to her in the south. Hoche defeated the Austrians at Heffendorf, and was on the point of capturing his opponent, General Kray, and the whole army of the imperialists, when he was struck in the mid career of success by the news of the pacification which Buonaparte and the archduke Charles had agreed on at Loben. Hoche died in 1797 after a short illness, at the early age of thirty-three. Many attributed his death to poison, but there seems to have been no ground for these suspicions. He was not only one of the bravest soldiers and most skilful generals that the French revolution brought forward, but he was also an accomplished statesman, a sincere patriot, and a man of honour, generosity, and integrity. Napoleon, in speaking of him at St. Helena, truly said,—"Had Hoche lived, I must have subdued him, or he would have subdued me." Unfortunately for France the chance of her being saved by Hoche from Napoleon's despotism, was taken from her by the premature death of the best of the heroes of the republic. [E.S.C.]

HODGES, NATHANIEL, a med. au., 1672-1684.

HODGES, W., a landscape painter, 1744-1798.

HODGSON, JAMES, a mathematician, wr., last cent.

HODGSON, DR. R., dean of Carlisle, a nephew and biographer of Bishop Porteus, died 1844.

HODIERNA, J. B., a Sicilian astro., 1597-1660.

HODY, HUMPHREY, a learned divine, 1659-1706.

HOEDT, GERARD, a Dutch paint., 1648-1733.

HOEL, the first of the name, duke of Brittany, 509-545; the second, killed by his brother, 547; the third, 594-612; the fourth, 953-980; the fifth, 1066-1084; the sixth, 1148-1156.

HOESCHEL, D., a Ger. Hellenist, 1556-1617.

HOEST, G., a Danish navigator, 1784-1792.

HOFER, ANDREW, was chief of the Tyrolese in their heroic war against the French and Bavarians in 1809. The Tyrol had been ceded to Bavaria by Austria at the peace of Presburg. But the Bavarians and their French allies had treated with insult and injury the ancient rights and usages of the Tyrolese, which their Austrian sovereign had always respected. Hence the feeling of loyalty to the Austrian emperor was fervent in the Tyrol; and when Austria renewed war with France in 1809, the Tyrolese rose almost to a man in her cause. These brave mountaineers chose Hofer as their generalissimo. Hofer was at this time about forty-two years of age, and kept an inn in the village of Passayer. He showed himself well worthy of his countrymen's confidence. Under his command the Tyrolese gave the French and Bavarian troops repeated and severe defeats, and for a time expelled them from the whole of the Tyrol. Hofer now acted as viceroy for the Austrian emperor; and throughout his career he was as eminent for moderation and humanity, as for intelligence and valour. When Austria capitulated to Napoleon by the treaty of Schönbrunn, in October, 1809, she again ceded the Tyrol to Bavaria; and the Tyrolese were ordered to submit to their beaten and bitterest enemies as their lawful masters. They resisted gallantly; and it was only after repeated battles that the overwhelming armies of French, Saxons, and Bavarians, which were now poured into the Tyrol, succeeded in quelling the brave mountaineers. Hofer for some time escaped the pursuit of his enemies, but he was at last captured on the 27th January, 1810. He was immediately sent to Mantua for trial before one of Napoleon's military tribunals. He was condemned to death, and ordered to be shot within twenty-four hours. He met his fate as a good Christian and a brave soldier. The spot on the bastion at Mantua, where he fell, is still visited as a holy place by his countrymen, who cherish with just pride the memory of their hero-martyr. [E.S.C.]

[Monument to Hofer at Inspruck.]

HOFFER, J. A., a Tyrolese juriscon., 1765-1820.

HOFFBAUER, J. C., a Ger. philo., 1766-1827.

HOFFMAN, DANIEL, a Germ. divine, d. 1611.

HOFFMAN, FREDERICK, a disting. German physician and writer on pathology, 1663-1742.

HOFFMAN, F. B., a Fr. dramatist, long time lit. critic of the 'Journal des Débats,' 1760-1828.

HOFFMAN, G., a Ger. medical au., 1572-1649.

HOFFMAN, JOHN JAMES, a literary savant of Basle, author of a 'Universal Lexicon,' 1635-1706. JOHN MAURICE, his son, a physician and professor, au. of some valuable works on botany, 1653-1727.

HOFFMAN, MAURICE, a Ger. physician and anatomist, best kn. as a wr. on botany, 1622-1698.

HOFFMANN, C., a Ger. med. author, d. 1648.

HOFFMANN, C. G., a Germ. jurist, 1692-1735.

HOFFMANN, CHR. LOUIS, a German physc. and prof., au. of a 'Theory of Disease,' 1721-1807.

HOFFMANN, ERNEST THEODORE WILLIAM, a Ger. dramatic writer and composer, 1776-1822.

HOFLAND, MRS. This popular authoress was the daughter of Mr. Robert Wreaks, a manufacturer of Sheffield, where she was born in 1770, and where, at the age of twenty-six, she was married to her first husband, Mr. Hoole. That gentleman dying two years afterwards, left her in embarrassed circumstances, and she published a volume of poems by subscription, with the proceeds of which she opened a school at Harrowgate, where she commenced the series of works which have rendered her name so popular, and effected so much good among young people. In 1808, she was married to Mr. Hofland, an admired landscape painter, and the year following she removed to London with him. In a few years, the fame of Mrs. Hofland was so well established that Queen Charlotte became her unsolicited patroness, and 'The Son of a Genius,' published in 1813, was translated into several of the continental languages. The works of Mrs. Hofland are chiefly in the form of novels, or of contributions to the magazines and annuals, but they are all marked by her desire to promote the improvement and elevation of character, and we have testimony of Mr. and Miss Edgeworth, that other book in their time had effected so much good in Ireland, as the novel just mentioned. Mrs. Hofland died in 1844, as justly esteemed her domestic virtues, her happy temper, and conversational powers, as for the talents which have rendered her name familiar to the readers of English literature. [E.]

HOFLAND, THOMAS CHRISTOPHER, a distinguished landscape painter, famous for his scenery and classic subjects, 1777-1843.

HOGARTH, WILLIAM, was born in London 10th December, 1697; he was apprenticed at an early age to Gamble, a silversmith, but at the expiration of his term in 1718, he took to engraving in copper for the booksellers. In 1730 he married the only daughter of Sir James Thornhill, against her father's consent, and set up as a portrait painter with considerable success. He now commenced his remarkable series of satirical paintings reflecting on the social abuses of his time:—The 'H-

[Hogarth's House.]

lot's Progress' in 1734; the 'Rake's Progress' 1735; and the 'Marriage à la Mode' in 1745, now in the National Gallery. In 1753 he appeared as an author in his 'Analysis of Beauty, written with a View of Fixing the Fluctuating Ideas of Taste.' In 1757 he was appointed serjeant painter to the king: he died in London, 26 October, 1764, and was buried at Chiswick. Hogarth was a good painter as well as a great satirist.—(Nichols, Biographical Anecdotes, &c., 1781-1782; Ireland, Hogarth Illustrated, Boydell, 1791.) [R.N.W.]

HOGENDORP, G. C. VOX, a Dutch statesman who greatly promoted the return of the prince of Orange by the insurrection which he excited, 1813. His brother, THIERRY, a general and minister of war under Louis Buonaparte, 1761-1830.

HOGG, JAMES, the Ettrick Shepherd, claimed—erroneously it is said—to have been born on the 25th of January (Burns's birth-day), 1770. He belonged to the vale of Ettrick, in Selkirkshire, where he followed the pastoral occupation of his ancestors. His first published song, 'Donald Macdonald,' acquired extensive popularity. After several successful literary efforts, the most considerable of which was a volume of ballads called 'The Mountain Minstrel,' Hogg, who had failed in sundry sheep-farming speculations, removed Edinburgh in 1810, with the view of living by wits. He there published a volume of songs, 'The Forest Minstrel,' and conducted a periodical called 'The Spy,' which existed for about a year. It was not, however, until the appearance of 'The [Birth-place of James Hogg.]

'The Man's Wake,' in 1813, that he became greatly distinguished as an author. Besides 'The Pilgrims of the Sun,' 'Queen Hynde,' and other literary works, Hogg wrote numerous tales and poems, few of which are now much read. He was on terms of friendship with Scott, Wilson, and other literary magnates of Edinburgh, and it was in which he was made to figure in the celebrated 'Noctes' of Blackwood—although sometimes complained of by himself—contributed not little to his fame. With less masculine sense than Burns, and far inferior in tender and passionate earnestness, he yet possessed a higher poetic fancy; and many of his pieces, such as 'The Kilmeny,' are marked by a certain wild dreamy fascination, unlike anything else with which we are acquainted. Hogg spent his later years at Altrive, on the Yarrow, where he died on 21st November, 1835. [J.H.]

HOHENLOE, ALEXANDER LEOPOLD, prince and bishop of Sardica, celebrated for the surprising cures effected by him, was born in the principality of Hohenloe 1794, and died at Grossradin in Hungary 1849. The mother of the prince was a woman of remarkable piety, and being left a widow when he was only two years of age, she had the entire control of his education. The religious habits induced upon him at an early age were confirmed by his attachment to the Catholic faith when he went to Rome to complete his studies, and he at length embraced the ecclesiastical profession with the enthusiasm of a saint of the middle ages. He commenced his duties at Bamberg and Munich 1817, and his preaching, it is said, drew tears from the most insensible, and brought the most hardened to repentance. In 1821 rumours of his miraculous power of healing began to spread abroad, and it is remarkable that the cures were chiefly effected by prayer, and that many of them are said to have been performed at a distance with as much effect as under his own hand. Space is not afforded us to recite particular instances, but he gave sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf, speech to the dumb, and caused the lame to walk. The derision which marks the recital of these facts by biographers who cannot dispute them, only proves their own want of that living faith and fervid charity which was the secret of the success of Prince Hohenloe. The flippant explanation of such phenomena by the sudden tension of the spirit, the 'force of imagination,' or by other kinds of mental impressions, is mere verbiage, unless it be understood that the spirit is also substance, as implied by Lord Bacon, who writes: 'There is the possibility of an action of one person upon another by the force of the imagination of one of those two persons; because as one body receives the action of another body, so, one spirit is adapted to receive the action of another spirit;' which agrees with what Dr. Heylin declares of touching for the scrofula, that he has 'Seen children brought before the king—some hanging at their mothers' breasts, and others in the arms of their nurses, all touched and cured.' There is every reason to believe that the cures of Prince Hohenloe were magnetic healings, rendered doubly powerful by the religious spirit associated with them; and that the substantive operation is the same in ordinary magnetism and in the cure of disease by faith, with a distinction which is more clearly traced in the article MESMER. It is no disparagement of the mere facts in this case, that they were eagerly promulgated, and in some particular instances, perhaps, exaggerated by the Jesuits, whose re-establishment was greatly aided by them. Whether this 'new Xavier' lost his power, or chose to exercise it in private after the attacks that were made upon him by the sceptics is not known, but the fame of his performances had died away many years before his death. Prince Hohenloe is the author of several devotional treatises published between 1820-30. [E.R.]

HOHENLOE, L. C. F. LEOPOLD, prince of, one of the most ardent enemies of the French revolution, in whose principality the emigrant nobles were permitted to organize their armies, and who furnished them with two auxiliary regiments, 1731-1799. His son, E. ALOYS JOACHIM, distinguished in the same line of policy, and a marshal of France under Louis XVIII., died 1829.

HOHENLOE-INGELFINGEN, FREDERICK LOUIS, prince of, a distinguished general in the wars of the Fr. rev., and commander of the Prussian and Saxon army defeated at Jena, 1746-1818.

HOHENLOE-KIRCHBERG, prince of, a general of artillery in the service of Austria, died while commanding the army on the Rhine, 1796.

HOLBACH, PAUL THYRY, Baron D', a Germ. mineralogist, and wr. on Nat. Religion, 1723-1789.

HOLBEIN, HANS, or JOHANNES, was born at Augsburg in 1498, his father and grandfather of the same name, being also natives of that city: the father, however, when Hans was about seventeen or eighteen years old only, settled in Basle in Switzerland, apparently in 1519. The celebrated Erasmus is said to have been one of the first to appreciate young Holbein, and an unauthenticated story is told that the earl of Arundel, passing through Basle, recommended him to try his fortune in England. He, however, finally made the visit to this country to escape the ill-temper of his wife: he came to London in 1526, bringing letters from Erasmus to Sir Thomas More, who ultimately introduced Holbein to Henry VIII., and he became that king's favourite painter, and is not the least glory of his reign. He revisited Basle in 1538, and the municipality of the town awarded him an annuity of fifty florins for two years, with the hope apparently of retaining him there, but he returned to London, where he died in 1554.—Holbein's genuine works are doubtless very numerous, but, as Walpole says, 'as always happens to a real genius, he has been complimented with a thousand wretched performances that were unworthy of him.' His style is manly and correct, but hard and formal; the character, however, and individuality of many of his portraits, are evidently exact and masterly. He painted some religious and historical pieces; his masterpiece is perhaps the 'Family of the Burgomaster, Meyer,' now in the Gallery of Dresden, the father and sons on one side, and the mother and daughters on the other, are kneeling before the Virgin, who holds a dead or sick child in her arms, apparently one of the family. Holbein is also the author of a very celebrated series of designs, known as the 'Triumph of Death,' cut in wood and first published at Lyons in 1538; afterwards copied by Hollar and others.—(Walpole, Anecdotes of Painting, &c., ed. Worrum; Hegner, Hans Holbein der Jungere, Berlin, 1827; Passavant, Kunstblatt, 1846, Nos. 45, 46.) [R.N.W.]

HOL

HOLBERG, LUDWIG or LOUIS, baron of, a dramatist and popular wr. of Denmark, 1684-1754.

HOLBOURNE, SIR R., a wr. on law, d. 1647.

HOLCROFT, THOMAS, a miscellaneous writer and translator, best known for his dramatic works and translations from the French, 1744-1809.

HOLDEN, H., a Roman Cath. div., 1596-1662.

HOLDER, W., a learned divine of the Church of England, known also as a writer on music, and one of the teachers of Sir Christopher Wren, d. 1697.

HOLDERLIN, F., a German poet, 1770-1836.

HOLDSWORTH, E., a clas. trans., 1688-1746.

HOLDSWORTH, OLDSWORTH, or OLDISWORTH, RICHARD, a learned divine, and adherent of King Charles, whose execution is thought to have hastened his death, 1590-1649.

HOLE, RICHARD, an English poet, 1802.

HOLINSHEAD, or HOLLYNSHEAD, RAPHAEL, author of the famous Chronicles known by his name, which comprise a history and description of England, Scotland, and Ireland, first published in 1577, and continued after his death by Stowe. Very little is known of his history, but he is supposed to have been steward to an English gentleman. He died about 1580.

HOLKAR. Three Mahratta princes of this name have acquired a distinguished place in the history of India. 1. MOLHAN RAOU HOLKAR, distinguished in Portuguese and Affghan warfare, died 1765. 2. TAKOUDJY, or TUCKAGEE, HOLKAR, the successor of the preceding, distinguished in many wars with the English, and for the introduction of the European discipline into his army, died 1797. 3. DJESWANT RAOU, or JESWUNT RAO HOLKAR, third son of Takoudjy, who maintained a war with the Marquis Wellesley in 1804, and died, after having been insane three years, in 1811. The latter was succeeded by his son, MULKAR RAO, and in 1818 the Mahratta power was finally overthrown.

HOL

HOLL, FR. XAVIER, a Ger. canon., 1720-1770.

HOLLAND, HENRY, first Lord. See FOX.

HOLLAND, HENRY RICHARD VASSAL FOX, Lord, a British statesman, was born on 2 November, 1773. His claim to remembrance depends more on the respect and affection of party and his personal friends, than on public fame. As the son of an influential statesman, and the nephew of Charles Fox, he had an opportunity of practically knowing political and mingling in public business. A considerable portion of his youth was spent abroad, and acquiring a partiality for Spain, he was mainly instrumental, by translations and other efforts, in exciting a taste for Spanish literature in Britain. He took his place in the House of Lords two years before the commencement of the present century. Save for the short period of the ministry of 18 connected with his uncle's name, he was in opposition until the formation of the reform ministry 1830. He was a staunch Whig, sometimes starting almost alone, and recording frequent protests against overwhelming majorities,—for the great body of his political associates were in the House of Commons. He was as steady in his personal as in his political attachments, and was always worshipped by a wide social circle of the first rank of his age. In his classic mansion of Holland House, his easy and munificent hospitality was a great moment in uniting and strengthening party. He joined the cabinet of 1830 as chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster. He died on 2 October, 1840. [J.H.]

[Holland House.]

HOLLAND, SIR N., a painter, died 1811.

HOLLAND, PHILEMON, a classical translator, 1551-1636. His son, HENRY, a bookseller and editor, date unknown.

HOLLAR, or HOLLAND, WENCESLAUS, Bohemian engraver, celebrated for his portraits of women and of animals, &c., 1607-1677.

HOLLES, DENZIL, Lord, an English diplomatist and member of the Long Parliament, in which he distinguished himself by his opposition to arbitrary measures of the government. He was one of the five demanded by the king on a charge of high treason in 1641, but was subsequently known as a royalist, and promoted the Restoration 1597-1680.

HOLLIS, THOMAS, an English gentleman for his republican principles, author of 'Memoirs,' printed shortly after his death, 1720-1774.

HOLLIS, TH. PELHAM, known as a statesman, son of Pelham and duke of Newcastle, d. 1768.

HOLLMANN, S. C., a Ger. philos., 1696-1877.

HOLLOWAY, T., a celeb. engraver, 1748-1827.

HOLMAN, J. G., a dramatic author, d. 1817.

HOLMES, GEORGE, an antiquarian, 1662-1749.

HOLMES, NATHANIEL, a learned div., d. 1678.

HOLMES, ROBERT, D.D., a learned divine and best known for his collated edition of the Magna Charta, of which 73 MS. volumes are deposited in the Bodleian library. He was appointed professor of poetry on the death of Warton, and dean of Winchester, 1749-1805.

HOLMSTIÖLD, THEODORE DE, a Danish physician and botanist, died 1793.

HOLMSTROEM, ISRAEL, a Swedish poet, and also as secretary of Charles XII., d. 1708.

HOLOFERNES, a general of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Assyria, killed by Judith, probably in the 7th century B.C.

HOLROYD, JOHN BAKER, earl of Sheffield, died of the posthumous works of Gibbon, 1741-1821.

HOLSTEIN, C., a Dutch painter, 1653-1691.

HOLSTEIN, J. L. DE, count of Lethrburg, a Dutch statesman, one of the founders of the Academy of Sciences at Copenhagen, 1694-1763.

HOLSTEIN GOTTORP, CHARLES FREDERICK, duke of, a nephew of Charles XII., and son-in-law to Peter the Great, 1700-1739.

HOLSTENIUS, L., a Ger. savant, 1596-1661.

HOLT, FRANCIS LUDLOW, a barrister and writer, many years editor of Bell's New Weekly Messenger, author of dramas, died 1844.

HOLT, JOHN, a miscellaneous wr., 1742-1801.

HOLT, SIR JOHN, a famous English judge, celebrated for his patriotic opposition to the measures of James II., and for his acquaintance with the constitutional law of England, was born at Thame, in Oxfordshire, 1642; and on the king's accession in 1685, had risen by his professional eminence as an advocate, to the office of Recorder of London. He had occupied this post about a year and a-half, when he was compelled to retire on consequence of his opposition to the court, and although he was afterwards made serjeant at law, devoted himself so entirely to the popular cause, that he was rewarded on the accession of George William with the appointment of Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench, and with a place in the privy council. In 1700 he declined the chancellorship which was offered to him on the death of Lord Somers, and remained in the office of judge, which he graced with his firmness, candour, and impartiality, until his death in 1709. Many anecdotes are related of him, illustrating his vigorous opposition to the least exercise of a prerogative superior to the law. On one occasion he solicited to support with his officers a party of the military sent to suppress a riot occasioned by the practice of decoying young men for the stations. 'Suppose,' said the judge to the serjeant, 'the populace should not disperse at my appearance, what are you to do then?' 'I replied the officer, 'we have orders to fire on them.' 'Have you, Sir?' said the judge; 'then I give notice of this, if there be one man killed, and he is tried before me, I will take care that you, and every soldier of your party shall be hanged. Sir,' he added, 'go back to those who sent you, and tell them that no officer of mine shall attend soldiers; and let them know at the same time that the laws of this kingdom are not to be executed by the sword; these matters belong to the civil power, and you have nothing to do with them.' It is proper to add, that when the officer had retired, Sir John himself repaired to the spot with a party of constables, and dispersed the mob without bloodshed; also, that this incident occurred after the accession of William, which is a still greater proof of Holt's inflexible integrity. His professional remains consist of 'A Report of Divers Cases in Pleas of the Crown in the reign of Charles II.,' published 1708. [E.R.]

HOLTE, JOHN, a Latin grammarian, 15th cent.

HOLTY, LOUIS HENRY CHRISTOPHER, a German poet and translator of English, 1748-1776.

HOLWELL, J. Z., an employé of the East India Company, author of a narrative of his own and his fellow-prisoners' sufferings in the black hole of Calcutta, and of Researches in the History and Mythology of Hindostan, &c., 1711-1798.

HOLYDAY, B., a learned divine, 1593-1661.

HOLYOAKE, FRANCIS, a country clergyman, known as the author of a Latin Dictionary, died 1653. His son, THOMAS, a physician, author of a Dictionary founded on that by his father, 1616-1675.

HOLYOKE, E. A., an American physician, known as a meteorologist and natural philosopher, as well as a professional writer, 1728-1829.

HOLYWOOD, JOHN, of Halifax, (in Latin John Sacrobosco,) an eminent mathematician, d. 1256.

HOMANN, J. B., a Ger. atlas engr., 1664-1724.

HOMBERG, W., a Dutch chemist, 1652-1717.

HOME, DAVID, a Scottish divine, 17th cent.

HOME, SIR EVERARD, a Scotch surgeon, au. of 'Lectures on Compar. Anatomy,' &c., 1756-1832.

HOME, HENRY, a Scotch judge, best known as Lord Kames, and distinguished as a writer of great metaphysical acumen. Besides professional works, elucidating the law of Scotland, he is the author of 'Essays upon British Antiquities,' 'Essays on the Principles of Morality and Natural Religion,' 'Introduction to the Art of Thinking,' 'Elements of Criticism,' 'Sketches of the History of Man,' 'Hints upon Education,' and 'The Gentleman Farmer,' a work addressed to the improvement of agriculture, 1696-1782.

HOME, or HUME, JOHN, a minister of the Scotch Kirk, author of the well-known tragedy of 'Douglas,' and other works, 1724-1808.

HOMER. The personal existence, the birth-place, and the era of the 'Father of Song,' have proved fertile subjects of discussion to literary antiquaries. Some of these have maintained that the Iliad and Odyssey are composed of a variety of legendary ballads, commemorative of incidents connected with the siege of Troy, which were the production of different authors, and were revised and skilfully interwoven in the age of Pisistratus; and that the name Homer was merely the impersonation of the genius of epic poetry. Seven cities at least claimed the honour of having given birth to the poet; and each of them seems to have had some tradition to allege in justification of its claim. The discrepancies of statement respecting the date of his existence are not less remarkable; for of the eight different epochs assigned to him, the oldest differs from the most recent by a period of 460 years. According to the theory which carries along with it the greatest amount of probability, Homer flourished in the second century after the taking of Troy, from about B.C. 1019 to B.C. 984, or from 165 to 200 years after the Trojan era, having been born about B.C. 1044. He appears to have been an Asiatic Greek, and a native of Smyrna, an Ionian city on the coast of Asia Minor; and from the circumstance of having been brought forth on the banks of the Meles, a river which ran beside the city, is said to have obtained the name Melissigenes. It is impossible, however, to come to any satisfactory conclusion on subjects which history has given us such scanty materials to determine. On one point all traditions agree, that he was afflicted with blindness; and his descriptions of external nature warrant the conclusion that this misfortune arose from accident or disease, and not from the operation of nature at his birth. The writers of antiquity unanimously considered the Iliad and Odyssey as the productions of a certain individual called Homer; and there is no evidence that the question of divided authorship was ever entertained by them. The existence of wandering minstrels is recognized in the early literature of Greece; and it has accordingly been inferred that the minute and accurate geographical knowledge which is displayed in his works, was acquired by the poet as he wandered from court to court, delighting his auditors with the 'Tale of Troy Divine.' 'Homer,' says Bentley, 'wrote a sequel of songs and rhapsodies, to be sung by himself for small earnings and good cheer, at festivals and other days of merriment; the Iliad he made for the men, and the Odysseys for the other sex.' Such, it is probable, was the state of the Homeric poems till the time of Pisistratus, who, aided by certain literary men, made a collection of the poet's works, superior in extent and accuracy to all that had preceded it, and thus preserved to future generations the noblest monuments of Greek genius. The poems attributed to Homer are the Iliad and Odyssey, to which some have added the Homeric Hymns. The Iliad stands first as the oldest, and also the most complete specimen of a national heroic poem. Its subject is the revenge taken by Achilles on Agamemnon for depriving him of his mistress, Briseis, during the siege of Troy, and the evils which in consequence befell the Greeks. The poem is divided into twenty-four books, which detail the movements of the besiegers during the period of Achilles' wrath, and end with the death and burial of Hector. The Odyssey, which is likewise divided into twenty-four books, contains the adventures of Ulysses when on his return from Troy to his native island Ithaca. The hymns, epigrams, &c., which are ascribed to Homer, are of very doubtful origin. 'In conception and portraiture of character,' says Colonel Mure, 'and the deeper vein of tragic pathos, Homer may be equalled, if not surpassed, by Shakspeare; in moral dignity of thought and expression by Milton; in the grace and delicacy of his lighter pictures by Petrarch and Ariosto; and in the gloomy grandeur of his supernatural imagery by Æschylus or Dante. But no one of these poets has combined, in a similar degree, those various elements of excellence in which they may separately claim to compare with him.'

HOMER, H., a classical editor, 1752-1791.

HOMILIUS, G. A., a Ger. composer, 1714.

HOMMEL, C. F., a German jurist, 1722-1791.

HONAIN, ABOU-YEZID, an Arabian physician and translator of learned works, 9th century.

HONDEKOTER, GILES, a Dutch landscape painter, born 1583. GYSBRECHT, his son and pupil, celebrated for the representation of portraits, born 1618.

MELCHIOR, son of Gysbrecht, his superior in the same line of art, 1636-1695.

HONDIUS, or DE HONDT, a Flemish painter, the first of whom, JOST or JODICUS, is distinguished as an engraver, especially of maps, 1611. His son, HENRY, called the Elder, for his portraits and landscapes, 1573-1610; the younger, HENRY, for his portraits of the reformers, 1588-1644. WILLIAM, a son of the preceding, a portrait engraver, born 1601. ABRAHAM, a posed grandson of the first Hondius, distinguished as a painter of hunting pieces, 1638-1695.

HONE, N., an Irish enamel painter, d. 1784.

HONE, WILLIAM, a miscellaneous writer and political satirist, whose 'Every-day Book' is a work of acknowledged value; though prosecuted in earlier part of his career for a parody on the Literary Digest, he latterly became sub-editor of the Patriot newspaper, 1780-1842.

HONORATUS. There are two saints of this name in the Romish calendar; the first, bishop of Arles and founder of the monastery of Lerins, d. 429. The second, bishop of Marseilles, a religious writer, born about 420 or 425.

HONORE - DE - SAINTE - MARIE, BLAISE VANZELLE, called the fath., a Fr. theo., 1651-1714.

HONORIUS, son of Theodosius the Great, d. 384, became emperor of the West, and his brother Arcadius emperor of the East, on the death of Theodosius 395; died, after being shamefully betrayed by the Goths under Alaric, 423.

HONORIUS, the first of the name, pope of Rome, 626-638; the second, 1124-1130; the third, distinguished for his political activity, and for confirming the order of St. Dominic and St. Francis, 1216-1227; the fourth, 1285-1287.

HONORIUS of AUTUN, professor at that university of theology and metaphysics, died 1140.

HONTHEIM, JOHN NICHOLAS DE, a German Catholic theologian, author of works designed to effect a union among Christians, and opposed to the political system of the Vatican, 1700-1790.

HONTHORST, GERARD DE, a Flemish painter, known in Italy as Gerardo della Notte, 1592-1634. His brother WILLIAM, also a painter, 1604-1634.

HOOGH, P. DE, a Flemish painter, 1643-1710.

HOOD, ROBIN, a chivalrous outlaw of the reign of Richard I., whose exploits in Sherwood Forest are the subjects of many admired ballads. All popular legends celebrate his generosity and skill in archery. The principal incidents of his life are to be found in Stowe, and a complete collection of the ancient poems, songs, and ballads relating to him was published by Ritson in 1795.

HOOD, SAMUEL, Viscount, an English commander, distinguished in several actions at the commencement of the last war, particularly at the bombardment of Havre; the defeat of Admiral Grasse under Rodney; the siege of Toulon; the capture of Corsica; after which he was Governor of Greenwich Hospital, and promoted to the rank of admiral. Born at Farncombe, Devonshire, 1724, died 1816.

HOOD, SIR SAMUEL, a cousin and companions of the preceding, died in the chief command of the East Indian fleet, 1814.

HOOD, THOMAS, the son of a bookseller in London, was born there in 1798. After receiving a miscellaneous education, he was placed, in his ninth year, in the counting-house of a Russian merchant; but, after an interval of repose on account of ill-health, he learned the art of engraving. In 1821, having already contributed fugitive papers to periodicals, he became sub-editor of the London Magazine; and for all the rest of his life he was an author by profession, though he also frequently amused himself and his readers by inserting in his humorous illustrations designed and etched by himself. His career was that of an honourable, industrious, and industrious man, who was never able to rise himself above the necessity of toiling for a livelihood; and who, long suffering under ill health, endured bravely, even on his deathbed, his efforts to provide for his wife and children. Hood's career was of an extremely singular cast. It ended, in an unusual degree, intensely serious and with strength of comic humour; and perhaps his chief defect lay in his incapacity of either blending these elements harmoniously, or giving up to either without the other. As a punster he was inimitable; yet even here his most humorous flights bear with them a burden of thoughtful meaning which is hurtful to their comic effect. Two novels, 'Tylney Hall,' and the uncompleted story called 'Our Family,' are the least successful of his attempts. The chief collections of his witticisms are the 'Whims and Oddities,' 'The Comic Annual.' In a volume containing 'The Plea of the Midsummer Fairies,' and other poems, he indicated the power of rising into a higher sphere of poetry. 'Eugene Aram's Dream' is striking; and yet more pathetic is his well-known 'Song of the Shirt.' This wild and vigorous piece was written shortly before his death, which took place in 1845. [W.S.]

HOOF, CORNELIUS VAN, an eminent Dutch painter and historian, 1581-1647.

HOOGHE, P. DE, a Dutch painter, died 1708.

HOOGHE, R. DE, a Dutch eng., abt. 1638-1720.

HOOGHEVEEN, H., a Dut. Hellenist, 1712-91.

HOOGSTRAATEN, DAVID VAN, a Latin poet, of a Dutch and Latin dictionary, 1658-1724.

HOOGSTRAATEN, JAMES VAN, a Dutch friar, one of the first opponents of the reform., d. 1527.

HOOGSTRAATEN, THIERRY VAN, a landscape painter of Antwerp, 1596-1640. His son, JAMES, a painter and poet, 1627-1678.

HOOK, JAMES, a composer of operas, melodramas and songs, distinguished for his amazing industry, 1746-1827. His son of the same name, John, of Worcester, author of some dramatic writings, but more celebrated as a controversial divine and political pamphleteer, died 1828.

HOOK, THEODORE EDWARD, born in London 1788, was the son of a musical composer. Educated flimsily, he became, in his teens, a writer of farces and farces (some of them successful);

while he was yet more famous for audacious practical jokes. He found his way into gay and aristocratic society through his ready wit and inexhaustible fertility of puns, his musical accomplishments, and his extraordinary feats of extemporaneous rhyming. In 1812, the liking which the Prince Regent had formed for him made him treasurer of the Mauritius, without either knowledge of business or common prudence. In 1818, he was sent home under a guard, being accused of peculation; and, though the criminal charge was dropped, he was held a debtor of government in a very large amount, which he never made any endeavours to discharge. He attempted, however, not unsuccessfully, to serve the ministry of the day, by establishing, in 1820, the 'John Bull' newspaper; and in it appeared his best witticisms, which indeed do not rise above the level of newspaper jesting. He wrote novels, the earlier of which, particularly 'Sayings and Doings,' were once fashionable. But for not a few years his career was both discreditable and really unhappy. He was tasking his mind in authorship, while the greater part of his time was engrossed by the gay society in which his wit made him so acceptable; his affairs were falling into irretrievable disorder through thoughtless extravagance; and his health was giving way under increasing habits of intoxication. He died in 1841. [W.S.]

HOOKE, NATHANIEL, a native of Ireland, known as a zealous catholic and historian of Rome, and as the assistant of Sarah, duchess of Marlborough, when compiling her memoirs, died 1763.

HOKE, ROBERT, a mathematician and experimental philosopher, dist. for his numerous mechanical inventions and discoveries in science, 1635-1703.

HOOKER, JOHN, a learned historian and antiquarian, born about 1524, died 1601.

HOOKER, RICHARD, the famous author of the 'Ecclesiastical Polity,' was born about 1553, at the village of Heavitree, near Exeter. His own parents were in narrow circumstances, but the family had given several mayors to that city, and Richard was nephew of John Hooker, the historian, by whom he was introduced to Bishop Jewel. The latter provided for his education by sending him as clerk to Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and settling a pension upon him. In 1577 he was received Master of Arts, and two years later appointed professor of Hebrew. Having taken holy orders in 1584, he was presented to the rectory of Drayton-Beauchamp, in Buckinghamshire, and about a year afterwards became master of the temple in London, where, at that time, Walter Travers, a zealous puritan, was afternoon lecturer. The opposition between the doctrines taught by Hooker, a staunch episcopalian, in the morning, and those of the presbyterian in the afternoon, soon grew to an open controversy. Travers was at length put to silence by the court of High Commission, and published his appeal to the Privy Council, the answer to which by Hooker, was the germ of the work on which his celebrity now rests. The extensive learning and eloquent command of the resources of the English tongue displayed in that work have been the admiration of some of the greatest names in literature. It is hardly necessary to state that its principles are a defence of the English establishment, but it is remarkable at the same time for its anticipation of the political doctrines of the Whigs, deriving all government from the implied consent of the people, or the free choice and judgment of the governed. The 'Ecclesiastical Polity' is to this day the armoury of the Anglican Church. Its author died in the rectory of Bishopsbourne, Kent, 1600. His life was written by Isaac Walton, and published with the second edition of Hooker's works in 1666, and has since been frequently reprinted with them.

[E.R.]

HOOKER, TH., an English divine, 1586-1647.

HOOLE, CHARLES, a schoolmaster, author of several introductory works in Latin, 1610-1666.

HOOLE, JOHN, a celebrated dramatic writer, translator of Ariosto and Tasso, &c., 1727-1803.

HOOPER, GEORGE, bishop of Bath and Wells, distinguished as an Oriental scholar and ecclesiastical antiquarian, 1640-1727.

HOOPER, HOPER, or HOUPER, JOHN, bishop of Gloucester under Edward VI., author of many pious works, burnt in the time of Qu. Mary, 1555.

HOORNBECK, J., a Dutch divine, 1617-66.

HOORNE, J. VAN, a Dutch physician, 1621-70.

HOPE, CHARLES, a distingd. Scottish lawyer—Lord President of the Court of Session, 1763-1851.

HOPE, JOHN, a Scotch botanist, 1725-1786.

HOPE, THOMAS, celebrated for his works in illustration of art, especially of ancient costume and the life of the Greeks, died 1831.

HOPE, SIR TH., a Scotch lawyer, died 1646.

HOPITAL, MICHAEL DE L', a French statesman and diplomatist, cel. for his integrity, died 1573.

HOPITAL, WM. FRANCIS ANTHONY DE L', Marquis De St. Mesme, a Fr. mathem., 1661-1704.

HOPKINS, EZEKIEL, a learned English prelate, 1633-1690. His son, CHARLES, a dramatist, 1664-1699.

JOHN, brother of the latter, author of 'Amasia,' a collection of poems, born 1675.

HOPKINS, LEMUEL, an American physician, distinguished as a political writer, 1750-1801.

HOPKINS, SAMUEL, an American sectarian, au. of a 'Treatise on the Millennium,' 1721-1803.

HOPKINS, STEPHEN, an American statesman, dist. as an economist and mathematician, 1707-85.

HOPKINS, W., an English divine, 1647-1700.

HOPKINS, W., an Arian writer, 1706-1786.

HOPKINSON, FRANCIS, a distinguished political writer of America, and an active promoter of American independence, 1738-1791.

HOPPERS, J., a Dutch diplomatist, 1523-76.

HOPPNER, J., a portrait painter, 1759-1810.

HOPTON, ARTHUR, a mathemat., 1588-1614.

HOPTON, RALPH, Lord, an Engl. general dist. in the Low Countries, and as a royalist, d. 1652.

HOPTON, SUSANNA, a religi. wr., 1627-1709.

HORACE. QUINTUS HORATIUS FLACCUS, was born near Venusia (now Venosa), a town on the confines of Apulia and Lucania, in the south of Italy, on the 8th of December, B.C. 65. The materials for his life are derived almost entirely from his own works. His father, who was a respectable freedman, exercised the profession of a collector of payments at auctions; and having, by this comparatively humble calling, realized a competency, which he invested in the purchase of a house and farm in the neighbourhood of Venusia, there settled as a small farmer. In this house the poet was born, and here he spent the years of his boyhood.

When he was about twelve years of age, his father, not satisfied with the provincial school of Venusia, had him removed to Rome, and placed under the care of Orbilius, an old military man, whose duty was to bring up his son in the manner of a Roman. Though by no means rich, he had a tender regard for the feelings of his son who was to mix with boys of the highest class; and accordingly provided him with the requisite books, and attendance of slaves, he himself watching his morals with gentle severity. At the school of Orbilius, Horace was instructed in grammar in the Latin and Greek languages; Livius Andronicus being the class-book in the former, and Homer in the latter. Athens was at this time regarded as the university of the world; and though Horace, in accordance with the prevailing practice, repaired in his eighteenth year, B.C. 46, to complete his education by a course of philosophy and science under Greek masters. The advantages which he derived from his residence there are evinced by his familiarity with the whole range of Greek literature, and especially with the terse and pointed language of the Comedians. But the civil wars which followed the death of Julius Cæsar, B.C. 44, interrupted him in his studious and peaceful career. The arrival of Brutus at Athens, and the patriotic feelings of the youthful Romans, along with others, Horace ardently embraced the cause of the Republic. Though entirely inexperienced in war, he was promoted to the rank of military tribune, with the command of a legion, and in this character shared in the defeat of Philippi, B.C. 42. After the battle, having forfeited his estate, he returned to Rome, and his poverty perhaps saved him from proscription, and by acting as a clerk in the quaestor's office, and practising the strictest economy, he continued to live till he found means of making his name known to the poets Varius and Virgil, by which his name was first mentioned to Mæcenas. At his first interview with his future patron and friend, it seems not to have been satisfactory; for it was not till after nine months had elapsed that Mæcenas requested him to repeat his visit. This appearance was an unpropitious beginning, however, was soon followed by a friendship which speedily ripened into intimacy; and which introduced the poet to the highest and most refined society in Rome. A friend of the prime minister found easy access to the emperor; Horace was soon on terms of familiarity with Augustus, and enjoyed his friendship and patronage during the remainder of his life. But the friendship of Mæcenas brought some more substantial to Horace than the mere intimacy of acquaintance in the higher circles—his patron made him independent for life by the gift of an estate in the Sabine territory, about thirty-four miles from Rome. The estate was not large, but it was prettily situated, and entirely suited to the tastes and wants of the poet. His admiration of the beautiful scenery in the neighbourhood of Tivoli, induced him to hire or purchase a country house in that romantic town; and all the later years of his life were passed between these two residences and Rome. Horace died on the 16th of November, B.C. 8, at the age of fifty-seven—thirteen months after the death of his friend and patron Mæcenas. His works consist of two books res, a book of Epodes, four books of Odes, two books of Epistles, and a treatise on the Art of Poetry. Want of space prevents us from offering a sketch of Horace's character as a man and as a poet. Though living on terms of intimacy with great, he retained through life his cherished independence, and complimented his powerful patrons without the servility of flattery. His works commanded the admiration of all succeeding ages; and though deficient, perhaps, in some of the highest elements of poetry, will continue to be read and studied as models of simplicity and cultivated taste. [G.F.]

ORAPOLLO. See ORUS APOLLO.

ORBERG, M., a learned English divine, author of a 'Treatise on Hell Torments,' 1707-1773.

ORBERG, P., a Swedish painter, died 1814.

ORDT, COUNT DE, a Swedish officer in the service of Russia, author of 'Historic Memoirs,' d. 1785.

ORMAN, W., a botanical author, died 1535.

ORMISDAS, pope of Rome, reigned 514-523.

ORMISDAS, the first of the name, king of Persia, reigned 271-272; the second, 303-311; the third, usurped the throne, 457-460; the fourth, and successor of the great Chosroes, 579-592.

ORN, the name of a distinguished family in Sweden, the best known of whom are GUSTAVE, Count Horn, one of the lieutenants of Gustave Adolph, and field-marshal and constable of Sweden during the reign of Christina, born 1592. ARVID

ORNARD, Count Horn, of the same family, principal instigator of the revolution of 1719, and chief of the English party, 1664-1742. FREDERICK

ORN, a general in the service of France, afterwards counsellor to Adolphus Frederick and

Charles III., 1715-1796. The son of the latter, Count HORN, a man of letters, banished for his involvement with Ankerstroem, died 1823.

ORN, CHARLES EDWARD, a ballad and opera composer, author of 'Cherry Ripe,' 'I've been in love,' and similar songs, 1786-1849.

ORN, F. CHR., a German critic, 1781-1837.

ORN, G., a Bavarian historian, 1620-1670.

ORN, J. VAN, a Swedish physician, 1662-1724.

ORN, or HORNES, PHILIP DE MONTMORENCI-NIVELLE, Count, a Spanish general of the Low Countries, executed for conspiring with the king of Orange 1568. His son, FLORIS DE MONTMORENCI, executed in Spain 1570.

ORNE, GEORGE, a learned English prelate, well known as the author of 'A Commentary on the Book of Psalms,' was born 1730, and was highly distinguished as a diligent Hebrew scholar, and a partizan of John Hutchinson. His first publication was an ironical attack on Newton, in 1711, entitled 'The Theology and Philosophy in

Newton's Somnium Scipionis Explained; or a Brief

Attempt to Demonstrate that the Newtonian

System is agreeable to the Notions of the Wisest

Antients, and that mathematical principles are the most sure ones.' This was followed by several works of a similar character in the course of the next ten years, including attacks on Dr. Shuckleton, and Dr. Kennicott, with the latter of whom, the young scholar, at a later period, became intimately acquainted. Horne took orders in 1738, was successively president of Magdalen

College 1768, chaplain to the king 1771, vice-chancellor of the university of Oxford 1776, dean of Canterbury 1781, and bishop of Norwich 1790. He died in 1792, and was buried at Elham, in Kent. There can be no hesitation in pronouncing that Bishop Horne was a great biblical scholar, but too much inclined perhaps to write on subjects of which he had no true understanding. In proof of this it is enough to say, that the same hand which wrote in support of John Hutchinson, wrote against William Law. He is the author of many works besides the 'Commentary,' on which he bestowed nearly twenty years' labour, and the latter must always hold a distinguished place in biblical literature. [E.R.]

HORNECK, A., a German divine, 1641-1696.

HORNECK, O., a Ger. poet and hist., 1250-1310.

HORNEMANN, FREDERIC CONRAD, a celebr.

Ger. traveller employed by the African Soc., 1772-97.

HORNER, FR., a political economist, 1778-1817.

HORNIUS, GEO., a Ger. historian, 1620-1670.

HORNSBY, TH., an Eng. astronom., 1734-1810.

HORNTHORST, GERARD, a distinguished Dutch painter, 1592-1660.

HORREBOW, P., a Danish astron., 1697-1764.

HORREBOW, V., a Danish navigator, 1712-60.

HORROX, JEREMIAH, a distinguished discoverer in astronomy, author of a theory of lunar motion, afterwards verified by Newton, 1619-1641.

HORSBURY, J., a Sc. hydrograph., 1762-1836.

HORSLEY, JOHN, an antiq. savant, 1685-1731.

HORSLEY, SAMUEL, an English prelate, celebrated for his numerous works in theology, science, and classical literature, 1733-1806.

HORSTIUS, JAMES, a German physician, author of a work on Sleep-walking, 1539-1600. His nephew, GREGORY, a physician and medical author, 1578-1636. The son of the latter, of the same name, published his father's works in 1660, and his brother, DANIEL JOHN, was a writer on anatomy and editor of several medical works.

HORSTIUS, J. M., a Germ. editor, 1597-1644.

HORT, or HORTE, J., an Engl. div., d. 1751.

HORTA, GARCIA AB., a Portu. herbal, 16th c.

HORTENSE EUGENIE DE BEAUHAR-

NAIS, daughter of Josephine, the consort of Napoleon Buonaparte, and of the Vicomte De

Beauharnais, her first husband, was born at Paris

1783, and married to Louis Buonaparte, the brother of Napoleon, in 1802. The match had been desired by the consul for political reasons, and it proved a most unhappy one. In 1806,

Hortense became queen consort of Holland, and about a year afterwards was separated from her husband after giving birth to three sons:—1. NA-POLEON CHARLES, who died in infancy, and whose intended adoption by Napoleon was refused by

Louis. 2. NAPOLEON LOUIS, who was baptized by the pope Pius VII., and instead of attaining the high destiny proposed for him, was killed in an insurrection at Romagna 1832; and 3. LOUIS

NAPOLEON, the present emperor of the French.

On the divorce of her mother, Josephine, Queen

Hortense joined her in her retirement at Malmaison, and after her death in 1814, so soon followed by the fall of Napoleon, became an unprotected and calumniated wanderer, until her residence was fixed at Angsburg by the king of Bavaria. She died October 5th, 1837. Her disposition was modest and retiring: her influence at the court of Napoleon was generously exercised in favour of the distressed, and her affectionate solicitude for the emperor was fully manifested after the disaster of Waterloo. Hortense was duchess of St. Leu in virtue of a settlement made by the allies betw. the first fall of Napoleon and the hundred days. [E.R.]

HORTENSIVS, a German classic, 1501-1577.

HORTENSIVS, QUINTUS, a celebrated orator and consul of Rome, died B.C. 50.

HORTON, TH., a learned divine, died 1673.

HORUS APOLLO. See ORUS APOLLO.

HOSEA, a prophet of Samaria, 8th cent. B.C.

HOSEA, the last king of Israel, 8th cent. B.C.

HOSKINS, JOHN, an Engl. poet, 1566-1638.

HOSPINIUS, R., a Swiss contro., 1547-1626.

HOSPITAL, MICHAEL DE L'. See HOPITAL.

HOSSFELD, J. W., a Ger. mathe., 1768-1837.

HOST, N. TH., a German botanist, 1763-1834.

HOSTE, JOHN, a Fr. mathematician, d. 1631.

HOSTE, PAUL, a French engineer, 1652-1700.

HOSTILIAN, a son of the emperor Decius, reigned some months with Gallus, and died 252.

HOSTUS, M., a Germ. antiquarian, 1509-1587.

HOTHAM, H., the admiral intrusted with the blockade of the western coast of France after the battle of Waterloo, and who received Napoleon on board the Bellerophon, 1776-1833.

HOTMAN, F., a Fr. juriconsult, 1524-1590.

HOTTINGER, JOHN HENRY, one of the most learned of the Swiss reformers, especially in the Oriental languages, 1620-1667. JOHN JAMES, his son, also a classical scholar and theologian, author of Theological Dissertations, and an 'Ecclesiastical History of Switzerland,' 1652-1735.

HOTZE, J. C. VAN, an Austrian gen., k. 1799.

HOVARD, D., a Fr. juriconsult, 1725-1802.

HOUBIGANT, CH. FR., a learned French priest, au. of a Latin version of the Bible, &c., 1686-1783.

HOUGHARD, JEAN NICHOLAS, a general of the French revolution, the successor of Custine in the command of the armies on the Moselle and the Rhine, executed on a charge of treason, 1740-93.

HOUDON, J. A., a French sculpt., 1741-1828.

HOUDRY, VINCENT, a Fr. Jesuit, 1631-1729.

HOUEL, J. P. L., a French painter, 1735-1813.

HOUGH, JOHN, bishop of Worcester, celebrated for his opposition to James II., 1651-1743.

HOUGHTON, MAJOR, an African trav., d. 1791.

HOULAGOU, a Mogul prince, died 1265.

HOUMAIOUN, the second Mogul sultan of Hindostan, born 1509. Being defeated in 1541 by Chir-Khan, he reconquered his kingdom in 1555, and died the following year.

HOUNG-WOU, a Chinese emperor, 1327-1398.

HOUSTON, W., a disting. botanist, died 1733.

HOUTEVILLE, C. F., a French ecclesiastic, author of 'La Vérité de la Religion Chrétienne, Prouvée par les Faits,' 1688-1742.

HOUTMAN, CORNELIUS, founder of the first Dutch factory in the East Indies, 1550-1608. His brother, FREDERIC, governor of Amboine, and author of a Malay dictionary, 1607.

HOVEDEN, ROGER DE, an English historian, of the times succeeding the annals of Bede, namely, from 731 to the third year of King John, 1202. His work is held in the highest esteem by the learned for its faithfulness.

HOW, WILLIAM, a botanist, 1619-1656.

HOWARD. The Howards are well known as one of the noblest families of England, and many of them have arrived at distinction. The principal are—THOMAS HOWARD, earl of Surrey, and third duke of Norfolk, an eminent statesman and naval and military commander, distinguished at the battle of Flodden, 1488-1554. EDWARD, younger brother of the preceding, and admiral of England, killed in action with the French, 1511. HENRY, earl of Surrey, eldest son of Thomas, accomplished chevalier, and the first polite writer of love verses in the English tongue, beheaded on a trumpety charge of high treason, 1516-16. HENRY, second son of the poet, and earl of Northampton, known as a trimmer at court and as a man of letters, implicated in the murder of Oxbury, 1539-1614. CHARLES, known as Lord Effingham and earl of Nottingham, and grandson of the duke of Norfolk, commander of the channel fleet on the invasion of England by the Spanish Armada, 1536-1624. THOMAS, earl of Arundel and earl marshal in the reign of Charles I., known as a diplomatist and antiquarian, died 1644. HENRY, his second son, and sixth duke of Norfolk by whom the Arundelian marbles, collected by his father, were presented to the university of Oxford about 1668. CHARLES, eleventh duke of Norfolk and formerly earl of Surrey, known as a statesman in opposition to Lord North and Pitt, 1746-1815. HOWARD, CATHERINE, daughter of Lord Edmund Howard, third son of Thomas duke of Norfolk, married to Henry VIII. on his divorce from Anne of Cleves, 1540, beheaded 1549.

HOWARD, EDWARD, a lieutenant in the royal navy, author of 'Rattlin the Reefer,' 'Jack Ashore' and other marine novels, died 1842.

HOWARD, FREDERIC, earl of Carlisle, son of Henry the fourth earl, and grandson of William fourth Lord Byron, known as a poet and a partizan of the government, 1748-1825.

HOWARD, GEORGE EDWARD, a poet, architect, and political writer, died 1786.

HOWARD, H., a miscellaneous writer, author of 'Memorials of the Howard Family,' 1757-1841.

[Birth-place of Howard. Clapton, Middlesex.]

HOWARD, JOHN, the philanthropist, was born at Hackney, London, in 1726. His father left him an immense fortune, but in his will, expressly prohibited his getting the control of it till he had reached his twenty-fifth year. His guardian bound him an apprentice to a grocer. But having purchased his indentures, he left the business st, and set out on a continental tour. On his way to London, he married his landlady, a widow considerably older than himself, out of pure gratitude for her attentions to him during a lingering illness. But she dying soon after, he again resolved to travel, and went to Portugal with a view to examine the ruins of Lisbon after the earthquake.

The vessel in which he sailed was attacked by a French privateer, and all on board made prisoners. Besides the loss of his liberty, he was subjected to various and severe privations in his state of confinement; and it was the recollection of his personal sufferings that awakened his sympathies for the inmates of prisons. Being released in exchange of prisoners, he returned, and his labours and earnest efforts were made to bring the subject before the public and the parliament in London. He now married a second time, but his wife died in a few years after, leaving him with an only child. For a time he resided on his estate at Wotton, Bedford, dividing his attention between the management of his property, and the domestic education of his son. But this son, being the subject of a hopeless derangement, was obliged to be placed in an asylum; and having no home, he sought occupation in the pursuit of his favourite schemes of benevolence, the amelioration of prisons. With this view, he visited, in 1775, every prison in the United Kingdom, and published the result of his inquiries. The same course of investigation led him to resolve to pursue in foreign countries; and accordingly, in 1778 and the four following years he inspected all the public prisons in France, Switzerland, Germany, and Holland, afterwards extending his tour into the southern countries of Europe. He now entered on a new and different course of philanthropic pursuits, and applied himself into the causes and cure of the plague. His attention was now directed to those countries which were subject to the ravages of that dreaded pestilence, the countries of the Levant. On his return to England, he published an account of the chief epidemics in Europe, and his object was so far aided by the attention of skilful and scientific men, as well as the general public being powerfully excited by his details. Commencing a second tour of inquiry, he resolved to travel through the eastern part of Europe with Egypt and Asia Minor. Leaving the shores of Britain in 1789, he sailed through Holland and Germany, anxious to reach Petersburg, Moscow, and the shores of the Black Sea in the proper season. In his progress through the south of Prussia he had reached Königsberg, when he was seized with malignant fever, which after a few days' illness, terminated his extraordinary career on 20th January, 1790. He was buried in a spot marked by himself about five miles from Kherson, and a rude obelisk is placed over his grave, bearing the brief Latin inscription, 'Vixit proper alios;—he lived for the good of others. His benevolence was not merely that of a warm and feeling heart, which sympathized deeply with the sufferings of humanity, but was based on Christian principles, for he lived and died strong in the faith of the gospel. [R.J.]

HOWARD, SIR R., an Eng. histor., 1626-1698.
 HOWARD, S., a composer of ballads, d. 1783.
 HOWARD, SIR W., a distin. lawyer, 13th cent.
 HOWDEN, JOHN FRANCIS CARADOC, Baron,

a native of Ireland, distinguished in the army, 1762-1832.

HOWE, CHARLES, a religious wr., 1661-1745.

HOWE, JOHN, a nonconf. divine, 1630-1705.

HOWE, JOHN, a noted politician of the reign of William III. and Queen Anne, in office under the latter, and succeeded by Walpole on the accession of George I., died 1721.

HOWE. ADMIRAL EARL HOWE was born in 1725, and was the second son of Lord Viscount Howe. He entered the navy at fourteen, and distinguished himself for courage and seamanship as he rose through the various ranks of the service to that of post-captain. In 1758 he succeeded (by his elder brother's death) to the family estates and honours; but he was true to the sea, and was in constant active employment to the end of the Seven Years' War. When France took part against England in the American war, Lord Howe was admiral of our fleet off the American coast, and gained great credit by successfully keeping the French admiral D'Estaing in check throughout 1778, though Howe's fleet was far inferior to that of his adversary. At the end of that year Howe returned to Europe, and performed the important service of relieving Gibraltar. In 1788 he was made an earl. At the commencement of the war against France in 1793, Howe took the command of the western channel fleet at the king's earnest and personal request. In the next year he succeeded in bringing the main French republican fleet to action, and gained the great victory of 'THE GLORIOUS FIRST OF JUNE.' Lord Howe was now seventy years of age, but he lived to do his country more good service; and it was he who won back, by judicious kindness, many of our seamen to their duty in the alarming mutinies at the Nore and Spithead. Earl Howe died 4th August, 1799. [E.S.C.]

HOWE, SIR WILLIAM, brother of the famous admiral, and successor of General Gage in the command of the British forces in America, d. 1814.

HOWEL, LAWRENCE, one of the non-juring divines, celebrated for his great learning, died 1720.

HOWEL-THE-GOOD, or HYWEL DDA, a famous legislator and king of all Wales, 10th cent.

HOWELL, JAMES, an Eng. hist., 1595-1666.

HOWELL, W., a celebrated historian, d. 1683.

HOWLEY, W., abp. of Canterbury, 1765-1848.

HOWSON, JOHN, a learned prelate, 1556-1631.

HOYLE, E., a writer on whist, &c., 1672-1769.

HUARTE, JOHN, a Spanish philosopher, au. of a curious and valuable work, transl. into English by Carew and Bellamy, and entitled 'The Trial of Wits,' and first publisher of the alleged letter of Lentullus concerning the Saviour, born 1520.

HUBER, FRANCOIS, an eminent naturalist, was born at Geneva in 1750. He died in 1831. —Very early in life Huber manifested a great love for the pursuit of natural history. A cataract, however, showed itself in his eyes while he was still a youth, and before he arrived at manhood he had become totally blind. Before his eyesight failed he had had his attention drawn to the examination of bees. Having read the works of Reaumur and Bonnet, he believed that many of the statements made by those authors with regard to their history, were at variance with what he had himself observed; and to ascertain the correctness of his opinion became the chief object of his life. Huber was fortunate in finding an affectionate wife and an attached servant, who devoted their lives to him with the greatest tenderness and assiduity. Not being able to see himself, he made use of their eyes; and under his directions, and assisted by the invention of several kinds of glass hives, Madame Huber and the faithful Burnens were enabled to carry on their observations undisturbed and at leisure. By these means he succeeded in collecting together an immense number of facts with regard to the economy of bees which were before that time unknown. These he published at various times, and his different memoirs were collected by him and published in 1814. This rendered his name famous throughout Europe; a fame which was increased by the knowledge of the fact, that these accurate observations had been made by a man totally blind from his youth. M. De Candolle has named a genus of plants after him, Huberia. [W.B.]

HUBER, J., father of the preceding, au. of 'Observations on the Flight of Birds,' 1722-1750.

HUBER, JOHN, a native of Geneva, known as an artist in paper and writer on balloons, 1722-1790.

HUBER, JOHN JAMES, a native of Basle, cele. for his works in anatomy and botany, 1707-1778.

HUBER, JOHN RUDOLPH, a distin. painter, called the Tintoret of Switzerland, 1668-1748.

HUBER, MARY, a Swiss philos. wr., 1694-1759.

HUBER, MICHAEL, a native of Bavaria, translator of Gellert, Gesner, and Winckelmann into French, 1727-1804. LOUIS FERDINAND, his son, a journalist, 1764-1804. THERESE, a daughter of Heyne, and wife of the preceding, distinguished as a novelist, 1764-1829.

HUBER, SAMUEL, a Swiss divine, 16th cent.

HUBER, ULRIC, a Dutch savant, 1636-1694. His son, ZACHARIAS, also a learned wr., 1669-1732.

HUBERT DE L'ESPINE, a French traveller in Tartary, author of 'Description des admirables regions de Tartarie,' published at Paris, 1558.

HUBERT, F., a French engraver, 1744-1809.

HUBERT, M., a Fr. preac. and au., 1640-1717.

HUBERT, ST., the apos. of Ardennes, 7th cent.

HUBNER, JOHN, a German geographer and historian, 1668-1731. His son, of the same name, known as a man of letters, died 1758.

HUBNER, MARTIN, a Danish publicist, 1725-95.

HUDDART, J., a distin. navigator, 1741-1816.

HUDDE, JOHN, a Dutch mathem., 1640-1704.

HUDESFORD, G., a burlesque poet, last ct.

HUDESFORD, W., a naturalist of last cent.

HUDDLESTONE, ROBERT, a Scottish antiquarian, editor of a new edition of 'Toland's History of the Druids,' 1776-1826.

HUDSON, HENRY, an able English navigator, to whom we owe many important discoveries in the northern regions. Nothing is known respecting him till 1607, when he was sent out by a company of London merchants to seek a passage to India directly across the pole, many previous expeditions having failed to discover either a north-east or a north-west passage. Leaving the Thames on the 1st May, in a small vessel, with only ten men and a boy, he sailed for Greenland, which he reached in lat. 70°. Before he was stopped by ice, he had succeeded in advancing along the E. coast beyond the 80th parallel, considerably to the north of Spitzbergen, and returned by Nova Zembla to the North Cape. He made several other voyages in pursuit of the same object, during one of which he was in the service of the Dutch, and discovered the North American river which bears his name. In his last voyage, undertaken A.D. 1610, he discovered the large gulf or inland sea named after him, and which, three years later, was carefully examined by Sir Thomas Button. Hudson was obliged to pass the winter in the southern part of it, so that on the return of summer his provisions were nearly exhausted, and his men were exposed to great hardships, being obliged to subsist upon moss and frogs. His men became mutinous, and resolved to turn him and those faithful to him adrift, that the limited stock of provisions might last the longer. The ringleader was a young man named Green, of respectable connections, who had been benevolently brought out by Hudson in order to separate him from his vicious companions, with whom he was leading a profligate life. The conspiracy broke out on the 2nd of June; the captain was seized and bound, with eight others, his staunchest friends, most of whom were sick or lame, was turned adrift on a floating ice, in the strait which bears his name. Some meal, and an iron pot, a fowling-piece, and ammunition, were the only means allowed them of preserving their lives; and there can be no doubt that they soon perished miserably. Among the fourteen who remained on board were Robert Bylot and Habbakuk Pricket, to the latter of whom we owe the only account there exists of the latter part of Hudson's voyage. The wrecker, Green, was killed soon after in an affray with the natives; Robert Ivett, the next most guilty of the crime, died of starvation. Most of the rest reached the west coast of Ireland, after dreadful sufferings. [J.L.]

HUDSON, DR. JOHN, a critical au., 1662-1717.

HUDSON, TH., a portrait painter, 1701-1777.

HUDSON, W., a distin. botanist, 1730-1793.

HUE, FRANCIS, a valet of Louis XVI., author of a narrative of his last years, 1757-1819.

HUERTA, VICENTE GARCIA DE LA, a Spanish tragedian, editor of a critical edition of the Spanish plays, 1729-1797.

HUET, PETER DANIEL, a French prelate, distinguished as a philosopher and biblical scholar, 1630-1727.

HUFELAND, C. W., a Ger. phys., 1762-1812.

HUFNAGEL, G., a Flemish poet and naturalist, skilled as a painter of animals, 1545-1600.

HUGFORD, IGNAZIO, a painter, 1703-1778.

HUGH, or HUGUES, the name of several princes of the middle ages, the most distinguished of whom are—HUGH THE GREAT, son and successor of Robert as count of Paris, and father of Hugh Capet, died 956. HUGH CAPET, son of the preceding, and founder of the third dynasty of kings of France, born 939, crowned at Rheims 987, died 996. HUGH OF PROVENCE, king of Italy, died 947. HUGH I., duke of Burgundy, reigned 1075-1078, died 1093. HUGH II., reigned 1102-1142. HUGH III., a distinguished warrior and crusader, succeeded 1162, died in Asia 1191. HUGH IV., a crusader and companion-in-arms of St. Louis, 1218-1272. HUGH V., the last of the dukes of Burgundy of this name, reigned 1363-1365. Besides these, four kings of Cyprus tioned:—HUGH I., reigned 1205-1218. HUGH 1253-1267. HUGH III., called 'The Great,' 1276. HUGH IV., king of Cyprus and Jerusalem, suc. Henry II. 1324, abdicated 1361.

HUGH, SAINT. The earliest saint of this name is a French prelate who administered the diocese of Paris and Bayeux, died 730. Next in order of time is HUGH OF CLUNY, abbot of the monastery of that name, flourished 1023-1109. The third SAINT HUGH, a bishop of Grenoble, famous for having located Bruno and his companions in the Grande Chartreuse, lived 1053-1132.

HUGH OF AMIENS, a native of that place, afterwards prior of Cluny, kn. as a theologian, d. 1164.

HUGH OF BREGI, a bard of the 13th century.

HUGH OF FLAVIGNY, abbot of that place in 17, and author of the 'Chronicle of Verdun.'

HUGH OF FLEURY, abbot of that place, and of 'De La Puissance Royale,' &c., 11th century.

HUGH OF POITIERS, a chronicler, 12th cent.

HUGH OF ST. CHER, a learned monk and biblical au. of a Bible Concordance, died 1263.

HUGH OF ST. VICTOR, a theologian, died 1140.

HUGHES, JOHN, a poet and miscellaneous writer, translator of Fontenelle's 'Dialogues of the dead,' &c., 1677-1720. JABEZ, his brother, a biblical translator, and miscel. writer, 1685-1731.

HUGHES, JOHN, a learned editor, 1682-1710.

HUGHES, GRIFFITH, a naturalist, last century.

HUGO, C. L., a French savant, 1667-1739.

HUGO, HERMAN, a Ger. Jesuit, 1588-1629.

HUGONET, W., a Fr. statesman, exec. 1477.

HUGTENBURGH, JAMES VAN, a Dutch landscape painter, born 1639. JOHN, his brother, distinguished as a painter of battle-pieces, 1646-1733.

HUGUES, VICTOR, French governor of Guadeloupe during the first revolution, 1770-1826.

HUGUET, M. A., a Fr. prelate, executed 1796.

HULDRICH, JOHN, a Swiss divine, 1683-1737.

HULL, THOMAS, a dramatic writer and actor, member of the Theatrical Fund, 1728-1808.

HULLIN DE BOISCHEVALIER, L. J., a French writer, author of 'Repertoire Historique de la Revolution,' and 'De l'Empire,' 1742-1808.

HULLIN, P. A., a French general, 1758-1841.

HULLOCK, SIR JOHN, a disting. lawyer and judge, author of the 'Law of Costs,' 1764-1829.

HULME, NATHANIEL, a med. wr., 1732-1807.

HULSE, SIR S., an Eng. officer, died 1837.

HULSEMANN, J., a Ger. divine, 1602-1661.

HULSIUS, ANTHONY, an Oriental scholar and theologian of Holland, 1615-1685. HENRY, his son, a learned divine and professor, 1654-1723.

HULST, P. VANDER, a Dutch painter, famous for his flowers and insects, 1652-1708.

HULSWIT, J., a Dutch painter, 1766-1822.

HUMANN, J. G., a French minister of finance, member of several cabinets, 1780-1842.

HUMAYUN-NESIR-ED-DEENY MOHAMMAD, second Mogul emp. of Hindostan, 1508-56.

HUMBERT, the first French cardinal, 11th cent.

HUMBERT, J. A., a French general, 1767-1823.

HUMBOLDT, WILLIAM VON, the brother of the illustrious author of 'Cosmos,' was born in Berlin 1767, when his father was chamberlain to the Princess Elizabeth of Russia. In his youth like all the young people of Germany at this period—he was influenced by the sentimental enthusiasm of which Goethe's 'Werter' still remains the literary monument; and besides entering into friendly alliances with his fellow-students, he cultivated an intimacy with the most distinguished women of the age. Of the latter amiable sentiment, his 'Letters to a Female Friend'—translations of which have appeared in English—are a pleasing memorial. It is as the philosopher and statesman, however, that the name of William Humboldt has acquired an European reputation. The intimate friend of Schiller and Goethe, his name is imperishably associated with the revival of philosophy and letters in Germany; and, as a statesman, with the political history of the court of Berlin. In 1800, two years after publishing his æsthetic essays under the title of 'Hermann and Dorothea,' he was appointed Prussian minister at Rome; and during the eight years that he resided there, acquired a wide reputation as an archæologist, and a master of historical philology. On returning home, he was appointed councillor of state, and minister of worship and education, and at once applied himself to the reform of existing institutions, and the organization of the university of Berlin,—a task of no slight consequence in the chaos of philosophical speculation with which he found himself surrounded. The wishes of the king being accomplished in this respect, Humboldt resumed his diplomatic career as ambassador to Vienna; and from 1810 to the congress of Aix-la-Chapelle in 1818, his name is associated with every important transaction in the politics of Europe. In 1819 his connection with the court of Prussia was broken off, in consequence of his attachment to constitutional principles, and his opposition to the decrees of Carlsbad, which introduced the censorship of the press, and certain measures controlling the universities. The agent in these transactions was the chancellor Hardenberg, who had become the tool of Metternich; and Humboldt having been dismissed from the ministry, henceforth devoted his whole time to literature. The remainder of his days were passed at his seat near Berlin, where he died on the 8th of April 1835, deeply regretted by the whole German nation. His works, which are of a miscellaneous character, generally bearing on history, archæology, and philology, including the remains of Eastern civilization, have been published at intervals since his death by his brother, Alexander von Humboldt, who is still the honoured friend and counsellor of the king of Prussia, and is revered as the patriarch of philosophy throughout Europe. William von Humboldt may justly be taken as a pattern of the depth and diversity of the German mind, and as the promise of a richer future for the German nation. He stands like the representative of the change from spirit to life, from idea to reality, in which the German mind is engaged; for he was one of the first and ablest who took this step. He adhered to the past, advanced boldly forward, and put his trust in humanity and his country.—(Lives of the Brothers Humboldt from the German of Klencke and Schlesier.) [E.R.]

HUME, SIR A., a naval officer, 1748-1838.

HUME, DAVID, born in Edinburgh, 26th April, 1711; died there on 25th August, 1776: unquestionably the most remarkable personage of the Augustan era of Scotland. Referring for the external details of Hume's life to his charming Autobiography, we shall require more than our usual space to characterize, however succinctly, the Philosopher, the Historian, and the Man.—I. The place and functions of the metaphysical speculations of this great Thinker, are not only peculiar but unique in the History of Modern Philosophy. At the period in question, Mental Science had fallen into the lowest possible state, not in Britain merely, but over Europe—that, viz., of a conscious inconsistency: principles were accepted and conclusions evaded; beliefs timidly relied on, betwixt which, and all grounds of certainty then acknowledged, lay an impassable hiatus. The sensational philosophy—always agreeable to the practical tendencies of the English mind, had just reached its culmination under guidance of the genius and earnestness of John Locke; and we were undergoing its consequences in the dwarfing of systematic morals, and the gradual impoverishment of religion; saving ourselves as to the mere form of Faith, by refuge in tradition, or, what is worst of all, willing subjection to gross paralogsms. When Science exists only through paltering with Reason, when it accepts as its function, the office, not of discerning Truth, but of finding excuses for Beliefs, it is Science no longer, but a corruption and hypocrisy; and however it may come, its destruction is a blessing. Hume appeared as the Destroyer. Gifted with an Intellect clear and fearless, he carried principles remorselessly to their consequences; and proved beyond question, that on the grounds of the existing philosophy, all Belief must disappear. If he reached Universal Scepticism, it may be said that he yet had a faith sounder than any in the Philosophy he destroyed; he trusted in the only ground of human certainty, viz., in our Human Reason; and had the rare courage to follow where it seemed to lead. It is not easy to conceive the degree of consternation spread through every region of existing speculation, by the 'Essay on the Idea of Necessary Connexion,' the 'Enquiry Concerning the Principles of Morals,' the 'Natural History of Religion,' and their other companions. Hume had divested himself by this time of the scholastic rudeness of the author of the 'Treatise on Human Nature,' and become one of the most pleasing and accomplished writers of any period. His blows resounded accordingly through all cultivated society: it was heard everywhere with amazement, that by a Logic apparently invincible, the basis of all certainty respecting Man, Nature, and God had been destroyed, and that doubt irremediable was the sole inheritance of our Race! It is needless to say that the resting-place of Humanity was saved; but not by invalidating the reasoning of the trenchant Scotchman. Hume's triumph was complete; only, it was the existing Philosophy that he laid in ruins. His logical demolition of the Idea of Cause, awoke in the spirit of the illustrious KANT that train of thought which has illumined Germany until now; and DR. REID, moved by the same influence, wrought less systematically, but in a corresponding direction, towards the foundation of the School which has played so wholesome a part in the re-edification of Mental Science.—In something of this light will History regard the Metaphysician Hume.

—II. The clearness of Intellect and penetrating sagacity that distinguished Hume, shine out where more brightly than in his political historical writings; although we discern here perhaps more palpably, those defects which fit him for his task as Destroyer. Eager to generalize, skilful as sagacious, and incapable of being influenced by surrounding opinions, we find him in his political essays steadily surveying and defining most of those great truths regarding commerce which Adam Smith afterwards elaborated in 'Wealth of Nations,' and which the civilized world at length accepts as its guide: nor will a time come when the general reflections strewn through every page of the 'History of England' will cease to instruct and elevate the Statesman. The position of the 'History' indeed, is that of a rich philosophical treatise; not that of History in the true significance of that term: can anything be imagined more incongruous than its usual connection on the book-shelf, with a set of continuations and chronicles, more or less accurate in dates, but dry in wisdom as in style. When Hume wrote, History as a critical science was not known as it is now; and unfortunately had not the industry, accuracy, nor the general impartiality of his compatriot Gibbon. If worse, he had no sympathy with the most powerful of the springs of action moving the times he depicts: had he comprehended these, his name would not have been known in Philosophy merely as the name of a Destroyer. His narrative of the reign of the Stuarts and of the struggles which freed England is simply fictitious, and should be read as such. His picture of Cromwell by the documents recently brought under light of the sun by Thomas Carlyle.—III. The character of this distinguished person has been misunderstood and misrepresented alike by friends and foes. His nature was a great one, but not developed in some most vital directions. No man of his time had a stronger understanding, a larger intellectual capacity, finer tastes, higher courage, or a more rooted love of independence. His temperament, too, was greatly enviable: he had no violent passions, so that he was tried by temptations; he was delicate, and modest; he was no malignity; he was candid and kindly. Still it is impossible to concur with Adam Smith, 'that he approached as nearly to the idea of a perfectly wise and virtuous man as perhaps the nature of human frailty will permit.' His fatal deficiency has been already adverted to,—he had no sympathy with the largest, the profoundest portion of Human Nature. He treated the Puritans as he treated the Catholics, not through malignity, but because he could not appreciate them: he knew nothing of the value of sacrifice to the Unseen: the morals he understood were simply calculations of visible consequences. In this respect Hume was a wise man; but we must not set down his dislike of Enthusiasm to the repose and tranquillity of Wisdom. The highest wisdom is indeed, seldom enthusiastic, because it has discerned the meaning of the Law of Limitation: that in this various and complex Universe, no principle acts singly, or ought to enjoy absolute rule. Hume had not this wisdom; he merely disliked enthusiasm because he had no part or parcel in the principle which sustained those enthusiasts with their life-blood they purchased the liberties land.—See Mr. Burton's excellent volumes on ne. His philosophical works are out of print:

HUM

last and best edition, in 4 volumes, was published by Mr. Black of Edinburgh. [J.P.N.]

[Tomb of Hume, Edinburgh.]

HUME, DAVID, a nephew of the great historian, a writer on the Scotch criminal law, 1756-1838.
HUME, J. D., a disting. financier, 1774-1842.
HUMMEL, J. N., a Ger. musician, 1778-1837.
HUMMELIUS, J., a Ger. mathem., 1518-1562.
HUMPHREY, LAURENCE, a learned divine, author of a 'Life of Bishop Jewel,' &c., 1527-1590.
HUMPHREYS, JAS., an eminent jurist, d. 1830.
HUMPHRY, OZIAS, a painter, 1743-1810.
HUNAULD, F. J., a Fr. anatomist, 1701-1742.
HUND, W., a Bavarian historian, 1514-1588.
HUNERIC, a king of the Vandals, 477-485.
HUNNIADIES, JOHN CORVINUS, valde of Transylvania, and general of the Hungarian armies, distinguished against the Turks, died 1456.
HUNNIS, W., a poet, age of Elizabeth.
HUNNIUS, GILLS, a German divine, 1550-1603.
son, NICHOLAS, also a dist. theolog., 1585-1643.
HUNNOLD, FR., a German Jesuit, last century.
HUNT, HENRY, an active English politician, born about the year 1773. His name was of great notoriety during the first quarter of the nineteenth century, but little will probably be remembered of him at its end. Yet he had some qualities of a peculiarly English and sterling character. His name is associated with the mob and anarchy, but he had considerable ancestral claims, and one of the few of his remembered sayings is a retort on Sir Robert Peel as the first of a family of tradesmen who became a gentleman, while he himself was the first of a race of gentlemen who had become a tradesman. In early life he was a high Tory, but during the greater part of his public career he expressed extreme Radical doctrines. Whatever he did, whether in selling his comparable blacking and his roasted corn, instead as a substitute for coffee, or offering his services to represent a county, he spread his doings before the world with liberal profuseness, and was satisfied with any kind of notoriety, provided it was abundant. In 1830 he succeeded in entering parliament, where he remained for a short time as member for Preston. If not attended to in parliament, he always made himself heard. His voice possessed a peculiar shrillness which made it audible amidst all other ordinary sounds, and it was remarked that over all the shuffling and coughing of an impatient House, his speaking was as clearly heard as the ringing of a factory bell through the murmurs of a crowd. He died in 1835. [J.H.B.]

HUN

HUNT, JEREMIAH, a dissenting divine, au. of 'An Essay towards expl. the History and Revelations of Scripture in their several Periods,' 1678-1744.

HUNT, TH., a learned Hebraist, 1696-1774.

HUNTER, ALEX., a Scotch phys., 1729-1809.

HUNTER, ANNE, wife of John Hunter the celebrated anatomist, distinguished as a writer of lyrical poetry, 1742-1821.

HUNTER, CHR., an antiquarian, 1675-1757.

HUNTER, HENRY, a Scotch divine, author of 'Sacred Biography,' a translation of Lavater's Physiognomy, 'Lectures on the Evidences of Christianity,' &c., 1741-1802.

HUNTER, JOHN, a Scotch classic, 1747-1837.

HUNTER, JOHN, a Scotch commander and vice-admiral, distin. under Lord Howe, 1738-1821.

HUNTER, WILLIAM, a distinguished anatomist, physiologist, and physician, was born at Long Calderwood, in the parish of East Kilbride, in the county of Lanark, Scotland, on the 23d of May, 1718. He was the seventh of ten children, and being destined for the church was sent to the University of Glasgow at the age of fourteen, where he remained for five years. He now resolved to abandon the study of theology and to apply himself to medicine, and with this view became the private pupil of Dr. Cullen at Hamilton, with whom he remained for three years. He then proceeded to Edinburgh with the design of qualifying himself to become the partner of Cullen; but, in 1741, he repaired to London in search of fame and fortune, and found both. After studying under various masters of acknowledged ability he commenced as a lecturer on anatomy in 1746. In 1747, he became a member of the corporation of surgeons; in 1750, he graduated as a doctor of medicine at the University of Glasgow; and in 1756, he became a licentiate of the College of Physicians. He was afterwards successively elected physician to the Lying-in-Hospital; fellow of the Royal and Antiquarian Societies; professor of anatomy to the Royal Academy; physician extraordinary to the queen; and in 1781, president of the College of Physicians. He died on the 30th of March, 1783, in the sixty-fifth year of his age.
In the course of a long and laborious life, devoted to the highest objects of science and humanity, Dr.
Hunter had collected a magnificent anatomical museum, a valuable library of rare and curious books, and a considerable number of paintings and coins, all of which he bequeathed to the University of Glasgow, with a sum of £8,000 to support and augment the collection. This fine museum was transferred to Glasgow in 1807, where a very elegant building from a design by Stark had been erected for its reception at a cost of £12,000. Dr.
Hunter was an active and zealous contributor to the medical literature of his time, and was engaged in some sharp controversies with several of his contemporaries on disputed points in anatomy and physiology; but the work by which he will be chiefly remembered is, 'The Anatomy of the Human Gravid Uterus,' one of the most splendid publications that ever issued from the press, and in collecting the materials for which he spent thirty years. It consists of thirty-four plates engraved by the most eminent artists of the day, with explanations in English and Latin, and appeared in 1776; but the treatise illustrative of it he did not live to publish. That duty was undertaken by his nephew, Dr. Baillie, who published in 1794 'An Anatomical Description of the Human Gravid Uterus and its Contents,' compiled chiefly from the MSS. of his uncle. [J.M.C.]

HUNTER, JOHN, the youngest brother of William Hunter, and one of the most remarkable men of his own or any other age. He was born at Calderwood on the 18th of February, 1728, and lost his father when he was ten years of age. He seems never to have exhibited any aptitude for scholastic learning, and there can be no doubt that his early education was greatly neglected, and that much of the obscurity of his style in after life was attributable to that cause. How he spent the first twenty years of his life is not ascertained, but there is a very general belief, amounting to something like a tradition, that he was apprenticed at the age of seventeen to a Mr. Buchanan, a cabinet-maker in Glasgow, who had married his sister Janet. If so, he must have been engaged in this mechanical occupation for three years, for it was not till the year 1748 that his brother William, now firmly established as a lecturer on anatomy, sent for him to London, and placed him in his anatomical theatre, where he soon became an expert dissector, and a complete anatomist. He studied surgery under the celebrated Cheselden; in 1751 he became a pupil in St. Bartholomew's; and in 1756 he was appointed house surgeon to St. George's Hospital. Notwithstanding the defects of his general education he rapidly surmounted all the difficulties that lay in his way, and by his extraordinary genius and great assiduity had acquired by the year 1761, a fixed position and an established reputation in the anatomical and surgical worlds. But his health began to suffer, and in that year he was appointed to the medical staff of the army, in which capacity he served for three years in France and Portugal, when he returned to London with renovated strength, and began that series of observations and experiments on the inferior animals, which laid the foundation of his fame as a comparative anatomist. He died suddenly on the 16th of October, 1793, in one of the apartments of St. George's Hospital, in the sixty-fifth year of his age. Of John Hunter's contributions to science during the last twenty years of his life it is impossible to give even an outline in this place, but they were numerous and of the highest value, nor is it too much to say that this remarkable man, by the vigour of his own talents, laid the foundation of all those improvements in surgery, physiology, and comparative anatomy, which have been made since his time. After his death, his museum, which had cost him £70,000, was bought by the government from his widow for £15,000, and by it was presented to the Royal College of Surgeons. John Hunter died childless, and as his brother William never married, direct race of two men possessed of the high genius is extinct. [J.M.]

HUNTER, ROBERT, author of the fan Letter on Enthusiasm, which has been attributed both to Swift and Shaftesbury, appointed governor of Jamaica, 1728, and died 1734.

HUNTER, WILLIAM, a Scotch physician, wr. on subjects connected with Hindostan, &c.

HUNTINGDON, HENRY OF, author General History of England from the Ear Accounts to the Death of Stephen, 12th century.

HUNTINGDON, SELINA, countess of, a famous name in the history of Calvinistic method was the second daughter of Washington, Ferrers. She was born in 1707, and left a widow by Theophilus Hastings, earl of Huntingdon 1746. Previous to her husband's death, she received deep impressions of religion, and attached herself to the ministry of Whitfield—whom she appointed. The ample jointure of which she became possessed was almost wholly devoted to the cause of religion in connection with the Methodist Christians. She founded the college of Trevecka in Wales, in which young ministers were trained—studded destitute localities with chapels, and maintained a band of itinerant preachers to supply them in rotation, carrying all the correspondence herself. On the method body splitting into two, she espoused the Calvinistic party under Whitfield. On the lease Trevecka expiring, she erected a more extensive college at Cheshunt, Hertfordshire. The name of Lady Huntingdon is inseparably identified with the great revival of evangelical religion in the country during the eighteenth century, and it is scarcely possible to estimate her services highly. For although some of her peculiar opinions may be disputed, yet her zeal and piety were unquestionable, and many parts in England this day are reaping the fruits of her Christian liberality and devotedness to the cause of evangelical missions. She died at the advanced age of eighty-four, at her mansion-house in Spafield, her remains were deposited in the family vault at Ashby-de-la-Zouch, Leicestershire.

HUNTINGDON, WILLIAM, a sectarian preacher of the party of Calvinistic methodists, author of many controversial works, 1744-1813.

HUNTINGFORD, GEORGE ISAAC, successor of Gloucester and Hereford, distinguished as a Greek scholar and theologian, 1748-1832.

HUNTINGTON, R., a learned div., 1636-17

HUNTON, PHILIP, a political writer, promoter of the new college erected by Cromwell, died 16

HUPAZOLI, FRANCIS, a native of Sardinia, remarkable for his great age, 1587-1702.

HUQUIER, J. G., a Fr. engraver, 1695-177

HURD, RICHARD, best known as the author of 'Dialogues Moral and Political,' and of 'Letters on Chivalry and Romance,' which were published in a collected edition of 3 vols. 8vo, 1765, was son of a farmer, and was born at Congreve, Staffordshire, 1720. As early as 1742, he obtained a fellowship in Emanuel College, and in 1757 was appointed rector of Thurstaston, Leicestershire. After this he was successively preacher to the society at Lincoln's Inn, 1767, archdeacon of Gloucester, 1767; bishop of Li and Coventry, 1775; preceptor to the prince of Wales and the duke of York, 1776; and bishop of Worcester, 1781. In 1783 he declined the academy offered to him by George III., and lived contented with the honours already showered upon him till 1808, when he expired in his sleep, after many days' confinement to his bed. Hurd was a brilliant satirist, and a great proficient in polite literature. His Dialogues were a covert attack upon the 'big wigs,' and the principles of arbitrary government; but he seems to have outlived the contented vanity, or the earnestness in the love of freedom which dictated them, and to have subsided into the man of learned leisure, and of polite scholar. He was the friend and biographer of Bishop Warburton. A complete edition of his works which he had himself prepared for the press, was published in 1810, in 8 vols. 8vo. Much interesting information concerning the life, character, and works of Bishop Hurd will be found in volume VI. of Nichol's Literary Anecdotes. [E.R.]

HURDIS, JAMES, an English poet, 1763-1801.
HURE, CHARLES, a French theologian of the Jansenists, au. of a 'Dict. of the Bible,' 1639-1717.
URET, G., a French engraver, 1610-1670.
USCUSKE, E. T., a Ger. philoso., 1761-1828.
USKISSON, WILLIAM, a British statesman, born on the 11th of March, 1770. He was the son of a country gentleman, and succeeded to the landed property. In spending a few of his early years in France, he not only saw many of the striking events of the revolution, such as the capture of the Bastille, but had a personal intimacy with several of the actors in them, and joined the society called the 'Société de 1789.' Though this was one of the clubs of the moderate party, his connection with it brought on Huskisson a taunt of Jacobinism, at a time when French principles, though they were termed, were received with intense favour by the upper and middle classes in Britain. He showed an early soundness of opinion in economic matters, by offering a warning against the creation of fictitious paper-money by assignats. He returned to England in 1792, and in 1796 entered parliament as member for Morpeth. He held several subordinate ministerial appointments, and made himself valuable by his sagacity and business capacity. He was one of the first practical statesmen, since Pitt had changed his views. His conduct was influenced by the doctrines of free trade, and though his opinions are far behind those which have prevailed in the legislation of the present generation, he was viewed in his own day as a dangerous man, who had treacherous designs on the interests of his country. In 1821 he showed himself favourable to the modification of the corn laws, and in 1823 he carried the relaxation of the navigation act, which sanctioned reciprocity treaties. In 1827 he took the office of secretary to the colonies, and continued to hold it under the duke of Wellington. Having, on a point of etiquette, to offer his resignation, it was so readily accepted that the duke evidently desired to be rid of him. At the opening of the Liverpool and Manchester railway on 15th September, 1825, he stumbled in his stately crossing before a train, which passed over him, and so wounded him that he only survived a few hours. [J.H.B.]

HUSS, JOHN, was born about 1370 at Hussinatz, a village in Bohemia. Though sprung of humble parents, he was sent to the university of Prague, and on completing his studies was admitted to priest's orders in 1400. The opinions of the English reformer Wycliffe having reached Bohemia, Huss, on mature consideration, was led to adopt them, and as a professor and preacher in Prague, he exposed with vehemence the abuses and vices of the Romish Church and clergy. The patronage of the queen Sophia protected him for a season, if not from molestation, at least from personal injury. But the archbishop of Prague was terribly provoked, and so were many of the clergy, by the intrepidity of Huss, and by his opposition in the university to Pope Gregory XII. In some fierce discussions which took place as to the balance of elective power among the youth of various nations attending the university, Huss, urged by his Realistic and national partialities, took the part of the Bohemians so effectively, that the German students, to the number of some thousands, withdrew, retired to Leipzig and founded its university in the year 1409. The reforming energy and perseverance of Huss so enraged his ecclesiastical superiors, that the archbishop of Prague ordered the Bohemian translation of the books of Wycliffe to be burned, and suspended Huss, while Pope John XXIII. solemnly excommunicated him. But the ardent spirit of the reformer did not quail, and both in his native village and at Prague he continued his denunciations of purgatory, indulgences, and clerical corruptions. Having at length opposed a papal bull which had been fulminated against Ladislaus, king of Naples, he excited such tumults that he was summoned to the famous Council of Constance, and though a 'safe conduct' had been granted him by the emperor Sigismund, he was nevertheless impeached, arrested, and cast into prison, and on his refusal to confess his guilt or retract, he was condemned as a heretic, and burnt on the 6th of July, 1415. The causes of this severe and unjustifiable treatment of Huss, may be found in his bold and unflinching honesty of purpose, in the sacerdotal enmity which his sermons and literary labours had stirred up against him, and especially in his avowed Realism, and his hatred of the German Nominalists, some of whom, such as Gerson, were his principal judges. His labours, history, and martyrdom, were not without abundant fruit in the succeeding century. [J.E.]

HUSSEIN-PACHA, a Turkish admiral, surnamed 'the Little,' fav. of Selim II., 1750-1803.

HUSSEIN-PACHA, the last king of Algiers, born 1773, proclaimed dey 1818, dethroned by the French under Marshal Bourmont, 1830.

HUSSEY, GILES, an Eng. painter, 1710-1788.

HUSSEY, SIR RICHARD, a British admiral employed in reducing the Ionian isls., 1776-1842.

HUTCHESON, FRANCIS, born in Ireland 8th August, 1694, died in Glasgow 1747. To Hutcheson must be awarded the honour of reviving speculative philosophy in Scotland. In 1729 he obtained the chair of Moral Philosophy in the university of Glasgow; and he certainly started that line of thinking in Psychological questions which Reid afterwards, with so great success, followed out. Besides manuals for the use of his class, he published during his lifetime the 'Inquiry into the Origin of our Ideas of Beauty and Virtue,' and an essay 'On the Nature and Conduct of the Passions and Affections.' His 'System of Moral Philosophy,' in 2 volumes 4to, appeared after his death. He energetically asserted the existence of Moral Sense, or a power to discern good in itself, and claimed for our Idea of the Beautiful, the character of originality and independence. Hutcheson's intellect was vigorous, and he evinced in all his writings singular freedom and freshness. There is an excellent life of him by Principal Leechman.

HUTCHINS, JOHN, an Engl. divine, au. of the 'Hist. and Antiquities of Dorsetshire,' 1696-1773.

HUTCHINS, THOMAS, a geographer and general of the United States of America, author of historical and topographical works, 1730-1789.

HUTCHINSON, ANN, a religious enthusiast of New England, banished from the colony by an ecclesiastical synod, and killed, with fourteen others of her family, by the Indians, 1643.

HUTCHINSON, JOHN, was an English gentleman whose name became famous as a speculative philosopher and interpreter of the Bible in the early part of last century, and is now generally mentioned with disparagement. The publication of Sir Isaac Newton's Principia in 1687, in which the philosopher supposed the planets to move through a vacuum, provoked Mr. Hutchinson, who was a great student of antiquity, and of the Hebrew Scriptures, to publish his work entitled 'Moses' Principia,' which appeared in two parts, 1724 and 1727. The design of Mr. Hutchinson was to demonstrate that a celestial matter pervades the whole creation, spiritual and natural, whereby Jehovah is master of the material worlds, whereas the theory of Sir Isaac Newton supposed a universe without a God, or a God who acts by arbitrary power. This philosophical doctrine, which is supported by the recent discovery of an interplanetary ether, was, in the work of Hutchinson, a pure deduction from the Scriptures, his principle being that the Hebrew language is perfectly formed, so as to convey perfect ideas, without the redundancy or deficiency of letters common to other languages; hence, that it was perfectly adapted to be the medium of a revelation, and that religion and philosophy were united in the system of Moses. Hutchinson attacked Dr. Woodward, author of a 'Natural History of the Earth,' as well as Sir Isaac Newton. He wielded his pen with the hand of a master, and with little respect for the feelings of his opponents. Among his adherents were Bishop Horne, Jones of Nayland, Julius Bate, Drs. Hodges and Wetherall, Parkhurst, Romaine, and Dr. Samuel Clarke. He was born at Springthorn in Yorkshire 1674, and died 1737. [E.R.]

HUTCHINSON, JOHN HELY, an Irish lawyer and statesman of distinguished talents, but remarkable selfishness, 1715-1794. His son, of the same name, a distinguished military officer, and successor of his brother as earl of Donoughmore, 1757-1832.

HUTCHINSON, THOMAS, the historian of the colony of Massachusetts, born 1711, chief justice of that province, 1760, lieutenant-governor 1758-1770, governor to 1774, died 1780.

HUTCHINSON, W., a county hist., 1732-1814.

HUTTEN, JACOB, the founder of the 'Moravian

Brethren,' whose successors are supposed to have been the adherents of Zinzendorf, 16th century.

HUTTEN, ULRIC VON, a German poet, miscellaneous writer, best known as a champion of the reformation, 1488-1523.

HUTTER, ELIAS, a German divine, author of Polyglott of the New Testament in twelve languages, and of a version of the Hebrew Bible, distinguished by many peculiarities, in which the 150th Psalm is given in thirty languages, 1554-1603.

HUTTER, LEONARD, a German theologian and polemical writer of the reformation, 1563-1616.

HUTTICH, J., a German archæologist and numismatist, au. of 'Antiq. of Mayence,' 1480-1515.

HUTTON, CHARLES, LL.D., a very laborious cultivator of Mathematical Science, and a deserving writer; born at Newcastle-on-Tyne 1737, d. 1823. We owe to Dr. Hutton many valuable works on elementary mathematics, especially 'Course designed for Cadets in the Royal Military Academy,' in 3 vols. 8vo; but his important contributions to scientific literature are his 'Dictionary of Mathematics,' in two large 4to volumes, and in another direction, his abridgment of 'Philosophical Transactions in 18 vols. 4to.' Dr. Hutton seems to have been a very successful teacher; and accordingly he was beloved by his pupils. His manners were simple, his temper equable and mild, and his attachments warm and unalterable.

HUTTON, DR. JAMES, born at Edinburgh 1727, died 1797: one of those Inquirers of genius who have power to seize the opportunity of effecting a revolution in Science. Hutton's mind was capable of earning distinction in any department of physical research; and we owe him various important hints—for instance, he was the founder of Psychometeorology but it is in Geology that his name stands as the mark of an epoch. During Hutton's early career geology had not shaken itself free from cosmology and existing theories regarding the formation of the Earth, were modelled on the ideas of his countryman Werner; who, misled by a limited experience, considered all rocks as stratified, produced by the subsidence of matter first diffused through water. Hutton's important achievement consisted in the discovery, through facts, that large class of rocks are igneous; and that the existing forms of the surface of our planet result from two opposing forces constantly in play, and of whose efficiency we know neither the beginning nor the end. The phenomenon thus established the truth of these views, was, after anxious research, discovered by Hutton in Glen Tilt—viz.: a fine instance of granite branching out in veins at its junction with the sedimentary rocks; manifesting thereby indisputable evidence of its igneous origin. Hutton's work on the Theology of the Earth, abounds with philosophical views, many points of geological theory of the kind entitled to the name of predictions: to him, first of all, the significance became apparent of the previously well-known fact of unconformable stratification. On an occasion, which has become classical, he took his favourite pupils, Professor Playfair and Sir James Hall, to the cliff near St. Abb's Head, where the schists of the Lammer muir are undermined by the sea; at Playfair has left on record, how, interpreted by sagacity, the simple, and till then barren ble fact of one rock lying on the edges of ether, became witness to enormous intervals successive epochs, until 'the mind grew dy by looking so far into the abyss of time,' the awed listeners became sensible 'how ch farther reason may sometimes go than gination can venture to follow!'—Sustained phenomena at once palpable, numerous, and clusive, Hutton's important views rapidly made among men of science: and, notwithstanding r novelty, and the stupendousness of the a they open into the past, the popular be- has now accommodated itself to them, and olts no more at the notion of the unfathomed tiquity of the Earth, than at the august thought t the myriads of lustres in the Firmament, are lds. This consummation came not without a ggle, but thanks to the 'press,' which could aid Copernicus, the struggle in this case s neither severe nor prolonged. Hutton may said to have revealed the second of the o dimensions of the Material Universe—the pension, Time.—The student who has not d the affectionate biography of this philoso- r by Professor Playfair, has still a rare treat in r.

[J.P.N.]

HUTTON, M., an English prelate, 1529-1605.
HUTTON, WILLIAM, a self-educated author, efty of local histories and antiquities, 1723-1815.
HUXHAM, JOHN, a medical writer, died 1768.
HUYGHENS, CHRISTIAN, born at the Hague in April, 1629; died 8th June, 1695: a very cessful and celebrated cultivator of the Mathe- tical and Physical Sciences. It requires a long rative to sum up Huyghen's contributions d discoveries; to appreciate them in their rela- to history and his time, is wholly incompatible h our space. In pure geometry he gave theo- as for the quadrature of the Hyperbola, the ipis, and the Circle; in Mechanics, he laid n the theory of the Pendulum, and its appli- on to the Clock; he discerned the synchronism the Cycloid, invented the theory of Involutes d Evolutes of Curves, and explored the doctrine Centres of Oscillation: most important of all he ounded the law of the motion of bodies revol- in circles, thereby grazing the law of gravita- l. In Astronomy, we owe him the memorable covery of Saturn's ring, at that time a most racious solution of very puzzling appearances. Optics he laid the foundation of the theory of dulations, explaining by means of it pheno- na which by the theory of Emanation Newton ld not touch.—Few cultivators of Abstract ence had a clearer, or more correct intellect n Huyghens; he showed this, more especially in ready appreciation and powerful grasp of the etrine of Gravitation: he adopted the new view the sacrifice of his previous attachment to the rtices of Des Cartes, and this at a period of life en men have rarely freshness enough to alter r opinions. His works are collected in four 4to s.

[J.P.N.]

HUYGHENS, C., a Latin poet, 1596-1687.
HUYGHENS, GOMARUS, a Roman Catholic eologian, professor of philosophy at Louvain, and friend and defender of Quesnel, 1631-1702.
HUYOT, J. N., a French architect, 1780-1840.

HUYSMANS, HUYSMAN, or HOUSEMAN, CORNELIUS, a Flem. landscape painter, 1648-1727.

HUYSMAN, JAMES, a Flemish painter, executed the altar piece at St. James's, 1656-1696.

HUYSUM, JUSTUS VAN, called 'the Elder,' a Dutch landscape painter, 1659-1716. His son, of the same name, known as YOUNG HUYSUM, a painter of battles, 1684-1706. His son, JOHN, distinguished as a flower painter, 1682-1749.

HUZARD, J. B., a Fr. agriculturist, 1755-1839.

HVITFIELD, A., a Danish histor., 1549-1609.

HYACINTH, SAINT, a German friar, celebrated as apostle of Poland and Russia, 1188-1257.

HYDE, EDWARD. See CLARENDON.

HYDE, HENRY, a dramatic writer, died 1753.

HYDE, THOS., D.D., a dignitary of the Church of England, kn. as an Oriental scholar and an. of a 'History of the Medes and Persians,' 1636-1703.

HYDER-ALI, an Indian prince of Arabian origin, born in Mysore, 1718, took the field with his brother, who was in alliance with France, 1751, and in the interval between that period and 1780, acquired for himself an independent sovereignty, and nearly brought the presidency of Madras to ruin. His death occurred at a critical period in 1782, and he was succeeded by his son, Tippee Saib, who was driven from the Carnatic in 1783.

HYGINUS, a pope of Rome, about 138-143.

HYGINUS, CAIUS JULIUS, a freedman of Augustus, and keeper of the palatine library, au. of an astronomical poem, and a book of fables.

HYPATIA, daughter of Theon of Alexandria, celebrated for her beauty, illustrious in her genius, and hallowed through all time by her mournful death. She was torn to pieces by the mob of Alexandria, in her earliest prime, in the year 415. Hypatia was a neo-platonist. Charmed by the reflection therein, of the noblest intellect of Greece, and attracted by its mysticism, she professed that philosophy in public lectures; and her purity and elevation of soul enhanced the fame accruing from her eloquence. The period of her teaching was that of the first conflicts of Christianity with Paganism: the religion of brotherly love was then too often a symbol of insurrection to the ignorant and the poor,—insurrection against culture as well as false worship, against intelligence as well as aristocracy and pride. Cyril, of Alexandria, a man of courage, but not averse from turbulence and tyranny on his own side, was Bishop: and he did not enough repress passions certainly not approved in his Evangel. He accounted Hypatia his personal foe; and probably did not regret that with the temples of her deities, a martyr fell. The character of this brilliant victim is traced with genuine sympathy by Mr. Kingsley in his recent romance—one of those fictions which are truer than most histories.

[J.P.N.]

HYPERIDES, an Athenian orator, and partizan of the Byzantines, killed by Antipater, 322 B.C.

HYPERIUS, G. A., a Flemish theolog., 1511-64.

HYPISICLES, a Greek mathematician, 2d cent.

HYRCANUS, JOHN, or HYRCANUS I., succeeded his father, Simon Maccabeus, as high priest and prince of the Jews, B.C. 135, d. B.C. 107. HYRCANUS II., eldest son of Alexander Jannæus, became sovereign pontiff, B.C. 70, was dethroned by his brother Aristobulus, and restored by the Romans as a tributary prince 63, beheaded by Herod 29.

IAC

IACAIA, a Turkish adventurer, 17th century.
IACOB-TCHELEBY, a son of Amurath I., strangled by order of Bajazet, 1389.

IANAKI, a Greek prince of Moldavia, 1708.

IBARRIA, JOACHIM, a Spanish printer, celebrated for his improvement of the art, 1725-1785.

IBAS, a bishop of Edessa in Mesopotamia, supposed to have favoured the doctrines of Nestorius, and deposed on that account by the council of Ephesus, 449. He was reinstated by the council of Chalcedon 451, and died 457.

IBBETSON, AGNES, a botanist, 1757-1823.

IBBETSON, JAMES, a divine and ecclesiastical historian, 1717-1781. His son, of the same name, learned in Saxon and Norman antiquities, 1755-90.

IBBETSON, J. C., a painter, died 1817.

IBBOT, BENJAMIN, a learned div., 1680-1725.

IBEK, an Arabian author, died 1348.

IBEK, AZ-ED-DEEN, sultan of Egypt, 1251-57.

IBN-AL-ATSYN, surnamed ARR-EDDYN, 'the glory of religion,' an Arabian historian, 1160-1233.

IBN-AL-ATSYR-ABOULSAADAT-MO-BAREK, an Arabian grammarian and author, lieutenant to the king of Moussoul, 1150-1268.

IBN-AL-ATSYR-NASZ-ALLAH, an Eastern vizier under the son and suc. of Saladin, author of 'The art of the Writer and the Poet,' 1162-1239.

IBN-AL-COUTHYAH, author of a 'History of the Conquest of Spain by the Arabs,' died 978.

IBN-AL-DJOURY, an Arab. historian, d. 1201.

IBN-AL-FARADHY, a Spanish Arab, author of a 'Chronicle of Spanish Savants,' died 1012.

IBN-AL-FORAT, an Arab. historian, died 1405.

IBN-AL-KHETIB, surnamed 'the Tongue of Religion,' an. of a 'History of the Kings of Grenada,' and 'Lives of Spanish Writers,' 1313-1374.

IBN-AL-MOKAFFA, a Persian writer, d. 757.

IBN-AL-OUARDY, a geograp. writer, d. 1350.

IBN-AYYAS, an Arabian geographer and historian, author of a history of Egypt, &c., 16th cen.

IBN-CADHY-CHOBAB, a Mussulman doctor of the sect of Chafei, 1289-1386.

IBN-COTAIHAH, an Arabian historian, b. 829.

IBN-DJOLDJOL, an Arabian transla., 10th c.

IBN-DOREID, a celebrated Arabian philologist and poet, author of many works, 838-933.

IBN-EL-A'LAM, an astronomer, died 985.

IBN-EL-AWAM, an agriculturist, 12th century.

IBN-FAFEDT, a mystic poet, 1181-1235.

IBN-KHALDOUN, an Arabian magistrate, celebrated as an historian and jurist, author of a 'History of the Arabs and Berbers,' 1332-1406.

IBN-KHILCAN, an Arabian historian, 1211-81.

IBN-WASIL, an Arabian diplomatist, historian, philosopher, and jurisconsult, 1207-1268.

IBN-YOUNIS, an astronomer, 979-1008.

IBRAHIM I., governor of Africa under Haroun-al-Raschid, and founder of a dynasty, died 809. Another of the name in the same line of princes called IBRAHIM II., died 902.

IBRAHIM I., an illustrious sultan of the race of the Ghaznevides, distinguished by the extension of his empire into India, and by the promotion of the arts and sciences in his dominions, reigned 1058-1099. IBRAHIM II., or IBRAHIM I., emperor of Hindostan, succeeded 1517, killed 1526.

I

IBR

IBRAHIM, brother and successor of Amurath IV., as sultan of Turkey, in 1640, killed 1649.

IBRAHIM, a pacha of Egypt, 1585-1590.

IBRAHIM, grand vizier under Soliman I. exec. for treasonable correspon. with Austria, 1517.

IBRAHIM, caliph of Bagdad, 744-750.

IBRAHIM-BEY, a famous Mameluke chief, vanquished by Mehemet Ali in 1805, died 1816.

IBRAHIM-EFFENDI, a Turkish savant converted to Christianity, translator of the Scriptures into the Arabian tongue, 1641-1697.

IBRAHIM-EFFENDI, a native of Poland, w. became a dignitary of the Ottoman empire, a introduced printing in 1728.

IBRAHIM-EL-GAUHARY, a minister Ibrahim and Mouradbey, sultan of Egypt, distinguished as a father of the people, died 1791.

IBRAHIM-EL-HALEPY, an imaum of Constantinople, celebrated as a jurisconsult, 1456-1541.

IBRAHIM-MANSOUR-EFFENDI, a German adventurer, who embraced Mahomedanism, introduced the discipline of Europe into the Turkish armies; after serving Ali-Pasha as engineer, he wrote a 'Memoir of Greece and Albania,' and his government; he at length shot himself in Paris, on account of destitution, 1826.

IBRAHIM-MOLLAH, a T. vizier, stran. 1791.

IBRAHIM PASHA, the son and successor Mehemet Ali in the government of Egypt, w. also the chief instrument in establishing his dynasty, and deserves to rank with his father among the founders of empires. He was born at Cavet in Roumelia 1789, and enjoyed his first military triumph at Cairo in 1819, after subjugating the Wahabees, and wresting from their hands the holy towns of Mecca and Medina. In 1824 the sultan, as suzerain, demanded the aid of an Egyptian army to suppress the Greeks, and the glory of Ibrahim, whose name had become famous throughout the East, and who had introduced the European discipline into his armies, pointed him out as commander of the expedition. For nearly 15 years he overran the Morea, which became an extended field of ruin and bloodshed, but he was length compelled to retire by the victory gained at Navarino by the combined fleets of England, France, and Russia, on the 20th of October, 1827. In 1831 he was sent by his father, at the head of 24,000 infantry, four regiments of cavalry, and forty pieces of artillery, to the conquest of Syria, which he effected so completely as to arrive with one hundred and fifty miles of Constantinople, which juncture a Russian army marched to intercept him, and he concluded a treaty of peace, which several provinces were added to his father's government. In 1839, the Porte endeavoured to recover Syria, and on the 24th of June, Ibrahim gained the battle of Nezib, by which the road was again opened to Constantinople; but the combined forces of England, Austria, Russia, and Prussia were drawn up between him and his prize, a Acre being reduced by bombardment, the affa

Egypt and the Porte were settled by their joint masters. After the evacuation of Syria, Ibrahim allied himself to the arts of peace in Egypt, and when Mehemet Ali became incapable of continuing the government, he was made viceroy according to the terms of succession granted in the firman by the sultan in 1841. He enjoyed this dignity for two months and ten days, and died in November, 1848, when he was succeeded by his nephew, Abbas Pasha. Ibrahim Pasha was a man of debauched habits, but a great soldier and successful statesman. As may be supposed, in a country like Egypt, just emerging from the barbarism of ages, and in a family which had fought its way out of obscurity, he was quite unlettered, but nevertheless, well acquainted with the courtesies of European society. [E.R.]

IBRAHIM-TCHAOUICHKEKHIE, a bey of Egypt, raised to the throne of the Mamelukes, 560, poisoned in the attempt to deliver his country from the usurpation of the Turks, 1760.

IBYCUS, an Italian lyric poet, 560 B.C.

IBZAN, judge of Israel after Jephthah.

IDACIUS, a Spanish chronicler, 4th century.

IDES, EVERARDYSBRANTZ, a German traveller, of a 'Journey from Moscow to China,' 18th ct.

IDMAN, N., a Swedish savant, 18th century.

IDRIS, GAWR, a Welch astronomer, whose name is borne by one of the highest Welch mountains, date unknown.

INICHEN, G. A., a Ger. savant, 1709-1759.

INERMAK, a Cossack chieftain, died 1583.

INETZELER, C., a Swiss architect, 1734-1791.

INEDZEDJERD, the first of the name, a Sassanide king of Persia, reigned 399-419; the second, who endeavoured without success to introduce the religion of Zoroaster into his dominions, reigned 494-507; the third, last king of the Sassanide dynasty, succeeded 632, vanquished by the Arabs, 650, assassinated in his retreat 650.

INFELD, A. W., a German actor, 1759-1814.

INGNARRA, N., a Neapol. antiquary, 1728-1808.

IGNATIUS, patriarch of Constantinople, d. 878.

IGNATIUS, found. of the Jesuits. See LOYOLA.

IGNATIUS, Sr., surnamed THEOPHORUS, one of the apostolic fathers, or first doctors of the church, bishop of Antioch in Syria about 69, suffered martyrdom 107 or 116. He is the author of 'Letters,' which are translated in Archbishop Wake's compilation.

IGOR, the first of the name, grand duke of Russia, 913-945; the second, grand prince, 1146-7.

IHRE, JOHN, a Swedish philologist, professor of poetry and eloquence at Upsala, 1707-1780.

IKEN, CONRAD, a Germ. Hebraist, 1689-1753.

ILDEFONSE, Sr., archb. of Toledo, 607-669.

ILICINO, B., an Italian poet, 15th century.

ILIVE, JACOB, a printer and letter-cutter, remarkable as a controversialist, and author of the aged book of Jasher, 1730-1763.

ILLYRICUS, FLACIUS, the Latinized name of Flavius Flacius, or Francowitz, a German theologian, 1520-1575.

IMAD-EDDALAH, a king of Persia, died 949.

IMAD-EDDYN, a Persian histor., 1125-1201.

IMBERT, B., a French poet, 1747-1790.

IMBERT, J. G., a French painter, 1654-1740.

IMBERT, W., a French author, 1743-1808.

IMBONATI, C. J., an Italian Orient., d. 1687.

IMHOF, G. W., Dutch gov. of India, 1705-50.

IMHOFF, JOHN, or JAMES WILLIAM, a German historian and genealogist, 1651-1728.

IMISON, an English mechanic, died 1788.

IMPERATO, F., a Neapolitan painter, died 1565. His son, JEROME, a painter, died 1620.

IMPERATO, F., a Neapolit. naturalist, 16th c.

IMPERIALE, F., a Genoese poet, 14th century.

IMPERIALI, G. B., an Italian physician, author of some admired Latin poetry, 1588-1623. His son, GIOVANNI, a writer of medical history and biography, 1602-1670.

IMPERIALI, GIUSEPPE RENATO, a Genoese noble, cardinal, and governor of Ferrara, distinguished for his probity, talents, and learning, 1651-1737.

IMPERIALI, G. V., a Genoese poet, died 1645.

IMPERIALI-LERCARI, F. M., doge of Genoa when it was cannonaded by Louis XIV., 1684.

INA, king of the West Saxons, 689-726.

INCHBALD, ELIZABETH, the daughter of a Suffolk farmer, was born in 1753. At the age of sixteen, she eloped from home, with no more blameable design than the foolish one of seeking her fortune. Miss Simpson very soon became the wife of Mr. Inchbald, a respectable London actor, by whom she was brought on the stage, and played for a good many years. After 1784, she wrote plays, amounting to nineteen, several of which were very successful: her comedy of 'Wives as they Were and Maids as they Are' is still acted. She edited three collections of plays. Her best literary works were her two novels: 'A Simple Story,' 1791; and 'Nature and Art,' 1796. She lived prudently and irreproachably, and accumulated several thousand pounds, which she bequeathed chiefly to the Roman Catholic poor. She died at Kensington in 1821. [W.S.]

INCHOFER, MELCHIOR, a Hungarian Jesuit, jurisconsult, historian, and theologian, 1584-1648.

INCLEDON, B. C., a cel. vocalist, 1764-1826.

INEZ DE CASTRO. See CASTRO.

INGE and HALSTAN, joint k. of Sw. 12th ct.

INGE, the younger, a k. of Sweden, 12th cen.

INGE, two kings of Norway, 12th and 13th ct.

INGEBURGE, queen of France, 1193-1236.

INGEGNERI, A., a Venetian poet, 16th cen.

INGENHOUSZ, JOHN, a Dutch physician and chemist, au. of 'Exp. on Vegetables,' 1730-1799.

INGHEW, W. VAN, a Dutch pain., 1651-1709.

INGHIRAMI, CURZIO, an Italian antiquarian, author of 'Etruscan Antiquities,' 1614-1655.

INGHIRAMI, TOMASO FEDRA, an eminent Italian poet and orator, 1470-1516.

INGIALD, a king of Sweden, 7th century.

INGLIS, HENRY DAVID, a miscellaneous writer, first known under the assumed name of Derwent Conway, born in Scotland 1795, d. 1835.

INGLIS, HESTER, the writer of some beautiful manuscripts preserved at Oxford, 16th century.

INGLIS, SIR JAMES, a Scotch officer and partisan of the French, author of the well-known 'Complaint of Scotland,' died 1554.

INGLIS, JOHN, D.D., a Scottish divine, author of a 'Defence of Ch. Establishments,' 1796-1834.

INGOUF, F. R., a French engraver, 1747-1812. His brother, P. CHARLES, an eng., about 1746-99.

INGRAM, ROBERT, a theologian, 1727-1804.

INGRASSIAS, GIOVANNI FILIPPO, a native of Sicily, dist. as a physician and anatomist, 1510-80.

INGUIMBERT, J. D., an Italian theologian, founder of an hospital and pub. library, 1683-1757.

INGULPHUS, abbot and historian of the monastery of Croyland in the time of William the Conqueror, born in London about 1030, died 1109.

INNES, LOUIS, a French priest, secretary of James II., and author of his Memoirs, born 1650. His brother, THOMAS, an antiq. wr., 1662-1744.

INNOCENT. The popes of Rome of this name are—INNOCENT I., a saint of the Roman calendar, flourished in the time of Alaric, 402-417. INNOCENT II., pope in the age of Abelard and Arnold, with whose doctrines, as well as with rival popes and kings, he was kept in continual conflict, 1130-1143. INNOCENT III., a pope of extraordinary spirit and political sagacity, who arrived at despotic authority over the kings of Europe, and pursued the most sanguinary measures against the Waldenses and other heretics, 1198-1216. INNOCENT IV., pope, 1243-1254. INNOCENT V., one of the most celebrated theologians of the age, succeeded and died 1276. INNOCENT VI., reigned 1352-1362. INNOCENT VII., 1404-1406. INNOCENT VIII., who laboured to promote a union among the Christian princes, in order to withstand the Turks, predecessor of Alexander VI., 1484-1492. INNOCENT IX., elected and died 1591. INNOCENT X., a great enemy of the treaty of Westphalia, and the doctrines of Jansenius, 1644-1655. INNOCENT XI., distinguished for his enmity to Louis XIV., for his extreme austerity, and for having proscribed the teaching of Molinos, 1676-1689. INNOCENT XII., disting. as a good and enlightened prince, 1692-1700. INNOCENT XIII., reigned 1721-1724.

INTERIANO DE AYALA, JUAN, a Spanish monk, known as a poet and wr. on art, 1656-1730.

INTERI, B., an Italian economist, died 1757.

INTORCETTA, PROSPER, a learned Sicilian Jesuit and missionary to China, 1625-1696.

INVEGES, A., a Sicilian historian, 1595-1677.

IOUSAF-ABOU-L-HAXEX, a Moorish king of Grenada, began to reign 1048.

IPHICRATES, a famous general of Athens, defeated the Lacedæmonians 392 B.C., and relieved Sparta when invaded by Epaminondas 368, died some time after 357 B.C.

IPHITUS, king of Elis, celebrated as the founder of the Olympic games, 8th century B.C.

IRAILH, A. S., a French historian, 1719-1794.

IRBY, FR. PAUL, a naval officer, 1779-1844.

IRELAND, JOHN, author of 'The Life of Henderson,' and 'Hogarth Illustrated,' died 1789.

IRELAND, JOHN, dean of Westminster, distinguished as a theological writer and patron of learning, and as a contributor to the earlier numbers of the Quarterly Review, 1762-1842.

IRELAND, SAMUEL, a collector and publisher of literary curiosities, disgraced by the publication of the pretended Shakspeare MSS., which appeared in 1796, and had been forged by his son, of whom he was the unconscious dupe, died 1800.

IRENAEUS, ST., a native of Asia Minor, and a disciple of Polycarp. He is supposed, when still a young man, to have come to Gaul along with Pothinus, by whose instrumentality several churches were formed, the most famous of which were those of Lyons and Vienne. On the death of Pothinus, in A.D. 177, he succeeded him as bishop of Lugdunum (Lyons). This high office he continued to hold till his death about the end of the century. His ministry was a series of active, zealous, devoted personal labours, and he struggled not for the purity and the enlargement of the church. The current controversies, such as that about the proper time of keeping Easter, attracted attention, and in the name of the Gallic churches, resisted with vigour the incipient encroachments of the bishop of Rome. His great literary work is his refutation of the Valentinian form of Gnostic heresy, and is usually named Adversus Haereses. The original Greek, with the exception of a few fragments preserved by succeeding writers, has been lost, and the remainder of the work is in a barbarous Latin version. He is also supposed to have written the graphic and pathetic account of the persecution endured by the church of Lyons and Vienne, which is still extant in the form of a letter. The character of Irenaeus is that of an honest, ardent, and amiable Christian pastor—possessed of a well-instructed mind, versant in the various phases of theological error, but often seduced into puerility by the allegorical methods of interpretation then so prevalent and bewitching. The common idea, that Irenaeus was a martyr, rests on no good foundation. None of the writers of his own age, or those immediately after it, ever allude to such an event. The editio princeps of his works was, under the charge of Erasmus, published at Basel, 1526, 8vo.—the excellent edition of Grabe appeared at Oxford in 1702, folio, and in Paris in 1710, under the care of Benedictine Massuet. There are also editions by Grynaeus, Basel, 1571; Galland, Paris, 1570; and Feuardentius, Cologne, 1698. But the best, and most recent edition, is in 2 vols. 8vo, Leipzig, 1853, edited by Stieren, and supplied with the prefaces of the preceding editions, and with ample notes and prologomena. [J.F.]

IRENE, empress of the East, like Mary queen of Scots and some of the Medici, is one of the marked characters in whom the reader of history becomes personally interested to a degree far exceeding his sense of justice in the case, and whose powers of fascination not unfrequently charm to the point of the historian at the distance of ages. Born at Athens of a private family about 752, she was raised to the throne of Constantine by her marriage with Leo IV., who succeeded his father six years after the celebration of their nuptials, in 775. In 780, in consequence of the death of Leo, she became regent of the empire for her son Constantine, then the tenth year of his age, and the court of Constantine was soon a perpetual scene of intrigue and counterplot, which led to the most ruthless crimes. In this struggle, the uncles of the young emperor were fired with as much ambition, and endowed with infinitely less personal grace and love of art than the beautiful Athenian, were ranged on one side with the iconoclasts, and Irene on the other supported the worship of images, and had the address and firmness of purpose to carry her point, which was finally decreed in a council held at Nice, 786. In the meantime, the education of her son, who she never meant to exercise the supreme power, was totally neglected; and when he arrived at maturity, and was put in forcible possession of his father's authority by the troops, he not only proved incapable, but most unscrupulous and cruel in his ercise of his authority. With a reckless and ambitious woman like Irene on the watch for her opportunity, and his subjects alienated in disgust, it was not surprising that her emissaries were able to seize on the person of the emperor, having done so, they put out his eyes, and proclaimed Irene—the only person that had shown the capability of sustaining the weight of government. She had reigned five years sole empress, and was negotiating a marriage with Charlemagne, which would have united the Eastern and Western empires, when Nicephorus, the grand treasurer, the leader of a revolt, and having brought some of her eunuchs to his party, succeeded in overthrowing her. A few months afterwards, she died in exile at the isle of Lesbos, A.D. 803, still in the vigour of her years, and in all likelihood unrepentant by her fall. We ought to have mentioned that Irene obtained some advantages of the Saracens during her regency, and concluded a treaty of peace with Haroun-al-Raschid. [E.R.]

RETTON, HENRY, son-in-law of Cromwell, distinguished as a parliamentary general in the civil war, and lord deputy of Ireland after the establishment of the commonwealth. He was one of those who signed the warrant for the king's death. Born 1610, died at Limerick 1651.

REGENS, OLANS, a Norway savant, last cent.

RICO, J. ANDREW, a learned Italian, disting. as a theologian, philos., and historian, 1704-1782.

RLAND, B., a French juriconsult, 1551-1612.

RNERIUS, called also WERNERUS, WARNERUS, GUARNERUS, a lawyer of Bologna, regarded as the restorer of the Roman law in the middle ages, born about 1065, died after 1138.

RVING, REV. EDWARD, was a native of Dumfriesshire, having been born at Annan on 15th August, 1792, of respectable parentage. His eccentricities began to display themselves at school, even in boyhood he was singular in his dress, manner, and phraseology. Of all the branches of education, he excelled in arithmetic and mathematics, and his superiority in these departments appeared so decidedly during his curriculum at the college of Edinburgh, that as the foremost of all competitors, he was appointed mathematical teacher in the burgh school of Haddington, and the year following in the school of Kirkaldy. In the latter situation he held seven years, when he became a licentiate in the Church of Scotland, and going on a visit to Edinburgh, happened to preach in St. George's church. One of his hearers on that occasion was Dr. Calmers, who engaged him to be assistant-minister in the parish of St. John's, Glasgow. Although he was not esteemed there a popular teacher, his great talents and peculiar eloquence were appreciated by a select, but devoted band of admirers, who sounded his praises far and wide, till his fame reached London. In 1822, Mr. Irving was invited to preach in the church of the Medonian Asylum in London, then vacant, and on after elected minister of the chapel, Dr. Chalmer introducing him to his new charge in August of that year. London is so immense a field, that a preacher even of moderate talents can reckon most with certainty on obtaining an audience. Such more a preacher like Irving, who, to high and undoubted talent, united great eccentricity in sentiment and manner. An eloquent speaker, he yet indulged in a quaint style formed on the model of the Elizabethan age; delivered his discourses with prodigious energy; and made fearless indiscriminate attacks on everything—civil as well as ecclesiastical—he considered wrong or faulty. Such a preacher was soon surrounded by multitudes. It became 'the fashion' to attend Mr. Irving's church. People of all ranks and characters, literary men, philosophers, statesmen, commons, and noblemen of the highest name and influence, flocked to his church. Within a year after his settlement in the metropolis, he published a volume of discourses, which he entitled 'For the Oracles of God, four orations; For Judgment to Come, an argument in nine parts.' So extraordinary was the demand for this volume, that three large editions were sold within six months.—From his great popularity, Mr. Irving was called frequently to plead the cause of many charitable and Christian institutions. In 1824, he preached the annual sermon for the London Missionary Society; and on that occasion, as he had acquired the habit of protracting the services to an unusual length, he exhausted himself so much, that he was obliged to pause twice to rest himself. The discourse was afterwards published under the title: 'For Missionaries after the Apostolic Schools, a series of orations in four parts,' and dedicated to his friend Coleridge. In the following year he preached the annual sermon for the Continental Society, and on that occasion, too, disgusted many even of his friends and admirers by extending the services to more than four hours' duration. He wished to train his own mind to habitual occupation with religious thoughts, and as he thought others should do so too, he refused to abridge his discourses.—Mr. Irving, through the influence of Coleridge, became strongly inclined to mysticism, and, having commenced the study of unfulfilled prophecy, which he preposterously held out as the key to the right interpretation of the Bible, he gradually plunged into a sea of the grossest absurdities. Attaching himself to what was called 'The Albury School of Prophets,' he not only adopted Millenarian views respecting the personal reign of Christ on the earth, but began to entertain some singular opinions of the model Christian church. These opinions, leading him to conceive that it was want of faith that prevented the miraculous gifts of the primitive age from being enjoyed by the church in modern times, he with his flock, being true believers, laid claim to the power of working miracles, and speaking with unknown tongues. These wild extravagances, together with the sad errors in doctrine into which Mr. Irving fell, compelled the courts of the Church of Scotland to interfere. He was at length declared no longer belonging to her communion, and he with his deluded flock, who followed blindly in all his vagaries, withdrew from Regent Square church to a new chapel that was built for his reception. Exhausted by anxiety and incessant labours, Mr. Irving's iron constitution gave way, and, while on a tour through his native country, undertaken for his health, he died at Glasgow, Dec. 8, 1834, in the Cathedral of which his remains were interred.—The Irvingites still form a considerable body, and a scheme is at present being carried out for building churches in all the large towns of the United Kingdom in connection with this sect. Towards the completion of this scheme, it is reported that Henry Drummond, Esq., the eminent London banker, has given the munificent donation of £100,000. [R.J.]

IRWIN, EYLES, an English poet, 1751-1817.

ISAAC, son of Abraham and Sarah, 2266 B.C.

ISAAC, a patriarch of Armenia, died 1440.

ISAAC, ANGELUS, emperor of the East, proclaimed on the day when Andronicus Comnenus was killed by the populace 1185, dethroned and deprived of his sight by Alexis, his brother, 1195, reinstated by the crusaders, and put to death the same year by Alexis Ducas, 1204.

ISAAC COMMENUS, emperor of the East 1057, abdicated 1059, died in a monastery 1061.

ISAAC KARO, a Spanish rabbi, 15th century.

ISAAC LEVITA, a rabbin of the 16th century.

ISAACSON, H., an Eng. chronolo., 1581-1654.

ISABELLA OF AUSTRIA, daughter of Philip II., king of Spain, and of Elizabeth of France, born 1566, married to Albert, son of the emperor Maximilian, 1598, deprived of the sovereignty of the Low Countries, which she had received after the death of her husband in 1621, died 1633.

ISABELLA OF BAVARIA, daughter of Stephen II., duke of Bavaria, born 1371, married to Charles VI. of France, 1385, died miserably at Paris, after a reign marked by intrigues and crimes, 1435.

ISABELLA OF CASTILE, queen of Spain, daughter of John II. king of Castile, born 1450, married to Ferdinand V., king of Arragon, 1469, died 1504. The reign of Ferdinand and Isabella is the most glorious in the Spanish annals, and from the year 1492, they bore the title of 'king' in common. In her rgn. the inquisition was founded.

ISABELLA OF FRANCE, daughter of Philip the Fair, born 1292, married to Edward II. of England 1308, dethroned her husband with the aid of her paramour, Lord Mortimer, 1326, confined in the castle of Risings by her son Edward III., on attaining his majority, 1330, died 1358.

ISEUS, an Athenian orator, 4th century B.C.

ISALAH, a prophet of the Jews, son of Amos, and nephew of Amaziah, k. of Judah, 7th ct. B.C.

ISCANUS, JOSEPH, a Latin poet, died 1224.

ISELIN, ISAAC, a Germ. philosopher, 1728-82.

ISELIN, J. C., a Germ. Orientalist, 1681-1737.

ISEMBERT OF XAINTES, a French architect, employed to finish Old London Bridge 1209.

ISIASLAV, the first of the name grand duke of Russia, reigned 1054-1078; the second, 1146-1154; the third, 1157-1161.

ISIDORE, archbishop of Thessalonica, 15th ct.

ISIDORE OF ALEXANDRIA, a saint and partizan of Athanasius, b. in Egypt abt. 318, d. 404.

ISIDORE OF CHARAX, a Gr. geographer, 1st c.

ISIDORE OF MILETUS, a Greek architect, employed by Justinian at Constantinople, 6th cent.

ISIDORE OF PELUSIUM, a saint, and disciple of Chrysostom, author of Letters valued for their remarks on Scripture passages, on theological questions, and on church discipline, d. about 440.

ISIDORE OF SEVILLE, a saint, and ecclesiastical writer and historian, distinguished for his piety and erudition, born about 570, died 636. A collection of spurious canons intended to prove that all ecclesiastical authority emanated from the see of Rome, was a long time attributed to him, but they have been proved to be the forgeries of an ecclesiastical writer of the 8th century, and as ISIDORE MERCATOR, or PECCATOR.

ISLA, J. F., a Spanish Jesuit, 1714-1783.

ISLEIF, an Icelandic historian, 11th century.

ISHMAEL, a son of Abraham and Hagar, the supposed father of the Arabians, 2280 B.C.

ISHMAEL, founder of the dynasty of Sophies in Persia, 1487-1524. ISHMAEL II., grandson, succeeded 1576, poisoned 1577.

ISOCRATES, a famous Athenian orator teacher of rhetoric, was born about 436 B.C., was a contemporary of Socrates. He is reckoned by Cicero among the first to perfect the melody of Greek prose, and was so warmly attached to country, that he took no food after the fatal battle of Cheronæa, and four days afterwards died of starvation and grief in the ninety-eighth year of his age. There are some discourses and epistles still extant under his name; and it is recorded that he never, by writing or accusation, injured a single individual.

ISRAEL BEN AARON, a Prussian rabbi, author of 'The Light of Israel,' published 1701.

ISSELT, M. D., a German historian, d. 1590.

ISTIVANFIUS, NICHOLAS, vice-palatine Hungary, and historian of that country, died 1610.

ISTRIA, VINCENTELLO D., viceroy of Corsica, born 1380, made viceroy 1421, executed 1434.

ITALINSKI, A., a Polish diplomatist, d. 1820.

ITAND, J. M. G., a Fr. physician, 1775-1830.

ITTIGIUS, TH., a Ger. theologian, 1644-1700.

ITURBIDE, or YTURBIDE, DON AUGUSTO, a Mexican officer, born of a distinguished family in 1784, is remarkable for his sudden elevation to the supreme power as emperor of Mexico, and his tragical fate after he had played his part in the drama of Mexican independence. When the yoke of Spain was shaken off by some of the American provinces in 1816, Iturbide was in command of the royal army of the north, occupying Guanaxuato and Valladolid, and a false charge of disloyalty being preferred against him, he retired from active service, in reality, as it appears, to watch events, and to find means in the ruin of the Spaniards for the gratification of his ambitious plans. His plans being matured, and a command offered to him, he declared for the independence of the Mexican people, and having freed his country from the common enemy, he outwitted the republicans, and was proclaimed emperor by a coup d'état, March 18th, 1822. Unable to maintain his authority in a state of anarchy, which only a real king could have controlled, he tendered his abdication in the March following, and being handsomely provided for, covenanted to reside in Italy. From Italy, notwithstanding, in the beginning of 1823, he removed to England, and encouraged by the division of parties in Mexico, addressed a letter to the congress, offering his services as a private officer, to restore order—not waiting an answer, however, but embarking for the seat of empire with a magnificent imperial mantle, proclamation crosses, uniforms, and insignia of all kinds, with which to caparison and dazzle the poor Mexican. The message of Iturbide was received and read in congress on the 28th of April, and its writer instantly proclaimed an outlaw; who, ignorant of the fact, arrived in person on the 12th of July.

to be shot on the 19th, and thrown into an honoured grave, without coffin or shroud, like a

It is evident there was no national feeling in favour of this adventurer, as was indeed hardly possible in such a country and under such circumstances, yet the event might have been very different had he returned earlier. The rich and glorious state of Guadalupe, where the military command was in the hands of Bustamanti, was in favour of Iturbide, and in revolt against the same government, but was subjugated by conquest about a month before his arrival. One last piece was thrown in his way by La Garza, under pretext of making him prisoner, but Iturbide had neither the nerve nor the address to profit by it, and the soldiers he might have commanded, had been a Napoleon, led him to execution. [E.R.] IVAN, the first of the name prince of Georgia, began to reign 1057; the second, grandson of the first, distinguished in the war with the Turks 1223; the third, grandson of the latter, reigned at the middle of the 12th century.

IVAN, an Armenian prince in the service of the kings of Georgia, died 1231.

IVANOFF, a Russian dramatist, 1777-1816.

IVAR WIDFAMNE, the founder of a line of Swedish and Danish kings in the 7th century.

IVES, EDWARD, an English traveller, d. 1786.

IVES, JOHN, an Engl. antiquarian, 1751-1776.

IVETEAUX, N. V., a French poet, 1559-1649.

IVO, IVES, or YVES, bishop of Chartres, author of a collection of decrees, canons, &c., 1035-1115.

IWAN. The Russian sovereigns of this name are—IWAN I., who succeeded his father in the principalities of Vladimir, Moscow, and Novogorod, 1328, and died 1340. IWAN II., his grandson, reigned 1353-1358. IWAN III., the conqueror of the Tartars under Achmet Khan, the first to adopt the black eagle, and claim the sovereignty of all the Russias, 1438-1505. IWAN IV., grandson of the preceding, and first czar of Russia, surnamed 'the Terrible' on account of his cruelties, but a great promoter of commerce and civilization, 1530-1584. IWAN V., who, being deaf and dumb, was associated with his brother, Peter I., reigned 1682-1696. IWAN VI., poisoned in infancy, 1740, to make way for Elizabeth, daughter of Peter I.

IXNARD, M., a French architect, 1723-1795.

IXTILXOCHITL, FERDINAND D'ALVA, author of a history of the old Mexican kings, 17th cent.

IZAACKE, R., historian of Exeter, died 1700.

IZIOCALT, the fourth king of Mexico, and real founder of its government, reigned 1433-1455.

IZMAILOV, a Russian journalist, 1780-1832.

IZQUIERDO, DON EUGENIO, a Spanish diplomatist, signed the truce of Fontainebleau, d. 1816.

IZZEN-CHOLLACH, a French poet, last cent.

J

JACOB, a learned Talmudist, 16th century.

JAPHAR-EBN-THOPHAIL, an Arabian philosopher, author of 'The Improvement of Human Reason, exhibited in the Life of Hai Ebn Yokhanan,' a philos. romance, transl. by Ockley, d. 1198.

JABALOT, F. F., an Ital. theol., 1780-1834.

JABINEAU, H., a Fr. eccles. wr., died 1792.

JABLONOWSKI, C. G., a Ger. nat., 1756-87.

JABLONOWSKI, JOSEPH, Count, grandfather of Stanislaus, king of Poland, known as a poet and translator; died commencement of last century.

JOSEPH ALEXANDER, Prince Jablonowski, of the same family, founder of a literary society which bears his name, and author of a biography of the great Polish generals, 1712-1777.

JABLONOWSKI, ULADISLAS, a Polish general in the service of Fr. at St. Domingo, 1769-1802.

JABLONSKI, DANIEL ERNEST, a Hebrew scholar and protestant divine of Germany, 1660-1741.

JOHN THEODORE, his brother, a distinguished lexicographer, 1654-1731. PAUL ERNEST, a Ger. theol., and lear. wr., 1693-1757.

JACKSON, ANDREW, president of the United States, was born in South Carolina, on the 15th March, 1767. His father, a settler of Scottish descent, died early, leaving him, with two older brothers, to the care of their widowed mother. He early showed a hardy self-relying nature, and when at a boy he shouldered a musket in the war of independence. With the versatility of employment peculiar to the progressive character of the new republican empire, he became a lawyer as well as a soldier; and he was at the same time a judge of the supreme court of Tennessee, and a major-general in the army of the United States. This was the character in which he was to reap his great renewal. He had spent many years in the harassing and inglorious conflicts with the Indians on the frontier, when the second war with Britain called him to more distinguished services. In 1815 he signalized himself by the defence of New Orleans. On this occasion he showed that somewhat haughty disregard of civil rights, which was a conspicuous feature of his character; and perhaps it was well for the constitution of the United States that in the midst of his triumphant popularity he found himself surrounded by legal difficulties and dangers. He was subjected to damages for proceedings affecting private parties consequent on his suspending the constitution, and enforcing martial law at New Orleans. There has been no statesman from whom, had opportunity served him, the constitution of the States was likely to run so much risk. He depended on his military renown and democratic principles for the votes and support of the multitude, and might thus in a less firmly settled government have been a very dangerous man. After having served in various public capacities, he became, in 1824, a candidate for the presidency. Though he had the largest number of votes, no one had a sufficient number to be elected, and Adams was selected by the representatives, according to the constitution. In 1828 Jackson was elected by a large majority. The older party viewed this event as the ascendancy of principles fraught with danger to the United States; and this feeling was echoed from other countries, when it was seen that his policy was connected with territorial aggression, and the aggrandizement of the slave-holding interest. On the renewal of the charter of the United States Bank, a main instrument of influence to the federal government, he boldly trusted to popular support, and used his veto against the chambers of congress. His presidency lasted until 1837. He died on 8th June, 1845. [J.H.B.]

JACKSON, ARTHUR, a noncf. div., 1593-1666.

JACKSON, CYRIL, an eminent div., 1746-1819. His brother, WILLIAM, bishop of Oxford, a classical translator and mathematician, 1750-1815.

JACKSON, JOHN, a portrait pain., 1778-1831.

JACKSON, JOHN, a famous controver. divine, philosophical writer, and chronologist, 1686-1763.

JACKSON, JOSEPH, a letter-founder, 1733-92.

JACKSON, ROBERT, a physician and profes. writer, especially on the fevers of Jamaica and America, and the use of cold water, 1751-1827.

JACKSON, THOMAS, a learned div., 1579-1640.

JACKSON, WILLIAM, a musical composer and writer; distinguished also as a painter, 1730-1804.

JACKSON, WILLIAM, an Irish protestant clergyman, convicted of a treasonable correspondence with France; d. of poison at the bar, 1795.

JACOB, the patriarch of the Bible, is supposed to have been born abt. 2206 B.C., and d. abt. 2061.

JACOB, a Cistercian monk, and native of Hungary, killed while preaching a crusade, 12th c.

JACOB, AL BARDI, or BURADÆUS, a bishop and apostle of the Monophysites in the 6th century.

JACOB, BEN HAJIM, a rabbi of the 16th cent.

JACOB, BEN NAPHTALI, a learned Jew to whom, in conjunction with Ben Aser, the invention of the Masoretic points is ascribed, 5th century.

JACOB, EDWARD, an antiquar. wr., d. 1788.

JACOB, GILES, a writer of numerous works on legal subjects and in polite literature; among which are his 'Lives and Characters of English Dramatic Poets,' 'Law Dictry,' &c., 1690-1744.

JACOB, HENRY, founder of the first congregational or independent church in England, and author of theological treatises by which that reform was promoted, died about 1624. His son, of the same name, a learned writer, 1606-1652.

JACOB, JEHUDAH LEON, a Spanish Jew, an. of a 'Descrip. of the Temple of Solomon,' 17th ct.

JACOB KOLB, G., a Fr. antiq., 1775-1830.

JACOBÆUS, OLIGER, a Danish antiquarian, naturalist, and literary savant, 1650-1701. His son, JAMES, a learned writer, died 1738.

JACOBI, A. R., a Ger. jurisconsult, 1746-1825.

JACOBI, FREDERICK HENRY, born at Dusseldorf, 25th January, 1743; died at Munich, where he was President of the Academy of Sciences, 10th March, 1819. Jacobi, distinguished pre-eminently as a writer—no German in modern times having attained a style of greater lucidity and beauty—led the reaction which followed on the various scepticisms arising in the speculations of Kant, and explained in our article on that philosopher. The scepticisms chiefly related to the question—how far are we entitled to infer the existence of an external reality, from the existence of a primary conception? Jacobi opposed to them an imperturbable dogmatism,—asserting with unshrinking confidence, the legitimacy and sufficiency of such conclusions as the following:—'I think, or have an idea of the Supreme Being—therefore he exists.' It cannot be doubted that this faith-philosophy, as it was designated, had considerable, and a very salutary influence in recalling to logicians the authority of our Intuitions; but Jacobi forgot that a true and philosophic faith is not synonymous with blind confidence in whatever may be found in the mind; it is confidence justified by reflection and defensible on grounds capable of being plain and vindicated. He exceeded in this direction even the excesses of the Scottish School; although his expositions are everywhere distinguished by acuteness, and adorned by so remarkable a grasp that his disciples have named him a modern Plato. The correspondence of this celebrated writer perhaps the most interesting of any recent left us. Goethe declared that it represented and sums up a whole century. Jacobi may be considered the founder of a School; and to have had no slight influence in moulding the illustrious Schleiermacher. [J.P.N.]

JACOBI, JOHN GEO., brother of the preceding, a dist. professor and wr. of polite liter., 1740-1811.

JACOBILLI, L., an Italian savant, 1598-1671.

JACOBS, F. C. W., a Ger. critic, b. 1764-1818.

JACOBS, JURIE, a Swiss painter, 1610-1660.

JACOBS, LUCAS, a Dutch painter, 1494-1550.

JACOBS, P. F., a Flemish painter, 1780-1800.

JACOBSEN, M., a Spanish commdr., by whom the Armada was saved from total ruin, d. 1633.

JACOBSON, JOHN CH. GOTTFRIED, an. of

'Technological Dict. of All the Arts,' &c., 1726-1813.

JACOPI, J., an Italian anatomist, died 1813.

JACOPONE, or JACOPO DA TODI, an It. monk, whose real name was JACOPO DE BEN

DETTI, author of ascetic writings and hymns which have given him a place among the poets of Italy. The best known of these is the famous 'Stabat Mater Dolorosa;' died 1306.

JACOTIN, PETER, a Fr. geograph., 1765-1818.

JACOTOT, JEAN JOSEPH, celeb. as the an. plan of universal education, successively capt. of artillery under Napoleon, secretary to the minister of war, member of the chamber of representatives 1815, prof. of literature at Louvain, and director of the military school of Belgium, 1770-1841.

JACQUARD, or JACQUART, MARIE JOSEPH, celebrated as the inventor of a loom for the weaving of damasks, was born at Lyons 1752, and d. 1834. He was the son of a common workman and first exhibited his machine in 1801, in which, it has been adopted in every manufacture of Europe and America, and is admitted to mark an epoch in the weaving art. He was appointed by Napoleon to an employment in the 'Conservatoire des Arts et des Metiers,' and the city of Lyons has erected a statue to his memory.

JACQUELIN, J. A., a Fr. poet, 1776-1827.

JACQUELINE, countess of Holland, 1400-1482.

JACQUELOT, ISAAC, a prot. div., 1647-1717.

JACQUEMARD, S., a Fr. poet, 1772-1830.

JACQUEMIN, J. B., a Fr. geomet., 1720-1790.

JACQUEMONT, VICTOR, a celebrated French naturalist and traveller in the East Indies, b. 1748.

JACQUES, M. J., a Fr. theologian, 1736-1818.

JACQUET, EUGENE VINCENT, a Fr. naturalist and an. of works on the East. languages, 1811-1840.

JACQUET, J. C., a Fr. pamphleteer, last c.

JACQUET, LOUIS, a French Jesuit, author of a 'Parallel between the Greek and French tragic writers,' 1732-1794.

JACQUET, PETER, a Fr. jurisconsult, d. 1717.

JACQUIER, F., a learned mathematic., 1711-1780.

ACQUIN, A. P., a French author, 1721-1780.
 ACQUIN, NICOLAS JOSEPH, a Dutch botanist, author of a magnificent work entitled 'Floræ Auscæ,' with 500 coloured engravings, 1727-1817.
 ADELOT, N., a Fr. physiologist, 1738-1793.
 AECK, C., a German engraver, 1763-1809.
 AECK, M., a German juriconsult, 1783-1833.
 AEGER, J. W., a German divine, born 1647.
 AGELLON, a duke of Lithuania, born about 14, united the kingdom of Poland to his own his marriage with Hedriga, and reigned as Sigismund V., 1386, died 1434.
 AGEMANN, C. J., a German savant, d. 1804.
 AGO, RICHARD, an English poet, 1715-1781.
 AHN, JOHN, a professor in Vienna, disting. in Oriental and biblical scholar, died 1817.
 AILLOT, HUBERT ALEXIS, a French geographer, born about 1640, died 1712.
 AKOB, L. H. VON, a German economist and philosopher of the school of Kant, 1759-1827.
 ALLABERT, J., a Swiss exp. phil., 1712-68.
 AMBLICUS, a Syrian novelist, 2d century.
 AMBLICUS, a Platonic philosopher, 4th cent.
 AMBLICHUS, or IAMBlichus, the famous Neo-platonist and pupil of Porphyry, was born at Chalchis, and died about the year 333. Platonism was far from pure, for it was adulterated with many orientalisms, and degraded by numerous superstitions. Yet his contemporaries were lavish in their praises of his genius. His treatise on Pythagoras contains a life of that philosopher, full of ridiculous puerilities and poems, and has also several chapters on ethics and poetry. The book 'On the Mysteries,' is an attempt to prove the divine origin and perfection of Egyptian worship, with its theosophic doctrines and mystic ceremonies. Many of his other works, such as his Commentaries on some of Plato's Dialogues, are lost. His treatise on the Mysteries was published by Gale, Oxford, 1678, &c. This Iamblichus is often confounded with another person of the same name. [J.E.] AMES. The saints of this name are—1. The father, brother of Saint John, put to death by Herod Agrippa 44. 2. A bishop of Jerusalem, brother of St. Simon and St. Jude, killed by the emperor, 62. 3. A bishop of Mesopotamia, 4th cent.
 AMES. The kings of Scotland of this name are—JAMES I., son of Robert III., born 1394; reigned in England by Henry IV. and Henry V., 1406-1437; succeeded to the throne 1406; murdered 1437. JAMES II., son of James I., born 1430; succeeded 1437; killed at the siege of Roxburgh 1460. JAMES III., son of James II., born 1451; succeeded 1460; killed near the field of Bannockburn 1466. JAMES IV., born 1472; succeeded his father James III. 1488; married Margaret, daughter of Henry VII. of England, 1503; died at Flodden field 1513. JAMES V., son and successor of the latter at the age of eighteen months, 1513; married Madeleine, daughter of Francis I., 1536; died, when his only child, Mary, eight days old, 1542. JAMES VI., grandson of the preceding by his daughter Mary, who was married to Henry Stuart, Lord Darnley, born 1566; succeeded at Stirling by the insurgent nobles 1567; Elizabeth as king of England 1603; d. 1625.
 JAMES I., king of England, same as James VI. of Scotland. JAMES II., his grandson, succeeded his brother, Charles II., 1685; lost his throne and took refuge in France 1688; landed in Ireland, and lost the battle of the Boyne 1690; died 1701.

 JAMES I., king of Arragon, born 1206, suc. 1213, died 1216. JAMES II., reigned 1285-1327.
 JAMES I., king of Majorca, son of James I., king of Arragon, flourished 1248-1311. JAMES II., grandson of James I., reigned 1324-1349.
 JAMES OF BOURBON, count of La Marche, and second husband of Jeanne II., queen of Naples, whom he married after the death of Beatrix of Navarre, his first wife, died 1438.
 JAMES OF MAJORCA, third husband of Jeanne I., queen of Naples, whom he married on being delivered from his three years' imprisonment in an iron cage, 1362; died duke of Calabria 1375.
 JAMES OF VITRI, a French cardinal and historian, persecutor of the Albigenses, died 1244.
 JAMES OF VORAGINE, an Ital. prelate, d. 1298.
 JAMES, JOHN THOS., D.D., bishop of Calcutta after the death of Bishop Heber, 1786-1829.
 JAMES, ROBERT, a physician and professional writer, auth. of a 'Medical Dictionary,' and celeb. for the preparation of a fever powder, 1703-1776.
 JAMES, THOS., auth. of school-books, d. 1804.
 JAMES, THOMAS, a distinguished navigator and discoverer, author of a curious journal, 17th c.
 JAMES, THOMAS, a learned divine and collector of curious MSS., author of a 'Treatise on the Corruption of Scriptures, Councils, and Fathers,' 1571-1632. His nephew, RICHARD, a distinguished scholar, 1592-1638.
 JAMES, WILLIAM, a land surveyor, distinguished as the first projector of the Manchester and Liverpool railway, and regarded as the father of the railway system, 1771-1837.
 JAMES, WILLIAM, a naval historian, d. 1827.
 JAMES, SIR W., an E. Indian officer, 1720-83.
 JAMESON, G., a Scotch painter, 1586-1644.
 JAMESON, W., an English savant, author of 'Spicilegium Antiquitatum Ægyptii,' last century.
 JAMET, P. C., a French author, born 1701.
 JAMI, an Oriental poet, 1414-1494.
 JAMIESON, REV. JOHN, a Scottish seceding minister, born at Glasgow 1759, ordained at Forfar in 1786, translated to Edinburgh 1797, author of many popular professional works, but is best known to the world at large by his 'Historical Account of the Culdees of Iona,' his 'Hermes Scythicus,' and above all by his 'Etymological Dictionary of the Scottish Language.' Died at Edinburgh 1838.
 JAMIN, N., an ascetic of Brittany, 1730-1782.
 JAMYN, AMADIS, a French poet, 1538-1585.
 JANE. See JEANNE, JOAN.
 JANEWAY, J., a nonconform. divine, 1636-74.
 JANI, CH. D., a German philosopher, 1743-90.
 JANICON, FRANCIS MICHAEL, a French protestant, known as a political writer, 1674-1730.
 JANIN, JOSEPH, a French historian, 1715-94.
 JANITIUS, C., a Polish historian, 1616-1643.
 JANNES and JAMBRES, the name by which Paul calls the magicians who resisted Moses in Egypt, and supposed to be the same as Janne and Jotape mentioned by Pliny, and as the Jo-hanni and Mamre of the Talmud.
 JANOSKI, J. D., a Polish savant, 1720-1786.
 JANSEN, H., a French translator, 1741-1812.
 JANSENIUS, CORNELIUS, bishop of Ghent, author of a 'Harmony of the Gospel,' 1510-1576.

JANSENIUS, JAMES, professor of divinity at Louvain, au. of Scripture Comment., 1547-1625.

JANSSEN, CORNEILLE, (CORNELIUS JANSEN-IUS), was born in a hamlet called Accoy, close upon Leerdam, in Flanders, in A.D. 1585. In 1602 he went to study at Louvain, but his severe industry brought on a malady which required change of air, and the young student repaired to Paris, where he formed a friendship with Jean du Verger de Hauranne, better known as the Abbé St. Cyran in the subsequent history of Jansenism. The two friends returned to Bayonne, where they spent several years in earnest study and meditation. On returning to Louvain, Janssen was elevated to the principality of the college of St. Pulcheria, became doctor of theology in 1617, and was added to the number of professors in ordinary. Twice was he sent by his college to Spain on business of moment. He was raised to the bishopric of Ypres in 1635; a work written by him against France for forming alliances with protestant states having contributed to secure him such patronage from the court of Spain. He died of the plague in 1638, in the fifty-third year of his age. A large part of his life—at least twenty years of it—had been spent in studying and collecting the works of Augustine. The result of his labours—his 'Augustinus,' scarcely finished at his decease—he submitted to the judgment of Pope Urban VIII. His friends published the posthumous volumes at Louvain in 1640. The Jesuits, who were favourers of Pelagianism, were its bitter and truculent opponents. Five propositions were selected to be condemned, and after many scenes of strife and papal anathema, the Bull Unigenitus was issued by Pope Clement XI., which put under ban the evangelical doctrines of Quesnel, Janssen, and the whole party. Port-royal, the happy abode of so many of them, had before this time been razed to the ground by Jesuit malice and intrigue. [J.E.]

JANSSEN, or JOHNSON, CORNEL., a Dutch portrait painter, disting. in England, 1590-1685.

JANSSENS, A., a Flemish painter, 1569-1631.

JANSSENS, VICTOR HONORIUS, a Flemish painter, disting. in historical subjects, 1664-1739.

JANTET, A. F., a Fr. mathematic., 1747-1805.

JANUARIUS, a bishop and saint of the Romish Church, beheaded in the persec. under Diocletian.

JANVIER, ANTIDE, a French mechanician and writer on the chronometer and orrery, 1751-1835.

JANVIER, DOM RENE AMBROISE, a learned
French monk and editor of Hebrew, 1614-1682.

JAPHETH, the third son of Noah, and the Japetes of profane history, ancestor of the Greeks.

JAQUELOT, ISAAC, a Fr. divine, 1647-1708.

JAQUOT, BLAISE, a Fr. jurist, abt. 1580-1632.

JARCHI, SOLOMON BEN. See RASCHI.

JARD, FRANCIS, a Fr. preacher, 1675-1768.

JARDEL, a Fr. archæologist, died after 1793.

JARDIN, N. H., a Fr. architect, 1720-1799.

JARDINE, G., a Scotch philosopher, 1743-1827.

JARDINIER, C. D., a French engr., 1726-74.

JARDINS, MARY CATHERINE DES, a French novelist, best kn. as Madame de Villedieu, d. 1683.

JARDYN, KARL DU. See DUJARDIN.

JARNOWICK, G. M., a cel. violinist, 1745-1804.

JAROPOL or JAROPOLK, the first of the name, grand duke of Russia, reigned 973-980; the second, grandson of the preceding, 1132-1138.

JAROSLAW, or JAROSLAV, GEORGE, graduate of Russia, a great patron of learn., d. 1054.

JARRIGE, PETER, a French Jesuit, 1605-61.

JARRY, LAWRENCE GUILHARD DU, a French preacher, kn. as a poet and relig. wr., 1658-1768.

JARS, FRANCIS DE ROCHECHOUART, Chev-De, a French officer, disting. in the annals of the Bastille for his singular courage, died 1670.

JARS, GABRIEL, a Fr. mineralogist, 1732-61.

JARVIS, JOHN, an Irish artist, distinguishing as a painter on glass, born about 1749, died 1813.

JASON, a tyrant of Thessalia, 4th cent. B.C.

JAUCOURT, LOUIS, Chevalier De, a French
med. wr., and contrib. to the Encyclo., 1704-1772.

JAUGEON, N., a Fr. archæologist, died 1721.

JAULT, AUG. FR., a Fr. translator, 1700-1772.

JAUREGUI-Y-AGUILAR, JUAN DE, a Spanish painter, poet, and translator, 1566-1607.

JAUSSAUD, L. DE, a Fr. Hellenist, 1580-1611.

JAUSSIN, L. ARNAUD, a Fr. histor., d. 1717.

JAY, JOHN MICHAEL LE, an Oriental scholar and advocate of the parliament of Paris, d. 1677.

JAY, JOHN, an Ameri. statesman, 1745-1822.

JAYADEVA, a cel. Hindu poet, 12th to 15th cent.

JEACOCKE, CALEB, a tradesman of London, celebrated as a debater; author of a 'Vindication of the Moral Character of the Apos. Paul,' d. 1717.

JEAN EVANGELISTE, LE PERE, was Capuchin of Louvain, who was known to be living in 1639. He is the author of a work entitled

'De Regno Dei in Anima,' which is the first introduction to the understanding of mystical subjects ever written, and is the only work at present comparable to Boehmen's 'Divine Vision.' In this eulogium we must be understood to include second part, added to the editions of Frankfurt in 1690 and 1692, and entitled 'De Separatione Animæ et Spiritus,' or 'The Separation of the Soul and the Spirit, illustrating the increase of the Bride through the degrees of Per-

Love.' In support of his thesis concerning the soul's gathering in to herself, of her introversion, and of her drawing near and exalting herself to God, the author cites many famous names, and admitted integrity. It is altogether a curious and valuable treatise on the state of ecstasy. [E.]

JEANES, HENRY, an Eng. theolog., 1611-1688.

JEANNE D'ALBRET. See ALBRET.

JEANNE, queen of Naples. See JOAN.

JEANNE, HENRIQUEZ, queen of Castile and Aragon, wife of John II., died 1468.

JEANNE-LA-FOLLE, queen of Castile, daughter of Ferdinand the Catholic, wife of Philip, archduke of Austria, and mo. of Chas. V., 1482-1555.

JEANNE OF NAVARRE, daughter of Henry IV., king of Navarre, and wife of Philip the Fair, king of France, 1272-1305.

JEANNE OF VALOIS, or ST. JEANNE, daughter of Louis XI., founder of a relig. order, 1464-1521.

JEANNIN, PETER, kn. as President Jeannin, a Fr. financier, minister of Henry IV., 1540-1612.

JEANROI, D., a Fr. med. writer, 1750-1812.

JEANSON, B., a French architect, died 1812.

JEATURAT, E. S., a Fr. mathematician, founder of the observatory at the mil. school, 1724-1812.

JEBB, JOHN, an Irish prelate, author of an 'Essay on Sacred Literature,' &c., 1775-1832.

JEBB, JOHN, a learned divine and Oriental scholar, who became a physician on profession.

cinanism, 1736-1786. SAMUEL, his uncle, a learned editor of the nonjuring party, afterwards physician, died 1772. SIR RICHARD JEBB, son of Sam., physien. to Geo. III., 1729-1787. JEDAAIA, H., RABBI, surnamed Habbdrasci, Jewish poet and theologian of Spain, 13th cent. JEFFERSON, THOMAS, an eminent American statesman, was born in 1743, at Shadwell, in Virginia. He was educated as a lawyer, and combining with his professional training great scholarship, and a capacity of expressing himself with ease and precision, he became of eminent service in drawing documents connected with the establishment of American independence, and otherwise aiding the arrangements connected with that great event. He prepared the first draught of the Declaration of Independence, which was revised by Franklin and Adams. In a document relating to the disposal of his estates in his old age, he gave his brief and distinct account of his history:—'I came of age in 1764, and was soon put into the nomination of justices of the county in which I lived, and at the first election following I became one of its representatives in the legislature; was once sent to the old Congress; then employed two years with Mr. Pendleton and Mr. Wythe on the repeal and reduction to a single code of the whole body of the British statutes, the acts of our assembly, and certain parts of the common law; then elected governor; next to the legislature, and to Congress again; sent to Europe as minister-plenipotentiary; appointed secretary of state to the new government; elected vice-president and president; and, lastly, a visitor and rector of the university of Virginia.' His opinions were strongly expressed on the principles of government and the legislation of the United States. He was a thorough republican, and the opponent of the conservative party; but it requires to be kept in view that this opposition was derived from the old American school of abstract republicanism, and a reality of citizenship, and had little harmony with the later anti-federalism, and its appeals to the influence to accomplish conventional purposes. Thus, while he abolished primogeniture and the church establishment, he also restrained the slave trade, and his sentiments were in favour of the abolition of slavery. In 1801 he succeeded the elder Adams as president, by choice of the House of Representatives, who had to decide between him and his opponent, on account of an equality of votes. There is no doubt that this choice was eminently propitious to the stability of the constitution, when it is known that his rival was the unscrupulous and clever Colonel Burr. Jefferson filled the office eight years, and from the year 1809 he lived in retirement in Virginia, until his death on the 4th of July, 1826, the anniversary of the declaration of independence, and the day on which his friend and rival, the elder Adams, died. [J.H.B.] JEFFERY, J., a div. and moralist, 1647-1720. JEFFERY, TH., a nonconfor. divine, last cen. JEFFREY, FRANCIS, one of the most masterly critics and most eloquent writers in the English language, was a very remarkable instance of the combination of different and dissimilar faculties, as well as of indefatigable energy and rapid versatility in the employment of mental powers. During the twenty-five years when his literary labours would have seemed to be incessant, he was practising the legal profession with activity and increasing success: he was the leading barrister in the Scottish courts, while he continued to vindicate his place as the first literary critic of his time; and in his declining years, when literature had ceased to be for him anything more than an amusement, he gained, by his knowledge and acuteness and industry on the bench, an eminent reputation among the best judges that have administered the law of Scotland. He, too, the good lawyer and celebrated writer, was a singularly eloquent and effective speaker; fluent, refined, and masterly in public oratory, and in private society one of the most brilliant of talkers. In his writings, again, to say nothing of the variety of information involved in the diversified fields over which he expatiated, there is an admirable union and an harmonious balancing of vigorous thought with impressive representation: gay and graceful wit, sometimes luxuriating too keenly to be good-natured, alternates with the natural expression of serious feelings which are always refined and not infrequently profound; and an imagination almost fertile and original enough to have made him a poet, throws over all his writings a wealth of felicitously illustrative imagery hardly ever employed to garnish so much of active and sagacious thinking.—Francis Jeffrey was born at Edinburgh in October, 1773. His father, a lawyer by profession, was one of the deputy-clerks or registrars of the Court of Session, the supreme law-court of Scotland. After having passed six years at the High School of Edinburgh, he studied at the university of Glasgow for two sessions of six months each, and afterwards, in his eighteenth year, resided for a few months at Oxford. His youth was spent in industrious reading, which embraced classics, history, ethics, criticism, and the Belles Lettres: he was indefatigable in practising composition, and in early manhood wrote many verses. At the age of twenty-one, he was admitted to the Scottish bar, where, for not a few years, he was so little employed as to have full leisure for literary pursuits. The first number of the Edinburgh Review, which contained five papers of Jeffrey's, appeared in October, 1802, when he was just twenty-nine years old; and he became its editor after the first two or three numbers. The celebrity which the Review at once attained was owing more, in an incalculable degree, to him than to any other of the contributors: the papers which he furnished to it were for many years very numerous, and were those on which its critical authority rested; and his skill and industry in editing were very valuable. At first considerably open in its politics, the Review soon became decidedly Whiggish; and the Quarterly was established as a rival. But, for a good many years after this, its energy suffered no perceptible diminution; and the exertions of its editor were unrelaxed, in spite of the claims of a professional practice, which was now becoming very great. In the meantime, in 1802, he had married a relation of his own, whom he soon lost, to the deep grief of a heart keenly awake to the domestic and friendly affections. In 1813 he married a grand-niece of John Wilkes, crossing to the United States to bring her home. In 1815 he became the occupant of the beautiful villa of Craighcrook, near Edinburgh, which, improved by his fine taste, became a place of meeting for many of the most distinguished persons in Europe. In 1816 Jeffrey's

[Craigcrook Castle.]

eloquence as a public speaker found for the first time an adequate field; trial by jury, which had hitherto been confined in Scotland to criminal causes, being then extended to civil questions. From this time till he ceased to practise, he was the acknowledged leader of the Scottish bar. In 1820, and again in 1821, he was elected Lord Rector of the university of Glasgow by the students, an honour which has since been cordially accepted by some of our most eminent literary men and statesmen. In 1829 his professional brethren authoritatively acknowledged his standing, by appointing him Dean or President of the Faculty of Advocates. He immediately resigned the editorship of the Review, which had long been burdensome and undesirable. At this point his literary life may be said to close. During the twenty-seven years, he had contributed to the Review about two hundred articles. A new stage in his history opened with the accession of the Whigs to political power. In December 1830, he was appointed Lord Advocate, an office which, besides many other duties, involves those of a secretary of state for Scotland. He necessarily entered parliament, but too late for eminent success, being now in his fifty-eighth year, without adequate training for the peculiar arena, and with a voice already broken so far as to deprive him in a great measure of the advantages which had belonged to his powers of oratory. His chief speeches in the House of Commons were made in support of those measures of reform in parliamentary representation and civic government, which it was his official duty to introduce. In May, 1834, he was raised to the bench as one of the judges in the Court of Session, assuming, according to the Scottish fashion, the honorary title of Lord Jeffrey. He delighted in his judicial duties; and no man ever performed them better. The remaining years of his life were spent in peace and honour. Never was old age more kindly or more placid; and, when the last scene arrived, the regrets of a whole community were poured on his grave. In 1841, an attack of bronchitis, the disease which had often distressed and at length destroyed him, compelled him to seek repose for some months. In 1843 he published, with unfeigned reluctance, three volumes containing selections from his 'Contributions to the Edinburgh Review.' He died at Edinburgh on the 26th of January, 1850, leaving a widow who survived him but for a very short time, and daughter, whose husband, Mr. Empson (also since dead), became the third editor of the Edinburgh Review. [W.S.]

JEFFREYS, GEORGE, Lord, an English lawyer, whose name, though he was a man of considerable ability, is better known by the infamy than the capacity of its owner, was born in the year 1648. He was the sixth son of a moderately wealthy country gentleman, unable to give him more than a good education as a barrister, and he had thus to fight his way in the world—a function to which he brought abilities, perseverance, and a utterly unscrupulous nature. Until he had shattered his nerves by dissipation, he was not destitute of courage, and he first obtained notice by attending an assize at Kingston during the plague, when other members of the profession were frightened away. He became recorder of London, and gradually rose, until, in 1683, he became chief justice of the King's Bench. In this capacity, after Monmouth's rebellion, he lent himself more in the spirit of a savage chief than of an English judge to the exterminating policy of the court, and his judicial condemnations obtained the characteristic name of Jeffreys' campaign. He was immediately rewarded with the office of lord high chancellor, when he transferred his services to a less sanguinary sphere. His wild recklessness, demeanour, his dissipated life, and his unscrupulous perversion of the judicial function in political matters, mixed up with an able discharge of his duty in other questions, make a curious and varied narrative in the memoirs of Jeffreys by Woolrich. Conscious of danger, if not of guilt, at the Revolution, he disguised himself as a sailor, and lurked at Wapping to attempt an escape. A man, who he had terrified from the judgment-seat, recognized his ferocious eyes glaring from a tavern window, and gave the alarm. He was with difficulty rescued from popular vengeance, and removed to the Tower, where he died, on the 19th Apr. 1689. [J.H.E.]

JEFFREYS, GEO., an Eng. poet, 1678-1755.
JEFFRIES, JOHN, an Am. phys., 1744-1813.
JEGHEN, CHR., a Ger. engraver, 1578-1638.
JEHAN-GHIR, ABUL MUZAFFER NOUR-DEEN MOHAMMED, emperor of Hindostan, and successor of Akbar, 1605, died, after a reign dist. by the encouragement of art and literature, 1627.
JEHOAHAAZ, king of Judah, about 609 B.C.
JEHOAHAAZ, king of Israel, 848-832 B.C.
JEHOIACHIN, king of Judah, about 594 B.C.
JEHOIAKIM, king of Judah, 608-597 B.C.
JEHORAM, a king of Judah, 888-885 B.C.
JEHOSHAPHAT, king of Judah, 913-888 B.C.
JEHU, a prophet of Israel, about 932 B.C.
JEHU, a king of Israel, reigned 876-848 B.C.
JEKYL, or JEKYL, SIR JOSEPH, a W. lawyer and statesman of the reign of George 1664-1738. His brother, THOMAS, a clergyman and author, dates unknown. Their descendant JOSEPH, an eminent barrister, solicitor-general to the prince of Wales, 1752-1837.

JELAL ED DEEN ROUMI, a Per. poet, 1318

JELGERHIUS, J., a Dutch paint., 1776-1836.
JELLINGER, C., a Germ. theolog., 17th cen.
JENISCH, BERNARD, Baron De, a German diplomatist, and historian of Persia, 1784-1807.
JENISCHIUS, P., a Flem. savant, 1558-1647.
JENISID, or GIARNSCHID. See DJEMCHID.
JENKIN, R., a learned divine, 1656-1727.
JENKIN, W., a nonconfor. divine, 1612-1685.
JENKINS, DAVID, a famous judge and royalist, of 'Reports and Polit. Tracts,' &c., 1586-1667.
JENKINS, HENRY, a native of Yorkshire, who died in poverty when 169 years of age, 1670.
JENKINS, SIR LEOLINE, a native of Glamorganshire, ambassador at the Hague in the reign of Charles II., and a distinguished civilian, 1625-85.
JENKINSON. See LIVERPOOL.
JENKINSON, ANTHONY, an English gentleman who was sent out (1558-1559) to inquire into the commercial resources of Central Asia. He was the first Englishman who crossed the Caspian, and the first person who in modern times has given an account of that sea. He reduced its dimensions to longitude; and made many other accurate determinations of geographical positions.
JENKS, BENJAMIN, a clergyman of the Church of England, author of 'Prayers and Offices of Devotion,' 1646-1724.
JENNENS, CHARLES, a gentleman of fortune, and suggestor of oratories in England, died 1773.
JENNER, CH., an English poet, 1737-1774.
JENNER, EDWARD, M.D., F.R.S., the discoverer of vaccination, was born at Berkeley, in Gloucestershire, on the 17th of May, 1749. He was the son of his father, who was vicar of Berkeley, early in life and the direction of his education devolved on his brother, the Rev. Stephen Jenner. He played at an early age a taste for natural history, and being destined for the profession of medicine he was apprenticed to Mr. Ludlow of Sodbury, near Bristol, a respectable provincial practitioner; and subsequently removed to London in 1770, where he became for two years a house pupil to the celebrated John Hunter. On the completion of his education in London he returned to his native place, where he began business as a general practitioner, and soon acquired an extensive and well-deserved reputation. In 1798, he made a discovery with which his name is now permanently associated, namely, that a pustular eruption on the teats of cows, and supposed to be identical with the disease called the 'Grease' in the heels of horses, had such a relationship to the matter of small-pox, that if inserted into the human constitution it would be protected against the terrible disease. This great fact was announced publicly by Dr. Jenner in 1798, but it was coldly received, and both the public and the profession were extremely sceptical as to its truth. It is now too firmly established to be shaken, though the amount of protection is not so great as at one time supposed; still the saving of human life from this discovery has been immense, and assuredly scientific medicine has never benefited upon humanity a more precious gift than the practice of vaccination. It was proposed to reward this distinguished physician by a grant of £10,000, but the House of Commons would only give £10,000, and even that with difficulty. It is melancholy to be obliged to state that Jenner's life was embittered by the controversies to which his discovery led, and that an amiable, a virtuous, and an accomplished man, was disturbed by petty squabbles, to which his nature was utterly abhorrent. He died on the 26th of January, 1823, in the seventy-fourth year of his age, and was buried on the 3d of February in the chancel of the parish church of Berkeley. [J.M.C.]

JENNINGS, DR. DAVID, a dissenting minister of great learning, author of 'An Appeal to Reason for the Truth of the Holy Scriptures,' and a posthumous work on 'Jewish Antiquities,' 1691-1762.

JENNINGS, HENRY CONSTANTINE, a celebrated collector of antiquities and objects of vertu and natural history, author of works connected with religious and philosophical inquiries, 1781-1819.

JENSON, N., a French printer, 1420-1483.

JENYNS, SOAME, a country gentleman, known in the political world as a member of parliament, and partizan of Sir Robert Walpole, and distinguished in literature as one of the most elegant and ingenious writers of his age. Besides poems, essays, and political tracts, he is the author of 'A Free Inquiry into the Nature and Origin of Evil,' published 1757, and 'A View of the Internal Evidence of the Christian Religion,' which became the subject of a considerable controversy, born in London 1704, died 1787.

JEPHSON, R., an Irish dramatist, 1736-1803.

JEPHTHAH, a judge of the Hebrews, 1243-37 B.C.

JEREMIAH, one of the Jewish prophets, 630 B.C.

JEREMIAH, patriarch of Constantinople, 1572.

JERNINGHAM, EDWARD, an English poet and dramatist, author of 'The Rise and Fall of Scandinavian Poetry,' &c., 1727-1812.

JEROBOAM, the first of the name king of Israel, 962-943 B.C. The second, 817-776 B.C.

JEROME, or according to his full Latin name, EUSEBIUS HIERONYMUS SOPHRONIUS, was born of Christian parents at Stridon, a town of Dalmatia, about the year 331. After enjoying high educational advantages under his father, he was sent to Rome to prosecute his studies. On being baptized he made a tour into Gaul, and remained for a few years at Treves, carrying out his likings for Christian and ecclesiastical literature. On leaving Gaul, the probability is that he returned to Rome, and at Aquileia, in 370, he composed his earliest theological essay—the first-born of a numerous progeny. Here also he formed his intimacy with Rufinus, a friend whom afterwards he so heartily abused. In 373 he carried himself, his library, and some friends to the East, passed through Thrace and the other provinces on his line of journey, and on his arrival at Antioch one companion died, and himself was visited with an alarming illness. This malady seems to have darkened his spirit, and deepened his resolution to live in cloistered solitude. Soon after he retired to a desert east of Antioch, and spent four years in ascetic torture, hard literary labour, and self-education. His retreat was at length invaded by controversy, for Meletius and Paulinus fought for the pre-eminence in the church at Antioch, and he espoused the interest of the latter. In 379 he returned to Antioch, and was ordained a presbyter. The next year he visited Constantinople, where for three years he enjoyed the friendship and patronage of Gregory of Nazianzus.

Here he translated the Chronicon of Eusebius, and portions of the works of Origen. The contests at Antioch still raged, and Meletius being dead, Pope Damasus summoned Paulinus and his party to Rome, in order to ascertain the bearings of the quarrel. In the conferences held on the subject, Jerome officiated as secretary, and the pope became so interested in him, that he retained him in the Western capital, and urged him especially to the revision of the Latin version of the Bible. But his passion for a monastic life led him to describe its virtues and glories in such impressive pictures, that the ladies of Rome were filled with his enthusiasm, and so much did the furor spread, that husbands, brothers, and fathers denounced Jerome, and the very populace insulted him. On the death of Damasus, his discretion prompted him to leave Rome, and he returned to the East in 385. There immediately followed him two wealthy devotees, the widow Paula, and her daughter Eustochium. With these ladies and their female attendants, Jerome travelled through the Holy Land, and having visited Egypt, he finally settled at Bethlehem, in 386, where Paula erected four religious establishments, three for nuns, and one for monks. This latter monastery Jerome governed for many years, and spent the remainder of his life in the composition of many religious works. In the great controversies of the period he bore no inactive share. The Pelagians, whom he had so bitterly castigated, were at length tempted to retaliate with secular hostility, and a band of them invaded his retreat, and so endangered his life, that he was obliged to spend two years in secrecy and exile. Safety being restored, he returned in 418 to his cell; but his exhausted nature at length sunk amidst unceasing labours and mortifications, and he died at the age of ninety, on the 30th September, 420.—The life of Jerome was a busy one. He wrote on almost every subject. Biography, history, theology, biblical translations, polemics, and commentaries on a very large portion both of the Old and New Testaments, kept him in incessant toil. His Latin style is pure and terse on the whole. He excelled all his contemporaries in erudition. He wanted the glowing fancy of Chrysostom, and the serene temper and symmetrical intellect of Augustine, but he was beyond them both in critical skill and taste. His faults lie upon the surface; a hot and hasty disposition, which so resented every opposition, and magnified trifles, that in his towering passion, he heaped upon opponents opprobrious epithets and coarse invective. Haste, eagerness, and acerbity, appear also in his letters and expositions. His mode of life must have greatly aggravated this touchiness and irascibility, as it deprived him of the mollifying influence of society and friendship. His heart was estranged from human sympathies; and save when lighted up by the ardours of his indignant passion, it was like his own cell, cold, gloomy, and uninviting. The works of Jerome will always maintain for him the esteem of Christendom. There is in them a great deal that is baseless, fanciful, and one-sided, but very much that is useful and instructive in exegesis and theology. In the Vulgate, the Old Testament was translated by him directly from the Hebrew, and the New Testament is a revision of previous translations. The first of those works, great meritorious as it is, was received with some suspicions, under which the translator was very patient and fretful. The first edition of Jerome's work was that of Erasmus, Basel, 9 vols. f. 1516. The Benedictine edition appeared in 5 folio, 1693-1706. The best edition is that of Larsi, in 11 vols. folio, which originally appeared at Verona, 1736-1742, and was reprinted in quarto at Venice in 1766-72, in 24 parts, unbound in 11 volumes.

JEROME EMILIANI, a Venetian officer in Austrian service, afterw. a rel. founder, 1481-1511.

JEROME OF PRAGUE, an intimate friend of John Huss, and like him a martyr of the truth, said to have copied the writings of Wickliffe at Oxford, and to have studied at the universities of Paris, Heidelberg, and Cologne. His career reformer dates from 1400 to his death at the age of 41 in 1415, and the scenes of his activity were Bohemia, Poland, and Hungary. He was a man of great learning and dignity of manner, and endured his fate so courageously as to excite the admiration of his enemies, who have also testified to the superiority of his character.

JEROME OF SANTA FE, a Spanish Jew, remarkable for his conversion to Christianity, and his writings against the errors of the Jews, 15th c.

JERUSALEM, J. FR. WILLIAM, a German divine, author of 'Letters on the Mosaic Religion and Philosophy,' on 'German Literature,' 1709-1789. The suicide of his son, 'Young Jerusalem,' suggested to Goethe the story of Werther.

JERVAS, CHARLES, an Irish portrait painter, who became fashionable as an artist. He published a translation of Don Quixote; died 1733.

JERVIS, JOHN. See ST. VINCENT.

JESSEY, HENRY, an eminent clergyman, suffered imprisonment at the Restoration for nonconformity. He was a learned Oriental scholar, and distinguished for his biblical knowledge. Minister of St. George's, Southwark, during the Commonwealth; died 1633.

JESUA, LEVITA, a Spanish rabbi, 15th c.

JEUFFROY, R. V., a French gem and engraver, 1749-1826.

JEWEL, JOHN, bishop of Salisbury in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, is distinguished as one of the ablest and most eloquent writers against the Romish Church. His 'Apology for the Church of England' is the work by which he is best known, but he is the author of many controversial treatises, equally learned and judicious, and most of which are rendered agreeable reading by the historical and antiquarian notices dispersed throughout them. The most important of these is the controversy with Dr. Harding, arising out of a sermon preached by Bishop Jewel at St. Paul's Cross, and usually called his 'Challenge Sermon.' The works of this eminent prelate have been recently published by the Parker Society.

JEZZAR or DJEZZAR, a common Manikiee who rose to be pacha of Acre and Saidia. He held the former place, under the direction of Sir Samuel Smith, against the whole force of Napoleon's army, was compelled to raise the siege 21st May, 1800. Jezzar died in 1804.

JOAB, the general of King David, d. 1000 b.c.

JOACHIM, a relig. founder of Spain, 1180-1200.

JOACHIM, GEORGE, a savant of the Tyrol, st known as an astronomer, 1514-1596.

[House of Joan of Arc.]

JOAN OF ARC. The proper name of this roic and pure-hearted woman was JEANNE ARC, and her birth-place the village of Domini, on the borders of Lorraine. Here she first saw the light in 1410, and being the child of poor parents, she was inured to servitude, and acquired an extraordinary skill as an equestrian, which was afterwards so valuable to her, by riding the horses to water. She was piously educated, and when about thirteen years of age—as appears from her own history, which is best collected from the process of her trial at Rouen—she began to have visions, and to be informed of her mission for the deliverance of France. In 1428-9, the forces of all Europe were turned upon the city of Orleans, the siege of which was closely pressed by the English, in alliance with the Burgundians, while Charles VII., despairing of his throne, had assembled the deputies of the French towns still remaining under his government, at Chinon, to deliberate upon their approaching ruin. This was the critical moment chosen by Jeanne Darc, or ways pointed to, as she averred, by her celestial assistants, for the deliverance of her country. She presented herself to Baudricourt, the governor of the neighbouring town of Vaucouleurs, and demanded to be conducted to the French court. His persuasions, and the extreme danger of the journey were urged in vain, and in due course she arrived at Chinon, inspired the phantom of a young man with a share of her own spirit, and was presented to the assembly. The popular enthusiasm rose to the highest pitch when Joan appeared at the head of the troops in armour, her beautiful hair hanging in ringlets upon her shoulders, her soldier's bonnet adorned with white feathers, and the sword of St. Catherine to point the way to victory. In due time, on the 29th of April, 1429, La Pucelle entered the city of Orleans, and finally accomplished the strange passages of her early life by conducting the king to Rheims, where he was crowned in her presence on the 17th of July. Here, according to all that is stated afterwards, her mission was ended, at Dunois, the French commandant, commonly called the bastard of Orleans, persuaded her to remain with the army, as a consequence of which, she was taken prisoner by the English at Compeigne, after performing prodigies of valour, on the 24th of May, 1430. Her trial and condemnation on a charge of sorcery is one of the foulest blots in history, and is to be attributed, not to the English authorities only, but at least in as great a degree to the ecclesiastical party, headed by Pierre Cauchon, the bishop of Beauvais, who had a quarrel with Charles VII., and chose this method to revenge himself. It is pitiable to read in the process of her trial the exquisite mental torture to which this poor girl was subjected—after being bound with iron chains—by a crowd of subtle theologians, who had prepared their questions beforehand, with a view to entrap her into contradictions, in order to sustain the charge of demoniac intercourse. Her answers, however, were wonderfully consistent. She declared that her mission was from God, because she had been prepared for it for years past by celestial agents, the chief of whom were Saint Marguerite and Saint Catherine, who appeared richly clothed, and crowned, and always accompanied with a brilliant light. She called them her holy protectresses. To the question, how they could speak, being pure spirits, without members, she answered she knew not, it was the will of God; she only knew that their voices were sweet, and their language beautiful, their counsel holy! It was again objected that they were mere appearances, without reality: 'Whether they be apparent or real,' said the heroine, 'I have proved them, and I would rather lose my head than deny their being. I am as sure of it,' she added, 'as I am of my faith in Jesus Christ.' She was asked what they advised her in regard to the process: she answered, 'To reply without fear.' 'Whether they hated the English?' She said 'They desired them to return to their own country.' One of her judges tried the purity of her imagination, by asking her if St. Michael had appeared clothed or naked. 'Think you,' she said, 'that God has not the means of clothing his spirits?' Such questions were multiplied and twisted into every variety of form, to disconcert her if possible, but she preserved her dignity and modesty through all, and ended by an admonition addressed to the infamous Cauchon, 'Oui, je suis envoyée de Dieu—yes! my mission is of God! You say that you are my judge. Have a care what you do, for you stand in great danger!' She knew her fate, as she told the earl of Warwick, who visited her in prison, and she was prepared to die whenever God pleased, but she would fain have returned to her father and mother, and kept their flocks again, and her sister and her brothers would have been so glad to see her! She was burnt alive, the virgin-martyr of French liberty, on the 31st of May, 1431, in the twenty-first year of her age, and it is remarkable that her dying predictions in regard to the final expulsion of the English were literally accomplished. Jeanne Darc never shed any blood with her own hand, but rode into the midst of the enemy at the head of her troops, who followed her with unbounded confidence in her supernatural powers. [E.R.]

JOAN OF NAPLES. This accomplished and ill-fated princess was the daughter of Charles, duke of Calabria, and granddaughter of Robert, king of Naples, to whose authority she succeeded in right of her deceased father 1343. In order to unite the claims of the two branches of the house of Anjou, and secure the tranquillity of her reign, King Robert had married her to Andrew, youngest son of Carobert, king of Hungary, when they were both children. The match was not a happy one, either for the princess or her subjects, by whom Andrew, a man of unamiable and gross disposition, was about equally beloved, and a conspiracy being formed against him, he was murdered in 1345. In 1347 the queen married her kinsman Louis of Tarentum, who had been her lover, and was the principal instigator of the conspiracy; and the circumstances led to a war in which Charles III., duke of Durazzo, became a principal actor, and Avignon with its territory was ceded to the pope by Queen Joan. Louis survived these events till 1362, when Joan was married again to James of Arragon, and for a fourth time, in 1376, to Otho of Brunswick. Eventually, Charles of Durazzo usurped the throne of Naples, and caused the queen to be suffocated in 1381. The daughter of Charles, known as JOAN II. of Naples, who succeeded to his ill-gotten power in 1414, and died 1435, was married successively to William, the son of Leopold of Austria (1404-6), and to James, count of La Marche (1415). She was a woman of profligate character, and no redeeming virtues are recorded of her. Joan I., on the other hand, who possessed commanding talents, and governed her dominions with great skill, has had many apologists, and Laharpe has made her history the subject of one of his tragedies. [E.R.]

JOAN, POPE, the subject of a scandalous story which relates that a woman was elected to the papacy under the name of John in the middle of the 9th century, and that she reigned for nearly two years and a-half, when she was taken with labour-pains in the way to the Lateran Basilica, and compelled to discover her sex. It is held by some that the story has been clearly disproved, but even grave historians assert that women of scandalous lives had great influence over the papal councils at that period, and perhaps there are few historical events truer than this story if it be understood by metonymy—one thing being put for another not altogether unlike it. Pope Joan is understood to have been an English woman, and to have acquired her reputation by teaching divinity, disguised in man's clothing. The first to mention this delectable piece of scandal was Marianus Scotus, a monk of the abbey of Fulda, who died in 1086, and a full account of her life, attributed to F. Durant, was published at Geneva, in 1578. Its refutation, if it may be considered such, is due to the learned protestant David Blondel, who displeased the protestants thereby as much as he had gratified them by his book 'De Episcopis et Presbyteris.' In 1785, however, a work was published by Humphrey Shuttleworth, entitled 'A Present for a Papist, or the History of the Life of Pope Joan, proving that a woman called Joan really was Pope of Rome.' See JOHN. [E.R.]

JOANES, VICENTIO, a Sp. painter, 1523-1579.

JOASH, a king of Israel, 832-817 B.C.

JOASHI, a king of Judah, 870-831 B.C.

JOAZAR, high priest of the Jews, 614-630 B.C.

JOBELOT, J. F., a Fr. juriconsult, 1620-1700.

JOBERT, LOUIS, a Fr. antiquarian, 1637-1700.

JOCONDUS, JOHN, an Ital. archit., 16th c.

JOELLE, S., a French dramatist, 1532-1570.

JODRELLE, R. P., an En. dramatist and critic, au. of 'Illustrations of Euripides,' 1745-1831.

JOECHER, C. T., a Ger. historian, 1694-1770.

JOECK, C., a Ger. map engraver, 1763-1809.

JOFFRID, an abbot of Croyland, supposed to be the original founder of Cambr. univer., 12th c.

JOHANNOT, C. H. A., a Ger. pain., 1800-1850.

JOHN, the forerunner of the Saviour, commenced his preaching to the Jews and baptizing 2 and was executed by Herod Antipas, 32.

JOHN, the apostle and evangelist, commenced preaching the gospel, shortly after the crucifixion in Asia Minor and among the Parthians. He was the first bishop of Ephesus, and the writer of the gospel kn. by his name and of the Apocal., d. 90.

JOHN, the first saint of the name, commonly called CLIMACHUS or SCHOLASTICUS, was abbot of the monastery of Mount Sinai, and lived from 5th to the early part of the next century. Another JOHN was patriarch of Alexandria, and lived about 550-619. A third was a native of Provence and founder of a monastic order, 1161-1218.

JOHN, fourth, surnamed 'De Dieu,' was a native of Portugal, and celebrated as a founder of charitable institutes, 1495-1550. A fifth, commonly called John De Santa Crusa, or John De Yopez, known as the associate of St. Theresa in reforming the Carmelites, 1542-1591. And besides these, the first pope of this name.

JOHN, the name of several ecclesiastics and prelates, the most celebrated of whom are—JOHN SCHOLASTICUS, patriarch of Antioch, a compiler of canons, &c., died 578. JOHN OF SALISBURY, bishop of Chartres in 1164, author of a life of Becket, died 1182. JOHN OF PARIS, a learned Dominican and theological writer, died 1306. JOHN OF RAGUSA, a popish prelate, known as a public character and disputant against the Hussites, about 1426-1443. JOHN DE CHELIN, popish bishop and reformer, 16th century. A JOHN, bishop of Chiemeese in Bavaria, author of 'Onus Ecclesiae,' same period.

JOHN I., elected pope 523, and sent ambassador to Constantinople by Theodoric, the Arian king of Italy, after which he was imprisoned and died in confinement, 526. JOHN II., reigned 533-548. JOHN III., 560-573. JOHN IV., 640-642. JOHN V., 685-686. JOHN VI., 701-705. JOHN VII., 705-707. JOHN VIII., author of many letters which are still preserved, 872-882. JOHN IX., 898-900. JOHN X., distinguished as a military leader by the conquest of the Saracens in Italy, elected 914 or 915, imprisoned and put to death 928. JOHN XI., elected at the age of twenty-five, 931, died in prison 933. JOHN XII., born 928, elected 956, deposed on account of his debauchery, 963, died 964. JOHN XIII., reigned 965-972. JOHN XIV., succeeded 964, died in prison 978. JOHN XV., elected and died 985. JOHN XVI., succeeded 986, and died, after a pontificate of 6 years, disturbed by the pretensions of Crescentius who proclaimed himself consul, 996. JOHN XVII., elected and died 1003. JOHN XVIII., reigned, as nearly as can be ascertained, 1004-1009. JOHN XIX., 1024-1033. JOHN XX., or XX.

ceeded 1276, and died by an accident 1277.
 IN XXII., author of works on medicine and ymy, reigned 1316-1334. JOHN XXIII., ted 1410, deposed 1415, died 1419. An pope, named JOHN XVII., was inhumanly rdered, 998; and Pope Joan, whose story is sidered fabulous, is sometimes called JOHN IX.
 OHN, king of England, youngest son of Henry born 1166, succeeded his brother Richard ur De Leon, and is supposed to have murdered ace Arthur, 1199; invaded France 1214, signed great charter 1215, died 1216.

OHN, king of France, the first of the name, sthumous son of Louis X., born and died 1316.
 IN II., son of Philip V., born 1319, succeeded 0, taken prisoner by the Black Prince at the ous battle of Poitiers 1356, died 1364.

OHN, king of Jerusalem, and regent em-or of Constantinople during the minority of win II., flourished 1204-1237.

OHN I., emperor of the East, surnamed isces, succeeded 969, poisoned 975. JOHN MMENUS) II., son of Alexis Comnenus, born 8, succeeded 1118, and died after a glorious n, 1143. JOHN (DUCAS) III., surnamed Vas, born 1193, succeeded 1222, died after a n of thirty-three years, distinguished by his quests and good government, 1255. JOHN

See LASCARIS. JOHN V. See CANTACU-US. JOHN VI. and VII. See PALÆOLOGUS.
 OHN I., king of Castile and Leon, born 1358, eeded his father Henry II. 1379, died 1390.
 IN II., born 1405, succeeded his father Henry 1406, died 1454.

OHN I., king of Portugal, born 1357, usurped throne 1384, died 1433. JOHN II., born 1455, eeded 1481, died 1495. JOHN III., succeeded
 I, died 1557. JOHN IV., chief of the house raganza, born 1604, delivered his country from Spaniards and proclaimed king 1640, died
 3. JOHN V., born 1689, succeeded 1705, 1750. JOHN VI., born 1767, became regent onsequence of the mental incapacity of his ber, the queen regent, 1793, returned to ail, and took the title of emperor on the invaof the French, 1808, succeeded his mother
 3, returned to Portugal 1821, died 1826.

OHN I., king of Sweden, called JOHN SVERson, reigned 1216-1222. JOHN II., same as a, king of Denmark. JOHN III., born 1537, eeded 1568, abdicated 1592.

OHN, king of Denmark, born 1455, succeeded father, Christian I., 1481, king of Norway k, king of Sweden 1497, dethroned by the des 1512, died 1513.

JOHN ALBERT, k. of Poland, reig. 1492-1496.

JOHN OF AUSTRIA, a natural son of the em-per Charles V., distinguished in the service of p II. of Spain at the bat. of Lepanto, 1546-78.

JOHN OF GAUNT, or GHENT, du. of Lancaster, son of Edward III., and father of Henry IV., of England, born at Ghent 1340, died 1399 prince greatly distinguished himself in the ch wars, and acquired great popularity in Engas the patron of Wickliffe. See LANCASTER.

JOHN HIRCANAS, son of Simon Maccabæus, a he succeeded as high priest and prince of ewa, B.C. 135, died, after a reign of 29 years, ughished by his victories and reforms, B.C. 106.

JOHN OF PISA, a dis. architect, 13th century.
 JOHN OF UDINO, an Italian painter, d. 1564.
 JOHNES, THOMAS, a gentleman of Shropshire, distin. as a man of taste and letters, 1748-1816.
 JOHNSON, CH., a dramatic wr., died 1748.
 JOHNSON, JOHN, one of the nonjuring divs., known as a learned and religious wr., 1662-1725.
 JOHNSON, M., a painter, reign of James II.
 JOHNSON, M., an antiquarian, died 1755.
 JOHNSON, R., a grammarian, died 1720.

[Birth-place of Samuel Johnson.]

JOHNSON, SAMUEL, the son of a bookseller, was born at Lichfield in 1709. Beginning his studies at Oxford in 1728, he was obliged by poverty to retire after three years without taking a degree.
 He became successively, an usher in Leicestershire, the drudge of a bookseller in Birmingham, and the head of a school established with some money he acquired by marrying, in 1736, a widow who was much older than himself, but to whom he was sincerely attached. The school speedily failed; and, in 1737, removing to London, Johnson entered on his long course of literary toil. His reputation rose very slowly: the greater part of his time was wasted, for many years, on desultory and occasional efforts; he had an unhealthy constitution, and a strong tendency to hypochondriac melancholy. For the twenty-five years during which he struggled for a livelihood, he had no leisure either for systematizing his knowledge, or for concentrating his thoughts; and when, at length, he obtained a small competency, he was already fifty-three years of age, with decayed strength and soured temper, and with a weariness of labour which made him too glad to enjoy in indolent repose the fame he had so hardly won. The works which, in these adverse circumstances, Johnson produced, were celebrated beyond measure in the latter half of his century; and, though they add disappointingly little to our stock either of solid knowledge or of literary invention, they are extraordinary monuments both of vigour and originality in thinking, and of great though ponderous power of expression.—During his long period of hard labour, the mere quantity of his writings was very great. A large proportion of them appeared in

'The Gentleman's Magazine' or as pamphlets; and most of these are quite forgotten. His two poetical satires, 'London,' and 'The Vanity of Human Wishes,' are striking specimens of reflection and diction; but neither they nor his tragedy of 'Irene' entitle him to be considered as a poet. 'Rasselas,' written in a week to pay for his mother's funeral, is one of the most interesting and characteristic of his works. His two sets of periodical essays, 'The Rambler' and 'The Idler,' are in no respect comparable to their models of Queen Anne's time. For eight years from 1747, Johnson's attention was chiefly engaged by his 'Dictionary of the English Language,' a work highly honourable to the author in the circumstances in which it was produced, but possessing little of real philological value.—In 1762, after having, though a devoutly religious man, refused to take orders, Johnson obtained, through Lord Bute, a pension of three hundred a-year. Not long afterwards he was received into the house of Mr. Thrale. He was thenceforth the dictator of a large society of accomplished persons, and the acknowledged chief of the literature of his day. In 1765 appeared his edition of Shakspeare, the preface to which, with all its shortcomings, is a very fine and instructive contribution to the philosophy of poetical art; his 'Journey to the Hebrides,' the liveliest of his writings, was published in 1775; and his 'Lives of the Poets,' the last of his works, appearing in 1781, is remarkable alike for its impressive composition, and for its mixture of valuable truth and strong prejudice in criticism. Johnson died in 1784, at his famous house in Bolt-Court. In 1790, his reputation was revived and extended by Boswell's 'Life.' This curious collection of sayings, the most minute record that was ever taken down from any man's lips, is now generally held to convey a more favourable impression of his real strength, both in thought and in language, than anything in the works which he wrote and published. [W.S.]

JOHNSON, SAMUEL, a learned divine, famous for his zeal against popery, in the reign of James II., for which he underwent many penalties and cruel personal suffering; author of 'Julian the Apostate,' &c., 1649-1703.

JOHNSON, SAMUEL, a dramatic writer and actor, au. of 'All Alive and Merry,' &c., d. 1773.

JOHNSON, T., an eminent herbalist, d. 1644.

JOHNSON, T., a classical editor, last century.

JOHNSON, SIR W., an Irish officer, d. 1774.

JOHNSON, ARTHUR, a Scotch physician, distinguished as a Latin poet, author of 'Delicia Poetarum Scoticorum,' &c., 1587-1641.

JOHNSTON, C., an Irish wr., au. of 'Chrysal, or the Adventures of a Guinea,' died about 1800.

JOHNSTON, JOHN, a physician of Poland, distin. as a naturalist and historian, 1603-1675.

JOHNSTONE, BRYCE, D.D., a Scottish divine, author of a 'Commentary on the Revelation,' 1747-1805. His nephew, JOHN, a Scottish min., and ed. of Dr. Johnstone's Sermons, 1757-1820.

JOHNSTONE, CHEVALIER DE, a military adventurer in the service of Charles Edward the Pretender, au. of 'Mem. of the Rebellion,' b. 1720.

JOHNSTONE, G., a member of parliament, and political agent of the English government, author of 'Thoughts on our E. Ind. Acquisitions,' d. 1787.

JOHNSTONE, JAMES, a Scottish physician and physiological inquirer, 1730-1802. His son JOHN, a med. wr., and biogr. of Dr. Parr, d. 1833.

JOHNSTONE, J. H., an Ir. actor, 1750-1828.

JOINVILLE, JOHN, Sieur De, a Fr. historian whose 'Life of St. Louis' is one of the most valuable documents of the middle ages, 1228-1318.

JOLIVET, JEAN BAPTISTE MOYSE, Count, a French statistician and financier, 1754-1848.

JOLLY, ALEX., a Scotch prelate, 1755-1833.

JOLY, CLAUDE, a Fr. writer, au. of 'Maxims for the Education of a Prince,' 1607-1700.

JOLY, CLAUDE, a Fr. rel. writer, 1610-1678.

JOLY, GUY, the confidential secretary and biographer of Cardinal De Retz, 17th century.

JOLY, J., a Fr. poet and translator, d. 1840.

JOLY, J. R., a French historian, 1715-1805.

JOLY, M. A., a Fr. comic writer, 1672-1758.

JOLY, M. E., a French actress, 1761-1798.

JOLY, PH. L., a Fr. lexicographer, 1680-1758.

JOLY-CLERC, N., a Fr. naturalist, died 1817.

JOLY-DE-BEVY, LOUIS PH. JOSEPH, a Fr. lawyer and theologian, author of 'Le Parlement Outrage,' 1736-1822.

JOLY-DE-FLEURY, W. F., a French jurisprocureur-général after D'Aguissan, 1675-1756.

JOMELLI, NICOLÒ, a celebrated composer and musician of Naples, 1714-1774.

JON-ARESON, an Icelandic poet, 1484-1550.

JONE or JONAS, RUNOLPH, an Icelandic scholar, author of philological works, died 1654.

JONAS, a Jewish prophet, died about 761 B.C.

JONAS, ARNGRIM, a learned historian and antiquarian of Ireland, 1545-1640.

JONATHAN, a high priest and leader of the Jews, dist. in the war with Syria, killed 144 B.C.

JONES, DAVID, a Welch poet, died abt. 1780.

JONES, EDWARD, a Welch musician, d. 1821.

JONES, GEORGE MATTHEW, a naval officer au. of 'Travels in Norway, Sweden,' &c., d. 1833.

JONES, GRIFFITH, a Welch minister, distinguished by his zeal for religion and education, 1684-1761.

JONES, GRIFFITH, a miscel. writer, connected with Dr. Johnson and Goldsmith, 1721-1786.

JONES, HENRY, an Irish dramatist, d. 1770.

JONES, INIGO, was born in London about 1572. He was patronised in early youth by William earl of Pembroke, who is supposed to have sent him to Italy to study landscape painting: he took up architecture later, about 1600 after his return. The little attention he paid to this art in his first visit to Italy is shown by Crewe Hall, Cheshire, positively attributed to Jones, and St. John's College, Oxford, or the Grotto at Wilton; the first in what is called the Elizabethan style, and the latter, abortive attempt at the classical. The Elizabethan, a modification of the Renaissance imported from the Low Countries, supplanted the Tudor in England, the last remains of ecclesiastical style, which had become generally obnoxious after the persecutions against all such religious expressions by the Regent Somerset, and after the fires of Smithfield yet in the comparatively distant times of Inigo Jones, attempts at the Gothic were rare from indifference or neglect, rather than from any religious animosity.—Jones was himself the great pioneer to the revival of classical taste in this country, which was thoroughly established by George Jones.

David Hume.

*Thomas Howard,
Earl of Arundel.*

Philip Herbert, Earl of Pembroke.

Christopher Wren, though both committed the most inconsistencies of style in their own restorations of old buildings.—Jones visited Italy a second time in 1613-14, and on this occasion went to have completely mastered the principles of the Italian Renaissance, as exemplified in the buildings of Palladio and others, of which in Whitehall Banqueting House we have a noble monument of his own production, but yet only a small fraction of the magnificent palace, which report gives to Jones I. the credit of having wished to carry out the opportunity afforded: the whole design of this royal palace may be seen in several sheets in Raynolds's 'Vitruvius Britannicus;' it was to have had seven courts, and its extreme dimensions were to have been 1,152 feet by 720 feet; a scale of magnificence which perhaps may be termed necessary, in spite of the experience of any age, and the time of the Roman emperors. The building at Whitehall was executed in the reign of Charles I., 1619-21; he was surveyor of works, and he was appointed about the same time to restore the old St. Paul's Cathedral, to which old Norman and Gothic structure he added some years afterwards (1639) a Corinthian portico and other Renaissance features, the whole of which, however, was destroyed in consequence of the great fire of 1666. Jones was but little more fortunate in St. Peter's, Covent Garden; this absurdly overrated structure, little better than a barn as regards any ornamental feature, was built for the earl of Bedford in 1631, and was destroyed by fire in 1794, but was faithfully restored by Hardwick in the following year: it is valuable as an example of extreme simplicity and agreeable proportions. Greenwich Hospital is another, and one of his most successful works, erected by his nephew and son-in-law, Webb.—Jones died in London in 1682, aged eighty. Webb, who married his only daughter, published some of his designs; and a complete edition of his works was published by Kent, 1770. Jones's copy of 'Palladio,' with which he travelled into Italy, and containing his own marginal notes, is still preserved in Worcester College, Oxford.—(Noble, Anecdotes of Painters, &c., Bohn, 1836.) [R.N.W.]

JONES, JEREMIAH, a learned div., 1693-1724.

JONES, JOHN, an English divine, last century.

JONES, JOHN, a medical writer, 16th century.

JONES, JOHN, a Hebrew scholar, 1575-1636.

JONES, JOHN, an American phys., 1729-1791.

JONES, JOHN, LL.D., a philological writer, a minister of the unitarians, died 1827.

JONES, JOHN GALE, a celebrated political character of the period of the French revolution, distinguished as a leading member of the London Corresponding Society, 1771-1838.

JONES, JOHN, a Welsh lawyer and man of letters, au. of a 'History of Wales,' &c., 1772-1838.

JONES, JOHN, a Welsh antiqu., 16th and 17th c.

JONES, LESLIE GROVE, aid-de-camp of the duke of Wellington in the peninsular war, and commandant of Brussels during the battle of Waterloo, afterw. kn. as a poli. writer, 1779-1839.

JONES, OWEN, a Welsh antiquary, 1740-1814.

JONES, PAUL, a naval commander in the interest of the colonists during the American war of independence, was born at Selkirk, in Scotland, 1736, and died in poverty at Paris, 1792. He was a man of dauntless courage, and great ability as a sea captain, and was for a long period the terror of the coasts of Great Britain and Ireland. His principal action was a combat off Flamborough head with the convoy of the Baltic fleet in 1779, in which he proved the victor, and captured the two frigates opposed to him. He was complimented for his success on this occasion by an invitation to Paris, where the cross of military merit and a sword of honour were presented to him by the king. The congress of the United States also voted him a golden medal for his services during the struggle for independence, but though his valour merited such an acknowledgment, it is difficult to find any trace of republican virtue in his conduct, unless an intense hatred of the English be esteemed such. At the conclusion of the war he entered into the service of the Russians, and retiring in disgust solicited a command from Austria and France, which, however, he did not obtain. 'Full of vanity,' says a French writer, 'he believed that only a king was worthy of such an admiral!' His career is at once an example and a warning, for it points to the unhonoured grave which awaits all those, whatever their present reputation and talents, who are led by their selfish passions, instead of principle, even in the path of glory. Paul Jones had neither the wisdom nor the ambition to adopt the country that he had so well served, and instead of the Washington of the seas, it is difficult to regard him in any other light than that of a bold buccaneer. [E.R.]

JONES, RICE, a Welch poet, 1715-1801.

JONES, THOMAS, a Welch divine, 1756-1807.

JONES, WILLIAM, an em. mathe., 1680-1749.

JONES, WILLIAM, commonly called 'Trinity Jones,' or 'Jones of Nayland,' and well known for his public spirit and ability as a writer, was a clergyman of the Church of England, born at Lowick, in Northamptonshire, 1726, and appointed perpetual curate of Nayland, in Suffolk, where he went to reside about 1776. He was the intimate friend and biographer of Bishop Horne, to whom in early life he had presented the doctrines of John Hutchinson, of which they were both distinguished advocates. His works are—'A Full Answer to Bishop Clayton's Essay on Spirit,' 1753; 'The Catholic Doctrine of the Trinity Proved from Scripture,' 1757; 'An Essay on the First Principles of Natural Philosophy,' 1762; 'Remarks on the Confessional,' 1764; 'Physiological Disquisitions, or Discourses concerning the Natural Philosophy of the Elements,' 1781; 'A Course of Lectures on the Figurative Language of the Holy Scripture,' 1787; and, when the French revolution broke out, a series of tracts well known by their title of 'The Scholar Armed against the Errors of the Times;' and 'A Letter from Thomas Bull to his brother John,' written in support of government. His 'Memoirs of Bishop Horne,' to whom he became private chaplain after his elevation to the see of Norwich, were published in 1795, with an introductory exposition of the theological and philosophical doctrines of Hutchinson. Jones of Nayland was the original projector of the British Critic; and besides his literary endowments was a great proficient in church music. He died in 1800. [E.R.]

JONES, SIR WILLIAM, whose researches in Oriental literature, and his surpassing genius as a translator from the Eastern languages, have rendered his name illustrious throughout Europe, was born in London, 1746, son of Mr. William Jones, an eminent mathematician, and devoted himself to the study of the Oriental languages while a student at Oxford. When twenty-four years of age, he translated the life of Nadir Shah from the Persian into French, and, in 1771, published a grammar of the Persian language, which still maintains its ground as a work of standard value. Between this period and 1783, when he received an appointment as judge in the supreme court of judicature in Bengal, this laborious student published his commentaries on Asiatic poetry, written in Latin; and we may here remark, that it is difficult to say whether his fine taste for poetical composition, or his extensive learning and philosophical insight, is the more admirable characteristic of his genius. On his arrival in India, he established an Asiatic Society for the purpose of collecting materials to illustrate the history, learning, and antiquities of the East; and as he succeeded in rallying the learned around him, the publication of their transactions commenced almost immediately. He died suddenly in the heat of this career, so new to English learning, in 1794; and his collected works, with a life by Lord Teignmouth, have since been published in an edition of 13 volumes 8vo. To Sir William Jones belongs the merit of a great originator, as well as that of an unrivalled linguist. Until his appearance, and the impetus given by him to the study of Asiatic literature, the English scholar might well blush for the little that had been achieved in that direction by our own countrymen. The encouragement, indeed, has been miserably small, compared with the necessities of the case; and, at this moment, the officers of the Asiatic Society can tell us what volumes of invaluable matter must remain buried in obscurity, even on their own shelves, for want of funds. We ought to add, that Sir William Jones was an accomplished lawyer, a warm lover of freedom, and, as an Indian judge, indefatigable and irreproachable. [E.R.]

JONGE, L. DE, a Dutch painter, 1616-1697.

JONGE, N., a Danish geographer, born 1727.

JONIN, G., a French poet, 1596-1638.

JONSIUS, JOHN, a German savant, 1624-1659.

JONSON, BENJAMIN, was born at Westminster in 1573. His father, a Scotsman by descent, dying in his boyhood, the widow married a bricklayer; and Ben Jonson is said to have been taken from Westminster school and obliged to work at his stepfather's trade. We read also of his having enlisted as a soldier, and served in the Low Countries. On the other hand, the obscure accounts we have of his youth represent him as having studied both at Oxford and at Cambridge; and it is certain that, in one way or another, he had obtained a good education, and was especially a ripe and exact Latin scholar. He cannot have been much older than twenty, when, like so many men of genius in the later part of Elizabeth's reign, he attached himself to the theatres. He became an actor, but was a bad one; and his life was chiefly spent in play-writing, amidst the fluctuations of success incident to that pursuit, and the alternations of poverty with something little better, which made up the history of almost every one of our dramatists. But his fame stood very high in his own time. In the most brilliant period of Shakespeare's career, Ben Jonson was the only man who contested the palm with him; and, in the whole history of the Old English drama, none but

[The Globe Theatre]

Beaumont and Fletcher come nearer, or so near, to the excellence of the great master. He is vigorous, not graceful, a skilful and reflective artist rather than an impulsive or imaginative poet; but there is great force in his comic pictures of character, and a striking pomp of eloquence in his tragic dialogue.—In 1598, he exhibited his first successful piece, the prose comedy of 'Every Man in His Humour;' after several other plays, his dignified tragedy of 'Sejanus' appeared in 1603; 'Volpone a comedy in blank verse, abounding both in eloquence and poetry, was played in 1605; in 1605 came 'The Silent Woman,' a comedy constructed with great regularity and admirable skill; and the roll of his good plays was closed in 1610, by the lively and energetic comedy 'The Alchemist.' In 1619, he was appointed poet-laureate. But his later years were spent in poverty; and his natural gloominess of temper was aggravated both by the failure of his popularity and by ill-health. He died in 1637, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. His uncompleted 'Sad Shepherd,' a pastoral drama, and many of his lyrics, show a delicacy both of poetical feeling and of diction, beyond anything that appears in his other works; and his learning, especially in philology, is proved by several prose dissertations. [W.S.]

JORAM, a king of Israel, 887-876 B.C.

JORDENS, J., a distin. Flemish painter, pupil of Adam Van Vort and Reubens, au. of many works in the churches in the Netherlands, 1594-1678.

JORDAN, CAMILLE, a political orator and statesman of the French revolution, and member of the chamber during the hundred days, 1771-1821.

JORDAN, C. S., a Prussian writer, 1700-1746.

JORDAN, DOROTHEA, an eminent English actress, born in the neighbourhood of Waterford 1762, was the daughter of Captain Bland, an Irish gentleman. She adopted the stage for a profession as the means of support for her mother, a lady of Wales, with whom her father had eloped. She first appeared at Dublin in the character of Phoebe in 'As You Like It;' and afterwards gained con-le reputation as a juvenile tragedian. Her next engagement was at the York theatre; where she remained for three years, and took the name of Mrs. Jordan, though never married, by which name she was thenceforward known. Her débüt in London was in the part of Peggy, in 'The Country Girl,' in which, and in Nell in 'The Devil's Pay,' she proved equally successful. Her business was now fixed; but she also occasionally appeared in the pathetic characters of Prig. Her celebrity betrayed her into an acquaintance with a royal duke, with whom she for some time resided in great splendour; but (such is the uncertainty of such connections) she died at London, (died, 5th July, 1816, in poverty and obscurity, notwithstanding a long and brilliant theatrical career.) The circumstances attending her seclusion are mysterious, and are not cleared up by Mr. Madden's biography, notwithstanding the means of information possessed by him. The impression left upon the mind by his narrative is, that Mrs. Jordan did not die at the first time stated; but lived probably under another name in England for seven years longer; after which, a liquidation of her debts was publicly advertised. Be this as it may, her theatrical career was one of the most illustrious; and her example that natural sort which commands the approbation of the best judges. As a woman, too, her life seems to have been of the kindest, and her domestic duties have been performed with extraordinary attention and devotion to the best interests of her family. [J.A.H.]

JORDAN, J. C., a Bohemian scholar, d. 1740.

JORDAN, SIR JOSEPH, an English admiral, and a victory over the Dutch, 1672.

JORDAN, T., a dramatic wr., time of Charles I.

JORDANO. See GIORDANO.

JORDEN, E., an English chemist, 1569-1632.

JORDENS, G., a Dutch juriconsult, last cent.

JORDANDES, a Gothic historian, 6th cent.

JORTIN, DR. JOHN, flourished about the middle of last century, having been born in 1698, and died 1770. He, and his patron Archbishop Herring, are fair exponents of the learning and doctrine of the Church of England, and of the spirit by which it was animated at that time. Jortin was rector of St. Dunstan's in the East, and afterwards of Kensington, near Chelsea. He is the author of 'Discourses Concerning the Truth of the Christian Religion,' 'Remarks upon Ecclesiastical History,' 'Remarks upon the works of Erasmus,' 'Miscellaneous Observations upon Authors, Ancient and Modern,' various other criticisms and learned tracts. His private character was most estimable; and his public life marked in a high degree by independence and integrity. This is saying a good deal of a minister of the Church of England in an age of compromise and difficulty, and such, it is well known, was the first generation or two which witnessed the revolution of 1688. [E.R.]

JOSEPH, son of Jac. and Rachel, 2113-2003 B.C.

JOSEPH I., emperor of Germany, born 1676, died Hungary 1689, king of the Romans 1690, succeeded his father, Leopold I., as emperor, 1705, died 1711. JOSEPH II., son of the emperor, Leopold I., and of Maria Theresa, born 1741, king of the Romans 1764, emperor after the death of his father 1765, but did not really govern until the death of Maria Theresa, when he became king of Hungary and Bohemia, 1780, died 1790. JOSEPH II. was the brother of Marie Antoinette, and was remarkable for his ambition and activity as a reformer and statesman.

JOSEPH, or JOSEPH EMMANUEL, king of Portugal, born 1714, suc. his father, 1750, d. 1777.

JOSEPH-ALBO, a Spanish rabbi, 15th cent.

JOSEPH OF EXETER, a Latin poet who accompanied Richard I. to Palestine, au. of heroic poems on the Trojan war and the crusades, 12th c.

JOSEPH, MEIR, an Italian rabbi, 1496-1554.

JOSEPH OF PARIS, or FATHER JOSEPH, whose proper name was FRANCIS LE CLERC DU TREMBLAY, an agent of Cardinal Richelieu, 1577-1638.

JOSEPHINE, first wife of Napoleon Buonaparte, and empress of the French, was by birth a creole, and was born at Martinique, 1763. Her maiden name was MARIE JOSEPH ROSE TACHER-DE-LA-PAGERIE, which she exchanged for that of Madame de Beauharnais, when she married the viscount of that name at the age of fourteen, for which purpose she was brought to France by her father, in terms of a previous betrothal. As the pretended memoirs of her life cannot be trusted, we omit the scandal connected with her residence at the court of Marie Antoinette, and simply record the fact that she became the mother of two children, Eugene and Hortense—the latter of whom became queen of Holland. In 1787, her mother then suffering from illness, she returned to Martinique, and remained in the island till her safety was threatened by the insurrection, three years later, when she escaped to France, and rejoining her husband, who was a chief of the constitutionalists, made her house the rendezvous of the politicians and men of letters belonging to his party. The viscount de Beauharnais was executed under the ascendancy of Robespierre in 1794; and Josephine, saved with difficulty by Tallien, met Napoleon soon afterwards at the house of Barras, and was married to him in 1796. From that period till her divorce in 1809, her history is identified with the emperor's, not only personally but politically. Passionately devoted to him as a man, his glory as a sovereign was also dearer to her than her own happiness, and the unbounded influence she exercised over him was never abused, as Napoleon himself acknowledged, by a word of bad counsel. It had been predicted twice over, at Martinique and in France, that Josephine would be queen; and as stormy scenes would sometimes occur between her and the emperor, she has been heard to exclaim, 'They speak of your star, but it is my star that rules these events!' And, in fact, Buonaparte was greatly indebted to her political talents and her fascinating manners, if not for his elevation to the throne, at least for his welcome among the influential circles of Parisian society. Her divorce was urged by the family of Napoleon, and by such statesmen as Fouché and Talleyrand, for the sake of an heir to the throne and the consolidation of the new dynasty; and, when resolved upon, Josephine meekly retired to Malmaison, and was succeeded by the Austrian bride of her husband. She saw the emperor for the last time in January, 1814; on the 4th of April he abdicated, and, on the 29th of the month following, Josephine breathed her last in the arms of her children. Like her husband, she was born for empire; and he, however blinded by dynastic ambition, must have lived to feel that her divorce was as mistaken in policy as it was indefensible in principle, and cruel in the execution. It is singular, and only poetical justice to add, that Josephine, after all, should have given an heir to Napoleon in the person of her grandson, the present emperor, Louis Napoleon. [E.R.]

JOSEPHUS, FLAVIUS, the historian of the Jews, descended, on his father's side, from the high priests of his nation, and, on his mother's from the Asmonean princes, was born at Jerusalem in the year 37. He was remarkable from boyhood for the promise of those high qualities which he afterwards displayed as a commander and man of letters; and after studying in every school of learning, submitting himself to the initiation of the Essenes, and even mortifying his flesh in the desert, he attached himself to the Pharisees, and acquired a high reputation among them for his prudence and wisdom. After a visit to Rome at the age of twenty-six, to intercede for some of his countrymen who had been condemned by Felix, he was appointed commissioner from Jerusalem to the disturbed district of Galilee, and shortly after became its governor. Unable to prevent the internal dissensions which prevailed among the Jews from ripening into a revolt against the Romans, Josephus reluctantly undertook the conduct of a war of which he foresaw the issue, and for forty-seven days defended Jotapata against the whole force of Vespasian and Titus. After the fall of the city, Josephus saved his life by a stratagem worthy of Machiavel, and saluted his conquerors as the future masters of the world,—the issue of the war, and the elevation of Vespasian and Titus, he avers, having been shown to him in dreams. He accompanied Titus to the siege of Jerusalem, and endeavoured to act as mediator, but was repulsed by his countrymen as a traitor. Finally, he lived in honour at Rome, and is supposed to have died about the year 95. The works of Josephus are his 'Jewish Antiquities,' the defence of his history 'Against Appion,' 'The Martyrdom of the Maccabees,' and his noble 'History of the Jewish Wars,' which is that of an eye-witness of all he relates. Besides these, which are among the most interesting and valuable remains of antiquity, he wrote his own 'Life,' the public portion of which is further amplified in the 'Wars.' We learn from the former that he was thrice married, first, at the instance of Vespasian, to a captive virgin, who soon afterwards left him; second, to a lady of Alexandria, whom, he says, 'I forsook, because her manners pleased me not, although she was the mother of my three children!' and, thirdly, to a native of Candy, 'endowed with as laudable manners as any other woman whatsoever.' Opinions differ as to the reliability of some things that Josephus relates, but in matters personal, his disclosures are as candid as they are edifying. The politic shrewdness of Jacob, the learning of the ancient priesthood, and the valour of his ancestors, the Maccabees, were all united in him. It is no slight proof of his worldly wisdom, that he survived the destruction of his people, the last unexceptionable Jew of the whole race. [E.R.]

JOSEPIN, a painter of Naples, 1560-1640.

JOSHUA, the successor of Moses as chief and leader of the Jews, abt. 1534-1424

JOSI, HENRY, a connoisseur in art, late keeper of the prints in the British Museum, 1802-18

JOSIAH, a king of Judah, 639-608 B.C.

JOSQUIN-DEPROZ, a Flem. musician, 16

JOUBERT, BARTHOLOMEW CATHARIN, general of the French republic, born 1769, killed at the battle of Novi when fighting against the Russians under Suwarrow, 1799.

JOUBERT, F., a learned Fr. priest, 1689

JOUBERT, L., a Fr. med. writer, 1529-15

JOUFFROY, J. DE., a Fr. cardinal, d. 14

JOUFFROY, THEODORE S., a Fr. philosopher, translator of Reid and Dugald Stewart, and author of 'Leçons sur le Droit Naturel,' 1796-18

JOUFFROY D'ABBANS, CL. F. D., Marquis de, a French mechanician and capt. of infantry to whom the Academy of Sciences has awarded the honour of having first applied steam to navigation, contrary to the received opinion in England and America in favour of Fulton, 1751-18

JOUIN, A., a Jansenist and poet, 1684-17

JOURDAIN, ALPHONSE, count of Toulouse, and founder of the city of Montauban, 1103-18

JOURDAIN, AMABLE L. M. MICHEL BRÉLLET, a French dentist, afterwards an Oratorian scholar, author of 'Tableau de L'Histoire du Gouvernement, de la Religion, et de la Littérature de la Perse,' 1788-1818.

JOURDAIN, F. C., a Fr. archæol., 1690-18

JOURDAN, A. J. L., a Fr. jurist, 1791-18

JOURDAN, JEAN BAPTISTE, a general of the French revolution, born 1762, appointed general of division 1793, general-in-chief of the army of Italy, and marshal of France, 1803-1804, lost the battle of Vittoria, fought in support of Jos. Buonaparte, 1813, gov. of the 'Invalides,' 1830, d. 18

JOURDAN, MATHIEU JOUVE, commonly called 'JOURDAN COUPE TÊTE,' a monster in human shape, who became a leader of brigandage, murdering during the French revolution, and exercising supreme power at Avignon till the arrival of the republican forces under Choisey and Dumas, 1791, executed 1794.

JOUSSE, DANIEL, a Fr. lawyer and mathematician, au. of 'Traité de la Sphere,' &c., 1704

JOUVANCY, J., a Jesuit hist., 1643-1690

JOUVENET, J., a French painter, 1644-18

JOVELLANOS, GASPARD MELCHIOR, distinguished literary savant, statesman, and dramatic poet of Spain, born 1744, minister of justice 1799, killed in an insurrection, 1812.

JOVIANUS, FLAVIUS CLAUDIUS, born 260, succeeded Julian the Apostate as emperor of Rome, and restored Christianity 363, died 364.

JOVINIAN, an Italian reformer, 14th cent.

JOVINUS, a native of Gaul, consul of Rome 367-370. His grandson, of the same name, obtained the title of emperor 411, killed 412.

JOVIUS, PAUL, an Italian hist., 1483-1550

JOY, RT. HON. H., an Irish judge, 1767-18

JOY, JOYE, or GEE, JOHN, a biblical scholar, dist. as a promoter of the reformation, d. 1550

JOYCE, J., a miscel. writer, 1764-1816.

JOYNER, W., an English poet, 1622-1706

JUAN OF AUSTRIA. See JOHN OF AUSTRIA

JUAN OF AUSTRIA, a natural son of Philip IV., king of Spain, dist. as a general, 1629-16

JUAN Y SANTACILIA, DON GEORGE, or DON JORGE JUAN, a Spanish mathematician and engineer, 1712-1774.

JUBA, the first of the name, king of Numidia, succeeded his father Hiempsel, B.C. 50, joined Sulpicius and Cato against Cæsar 49, died by his own hand when the cause was lost by the defeat of Hiempsel, B.C. 46. The second of the name, second successor of the preceding, was led a captive to Cæsar's triumph, but afterwards made king of Mauritania, and married to the daughter of Cleopatra and Antony. He distinguished himself as a naturalist, historian, and philosopher, d. A.D. 23.

JUBBE, AUGUSTUS, a Fr. historian, 1765-1824.

JUDA, LEO DE, a Ger. reformer, 1482-1542.

JUDA, HIRSH, a Jewish rabbi, 11th century.

JUDAH, the fourth son of Jacob and Leah, and the father of the existing race of Jews.

JUDAH HAKKADOSH, or the holy, a learned rabbi, born in Galilee about 120, distinguished as the founder of the school of Tiberius, and as the compiler of the Mishna, died 194.

JUDAS LEVITA, a Spanish rabbi, 1090-1140.

JUDAS MACCABÆUS, a valiant leader of the Jews in the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes, succeeded his father Mattathias, in the line of the Maccabean princes, B.C. 166, fell, heroically fighting against overwhelming numbers, B.C. 160.

JUDITH, a heroine of the Jewish nation, whose story is recorded in the well-known book of that name, the date and the authorship of which are both uncertain, but which probably dates after the Babylonian captivity.

JUEL, NICHOLAS, a Danish admiral, 1629-97.

JUENIN, G., a French theologian, 1650-1713.

JUENIN, P., a French historian, 1667-1749.

JUGLARIS, A., an Italian Jesuit, died 1653.

UGLER, J. F., a Ger. philologist, 1714-1791.

JUGURTHA, a king of Numidia, vanquished the Romans and starved in prison, 106 B.C.

JULIA, a martyr of Carthage, killed 440.

JULIA, the only daughter of the emperor Augustus, and wife of Marcellus and Agrippa, equally celebrated for her beauty, her debaucheries, and her genius, starved to d. by order of Tiberius, 14.

JULIA, daughter of Germanicus and Agrippina, a victim to the intrigues of Messalina, 17-41.

JULIA, a daughter of Julius Cæsar and Cornelia, and wife of Pompey the Great, d. B.C. 53.

JULIA DOMNA, second wife of the emperor Marcus Aurelius, and mother of Caracalla and Geta, distinguished by the patroness of arts and letters, 170-217.

JULIAN, an Italian theologian, 5th century.

JULIAN, a Spanish prelate and theologian, and saint of the Roman calendar, died 690.

JULIAN, FLAVIUS CLAUDIUS, emperor of Rome, nephew of Constantine the Great; famous in history because of his effort to re-establish the rites and worship of Paganism; hence named the Apostate. He was born at Constantinople in 331, and died at the age of thirty-two, of a wound received near Ctesiphon, in the midst of his contest with Sapor, king of the Persians. The life of this remarkable person was altogether singular. Facing death,—always imminent during his earlier years,—chiefly through protection of the security to which the jealousy and avarice of his uncle, the possessor of the purple, had doomed him, he grew up a philosopher, first instructed by Christian bishops, and then an attached pupil of the school of Athens. The necessities of Constantius recalled him to the capital, and procured his adoption as Cæsar: but, haunted by guilty terrors, the Emperor virtually banished him to Gaul, under guise of assigning him that exhausted and perturbed region as a Province. In a position thus inauspicious, the extraordinary military and administrative talents of Julian first burst forth. Repression had not broken the spring in him; neither had a life of study unfitted him for action. He restored discipline, consolidated and inspired the legions, overthrew the Germans and pacified Gaul. Deprived of his government by the sleepless enmity of Constantius—for the hatred of the timid is never asleep—he was proclaimed Augustus by the soldiery, and had just entered on civil war, when the death of his unworthy relative opened his path to the throne. Then Julian began the work for which he imagined that Fate had prepared him,—a work in itself impracticable; and the attempt to perform it involved him in controversies so bitter, and actions so questionable, that it would have been vain now to attempt to disentangle his motives, even had the history of these times been much more reliable than any early history is. It is alleged that he revolted from the unjust repugnance of the Church to Philosophy as such, and hated its intolerance. Unfortunately, the early Church was intolerant, and had learnt too soon the process by anathema. and it is equally true, that intolerance was especially foreign alike to the religion of Rome, and the philosophy of Athens; the first having ever admitted without scruple, new gods to seats on its Olympus; and the latter, inspired by the Alexandrines, endeavouring at that period to discern the secret meaning of all forms and modes of Mythology,—resolving them into symbols. But if Julian had been moved solely by a respect for liberty, he would have remained firm by his earliest measures—viz., the restoration of the old gods, and the equal protection of their worship. On the contrary, he persecuted those he blamed as persecutors, closed their schools, and launched into all the excesses of REACTION. The great and catholic moral pointed by his history is this—no Power can revive in this world, that which even a REVOLUTION has destroyed. The destruction of ancient systems, although by apparent violence, is never possible, unless new moral elements, and forces, have been born and risen into efficiency,—in other words, until these systems have ceased to represent the life of the world, and become unfit to evolve the future. In matters of Religion especially, reaction can, on this account, replace the form only: the faith has gone, and the husk—the ceremony and the dogma—can never be propped up as a verisimilitude.—Julian had much activity, and as already stated, singular administrative skill; but the weakness inherent in every Reactionist, passed with him too, into its usual, if not unfailing issues—fanaticism and frenzy. [J.P.N.]

JULIANA, a woman of remarkable talents and military courage, who possessed great influence at the courts of the Mogul emperors of Hindostan. She was the daughter of a Portuguese named Augustin Dias D'Acosta, and was born in Bengal, 1658. Died 1733.

JULIANA, a devotee of the reign of Edward III., who immured herself in a stone cell at Norwich, and having suffered from extreme mortification, wrote a book of devotion entitled 'Sixteen Revelations of the Love of God,' containing an account of her visions, or the 'Showings' by which her reflections were illustrated. The MS. of this work was preserved by the monks, and published by a learned catholic named Cressy, in 1670, who could discover nothing concerning her history beyond the hints which are scattered through the work itself. It appears, however, that she was about thirty years of age when the principal of her visions occurred, in the year 1373, and that she was severely tempted, and deeply experienced in what the mystics regard as the spiritual life. Her book was reprinted in the quaint language of the period in which it was written, by G. H. Parker, in 1843. The most interesting of her visions is one of the Virgin Mary, which Juliana has related with an artlessness and sense of wonder which it is impossible to accuse either of insincerity or extravagance. [E.R.]

JULIEN, P., a French sculptor, 1731-1804.

JULIEN, S., a Swiss painter, 1736-1799.

JULIO ROMANO. See ROMANO.

JULIUS, the first of the name, pope of Rome, a partizan of Athanasius, and a saint of the Roman calendar, reigned 337-352. The second, one of the most unscrupulous political intriguers that ever occupied the papal chair, distinguished as a soldier and a magnificent patron of arts and letters, born 1441, reigned 1503-1513. The third, in whose time the council of Trent was re-opened, reigned 1550-1555.

JULYAT, FLEURY, a French poet, 16th cent.

JUMELIN, J. B., a French chemist, 1745-1807.

JUNCKER, CHR., a Ger. philolo., 1668-1714.

JUNCKER, G. H., a Ger. med. wr., 1680-1759.

JUNG STILLING. See STILLING.

JUNGE, JOACHIM, a native of Lubeck, eminent as a math. and natural philosopher, 1587-1657.

JUNGER, J. F., a Germ. dramatist, died 1797.

JUNGERMANN, GODFREY, a Ger. translator and commentator, died 1610. His brother, LOUIS, a botanist, 1572-1653.

JUNIUS, ADRIAN, a Dutch savant, 1512-1575.

JUNIUS, FRANCIS, a French scholar, professor of divinity at Leyden, and fellow-labourer with Tremellius upon his Latin version of the Old Testament, author of commentaries and theological works, 1545-1602. His son, of the same name, born at Heidelberg, em. as a philolo., 1589-1677.

JUNKER, G. A., a German Jesuit, 1716-1805.

JUNOT, ANDOCHE, a marshal of the French empire, and duke d'Abrantes, born 1771, entered the army as a volunteer 1791, distinguished at the siege of Toulon 1793, general of division in Egypt 1801, governor of Paris 1804, commander of the army in Portugal 1806, lost the battle of Vimiera, and compelled to capitulate, 1808, afterwards gov. of the Illyrian provinces, and d. 1813.

JUNOT, LAURA PERMON, wife of the preceding, and duchess of Abrantes, distinguished as a novelist, but chiefly by her 'Memoirs,' 1784-1838.

JURAIN, CL., a French antiquarian, died 1618.

JURET, FR., a French poet, 1553-1626.

JURIEU, PETER, a famous protestant theologian, born at Men, in the Orléannais, 1637; died at Rotterdam, where he occupied a chair of theology, and was pastor of the Walloon church 1713. He was a great partizan of William and engaged protestants and catholics in controversy with about equal animosity. The ablest of his works is a 'Critical History of Doctrines and Modes of Worship.'

JURIN, JAMES, an English physician, distinguished as a mathematician and natural philos., 1684-1751.

JURINE, L., a Swiss naturalist, 1751-1819.

JUSSIEU, ANTOINE DE, an eminent botanist, was born at Lyons in 1686. He died in 1758, possessed an extensive knowledge of botany, filled the situation of professor of that science in the Jardin du Roi at Paris.

JUSSIEU, BERNARD DE, a celebrated botanist, and a younger brother of the above, also born at Lyons, in 1699, and died in 1777, derived his taste for botany from his brother, through his interest was nominated, in 1722, official demonstrator at the Jardin du Roi. In 1735, wishing to make an extensive botanical garden at Trianon, intrusted the execution and superintendence of it to Bernard de Jussieu. He left behind him very few writings, but he nevertheless exercised a great influence upon the science of botany in France; and his arrangement of plants cultivated in the garden of Trianon, shown by his catalogues, proves that he had commenced practically demonstrating the natural method so beautifully and fully carried out afterwards by his celebrated nephew.

JUSSIEU, ANTOINE LAURENT DE, nephew of the above, and upon whom his uncle's mission seems to have fallen, was born at Lyons in 1733. He died in 1836. He was appointed, in 1761, assistant to Lemoignon, the professor of botany, and, in 1777, obtained the general administration of the Jardin du Roi. In his lectures, and in his memoir of the new arrangement of plants in the royal garden, he explained for the first time clearly and with precision, the fundamental principles of the natural method of arrangement of plants, and, in 1789, he published his 'Genera Plantarum' work which employed him four years in bringing to light. In this excellent work, he has carried satisfactorily the first principles of the natural classification of his uncle Bernard, and the manner in which he has applied these principles to the institution of natural families has caused the Jussieuan method to be adopted by almost all botanists throughout the world. In 1793, when the royal garden was remodelled, and became the Jardin des Plantes, Jussieu was appointed professor of rural botany, and afterwards was chosen by his colleagues as director and treasurer of the museum of Natural History. Like his uncle, Bernard, he had become almost totally blind for some years before death.

JUSSOU, H. C., a Ger. architect, 1754-1819.

JUSTEL, CHRISTOPHER, a French savant and ecclesiastical antiquarian, whose works illustrate the history of France in the middle ages, 1580-1649. His son, HENRY, editor of some of his father's MSS., 1620-1693.

JUSTI, JOHN HENRY THEOPHILUS, a German mineralogist, author of a 'Treatise on Mineralogy,' 'Chemistry,' &c., 1720-1771.

JUSTIN, surnamed 'The Martyr,' but anciently 'the Philosopher,' was born about the beginning of the second century, of pagan parents, at Flavia Neapolis (Nablous), the ancient Shechem or Sychar in Samaria. He was brought up in the religion of his parents, and studied in succession the Stoic, Peripatetic, Pythagorean, and Platonic philosophy. But none of them fully satisfied his restless and inquisitive mind, though the last greatly inflated him. Meeting with an old and venerable Christian in one of his solitary walks by the sea-side, he was surprised by the conversation, and won his own ignorance of many things, and used to read the Hebrew Scriptures. This interview led at length to his conversion, when he was still but a young man. His subsequent life was spent in the earnest diffusion of the faith which he had embraced. He visited Alexandria, and was no stranger in Rome. He suffered death under Marcus Antoninus, in A.D. 165 or 166; and is usually recorded, his prime accuser was a Cynic philosopher of the name of Crescens. The mode of his martyrdom is uncertain; some affirming that he was scourged and beheaded, and others that he was put to death in secret. The best works of Justin are in the form of apologies—one, probably in A.D. 150, addressed to Antoninus Pius, and a second to Marcus Aurelius about the year 164. The 'Dialogue with Trypho the Jew,' a tract, the genuineness of which has been unsuccessfully attacked, is a defence of Christianity against Jewish assaults and prejudice, and is founded on a personal discussion. The argument is drawn from the types and prophecies of the Old Testament, but the interpretation is often fanciful and inexact. Doubts are entertained about the genuineness of other works ascribed to him, such as the 'Oration,' and 'Cohortation to the Greeks,' the famous Epistle to Diognetus, and the tract 'On the Monarchy of God.' Some other spurious titles are assigned to him, and many of his writings have been lost. As Justin continued to wear the garb of a philosopher, so he never relinquished the philosophizing spirit. His Platonic notions gave peculiar colouring to his views and doctrines of many Christian doctrines, and some of his arguments were not learned in the school of the apostles. His erudition, however, is always subservient to Christianity; but his style is often rugged though expressive. His works in whole or in parts have often been published. The principal works were published by Robert Stephens, Paris, folio, 1551. A better edition appeared under the care of Maranus, Paris, 1742. Thirlby published the Dialogues, London, 1722, in a tall and handsome folio, and the last and best edition, edited by Otto, was issued from the press at Jena, 1833, in 3 volumes 8vo, 1844. The separate pieces have often been reprinted, and not a few of them have been translated into English. Useful information on the life, times, and theology of Justin, may be got in Bishop Kaye's 'Writings and Opinions of Justin Martyr,' Cambridge, 1829, and especially in two German works of Semisch on the subject, published at Hamburg, 1842-1848. [J.E.]

JUSTIN, a Roman historian, 2d century.
JUSTIN I., emperor of the East, born 450, succeeded Anastasius 518, made Justinian his colleague in the empire, and died 527.

JUSTIN II., son of Vigilantia, sister of Justinian, suc. the latter, 565, died in retirement, 578.

JUSTINIAN I., emperor of Constantinople, was the son of a farmer, and of the sister of Justin, who from entering the army as a simple soldier, had become emperor, and was succeeded by his nephew, then in the forty-fifth year of his age, 527. Some months before the death of his uncle, Justinian had persuaded him to consent to his marriage with Theodora, a well-known actress and courtesan, who was declared Augusta, and crowned the same day as her husband. About the same time, Belisarius, the friend and future general of the new emperor, was married to Antonina, a professional companion of Theodora; and to the intrigues and jealousies stirred up by these two women is to be attributed the principal part of the untoward circumstances which have cast a stain on the personal character of Justinian. The political events of his reign may be summed up in the wars of Belisarius and the eunuch Narses, who obtained splendid successes over the Persians in the East, and the Vandals and Goths in Italy, and in the terrible sedition which broke out at Constantinople in 532, and was extinguished in the blood of thirty thousand persons. In the latter case, Justinian would have fled from his capital, and in all probability have lost his crown, but for the courage and talents of Theodora, whose vices were gilded by some of the rare qualities befitting an empress. The glory of his reign is the famous digest of the Roman law, known generally as the Justinian Code, which was compiled out of the Gregorian, Theodorian, and Hermogenian codes, by ten of the ablest lawyers of the empire, under the guiding genius of the juriconsult, Tribonian. Their labours consist—1. of the 'Statute Law,' or Justinian code, properly so called; 2. the 'Pandects,' a digest of the decisions and opinions of former magistrates and lawyers,—these two compilations consisted of matter that lay scattered through more than two thousand volumes, now reduced to fifty; 3. the 'Institutes,' an abridgment, in four books, containing the substance of all the laws in an elementary form; 4. the laws of modern date, including Justinian's own edicts, collected into one volume, and called the 'New Code.' These labours, which a Caesar had not been able to accomplish, were completed by the year 541; and we can only lament that Christianity was not in its prime at that epoch, whereby the spirit of natural right and equity had been infused into them, in place of the dogmas of authority. Besides this important work of imperial reform, Justinian was a great builder and engineer, and works of public utility were kept constantly in progress in all parts of the empire. He was remarkable for temperance and chastity, and not less so for his great learning and diligent application to business; but his religious bigotry, and his weakness in the hands of Theodora, marred all his good qualities. Died in the eighty-third year of his age, 565. [E.R.]

JUSTINIAN II., surnamed 'Rhinotmetus,' became emperor of the East on the death of his father, Constantine, 686, when he was about sixteen years of age. He was deposed and banished for his cruelty, by his general, Leontius, 695; regained his throne ten years afterwards, and, exhibiting the same ferocious disposition, was assassinated, 711.

JUSTINIANS, THE, or, GIUSTINIANI OF VENICE, descended from the emperors of that name, form a long roll of famous names. The principal of these are—LORENZO, or St. LAURENT, the first patriarch of Venice, a man of remarkable public and private virtue, author of sermons, letters, and ascetic tracts, 1380-1465. LEONARDO, his younger brother, distinguished as an Oriental scholar and poet, procurator of St. Mark, 1388-1446. BERNARDO, his son, procurator and member of the council of ten, author of a life of Lorenzo Giustinian, and of letters and speeches delivered by him on various occasions, 1408-89. BERNARDO, uncle of the latter, a learned ecclesiastic and dignitary of the order of St. George, author of a 'History of the Military Orders,' published 1692. SEBASTIAN, ambassador to England in the reign of Henry VIII., 1515-1519. ORSATTO, a Greek translator and poet, 1588-1603. POMPEIUS, a celebrated general and historian of the Flemish wars, 1569-1616. MARC-ANTONIO, elected doge of Venice 1684, died, after sustaining a war with the Turks, 1688. NIC.-ANTONIO, a learned theologian, who became bishop of Padua, and edited an edition of Athanasius, and a chronology of the bishops of his see, 1712-1796. ANGELO, proveditor of Treviso when the state was invaded by Buonaparte in 1797. [E.R.]

JUSTINIANS, THE, or, GIUSTINIANI OF GENOA, assumed the name without the right of descent. The principal of the family are—AUGUSTIN, bishop of Nebo, or Nebbio, and the most learned man of his age, 1470-1536. JEROME, a tragic writer, born about 1560. HORACE, a learned cardinal, risen from a poorer branch of the family, died at Rome 1649. MICHEL, a learned ecclesiastic, author of many works left in MS., 1612-1680. VINCENT, a famous connoisseur, whose collection of engravings forms the 'Giustinian Gallery,' published 1640. FABIO, a learned prelate, adopted into the family when a youth, 1579-1627.

The name occurs in other parts of Italy besides Venice and Genoa; of these we may mention GIOVANNI, a native of Candy, distinguished poet, died about 1556; and LAURENT, or RENZO, a professor at Naples, author of historical works, &c., 1760-1825.

JUVARA, F., a Sicilian architect, 1685-1770. JUVENAL, DECIUS JUNIUS, a celebrated man satirist, was born at Aquinum, in Campania at the beginning of the reign of Claudius. His first satire being directed against Paris, a favourite of Domitian, Juvenal was exiled to Egypt on pretence of an appointment, and died there at an advanced age, 128. Only sixteen of his satires remain, most of which are considered masterpieces of that class of writing. They have been translated by Dryden, Gifford, and others.

JUVENAL, the name by which a grammarian named W. Jouvvenneaux is known, abt. 1460-1470.

JUVENAL, or JOUVENAL DES URSES, a French statesman who owed his elevation to reigning Charles VI., born about 1350, died 1431. son, of the same name, archbishop of Rheims, historian of Charles VI., died 1473.

JUVENCUS CAIUS VECTIUS AQUILINUS, one of the earliest Christian poets, b. in Sp., 4th century.

JUVENEL, F., author of a 'History of the Crusade under the Pontificate of Urban II.' 'History of the Moors in Spain,' and a 'History of the Popes,' 17th century.

JUXON, WILLIAM, successively bishop of Exeter, bishop of London, and archbishop of Canterbury, was a prelate of great learning, chiefly remembered for his fidelity to Charles I., who attended at the Isle of Wight, and whose last requests he received on the scaffold. He is the author of a sermon, entitled 'The Subject's Sorrow and Lamentation on the Death of Britain's Josiah, Charles,' published 1649, and 'Some Considerations upon the Act of Uniformity,' 1662. Died 1664.

K

KAAB. See CAAB.

KAAS, NICHOLAS, the principal of the four regents appointed to govern Denmark during the minority of Christian I., born 1585, chancellor 1578, regent 1588, died 1594.

KAAÛ-BERHAAVE, ABRAHAM, a Dutch anatomist and physician, nephew of the illustrious Boerhaave, and court physician at Petersburg, 1713-1753.

KABBESE, J., a Dutch painter, died 1660.

KABEL, A. VANDER, a D. pain., 1631-1695.

KACUFFER, C. T., a Ger. hist., 1757-1830.

KADLUBEK, or KODLUBKO, VINCENT, a Polish historian, and bishop of Cracow, died 1223.

KAEMPF, J., a Bavarian physician, 1733-87.

KAEMPFER, ENGELBERT, (1651-1716), a traveller and naturalist, was a native of the principality of Lippe-Detmold in Germany. In the service of Sweden and the Dutch he visited most countries of the East; and has recorded his many curious and interesting observations in two works, 'Amoenitates Exoticae,' and a 'History of Japan.' In 1693 he returned to Amsterdam, and the following year took the degree of Doctor of Physic at Leyden; and settling in his native place was appointed physician to the prince. This brought him into extensive practice, which he enjoyed to his death. A genus of the ginger tribe, (Sesuvium mima), is named after him.

KAESTNER, ABRAHAM GOTTHELF, a mathematician and astronomer, author of numerous works in pure and mixed math., and a 'Demonstration of the Immortality of the Soul,' 1719-1804.

KAFOUR, a sultan of Egypt, died 968.

KAHLE, L. M., a Ger. juriconsult, 1712-1780.

KAHLER, W. or J., a Ger. divine, 1649-1710.

KAI-KAOUS, a king of Ivan or Persia, whose history is not well ascertained, 7th century.

KAI-KAOUS, a Turkish sultan, 1210-1211.

KAI-KAOUS II., a Turkish sultan, 1244-1258.

KAI-KHASRON, the name of three sultans, the first of whom reigned 1192-1210; the second 1237-1244; the third, 1266-1283.

KAIN, H. L. C., a French actor, 1728-1770. KALB, JOHN, Baron De, a French officer, became major-gen. in the American army, killed in action under General Gates, 1782-1780.

KALCREUTH, COUNT ADOLPH. FREDERICK, a field-marshal of Prussia, distinguished in seven years' war under Frederick the Great, and in the wars of the French revolution, 1737-1818.

ALDI, GEORGE, a learned Jesuit of Hungary, of theology at Olmutz and Presburgh, d. 1634.

ALE, or KElf, W., a Dutch paint., 1630-93.

ALKBRENNER, CHRISTIAN, a Prussian Jew, known as a musical composer and historian, 1755-1816. His son, CHRISTIAN FREDERICK, distinguished as a pianist, 1784-1849.

ALL, ABR., a Danish historian, 1743-1821.

ALL, J. CHRISTOPHER, a Prussian philologist and Oriental scholar, 1714-1775. His son, NICHOLAS CHRISTOPHER, the same, born 1749.

ALLGREW, a Swedish dramatist, 1751-1795.

ALM, PETER, a Swedish naturalist, professor of bot., author of 'A Naturalist's Tour in North America,' and of 'Dissertations on the Agriculture and Commerce of Sweden,' 1715-1779.

ALRAAT, ABRAHAM VAN, a Dutch painter and sculptor, 1643-1699. His brother, BERNARD, distinguished as a landscape painter, 1650-1721.

AMBLI, M., a Ger. sculptor, about 1717-86.

AMENSKI, COUNT, a Rus. general, last ct.

AM-HI, or KHANG-HI, a Chinese emperor, was a patron of arts and letters, reig. 1661-1722.

AMPEN, J. VAN, a Dutch painter, 17th cen.

AMPENHAUSEN, BARON BALTHAZER DE, a German historian and publicist, 1772-1823.

ANDJATOU, a khan of the Moguls, 1291-95.

ANDLER, J. J., a German artist, dist. for the beauty of his figures on porcelain, 1706-1776.

ANNI, J. A., a Ger. Orientalist, 1773-1824.

ANT, IMMANUEL, born at Königsberg, 21st Aug. 1724; in which city he spent a long life of eighty years in the tranquillity so acceptable to a philosopher; he died on 24th February, 1804.—It has been ascribed to two of Europe's most illustrious thinkers since the revival of Philosophy, to undertake the same momentous problem regarding the Grounds and Limits of Human Knowledge: twain, almost contrasted in character, but each in relation to his age, offering a solution so profound and suitable, that his works stand as an era from which, as its commencement, a spacious time of Metaphysical History will ever be dated: the Inquirers were KANT and JOHN LOCKE. Contrasted in mental character—for, while Locke, participating in the peculiar genius of his country, did not to adventure beyond the concrete—the practical—the objective,—the intellect of Kant manifested an analytic power, an ability to pierce through abstractions and construct Systems, certainly never surpassed since the days of Aristotle, these two great men were so placed, that in the common revolt against scepticism and dogmatism, it fell to them as if through necessity, to look at their common subject from those separate points of view, which in philosophy, he stood for the most part also as contrasted. Ruled by the dogmatism of less discreet Cartesians, who were ever inclined to arrest inconvenient Inquiry, by interposing the obstacle of so-called Innate principle or truth—Locke asserted our harmony with the External World, hastened to vindicate for its action on Mind, the important part which that action plays in the construction of human knowledge: Kant, on the other hand, lived in times when the claims on behalf of Sensation—instituted by Locke—had risen to excess; when the figurative expression of the Englishman, that the mind is a tabula rasa had become accepted as a literal maxim; and the unrelenting scepticism of Hume had driven from systematic philosophy all recognition of Energy in Mind, Personality in Man, or of Permanence Substance and Truth, in Nature or anywhere. Accordingly, it was his distinctive vocation to reassert the Force of the Thinking principle, to re-establish it as a Power, co-ordinate, and at least coequal with the External Universe: and he accomplished his task so thoroughly, that the despotism of mere Sensationalism can never reappear in the progress of modern thought. Inevitably, perhaps, from his position, Kant's tendencies lean unduly towards Idealism: nevertheless, profiting by his long posteriority to Locke, the solution offered by the profound and penetrating German, is assuredly the completest which our human Intellect has yet elaborated; and, however surprising to the English reader, it may be also asserted, that by no one, since the Stagyrte wrote, has clear and definite thought been expressed more clearly, or more conscientiously guarded from possible misapprehension. We shall endeavour as distinctly as we can—encumbered by the necessary brevity—to offer an appreciation of Kant's remarkable labours.—I. Two considerations are essential to a right apprehension of the achievements of the sage of Königsberg: First; as it is necessary to repeat, his effort was to establish the grounds and limits of Human Knowledge—destroying scepticism on the one hand, and discrediting dogmatism on the other: and Secondly; He sought to accomplish this double object by defining exactly the spheres of those two factors of all knowledge—the Mind and Nature; thus rescuing Truth from doubt, although Sensation alone might not account for it, and by rigorously appreciating and surveying the action of the purely Mental Force, warning us not to mistake for real, what is merely notional. To carry out the foregoing aim was the effort of Kant's life; and his philosophy was hence rightly designated the Critical Philosophy: although he has surveyed many departments of Doctrine, his efforts point everywhere rather to Criticism, than to Doctrine; he has shown rather how Philosophy may become a Science, than filled in the matter of the Science. Taking his writings as a whole—even allowing that the whole is a composite of isolated parts—they go with the strong light of Criticism nearly around all possible knowledge. The mind manifesting its energies mainly under three Modes, usually discriminated as the Intellect, the Emotions, and the Will (see article KRAUSE),—KANT has tracked its corresponding laws and methods of action, in his classical treatises—the Critique of the Pure Reason—the Critique of the Judgment—and the Critique of the Practical Reason. To complete the two latter works, several of his smaller treatises are needful as a supplement; but, with this addition, they may be justly esteemed as contributions yet unsurpassed, to the disentangling of difficulties in theoretical and practical Morals, and to the establishment of fundamental canons in Æsthetics. Both works abound in passages of noble Eloquence: the Critique of the Practical Reason presents the best appreciation offered by any modern Thinker, of the system of Epicurus, and the morality of Stoicism: the Critique of the Judgment achieved an influence in Germany which even the superficial student of the literature of that country will not fail to recognize; and in the section on Teleology, the philosophical rudiments appear, of that recent method in Natural History, which will constrain a reconstruction of all the Sciences of Organization.—It is, however, of the Critique of the Pure Reason only, that, in illustration of Kant's manner, we shall here give any particular account.—II. As the foundation of this memorable Critique, Kant inquires, what characteristics must attach to Knowledge drawn simply from Sensation, or from Experience? Sensation, or experience, can inform the mind of facts only, of things that are, because they are felt; it never can show that a thing must be, or that it is universally. The characteristics of necessity and universality, then, cannot come from experience; the products of which must be empirical, and can never rise higher than generalizations: so that whenever either characteristic inheres in a notion, we are obliged to infer that the said notion is, in thus far, not a pure product of experience, but an experience viewed and modified by some quality or energy of the thinking faculty. The criterion obtained, let the Intellect, or the Pure Reason be examined; and the factors of the whole separated, after a full analysis of its contents. The Pure Reason, or the Faculty of Knowing, operates in three different modes—First, that of SENSIBILITY, or our power to construct representations of objects by means of the sensations they produce: Second, the Faculty which co-ordinates, unites, and discerns the relations of these representations, or the UNDERSTANDING: and Third, that loftier Faculty which bestows on Knowledge its highest Unity—passing beyond Sensibility and the Understanding, and seeming to descry Ultimate and Eternal Laws;—this faculty is the REASON.—Of the contents of the Sensibility then, what are the à posteriori, and what the à priori elements? What portion of a perception is Empirical, and what Necessary and Universal? The perception of a fact or thing as existing, is clearly empirical; but we cannot perceive anything without conceiving it as necessarily existing in Space and Time: these conceptions no mere apprehension of empirical existence can supply; therefore they are Forms of our Sensibility,—qualities or forces belonging to the perceiving agent, by which a new nature, so to speak, is impressed on the thing perceived. With regard to the Understanding again, we discern that it universally classes objects under certain determinate relations, which relations it considers universally applicable: these relations, therefore, or the Categories, are the Laws, or Formal principles of the Understanding—its constituent elements—or rather the Conditions under which alone, in virtue of its structure, it can work. In his determination of the Categories, Kant analyses alongside of Aristotle; nor, if the works of the two great men are compared, will it appear, that, to the philosopher of Königsberg, thought had advanced for so many centuries, in vain. One of the Categories of the Understanding is the relation of Cause and Effect: the Student will at once discern how easily under this view of it, the German disposed of the otherwise bewildering speculations of Hume. Beyond Sensibility and Understanding lies the Reason, governed by a priori Ideas, one of which elevates us to a conception of the Soul, or to the transcendent Unity of Man; a second, the ground of all rational Cosmology; and a third, that constructs the notion of God.—How limited the glimpse afforded by these abrupt words, of the amplitude and perb proportions of the Critical Philosophy! let the Student be assured that for the first time in History the problem it undertook has been entirely solved: no longer does the region of Subjective Human Knowledge contain dark, unvisited, or unexplored corners.—III. The Kant now ventured as to the labours of Kant, is now pronounced in ignorance of the questionings to which they have given rise. Numerous the modifications proposed on his table of the Categories; as exceptions to other interior peculiarities of the system: but these—whatever their plausible weight—little affect the merits of his gigantic symmetrical scheme. We have said, however, that its tendencies lean unduly towards Idealism, and it is necessary now, to show in what manner the foregoing speculations open and in the questio vexata of modern thought, the supreme difficulty of existing metaphysics. Critical Philosophy, has indeed saved all sary Truths by referring them to Laws of the Mind—conditions under which alone the Thinking Organism can operate: but, *what is the relation between these Laws subjective, and external objective Realities? Space and Time—the elements of the Sensibility—do they not exist in the Universe as well as for Us? Is that representation purely Ideal, by which the marvels of matter are placed before the mind, sparkling with Infinity and evolving through all Time? The Categories of the Understanding, again—themselves for instance of Cause and Effect—also they are necessitated through the nature of the Understanding itself, are they all purely subjective? Is there not a world of phenomena, regular laws which are their exact counterparts, bringing us into whose presence, our Intellectual nature is the instrument? So, finally of the Idea—the Idea of God is a necessity with it, only a subjective necessity,—does not that necessity conduct us towards a Real, ever-living, creating, all-sustaining Omniscience? They will not learn without dismay that Kant denounces the legitimacy of every attempt to effect a transition from Reality, from the region of the Speculative to the Region of the Practical. By a process that at least is ingenious, which he is supported by our own Sir V. Hamilton, he did effect a bridge towards the realities of Ontology; he assumed the existence of God as a consequence of the Law of Morality; nevertheless, it is his dictum, that the representations of the Sensibility and the verities of the Intellect, authorize our belief in no objective Reality; and that Existence, as recognized by us, is a mere Noumenon—a thing originating a notion, but unknown as to its qualities, and its nature. Doubtless one is startled by such a conclusion, but it were folly to underrate the difficulty of the task, or to check the advance of Kant. Many and varied efforts to remove it; with what success, this is the place to declare: with not a few Inquir-* ire to accomplish the feat seems to have passed its accomplishment. Nevertheless, on the occurrence of such difficulties, even when they seem to approach the insuperable, it is something to discern that their existence need not surprise us; and that on their appalling magnitude is no reason for imitate despair (article LEIBNITZ). The question in which Inquiry is here impinging, has to do with the lowest down—the least accessible portion of our human Nature. As we have remarked elsewhere, the faculty of Intuition, the power to look beneath Sensation into Realities—INTUITION—is, though the most educable, the most difficult to apprehend, and the least educated of all the forms of energy appertaining to Mind. It acts, indeed, in every mind, but it acts imperfectly; rarely does it act through reflection, or, as yet, so that we can explain its operations. Let the student turn to Sir William Hamilton's celebrated memoir on Representation and Representation; he will find there how sadly men have erred, and how toilsomely they have laboured, before that single act of Intuitive Perception could be described! That act of Intuition, as we now understand it, is simply the act constraining our acceptance of a subjective reality, corresponding to Kant's subjective Laws or Forms of the Sensibility: is it not only then, that a deeper and clearer view, in the way to remaining and corresponding directions, shall enable us to assert as authoritatively, concerning the Objectivity of Laws which we apprehend in the meantime, simply as regulating Forms of the understanding and the Reason? Between these two classes of Forms or constituent elements, and the Forms of Space and Time, there is much in common; especially this vital characteristic—no speculative doubt can destroy our practical belief that they have real correlatives. Nay, it may be alleged even—as Kant rightly asserts with regard to the Practical Reason, or the Law of Morality—that without that belief, or rather that INTUITION, the faculties would not operate. Perception indeed involves no conscious voluntary act; the working of the Understanding and the Reason, on the other hand, do involve one; and it appears safe to aver that unless for the conviction, that we are concerned about a great and real Universe, apart from the Thinking Subject, the Human Will would cease to urge the Understanding to evolve its relations, or the Reason to aspire after that highest Unity which, in obedience to its nature, it struggles to attain.—It were unsuitable to close this imperfect notice of the Philosophy of Kant, without a word concerning the character and aspects of the philosopher. We have said that he lived in tranquillity, devoted to meditation. But it were wrong to fancy him the abstracted sage. His benevolence and simplicity were great; he much relished society, mingling with its innocent gaieties; and he was beloved by the young. He was a man of unimpeachable probity; and that sincerity which is the right arm of Genius in its contests for Truth, was inseparable from his nature. His ideas in morals have been surpassed in elevation by no writer in history; he never uttered a word or committed a sentence to the world, derogatory to man's highest nature, or which the sternest virtue would recall. A pure lover of Truth, he proclaimed and vindicated liberty of Thought and Speech: Philosophy, with Kant, was no make-believe—neither the formula of a School, nor an affectation of the Salon—but an earnest discernment of the rights and duties, the functions, privileges and position of Humanity, and therefore a reverential offering by our Human Reason to the august Power that formed it.—There are now excellent editions of Kant's collected works in German, by his pupils; good French translations of several of them; an English version of the Critique of the Pure Reason by Mr. Hayward, and one of his Ethics by Mr. Semple. [J.P.N.]

KAO-TSOU-OUTI, a Chinese emp., 355-422.
KAO-TSOU, the first of the name, emperor of China, founder of the Tang dynasty, reigned 619-626, d. 635; the second, founder of the Haou-Fein dynasty, reigned 935-942; the third, founder of the Haou-Han dynasty, reigned 947-951.

KAO-TSOUNG, the first of the name, emperor of China, reigned 648-684; the second, 1127-1161.

KAPNIST, VASILY V., a Rus. poet, 1756-1813.

KARAMSIN, NICHOLAS MICHLELOVITCH, historiographer-royal of the empire of Russia, councillor of state in 1826, author of a History of Russia, and works in polite literature, 1765-1826.

KARNKOWSKI, S., a Polish hist., died 1603.

KAROLI, J., a Hungarian divine, 16th century.

KARPIUSKI, F., a Polish dramatist, d. 1825.

KARSTEN, W. J. G., a German physician and mathematician, 1732-1787. His brother, F. C. S. KARSTEN, an agriculturist, 1751-1829. Their nephew, DIDIER L. GUSTAVE KARSTEN, a learned mineralogist, 1768-1810.

KATE, L. T., a Dutch grammarian, last cent.

KATER, H., an Eng. mathematician, 1777-1825.

KATONA, S., a Hungarian hist., 1732-1811.

KAUFMANN, MARY ANNE ANGELICA CATHERINE, a French lady remarkable for her talents in painting and music, 1741-1807.

KAUNITZ-RIETBERG, WENCELAUS ANTHONY, prince of, an Austrian states, 1710-1794.

KANTZ, CONSTAN. F., an Aus. hist., 1735-97.

KAY, or CAIUS, THOMAS, head master of University College, Oxford, author of a work written in vindication of the superior antiquity of Oxford, in a controversy with Dr John Kaye of Cambridge, died 1572.

KAY, or KEY, W., a Dutch painter, 1520-1568.

KAYE, KEYE, CAY, or CAIUS, JOHN, a learned physician, founder of Caius College, Cambridge, of which he was the first master, author of professional works, and a Hist. of Cam., 1510-73.

KAYSSLER, A., a Ger. philosopher, d. 1822.

KAZWINI, ZACHARIAH BEN MOHAMMED BEN MAHMOUD, an Ar. geogra. and nat., d. 1283.

KEACH, BENJAMIN, a baptist wr., 1640-1704.

KEAN, EDMUND, one of the greatest tragic actors of which England can boast, and possessed of decided genius for the drama, was, on his mother's side, great-grandson of Harry Carey, reputed author of 'God save the King.' The date of his birth is dubious, but he is stated to have been born in Castle-Street, Leicester Square, in November, 1787; but to have himself asserted that 17th March, 1790, was his birth-day. He seems to have been placed on the stage when an infant, and to have thus appeared in processions and pageants both at Drury Lane and the Haymarket theatres. At these periods he was remarked for his shyness, but attracted the sympathy of Miss Tidswell, an actress of some standing, who was able to recommend him to a manager in Yorkshire, where he acted under the name of Carey. Hamlet, Lord Hastings, and Cato, were the parts which even then he was capable of filling; and he showed besides much elocutionary skill in recitations from Milton and Shakspeare, which attracted the attention of Dr. Drury, who sent him to Eton school, where he remained three years, and acquired considerable knowledge of Latin. After this, he played Hamlet and Shylock, first on the Birmingham stage, and afterwards at Edinburgh, Sheerness, Sevenoaks, Tunbridge Wells, and Swansea. At about the age of nineteen, we find him at Waterford, in Ireland, where he acted Douglas, and obtained a wife, remaining there two years, after which he visited Weymouth, Exeter, and Taunton. At Dorchester, he is said to have performed, not only in tragedy and comedy, but in opera and pantomime. By the intervention of Dr. Drury, he was ultimately recommended to the committee of Drury Lane theatre; at which theatre he made his début 26th January, 1814, as Shylock, to a meagre house, but the few who were present became convinced of his genius; the critics were in his favour, and on waking the next morning the young actor found himself famous. His Richard the Third, Hamlet, and Othello, confirmed the favourable impression. His career was thenceforth assured, and his successes were of the most brilliant description. As a contrast to the classical style of the Kemble school, his acting was impulsive, fiery, and startling. After several seasons of triumph in England, Scotland, and Ireland, he visited America, being induced to that step by some private circumstances which permit not detail. On his return to England, he became manager of the Richmond theatre, and died in the house attached thereto, 15th May, 1833. His funeral was numerously attended by distinguished persons, and he was interred in the cemetery belonging to the old church at Richmond, near the grave of Thomson and Burbage. A cenotaph has since been placed on the church wall by his son, Mr. Charles Kean, the present manager of the Princess's theatre. Had the father been as prudent as the son has proved, his life would have been happier, and his ultimate triumph more decided. His genial aptitude for acting was indisputable, and the lightning-flashes frequent during his extraordinary performances, astonished the critic as much as the ordinary spectator. We have certainly had no performer whom the conscientious biographer can cite as his superior in tragic effect and passionate elocution.

[J.A.H.]

KEANE, JOHN, Lord, son of Sir John Keane of Belmont, dist. as an officer in the peninsular war, and for his capture, in 1839, of Ghuznee; 1780-1844.

KEATE, GEORGE, a poet and miscel. writer, au. of an 'Account of the Pelew Islands,' 1729-97.

KEATING, G., an Irish historian, d. abt. 1625.

KEATS, JOHN, was born in London in 1796. Some years of his boyhood were spent in a school at Enfield. There he received classical impressions which moulded the form of his youthful fancy and feelings, producing a singularly interesting, though anomalous, kind of images, by their mixture with the romantic ideas which modern poetry afterwards inspired. When he was about fifteen years of age was apprenticed to a surgeon in London; poetry had taken close possession of his mind, the art was enthusiastically practised. In 1810 he published a volume of poems, which was noticed. Next year appeared 'Endymion, a Romance.' This poem displayed a predominance of imagination over judgment, so decided, that it prompted a doubt whether even maturer years would have qualified the writer to attain very high excellence; but it has an affluence of imagery, an idealism, and an exquisite grace of feeling, which make it to poetical minds one of the most attractive of all poems. It was criticised by Gifford in the Quarterly Review with savage severity. The attack affected the young poet very deeply, and has even been said to have caused or accelerated the consumptive symptoms which soon shrouded themselves. He published, however, in 1818, a new volume, containing, among other poems, 'Hyperion,' 'The Eve of Saint Agnes,' 'La Belle Dame sans Merci,' and 'Isabella.' In a paper on his former volume which now appeared in the Edinburgh Review, it was justly said by Jeffrey, that, with all its faults, both of matter and of diction, no book could more fitly put into the hands of a reader, as a test to ascertain whether he had 'a native religious poetry and a genuine sensibility to its intrinsic charm.' The poetry of Shelley, and that of Keats, may be pointed to as the earliest indications of those poetical tendencies which have been further developed by Tennyson and his school. The poet sought renovation of health in Italy, but in 1820 he died at Rome in December, 1820, when he had recently completed his twenty-fourth year.

KEATS, SIR R. G., a naval officer, 1757-1811.
KEBLE, JOSEPH, an Eng. lawyer, 1632-1705.
KEDER, N., a Swedish antiquarian, 1659-1725.
KEENE, EDMUND, bishop of Ely, 1713-1783.
KEILL, JOHN, a Scotch mathematician, 1705-1721. His brother, JAMES, a physician and medical author, 1673-1719.

KEISAR, W. DE, a Flem. painter, 1647-1707.
KEISER, R., a German musician, 1673-1741.
KEITH. See ELPHINSTONE.

KEITH, GEORGE, a Scotch sectarian, a zealous worker for and against the Quakers, d. abt. 1740.

KEITH, JAMES, youngest son of William Keith, earl marshal of Scotland, distinguished as a general and marshal in the service of Prussia, 1696-1758.

KEITH, THOMAS, a professional astronomer and mathematician, author of 'Introduction to Works in Geometry,' &c., 1759-1824.

KELAOUN, sultan of Egypt, 1279-1290.
KELGREN, H., a Swedish poet, 1751-1795.

KELLEHOUN, MORITZ, a Ger. pain. and engraver, director of the academy at Munich, 1768-1838.

KELLER, J. B., a Swiss statuary, 1638-1705.

KELLER, G., a German historian, 1750-1817.

KELLER, D. L. CHR., Count, a Prussian diplomatist, kn. at the congress of Vienna, 1757-1824.

KELLERMANN, FRANCIS CHRISTOPHER, duke of Valmy, a famous general of the French revolution, was born at Strasburgh 1735, and embracing the military profession when a youth, risen to the rank of camp-marshal, besides serving in several political missions, before the commencement of the revolution. In 1791, he was appointed to a command in the army of the Moselle, and died himself in organizing the defence of the frontier against the emigrants and the duke of Brunswick. On the 19th of September, 1792, he acted, by forced marches, at the head of twenty thousand men, his famous junction with Durnitz, and, the following day, intrenched on the heights of Valmy, resisted an attack of forty-five thousand Prussians and twenty thousand Austrians. This famous victory was the first in the series of successes which marked the career of the republic and the empire, and was gained by the ill-provided levies of the patriots over experienced troops. On the same day the national convention was assembled in Paris. On the morning, the republic was proclaimed, and the news arriving in the camp of Valmy after their victory, was the occasion of great rejoicings, in the midst of which the duke of Brunswick with his army crossed the frontier. Escaping the denunciations of Custine, who sought his ruin, Kellermann was appointed, in 1795, commander-in-chief of the army of the Alps and Italy, and in a short time found himself auxiliary to Napoleon, whose star rose over him. His position afterwards was that of a savior and peer of France; and, like many others in his order, he made peace with the Bourbons on the fall of the emperor. He died in 1820. [E.R.]

KELLEY, EDWARD, the seer and companion of Doctor Dee in his alleged intercourse with spirits, was born in Worcester 1555, and is said to have been educated at Oxford, but, leaving the university abruptly, was captured in Lancashire, and for some time, it is supposed, lost his ears. It must have been soon afterwards that he made the acquaintance of Dr. Dee, who was at first persuaded that Kelley 'had been brought into unison with him by mediation of the angel Uriel,' for as early as 1589 they had separated again. The cause of their disagreement was Kelley's indulgence in magical practices for the sake of gain, which the Doctor could not tolerate; and, left to himself, our adventurer not only lived handsomely upon his profits, but retained the honour of knighthood from the Emperor Rodolph. It was the popular belief that Kelley outlived the time of his compact with the evil, and was carried off bodily by infernal spirits; the sight of his wife and children—but according to unadorned history he was imprisoned for knaveries, and died of the injuries he received while endeavouring to escape, in 1595. He is the author of poems on chemistry and on the philosopher's stone, and was the penman of several discourses, which are printed in Casaubon's 'Relation of What Passed for Many Years Between Dr. Dee and Some Spirits,' published 1639. Some curious particulars concerning him will be found in Leaver's 'Funeral Monuments;' and there are MSS., both of his and Dr. Dee's, in the Ashmolean Museum at Oxford. [E.R.]

KELLISON, M., a catholic divine, died 1641.

KELLY, HUGH, an Irish dramatist, 1739-77.

KELLY, JOHN, an English clergyman, author of 'A Practical Grammar of the Ancient Gaelic Language of the Isle of Man,' 1750-1809.

KELLY, MICHAEL, an Irish singer, 1762-1826.

KELP, JUSTUS J., a Ger. philologist, 1650-1720.

KEMBLE, GEO. STEPHEN, a popular actor and manager, br. of the cel. J. P. Kemble, 1758-1822.

KEMBLE, JOHN PHILIP, next to Garrick, the most eminent of English actors, but in style, the contrast of his great predecessor, being as reflective as he was impulsive. His father, Roger Kemble, was theatrical manager at Prescot, in Lancashire, and in that county, John Philip was born, February, 1757. He was educated first at the Roman Catholic Seminary of Sedgeley Park, Staffordshire; and afterwards at the college of Douay, being intended for one of the learned professions. His own course, however, had been already determined on, and he commenced active life as an actor at Liverpool, after which he visited York and Edinburgh. At Liverpool he acted in a tragedy of his own composition, called 'Belisarius;' and soon after published a volume of 'Fugitive Pieces,' which, however, he sought to suppress. His appearance in London took place 30th September, 1783, at Drury Lane, when he performed 'Hamlet,' with extraordinary applause; though it was five years before he became leading tragedian. About that period, too, he succeeded to the management of the theatre, which he conducted till 1801, during which he restored some good old plays, and produced some original pieces, including a musical entertainment of his own, entitled 'Lodoiska.' Next year, he became the manager and the purchaser of a sixth share of Covent Garden theatre, but the destruction of the edifice by fire in 1809, caused him much trouble, which, after its rebuilding, was increased, in consequence of the prices being augmented, and the boxes arranged too exclusively for the accommodation of the aristocracy. Public disturbances, known by the name of the O. P. Riots, ensued, and continued for several nights. On his retirement from the stage, 23d July, 1807, Mr. Kemble was complimented with a public dinner, which was attended by persons of rank and talent. He died at Lausanne, in Switzerland, 26th February, 1823, of a paralytic attack. Mr. Kemble's style of acting was eminently regulated by art; his performances were premeditated, and as little as possible was left to natural impulse. This style was most suited to the artificial characters of the drama, such as Cato, Coriolanus, Hamlet, King John, Jaqes, and Penruddock. In his different managements, Mr. Kemble brought his learning to bear on the business and decorations of the stage, which is, accordingly, indebted for some of its earliest reforms to him. But he preferred building his reputation on the old drama, to risking it in the production of novelty—the ill consequences of which mode of proceeding, ultimately resulted in the total fall of the two patent theatres, which are now superseded by smaller establishments. [J.A.H.]

KEMBLE, PRISCILLA, widow of the preceding, formerly wife of the actor Brereton, 1755-1845.

KEMENI, prince of Transylvania, 1660-1662.

KEMP, JOSEPH, a dist. composer, 1778-1824.

KEMP, J. T., a Dutch missionary, 1748-1811.

KEMPELLEN, WOLFGANG, Baron, a Hungarian dramatist and mechanician, inventor of the famous automaton chess-player, 1734-1804.

KEMPER, J. M., a Dutch juriscion, 1776-1824.

KEMPIS, THOMAS A, whose real surname was HEMMERKEN, or HAMMERLEIN, was born at Kempen near Cologne in 1380, was educated at the school founded by Gerhard Groote at Deventer, to which he was sent at the age of thirteen; entered seven years afterwards the convent of St. Agnes, formally assumed the monastic habit in 1406, and finally became the superior of the same establishment. His was an earnest practical piety, and his writings are deeply imbued with his peculiar devotional spirit. A tinge of ascetic mysticism is very apparent in his so-called works. The work by which he is best known in this country is the 'Imitation of Christ,' (De Imitatione Christi), which is but the title of the first book of a larger treatise, (De Contemptu Mundi). It is, however, suspected not to be of his composition, the probability being that the work was only translated by A Kempis, but in reality composed by the Chancellor Gerson of the university of Paris. Thomas A Kempis died in 1471, aged ninety-two; not one of those Titans who win immortality by intellectual prowess, but one of those humbler saints whose calm and meditative piety surrounds their memory with an undying fragrance. [J.E.]

KEN, TH., bp. of Bath and Wells, and one of the seven sent to the Tower by James II., 1687-1711.

KENDAL, G., a Calvinistic divine, died 1663.

KENDRICK, J., an Amer. navigator, d. 1800.

KENICIOUS, P., arbp. of Upsala, 1555-1636.

KENNAWAY, SIR J., an East Indian officer and diplomatist, time of Tippoo sultan, 1758-1836.

KENNEDY, JAMES, a relig. founder of Scotland, bishop of St. Andrews, and lord chancellor, and one of the regency time of Jas. III., 1405-66.

KENNEDY, J., a chronologist, d. about 1770.

KENNEDY, J., a Scotch antiquarian, d. 1760.

KENNEDY, WILLIAM, a Scottish lawyer and antiq., an of the 'Annals of Aberdeen,' 1759-1836.

KENNET, WHITE, an English prelate, dist. as a political partizan in the time of Atterbury and Sacheverel, author of historical and antiquarian works, 1660-1728. His brother, BASIL, a learned divine and antiquarian, 1674-1714.

KENNETH, the first of the name, king of Scotland, 604-606; the second, reigned 823-854; the third, succeeded 978, assassinated 994.

KENNEY, J., an Irish dramatist, d. 1849.

KENNICOTT, BENJAMIN, an Eng. div., dist. as an Orient. scholar and biblical critic, 1718-83.

KENRICK, W., a miscellaneous wr., d. 1779.

KENT, EDWARD AUGUSTUS, duke of, fourth son of George III., and father of Queen Victoria, born 1767, commander of the British forces in North America 1799, governor of Gibraltar 1802, married to Victoria Maria Louisa, widow of the hereditary prince of Leiningen, and youngest daughter of the d. of Saxe-Coburg, 1818, d. 1820.

KENT, JAMES, was born at Winchester, in 1700, where at an early age, he was admitted into the choir of the cathedral under the tuition of Mr. Vaughan Richardson, then organist. He afterwards became one of the children of the Royal Chapel, where, under the care of Dr. Croft, he laid the foundation of his future greatness. The first situation which Kent obtained was organist of the chapel of Trinity College, Cambridge; and his next and last was organist of Winchester chapel and college, where he continued to his death, which occurred in 1776. As a composer of sacred music Kent's fame stands on a secure basis, and many of his anthems will take rank amongst the most sublime musical works of any age or country. [J.M.]

KENT, WILLIAM, a Eng. painter, 1685-17

KENYON, LLOYD, Lord, chief justice of King's Bench, first distin. as counsel for George Gordon along with Mr. Erskine, 1733-

KÉPLER, JOHN, a distinguished astron was born at Wicl, in Wirtemberg, on the December, 1571. His father, Henry Kepler, an officer in the army who had reduced him poverty by his extravagance. His mother, erine Guldemar, gave premature birth to John Kepler, who was a sickly child. After covering with difficulty from small-pox, he sent to school in 1577. Having become bankrupt his father was obliged to keep a tavern at Elldingen, and his son John was taken from school to perform the functions of a servant in father's house. When he was in his fifteenth year, he was received into the school at monastery at Maulbronn, established at the refectory as preparatory for the university of Tübingen where he was admitted as Bachelor in 1588; returning to the school to complete the course of study, he took his degree of Master in 1591, holding the second place in the examination. While attending the mathematical lectures of Mästlin, a disciple of Copernicus, he adopted opinions of his teacher, and wrote an essay to prove that the primary motion was produced by the rotation of the earth. In 1594 he was willingly made to accept the astronomical chair at Graz, though he knew little of the subject. He was thus forced to study astronomy, and in the devoted all his leisure time, and all his energy to study the size and the motions of planets, and their orbits. Finding no reliable law in the planetary distances, he made numerous attempts of the wildest and most speculative character, but though he ventured to publish in 1596 in his 'Prodromus of Cosmographical Dissertation,' he obtained no results, and was satisfied with the little reputation which his ingenuity had procured for him. In 1597 he made a foolish marriage with a widow, and in addition to pecuniary difficulties which this involved him, he was obliged to flee into Hungary to escape from the persecutions of the Catholics. Though he was soon recalled to his professorship by the states of Styria, he did not occupy it long. Tycho, whom he visited in Prague in 1600, induced him to become his assistant, but he was not fairly settled in this office till he was attacked with a quartan and embroiled in a quarrel with Tycho. Kepler came to Prague in 1601, Tycho pressed him to the emperor, who gave him the title of Imperial Mathematician on the condition of assisting Tycho in his calculations. Their first work was the computation of the Rudolphine Tables, the expense of which was defrayed by the emperor. Upon the death of Tycho, in 1601, Kepler succeeded him as principal mathematician to the emperor, with a handsome salary, partly from the imperial treasury, and partly from the States of Silesia. In 1606, Kepler published a 'Summent to Vitellio,' in which he treats of the optics part of astronomy, and had very nearly succeeded on the law of refraction, afterwards discovered by Snellius. In 1611, he published his Dioptrics, an admirable work, which laid the foundati science of optics. In this work he gives the story of the telescope,—describes the astronomical one with two convex lenses,—expounds spherical aberration of lenses, and the law of reflexion at the second surfaces of bodies. His work, however, on which his fame rests, is 'New Astronomy, or Commentaries on the Motions of Mars,' published in 1609. In this work he proves that Mars moves in an elliptical orbit, in one of the foci of which the sun is placed, and that the Radius Vector, or the line joining the planet and the sun describes equal areas in equal times. These two great discoveries, the first in physical astronomy, he extended to all the planets in the solar system, and it was through them that Newton, Hooke, Halley, and Wren, independently arrived at the great law of the attraction of gravity with the square of the distance. In the midst of the studies which led Kepler to these fine discoveries, he was harassed by pecuniary difficulties which were the bane of his existence. His salary was ever in arrears, and the treasury of Rudolph was always empty. On the death of the emperor, however, in 1612, Kepler's arrears were paid. Mathias, the brother and successor of Rudolph, re-appointed him imperial mathematician, and he was permitted to accept of the professorship of mathematics at Graz, in Austria. He had lost his wife and one of his children by small-pox in 1611, and his family now consisted of a daughter born in 1602, and a son born in 1607. He married a second time in 1615, and added to his family three sons and two daughters, who, along with their mother, survived him. About this time, Kepler was summoned to Ratisbon to give his opinion on the reformation of the calendar, a subject upon which he published a short essay. His pension was again in arrears, and in order to support his family he was obliged to compose what he calls 'vile prophesying almanack,' which, he adds, 'scarcely more reputable than begging, unless in its saving the emperor's credit, who abandons me entirely, and would suffer me to perish with hunger.' In 1617, there appeared one of the best interesting of his works, entitled 'The Harmonies of the World.' It is dedicated to James I. of England, and is remarkable as containing the celebrated law that the squares of the periodic times of the planets are as the cubes of their distances. This law occurred to him on the 8th of March, 1618, but from a blunder in his calculations he rejected it. Having discovered his error on the 15th May, he recognized with transport the absolute truth of a principle which for seven years had been the object of his incessant pursuit. He was almost frantic with joy; 'the light is cast' he exclaimed, 'the book is written to read, either now or by posterity, I care not which. It may well wait a century for a reader. God has waited 6,000 years for an observer.' The same year Kepler published the three first books of his 'Epitome of the Copernican Astronomy,' the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh appearing in 1622. In 1620, Sir Henry Wotton, the English ambassador at Venice, visited Kepler while passing through Germany. He urged the astronomer to take up his residence in England, offering him of a welcome and an honourable reception; but neither the welcome nor the reception, which is all the encouragement he would have got, would have released him from his pecuniary difficulties. 'If the imperial mathematician, therefore,' as Sir David Brewster (Martyrs of Science, p. 243) has remarked, 'had no other assurance of a comfortable home in England than that of Sir Henry Wotton, he acted a wise part in distrusting it, and we rejoice that the sacred name of Kepler was thus withheld from the long list of distinguished characters whom England has starved and dishonoured.' Notwithstanding his own pecuniary difficulties, the emperor Ferdinand, in 1622, ordered the whole of Kepler's arrears to be paid, including those due by Rudolph and Mathias, and he supplied also the necessary funds for completing the Rudolphine Tables. The wars of the reformation, however, interfered with this and with every peaceful pursuit. Kepler's residence at Linz was blockaded by the catholic peasantry, and his library sealed up by the Jesuits; and it was not till 1628 that the Rudolphine Tables, founded on the observations of Tycho, and his own laws, appeared at Ulm in a folio volume. The Grand Duke of Tuscany sent him a gold chain in testimony of his approbation of this great work, and Albert Wallenstein, duke of Friedland, munificently invited him to reside at Sagan, in Silesia. With the emperor's permission he accepted this offer, took his family to Sagan in 1629, and by the duke's influence obtained a professorship in the university of Rostock. Finding it difficult in this remote locality to obtain payment of his imperial pension, the arrears of which were 8,000 crowns, he went to the imperial assembly at Ratisbon, to obtain them. The vexation which the failure of this attempt occasioned, and the fatigue of his journey, threw him into a catarrhal fever, which was accompanied with an imposthume in his brain, the result of excessive study. Medical skill failed, and he died on 5th November, o. s., 1631, in the sixtieth year of his age. His remains were interred in St. Peter's churchyard, at Ratisbon, and on his tombstone was placed an inscription written by himself. This monument was destroyed in the wars which desolated Germany, and it was not till 1803 that the prince bishop of Constance erected a handsome monumental temple near the place of his interment, surmounted by a marble bust of Kepler. Between 1594 and 1630, Kepler published 33 separate works, and he left behind him 22 volumes of MSS., four of which contained his correspondence. The correspondence was published by Hansch, in 1718, but no part of the other MSS. now in the library of the Imperial Academy of Sciences at St. Petersburg, have been thought worthy of publication. See Mr. Drinkwater Bethune's Life of Kepler, and his life in Sir David Brewster's Martyrs of Science, second edit. [D.B.]

KEPPEL, AUGUSTUS, an English admiral, son of William, earl of Albemarle, distinguished in action with the French off Ushant, 1725-1786.

KERALIO, L. FELIX GUINEMENT DE, a Fr. savant, historian of the war between Russia and Turkey, 1731-1793.

KERCKRING, T., a Dutch anatomist, d. 1693.

KERESSTUNG, ALOYS J. DE, a Hungarian savant, au. of a 'Comp. of Univ. Hist.,' 1763-1825.

KERGUELIN-TREMAREC, YVES JOSEPH DE, a French navigator and naval hist., 1745-97.
 KERI, F. B., a Hungarian historian, d. 1769.
 KERI, J., a Hungarian philosopher, died 1685.
 KERL, J. C., a German organist, 17th century.
 KERN, VINC. DE, a Ger. surg. wr., 1760-1829.
 KERR, ROBERT, a surgeon of Edinburgh, distinguished as a naturalist and historian, died 1814.
 KERRICK, THOMAS, an English divine, au. of 'Observations on Gothic Architecture,' d. 1828.
 KERSAINT, ARMAND GUY SIMON, Count De, a French naval officer and public writer, attached to the Girondins, executed 1793.
 KERSEY, JOHN, an Eng. mathemat., 17th ct.
 KESSEL, JOHN VAN, a Flem. pain., 1626-1690.
 His son, FERDINAND, also a painter, 1660-1696.
 His nephew, NICHOLAS, same profes., 1684-1741.
 KESSEL, T. VAN, a Dutch engraver, b. 1620.
 KESTNER, C. W., a Ger. med. wr., 1694-1747.
 KETEL, C., a Dutch painter, 1548-1602.
 KETT, HENRY, an English divine, 1761-1825.
 KETT, WILLIAM, leader of an insurrection in the reign of Edward VI., defeat. by Warwick, 1549.
 KETILMUNDESON, MATTS, or MATHIAS, administrator of Swed. on the flight of Birger, 1317.
 KETTLEWELL, JOHN, a pious and learned div., au. of 'Measure of Chr. Obedience,' 1653-95.
 KEULEN, J. VAN, a D. pain., 1580, d. 1656.
 KEULEN, J. VAN, a D. map engr., last cent.
 KEULEN, L. VAN, a D. mathemat., d. 1610.
 KEYM, PAUL, a mystic writer, on the principles of Jacob Boehmen, one of a numerous class who have treated of mystic subjects scholastically, without the experience of intuition and temptation. He is briefly alluded to by Poiret in his epistle, De Auctoribus Mysticis, § 47. [E.R.]
 KEYSER, J. J., a Ger. antiquary, 1689-1743.
 KEYZER, A. and H. DE, D. painters, 17th ct.
 KHADIJAH, first wife of Mahomet, died 628.
 KHAIN-BEG, a pacha of Egypt, died 1522.
 KHAISANG, a Chinese emperor, 1281-1311.
 KHALED, an Arabian general, surnamed by Mahomet 'The Sword of God,' dist. 630-642.
 KHOSROU, king of Persia. See CHOSROES.
 KICKX, J., a Flem. botanist, 1772-1831.
 KIDD, SAMUEL, a divine and Oriental scholar, au. of 'Illustra. of Chinese Symbols,' 1801-1843.
 KIDDER, R., a learned prelate, died 1703.
 KIEFFER, J. D., a Fr. Orientalist, 1767-1838.
 KIEN-LONG, emperor of China in the time of Lord Macartney's embassy, a poet and patron of literature, born 1710, reigned 1735-1800.
 KIERINGS, A., a Dutch painter, 1590-1646.
 KIERNAN, G., a Swed. statesman, last cent.
 KIERNANDER, JOHN ZACHARIAH, a Swedish missionary to the East Indies, 1711-1799.
 KIESEWETTEN, CHRISTOPHER GOTTFRIED, a Ger. musician, dist. as a violin player, d. 1827.
 KIESEWETTER, J. G. C. CHRISTOPHER, a German philologist and philosopher of the school of Kant, died about the end of last century.
 KILBYE, R., an English divine, died 1617.
 KILLIGREW, CATHERINE, wife of Sir H. Killigrew, an ambassador, dist. for her skill in the learned languages and poetry, abt. 1580-1600.
 KILLIGREW, MARGARET, second wife of William Cavendish, duke of Newcastle, au. of the life of her husband, and 'Miscellanies,' d. 1673.
 KILLIGREW, WILLIAM, a courtier and dramatic writer of the reign of Charles II., 1600.

 His brother, THOMAS, a famous humourist favourite of Charles II., author of several and sometime political resident at Vienna, 1610.
 HENRY, a third brother, also a writer of and chaplain to James, duke of York, born date of his death unknown. ANNE, wife of latter, dist. for her beauty, her unblemished and her skill in hist. painting, au. of poems, &c.
 KILMAINE, C. J., a French general, 17th ct.
 KIMBER, ISAAC, a dissenting minister, &c. as a biographical and historical writer, 1692-1769.
 His son, EDWARD, author of a 'History of land,' and miscellaneous works, died 1769.
 KIMCHI, DAVID, a famous rabbi of Spanish high reputation among all denominations of scholars, as a Scripture commentator and grammarian, was born at Narbonne, where he passed the greater part of his life, towards the end of 12th century. His father, JOSEPH KIMCHI, flourished about 1160, and his brother, MORDECAI, were eminent Oriental scholars, and expositors of Scripture, to which character the latter added that of a moralist; but neither of them acquired reputation comparable with that of rabbi David, in respect in which he is held by the Jews is greatly enhanced by his defence of Maimonides, as arbitrator between the French and Spanish Jews in their philological works furnished Buxtorf with materials for his 'Thesaurus' and 'Lexicon'; his commentaries have been largely incorporated with the Bibles of Venice and Basle. For catalogue raisonné of his writings, which is in a Talmudic Dictionary, see the 'Bibliotheca braica' of John Ch. Wolf, published at Hamburg 1715-1733. Kimchi died in Provence at an advanced old age, 1240.
 KING, EDWARD, a youthful poet, who drowned on his passage to Ireland in 1637, whose fate is cel. by Milton in his poem of Lycidas.
 KING, EDWARD, a biblical critic and antiquary, author of 'Munimenta Antiqua,' 'Remarks on Signs of the Times,' 'Hymns,' &c., 1724-1800.
 KING, GREGORY, an engraver and heraldic painter, author of 'Natural and Political Observations and Conclusions upon the State and Condition of England,' and distinguished for the he took in state ceremonials, 1648-1712.
 KING, JOHN, D.D., a controversialist of the Church of England, 1652-1732. His son, the same name, a physician, 1696-1738.
 KING, JOHN, a learned prelate, distinguished as a preacher and speaker in the Star Chamber about 1559-1621. His son, HENRY, chaplain to Charles I., and dean of Rochester, author of 'Sermons and Poems,' 1591-1669. JOHN, brother of the latter, a dignitary of the church, and author of 'Sermons,' &c., died 1639.
 KING, JOHN GLEN, an eccles. antiq., d. 1810.
 KING, PETER, nephew of the illustrious John Locke, distinguished for his ecclesiastical learning, born 1669, lord chancellor 1725, died 1733.
 KING, PETER, great grandson of the preceding, distinguished for his speeches and writings on subjects of political economy, 1775-1833.
 KING, CAPTAIN PHILIP PARKER, made several voyages (1817-1822) to the coast of Australia and added greatly to our knowledge of the tropical portions of that continent.

NG, RICHARD, a polemical writer, 1749-1810.
 NG, SIR RICH., a naval officer, 1771-1834.
 NG, RUFUS, an Am. statesman, 1755-1827.
 NG, THOMAS, a cel. dramatic wr. and actor, or of 'Love at First Sight,' &c., 1730-1805.
 NG, WILLIAM, LL.D., a humorous writer of remarkable fertility in the reign of Queen Anne, as for his satires on the characters and of the day, 1663-1712.

NG, WILLIAM, an elegant writer, 1685-1763.
 NG, DR. WILLIAM, successively dean of St.
 Peter's, bishop of Derry, and archbishop of Dublin, was born at Antrim in Ireland, but descended from a Scottish family, in 1650, and commenced his career, as a divine, as chaplain to the archbishop of Dublin in 1676. He died in 1729, and is now chiefly remembered for his treatise, 'De Origine
 M' on the origin of evil, which produced animations from Bayle and Leibnitz, which belie, in fact, together with his 'Discourse on Predication,' &c., to a widely-extended controversy on the attributes of God, continued through many years at the commencement of last century, and including the names of the most eminent churchmen and freethinkers of the day. Archbishop Ke did not reply to the censures of Bayle in his lifetime; but, after his death, answers were found in S., and were embodied in the notes upon a new edition of the work, published by Edmund L., who was opposed to him on his fundamental principle of analogy. The endeavour of the Archbishop had been to reconcile the existence of evil with the goodness of God, without supposing a co-existence of evil co-eternal with Deity; and his method of argument was to represent the divine attributes as essentially different from the moral attributes of the human mind, which are used as their basis; while the opposite writers held them to be the same, but infinitely greater. The key to this controversy will be found in Clissold's lectures on the 'Connection between Theology, Psychology, and Physiology.'

INGSBOROUGH, EDWARD, Viscount, a fellow of the Antiquarian Society, an. of a valuable work on 'The Antiquities of Mexico,' 1795-1837.

INGSMILL, ANDREW, a puritan divine and moralist, 1538-1569. His relation, THOMAS, professor of Hebrew at Oxford, from 1569 to 1579.

INGSTON, ELIZABETH CHUDLEIGH, duchess, a profligate woman of the court of George II., 1720-1788.

INNAIRD, THE HON. DOUGLAS, known as a friend of Byron, and a patron of letters, 1786-1830.

INSKI, F. J., an Austrian general, 1739-1805.

IPING, N. M., a Swed. trav., 1630-1667.

IPPLING, THOMAS, dean of Peterborough, a professor of divinity at Cambridge, author of a pamphlet on the Thirty-nine articles, &c., d. 1822.

IPPING, H., a German philologist, died 1678.

IPPIS, ANDREW, D.D., an English Socinian minister, kn. as a biographical and miscellaneous writer, founder of the 'New Annual Register,' and author of a 'History of Knowledge, Learning, and Literature in Great Britain.' The best known of his works is the 'Biographia Britannica,' 1725-1795.

KIRBY, JOHN JOSHUA, an artist patronised by George III., author of 'The Perspective of Architecture,' and father of the celebrated Mrs.
 Hemmer, 1716-1774.

KIRBY, REV. WILLIAM, an eminent entomologist, was born in Suffolk in 1759. He died in 1850. He was educated at Cambridge, and in the year 1782, was admitted into holy orders. In 1796, he became rector of Barham, having done the duties of curate of that parish for fourteen years. He first studied botany, and while collecting the plants of the neighbourhood in which he lived, he had his mind directed to the study of entomology. A little 'lady bird' or 'lady cow' (Coccinella 22 punctata), one day attracted his attention on the window, and his admiration was so much excited, that he began to collect insects with as much zeal as he had already done plants.
 He has published many valuable papers and memoirs on various entomological subjects, in the 'Linnæan Transactions' and 'Zoological Journal'
 —but his great fame as an entomologist is derived from his 'Monographia Apum Angliæ,' or History of English Bees—his 'Introduction to Entomology,' in conjunction with Mr. Spence, and his description of the insects in the 'Fauna boreali Americana' of Sir John Richardson. The first of these works at once stamped him as one of the best entomologists of the day; and had he written nothing else, his fame would have been established.
 The second has been translated into German and French, and has gone through six or seven editions in this country, and combines the popular form with great scientific merit. Mr. Kirby conscientiously performed his duties as a clergyman;
 he was beloved by his parishioners, and enjoyed the esteem and friendship of most of the naturalists of his own country, as well as of the continent of Europe and America. He was honorary president of the Entomological Society of London, fellow of the Royal, Linnæan, Zoological and Geological Societies, and honorary member of several societies abroad. His life was prolonged to the venerable age of ninety-one. [W.B.]

KIRCH, GOTTFRIED, a celebrated German astronomer, 1639-1710. His wife, MARY MARGARET WINCKELMANN, assistant of her husband, and author of astronomical works, 1670-1720. CHRIS-TIAN FREDERIC, son of the preceding, an astronomical observer and author, 1694-1740.

KIRCHER, ATHANASIUS, generally called 'Father Kircher,' was a Jesuit of great learning and varied abilities, born at Geysen, near Fulda, in Germany, 1601; died at Rome, in the situation of a professor of Hebrew and mathematics, 1680.
 His accomplishments seem to have ranged from the lowest to the highest point of the scale of human ingenuity; including many useful discoveries in his experimental philosophy, and some of the most abstruse subjects of inquiry in his speculations.
 His works, which were written in Latin, consist of thirty-six volumes, twenty-two of which are in folio, and nearly all the rest in 4to. In such a mass of writing and learned research, it may be supposed there is a good deal of trifling import;
 but in his case, as in others of a similar kind, the extent of his labours has been the greatest obstacle to the due appreciation of them. Kircher's favourite subject was the hieroglyphics of Egypt, and the school of Champollion glory over his dark guesses, as so many detected crimes against their new canon of criticism. It may be said, however, that he made the best he could of his traditional and other materials used scholastically; collecting with much labour, and putting together with marvellous ingenuity, the scattered notices which he found in ancient writers, and sparing no pains in making his own observations. Besides his literary and professional labours, Kircher travelled in China. He also collected a valuable museum of antiquities, which he bequeathed to the college of Rome. [E.R.]

KIRCHER, CONRAD, a Germ. divine, 17th ct.

KIRCHER, H., a Ger. missionary, 1608-1676.

KIRKALDY, W., a partizan of Mary Stuart, queen of Scots, executed at Edinburgh 1573.

KIRKLAND, T., a medical author, 1721-1798.

KIRKPATRICK, JAS., an East Indian officer, known for his works in Oriental learning, d. 1812.

KIRMANI, an Arabian author, 14th century.

KIRSTEN, KIRCHSTEIN, or KIRSTENIUS, G., a German physician and botanist, 1613-1660.

KIRSTEN, M., a philologist, 1620-1678.

KIRSTEN, PETER, an Arabian scholar, physician to Queen Christina, b. in Prussia 1577-1640.

KIRWAN, RICHARD, born in Galway in the middle of the last century, died 1812. A distinguished chemist, was originally, it is said, destined for the bar, but ultimately prosecuted chemistry and mineralogy. He published a work on the 'Temperatures of Different Latitudes,' 'Elements of Mineralogy,' 'Essay on the Analysis of Mineral Substances,' 'Essay on Phlogiston,' 'Essay on Geology,' 'on Manures,' &c. It was his work on 'Phlogiston' which gained him most notoriety. It was distinguished by the able defence which he made of a bad cause; but which was thoroughly refuted by Lavoisier, who succeeded in banishing for ever this myth from the field of chemistry. He was undoubtedly the first chemist who appreciated the importance of inorganic substances as manures, and who advocated a knowledge of the constitution of minerals as being the only criterion of their true position in nature. [R.D.T.]

KIRWAN, W. B., an Irish divine, celebrated for his pulpit oratory, dean of Killala after his conversion to protestantism, 1754-1805.

KITCHENER, WM., an eccentric physician, author of 'The Cook's Oracle,' &c., 1775-1827.

KITE, CHARLES, a medical author, died 1811.

KLAPROTH, HEINRICH JULIUS VON, son of the famous chemist of that name, distinguished as an Oriental scholar and critic, was born at Berlin in 1783. He abandoned the pursuits of his father, after making considerable progress in them, for the fascinating studies connected with the history and antiquities of the East; and as early as 1802, commenced the 'Asiatic Magazine' at Dresden. In 1805 he accompanied a Russian embassy to China; and in the three years, 1807-1810, was employed by the Academy of St. Petersburg in exploring the Caucasian mountains. On returning to Germany in 1812, he was appointed professor of the Asiatic languages at Berlin. In 1815 he visited Paris with the allies, and was so charmed with its attractions, that France became his adopted country, and the remainder of his days were devoted to the propagation of Asiatic literature, including the organization of the Asiatic Society, in that capital. The works of Klaproth embrace nearly all the subjects of interest connected with Eastern learning,—races, languages, monuments, and general history. We may mention among those of his, a Criticism of Champollion, a Memoir on Chemistry translated from the Chinese, a Dissertation on the Roots of the Semitic Languages, his editorial labours on the 'Asiatic Journal,' &c. He died at Paris 1835.

KLAPROTH, MARTIN HENRY, born at Wergede, 1743, died 1817. A student in various laboratories at Quedlinburg, Hanover, &c., without any very distinguished instructor, Klaproth became in his twenty-eighth year assistant to Valentine Rose, who, however, dying in a few months, he established a laboratory and class of his own at Berlin, and afterwards, when a university was established, he became attached to it. His was one of incessant labour, and he left volumes, with materials for a seventh, consisting of upwards of 200 analyses of mineral species executed with such accuracy, that his results even to the present day, with all the advantages of subsequent improvements, are quoted as models. He was the discoverer of uranium, zirconia, titanic acid, &c. (although anticipated by Gregor) strontian, &c. (anticipated by Crawford and Hope) tellurium, &c. (oxide of cerium, which he termed ochroita). His contributions to processes of analytic chemistry were invaluable; probably no chemist having developed more of the characters of inorganic substances. Klaproth was modest, generous, unselfish, and exhibited the benevolent tendency of his character, by the honourable care which he bestowed on the education of the children of Valentine Rose. He was also distinguished by his religious principles, which directed his conduct, and enabled him to avoid superstition on the one side, and infidelity on the other. [R.D.]

KLASS, FRED. CHR., a Ger. landscape painter, d. abt. 1800. His brother, CHRISTIAN, d. 1781.

KLAUBER, J. S., a Ger. engraver, 1753-1818.

KLEBER, JEAN BAPTISTE, a famous general of the French revolution, distinguished for his services in Egypt, where he was assassinated 1800.

KLEIN, B., a German composer, 1794-1833.

KLEIN, E. F., a Ger. juriconsult, 1743-1818.

KLEIN, F. A., a Ger. theologian, 1793-1818.

KLEIN, G. M., a Ger. philosopher, died 1818.

KLEIN, J. T., a Ger. naturalist, 1685-1755.

KLEIST, E. C. VON, a Ger. poet, 1715-1772.

KLEIST, H. VON, a German poet, 1776-1811.

KLEIST VON NOLLENDORF, COUNT FRIEDRICH.

H. FERDINAND EMILIUS, a distinguished Prussian general, 1763-1823.

KLENKER, J. F., a Ger. theologian, 1749-1818.

KLINGEMANN, A., a Ger. dramatist, b. 1749.

KLINGENSTERN, SAMUEL, a Swed. philosopher and mathematician, au. of Memoirs upon Optics, an edition of Euclid, &c., 1689-1753.

KLINGER, F. M. VON, a Rus. dram., 1753-1818.

KLINGSTET, C. G., a Rus. pain., 1657-1718.

KLINTBERG, C., a Swed. financier, 1767-1818.

KLOCKER, D., a German painter, 1629-1718.

KLOPPSTOCK, FRIEDRICH, a German was highly celebrated till the public taste received a new direction from the more brilliant genius of the greater versatility and ease of Göthe. He was born in 1724, at Quedlinburg, in Prussia. After receiving a regular education, studying theology, he abandoned all professional views, and devoted himself entirely to literary

He left his residence from place to place, residing a considerable time at Copenhagen, whither he had been invited with a pension; and the last years of his life were passed at Hamburg, where he died in 1803. His greatest work, the epic called 'The Messiah,' was published in 1748, but not completed till 1773. Its strained dignity, its overflow of feeling, and its artificiality of diction, have long ceased to receive the admiration which was once lavished on them. His studies, especially those of a religious cast, are still much valued by his countrymen, in spite of the frequent obscurity. He made himself known especially also by philological writings. [W.S.]

LOPSTOCK, MARGARET, wife of the preceding, author of a tragedy entitled 'The Death of Abel,' and 'Letters from the Dead,' d. 1758.

LOSE, F. J., an English composer, d. 1830.

LOTZ, C. A., a German critic, 1738-1771.

LUBER, J. L., a Ger. juriconsult, 1762-1840.

LUGEL, G. S., a Ger. mathema., 1739-1812.

LUIT, A., a Dutch historian, 1735-1807.

LUPFEL, E., a Ger. theologian, 1733-1811.

LUTHE, D., a Hun. astronomer, 1783-1825.

LAPP, G. C., a Ger. theologian, 1753-1825.

LAPTON, GEO., an Eng. pain., 1698-1788.

LARSKI, S., a Polish savant, 1700-1775.

LEIP, CHR. H., a Germ. painter, 1748-1825.

LELLER, SIR GODFREY, a famous portrait painter, who was born at Lubeck about 1648, and secured great distinction in England in the reigns of Charles II., James II., and William III. Many of his portraits are at Hampton Court. He died in prosperous circumstances 1723.

LEJENIN, J. B., a Russian poet, 1742-91.

LEIB, REV. WILLIAM, distinguished for his exertions in the cause of negro emancipation, was born in 1800. He arrived in Jamaica in 1824, to labour as teacher of a baptist school, and in 1829 became pastor of the mission church at Falmouth. His efforts to improve their condition secured the gratitude and affection of the poor negroes, he provoked the jealousy and hostility of the planters. After suffering many indignities in Jamaica, he returned to England to advocate his favourite cause, and his heart-stirring appeals in favour of total emancipation no doubt had their due of influence in inducing the British legislature to pass the great measure of 1833. He afterwards returned to Jamaica, and died of yellow fever in 1845.

NIGHT, E., a comic actor, 1774-1826.

NIGHT, G., a speculative philosopher, last c.

NIGHT, HENRY GALLY, M.P., distinguished as a man of taste and letters, author of 'Ecclesiastical Architecture of Italy,' 'Architectural Tour in Normandy,' and many works in classical and popular literature, 1786-1846.

NIGHT, RICHARD PAYNE, a gentleman of fortune, distinguished for his taste, his knowledge of classical literature and antiquities, and as a patron of the arts, author of 'A Discourse on the Shipwreck of Priapus, in Sicily,' 'An Essay on the Greek Alphabet,' &c., 1750-1824.

NIGHT, S., a learned divine, died 1746.

NIGHT, TH., a dramatic writer, died 1820.

NIGHT, TH. AND., brother of R. P. Knight, died in veg. physiology and horticulture, 1758-1838.

NIGHTON, HY., an old chronicler, 15th ct.

KNIGHTON, SIR W., a physician and courtier, finally private secretary to George IV., d. 1836.

KNITTEL, F. A., a Ger. minister, 1721-1792.

KNOES, O. A., a Swedish savant, died 1804.

KNOLLES, R., an English historian, d. 1610.

KNOLLES, SIR ROBERT, a famous warrior of the reign of Edward III., called by French historians Canolle; he is said to have built Rochester bridge with his spoils acquired in France, 1317-1407.

KNOLLIS, SIR F., an Eng. statesman, d. 1596.

KNORR, G. W., a German engraver, 1705-61.

KNORR-A-RUSENORTH, CHRISTIAN, a famous Oriental scholar and cabalistic wr., 1636-89.

KNOTT, ED., a learned Jesuit, 1580-1656.

KNOWLER, W., an English divine, 1699-1767.

KNOWLES, T., a learned divine, 1723-1802.

KNOWLTON, T., an antiquarian, 1692-1782.

KNOX, JOHN, a tradesman of London, author of 'A Systematic View of Scotland,' written from his own observations, which had for their object the settlement of new towns in connection with a herring fishery on the N. E. coast of Scotland, d. 1790.

KNOX, JOHN, was born at Gifford in East Lothian in 1505. In his boyhood he attended the grammar school of Haddington, and in the year 1522 he was sent by his father to the university of Glasgow, and the name of Johannes Knox stands among the incorporati of that year. His preceptor was Mair, or Major, at that time professor of philosophy and theology, who removed in the following year to St. Andrews, whither Knox seems to have followed him, and where he taught the current philosophy. Before his twenty-fifth year Knox was ordained to the priesthood. But his examination of popish theology as usually taught did not satisfy him, and from the writings of Jerome and Augustine he turned to the study of the Scriptures themselves. By degrees he renounced scholastic theology as useless and unsound; and about the year 1535, his mind began that decided process of scrutiny and repudiation which ended in his withdrawal from St. Andrews, and the vengeful arm of Cardinal Beaton, and in his formal avowal of protestantism about the year 1542. He soon found an asylum at Langniddrie, in the house of Hugh Douglas, to whose sons he acted for a short time as tutor. The principles of the reformation had now been spreading for some time—the stake had been consuming its victims—the murder of Cardinal Beaton had produced an immense excitement, the conspirators still held the castle of St. Andrews, and as it was reckoned a place of safety, Knox and his pupils took refuge in it at Easter, in the year 1547. Here he taught and exhorted, and being called to the ministry, exercised also the functions of a Christian pastor, and solemnly dispensed for the first time in public in Scotland the ordinance of the Lord's Supper, after the primitive and protestant mode. But in the month of June, a French fleet came to the assistance of the Regent Arran, invested the castle, and forced it to capitulate. Knox and some others were transported to Rouen, confined on board the galleys, and loaded with chains. After a severe and unhealthy imprisonment of nineteen months, he was liberated in February, 1549, and repaired to England, was at once recommended to the English council, and sent by Cranmer to preach in Berwick. For two years he continued there, labouring with characteristic ardour, exposing the delusions of popery with no unsparing hand, and gaining hosts of converts to the cause of the reformation. Tonstall, bishop of Durham, cited him to Newcastle, and the undaunted Knox delivered a public vindication in presence of the bishop and the learned priests of his cathedral, and so increased his fame, that the privy council in London appointed him one of King Edward's chaplains, with a salary of £40 a-year. He was consulted also about some changes in the Book of Common Prayer, and general form of service for the English Church. His plain speech in the north of England made him many enemies, so that he was summoned to appear at London, where he had already declined a living, and commanded to vindicate himself; and he was there in full enjoyment of the royal patronage, when King Edward died, 6th July, 1553. After the accession of Mary he left the capital, preached in various parts of the country, and was married at Berwick to Marjory Bowes, a young lady to whom he had been long and warmly attached. Finding himself in increasing jeopardy, he left the kingdom and landed at Dieppe, on the 20th January, 1554; set out the next month and travelled through France to Switzerland, was cordially received by the leading divines of the Helvetic churches, returned to Dieppe in order to gain information from his native land; went back to Geneva and won the friendship of Calvin; was again at Dieppe to learn still more of his family, and the cause of truth in Scotland; took charge for a brief time of a disturbed church at Frankfort, revisited Geneva, and recrossed the channel in 1555. After visiting his wife at Berwick, he preached in Edinburgh and various parts of the country, patronised by many of the nobility and gentry; dispensed the Lord's

[Knox's Pulpit at St. Andrews.]

Supper in Ayrshire, the region of the Scottish Lollards; was in consequence of his zealous labours ordered to sist himself before a convention of the clergy, in the church of the Blackfriars at Edinburgh, but the summons was set aside, and the 'diet deserted.' Being about this time chosen pastor of the English congregation at Geneva with his family departed for Switzerland, remained in Geneva for the two following years. The English version, usually called the Geneva Bible, was made at this time by the English exiles, and here, too, Knox blew 'The First of the Trumpet against the Monstrous Regiment of Women.' A series of changes favourable to the reformation had in the meanwhile been made in Scotland, the protestants had multiplied, the prospect of coming persecution had banded them together, and Knox, on an invitation, landed at Leith 2d May, 1559. It was soon after it known to the terrified priests that the ardent reformer had returned, that he was proclaimed an outlaw. Joining his brethren, he repaired to Perth, and preached zealously against idolatry, while the chicanery of the Queen Regent, and the accidental folly of a priest so enraged the mob, that they pulled down several religious houses and churches, overthrew the altars, and defaced the pictures and images. This tumult, the origin of which has been misrepresented, Knox distinctly ascribes to 'rascal multitude.' The Queen Regent mustered her host to quell these riots; and the protestant leaders, aware of her ultimate design, raised an army in self-defence, but a treaty prevented a hostile engagement. The 'lords of the congregation' were now alarmed into activity. Knox went down to St. Andrews, and soon, as the effect of his instructions, the popish worship was abolished, and the church stripped at once of its idolatrous symbols. This example was quickly but not as peacefully followed in many other parts of the kingdom; and so there perished many valuable works of art, which had been preserved by their application to superstitious purposes. When his party had obtained temporary possession of Edinburgh, Knox was chosen minister of the city, but he retired with the protestants. On the approach of the regent, made an excursion, and preached in many of the larger towns. After being formally ordained at Edinburgh in 1560, he pursued with ceaseless zeal the cause of reformation: a Confession had been already drawn up, a Book of Discipline was added to the organization of the church was so far made that the first General Assembly of the Church of Scotland was held at Edinburgh, on the 1st of December, 1560. No sooner had Queen Mary arrived in Scotland, than she had a long interview with the stern reformer, after a sermon which offended her. This was followed by several meetings, but to no purpose. Knox's sermons at this time were bold, defiant, and mighty; his tongue was a match for Mary's sceptre. He was accused of high treason, but acquitted in spite of all the malignant influence of the queen and court. After being about three years a widower, he married in March, 1564, Mary, daughter of Lord Ochiltree, and connected with the royal blood of Scotland. His dispute with the abbot of Crossraguel about this period is familiar to most readers. The reformer perished amidst growing difficulties—the marriage of the queen with Darnley, and its melancholy consequences—the attempt to restore popery—the assassination of Rizzio—his own virtual ment, and the queen's refusal of permission to return to Edinburgh. Darnley was overthrown—Mary wedded Bothwell—soon resigned in favour of her son, appointed the earl of Murray regent during his minority, and fled to England. The good regent was assassinated, but Knox kept his post at Edinburgh. Yet the reverse of death, and his own multifarious anxieties and labours during these critical times preyed on his constitution, and in October, 1570, he struck with apoplexy. In the course of a few weeks he was able to preach again, but not with his wonted vigour. In the meantime the queen's party gained strength by the weakness of Knox, the abilities of Maitland, and the defection of Kircaldy of Grange; and when the civil war broke out he retired to St. Andrews, still living on by tongue, pen, and counsel, the great support to which his life had been devoted. During the cessation of arms he returned to Edinburgh, and shone out in his pristine style when, on the morning of the massacre of St. Bartholomew, he denounced in glowing terms Charles IX. of France. His illness, however, soon seized his emaciated frame, and after a very brief period of increasing vitality, he died 24th November, 1572. Two days afterwards his body was interred in the churchyard of St. Giles. The funeral was attended by an immense concourse of weeping and afflicted people, as well as of the resident nobility, and the Regent Morton pronounced over him the well-known eulogium, 'There lies he who never shed the face of man.' Knox was of small stature, and by no means of a robust constitution. His character has been portrayed very differently by various writers. Indiscriminate eulogy would here as much out of place as sweeping censure would be unjust. The reformer was cast upon an age of violence and change, and he needed a despondent energy. Elegance and delicacy of language were not common at the period, and would have been crushed in the tumult. Knox wrote his honest thoughts in transparent plainness, in terse and homely simplicity, and with less of uncouthness and solecism than might be imagined. He was obliged to appear not like a scholar in the graceful folds of an academic toga, but as a warrior clad in mail, and armed at all points for self-defence and aggression. It must have been a mighty mind that could leave its impress on an entire nation, and on succeeding ages. He was inflexible in maintaining what he deemed to be right, and intrepid in defending it. His life was menaced several times, but he moved not from the path of duty. The genial affections of friendship, and kindred, often stirred his heart amidst all his sternness and decision. In deportment, he resembled the hills of his native country, rough with their tall and splintered precipices, with shaggy sides, and wild sublimity of aspect, but often conceal in their bosom green valleys, and streams, and luxuriant pastures. [J.E.]

KNOX, ROBERT, an East Indian officer, an author of 'History of the Island of Ceylon,' pub. 1681.

KNOX, VICESIMUS, a clergyman of the Church of England, distinguished as a theological writer and essayist, was born in 1752; and, though educated at Oxford, received his degree of D.D. from Philadelphia. He was considered an eloquent preacher, and much in vogue for preaching charity sermons, &c.; died 1821. His son, Rev. THOMAS KNOX, D.D., succeeded him as master of Tunbridge grammar school, and in the rectories of Rumwell, and Ramsden Crays, in Essex. Died suddenly, 1843.

KNUPFER, N., a German painter, 1603-1660.

KNUTSSON, TORHEL, grand marshal and senator of Sweden, beheaded at Stockholm 1305.

KNUTZEN, or KNUZEN, MATHIAS, a German fanatic and atheist, in great notoriety about 1674.

KNUTZEN, M., a Ger. philosopher, 1713-51.

KOB, J., a German philosopher, 1598-1661.

KOCH, C. W., a native of Strasburgh, distinguished for his researches in middle age antiquities, and author of 'The Revolutions of Europe,' 1737-1813.

KOECHER, H. F., a Ger. Orient., 1747-1792.

KOECK, P., a Flemish engraver, 1490-1550.

KOEGLER, J., a Jesuit missionary, 1680-1746.

KOEHLER, J. B., a German critic, 1742-1802.

KOEHLER, JOHN DAVID, a learned German, author of laborious works in history and archaeology, 1684-1755. JOHN TOBIAS, one of his fifteen sons, a learned numismatist, 1720-1767.

KOENIG, E., a naturalist of Basle, 1658-1731.

His son, of the same name, a mathematician, 1678-1752.

KOENIG, F., a Ger. mechanician, died 1833.

KOENIG, G. M., a German savant, author of a Latin Biographical Dictionary, &c., 1616-1699.

KOENIG, H. G., a Ger. bibliopole, 1697-1757.

KOENIG, J. G., a dist. Ger. botanist, 1728-85.

KOENIG, S. H., a Swiss theologian, 1670-1750.

His son, DANIEL, translator of Arbuthnot on Ancient Coins, killed by a mob at the age of twenty-two, 1725-1747. SAMUEL, brother of the preceding, prof. of philosophy and ethics, 1712-57.

KOEPPER, J. H. J., a Ger. Hellenist, 1755-91.

KOERNER, CHR. GODFREY, a literary savant of Saxony, kn. as a wr. on æsthetics, 1756-1831.

KOERNER, THEODORE, son of the preceding, celebrated as a lyrical poet and dramatic author, and for his patriotism and courage as a soldier, born 1788, shot on the plains of Leipzig when fighting against the French, 1812.

KOES, FREDERIC, a Danish astr., 1684-1766.

KOETS, R., a Flemish painter, 1655-1725.

KOHL, J. P., a German historian, 1698-1778.

KOIALOWICZ, ALBERT, a learned Polish Jesuit, au. of a 'History of Lithuania,' 1609-1674.

KOLBE, or KOLBEN, PETER, a German astronomer, author of a 'Description of the Cape of Good Hope,' 1675-1726.

KOLLER, BARON F., an Aus. gen., 1767-1826.

KOLLMAN, A. F. C., a Ger. com., 1756-1829.

KONIGSMARK, MARIA AURORA, countess of, celebrated for her share in the political transactions of the period, as the mistress of Augustus II., king of Poland, and mother, by the king, of the famous Marshal Saxe, 1678-1768.

KORTHOLT, CHRISTIAN, a Lutheran divine, flourished in Germany, 1633-1694. His grandson, of the same name, also a theologian, 1709-1751.

KOSCIUSKO. THADDEUS KOSCIUSKO was born in 1756, of a noble but not wealthy Lithuanian family. He was educated for a military life; and, while young, he went to America with other volunteers, and served the United States in their war of independence against England. He acquired high credit there for skill and courage, and rose to the rank of general in the American army. At the end of this war, Kosciusko returned to Poland. When the crowned conspirators of Prussia, Russia, and Austria, attacked Poland in 1792, 1793, and effected the second partition of that unhappy country, Kosciusko signalized himself at the head of one of the national armies, until the treacherous cowardice of the Polish king Stanislaus paralyzed all the efforts of the defenders of the land. Kosciusko now became a refugee; but when the Poles rose against their oppressors in 1794, Kosciusko returned to serve his country. He was rapturously welcomed. The Poles made him their generalissimo, and their dictator. Never did a nation trust a great man more generously; and never was a trust more nobly and disinterestedly fulfilled. He maintained order; he strove to ameliorate the condition of the serfs. He summoned an assembly of representatives of the nobles, and of representatives of the cities. And he gave a brilliant example of an enthusiastic lover of liberty, who was stained by no deed of violence or injustice, and who was never hurried by democratic favour into forgetfulness of the shortcomings, as well as of the capabilities, of the age and nation in which he lived. In the field, Kosciusko struggled long and gallantly against adverse fortune and overwhelming numbers. Simple in his habits, unaffected in his manners, amiable and mild to his comrades and associates, chivalrously bold in danger, and sternly resolute when duty required, he was the idol of his soldiers' hearts; and he commanded esteem even from his foes.—After many alternations of success, Kosciusko was at last wounded and taken prisoner by the Russians at the fatal battle of Maciowice (1st October, 1794), and the complete downfall of his country soon followed. He was for some time kept in prison by the Russians; but, in 1796, the emperor Paul released him, and offered him rank in the Russian armies, which was declined. Kosciusko passed some time in the United States and in England, and he then lived in retirement near Paris. He saw through the selfish ambition of Napoleon, and refused to become a soldier of fortune under the French Eagle. In 1814, he exerted himself to obtain for Poland, from the Russian emperor Alexander, a free constitution like the English, an amnesty for all exiles, and the institution of schools for the education of the serfs. Disappointed in the hopes which he formed respecting Alexander's treatment of his country, Kosciusko retired into complete privacy at Soleure in Switzerland, where he closed his unstained and noble life in 1817.

[E.S.C.]

KOSEGARTEN, B. C., a Dutch theologian, 1722-1803. His son, LOUIS THEOBALD, a dramatic writer and translator, 1758-1818.

KOSTER, H., an English traveller, 1793-1820.

KOSTROW, E. L., a Russian poet, died 1796.

KOTTER, CHR., a German prophet, 1585-1647.

KOTZEBUE, AUGUST VON, born at Weimar in 1761, became an advocate. In 1781 he received the first of a series of appointments under the Russian government. Public business divided his time with literary composition, especially dramatic: he was for two years poet of the court theatre at Vienna; and his place of residence was changed several times, partly through feuds into which he became entangled with Göthe and his adherents. In 1817, he received from the Russian court an appointment more lucrative than honorable, being charged with the duty of communicating to his employers information as to the state of opinion in Germany. He aggravated the popularity of this employment by scoffing at liberal and constitutional opinions in a weekly paper, which he conducted; and, in 1819, Sand, an ardent student, seeking him out in Mannheim, did violence to him, thinking that he was doing good service to the fatherland by assassinating the Russian spy. Besides a number of other works, Kotzebue wrote ninety-eight plays. The best of these are to be found among the comedies, some of which have lively wit and exact observation of manners; but he is best known in England, and not to the credit of German literature, by some of his serious plays, such as 'The Stranger,' and 'Lovers' Vows.' His countrymen would be very unwilling to have his productions accepted as fair specimens of dramatic poetry.

KOTZEBUE, OTTO VON, son of the celebrated German dramatist, went with Krusenstern as midshipman in a voyage to Japan in 1803, the object of which was to establish a trade between Russia and that country. In 1815 he sailed from Plymouth on a voyage round the world as lieutenant in command of a Russian ship of 180 tons, and made some important discoveries on the north-west coast of America. Disabled by an accident, he abandoned the idea of penetrating the Polar Sea, and returned home in 1818. He was captain of a ship of war in the same service, and made a second voyage in 1824-1826, and covered some islands in the Pacific. Accounts of both voyages have been published; of the first by himself; of the second by Escholtz, the well-known naturalist who accompanied him.

KOULNEFT, J., a Russian gen., 1773-1818.

KOUMAS, C. M., a philosopher, mathematician and gram., b. in Thessaly 1775, d. at Trieste 1818.

KOURAKIN, BORIS IVANOVITCH, a Russian diplomat and ambassador to Paris and London, 1677-1752.

KOURAKIN, PRINCE, a Russian diplomat, 1752-1818.

KOUTOUSOFF, SMOLENSKOI, field-marshal of Russia, distinguished in the late war, 1745-1818.

KRACHENINNIKOW, STEPHEN, a Russian naturalist, and writer on Kamtschatka, 1712-1781.

KRAFFT, J. C., an Austrian designer, 1764-1818.

KRAFFT, J. L., a Flemish engraver, lived in the 18th century.

KRAFT, GEORGE WOLFGANG, a German physician, distinguished as an experimental philosopher, 1701-1754. His son, W. LOUIS, astronomer, 1743-1814.

KRAHE, L., a Flemish painter, died 1790.

KRANACH, LUCAS SUNDER of, a distinguished painter, time of Luther and Melancthon, v. portraits by him are still in existence, 1475-1551. His son, of the same name, also a painter, d. 1571.

KRANTZ, A., a German historian, died 1818.

KRANTZ, G., an ecclesiastical historian, 1660-1731.

KRASICKI, IGNATIUS, prince bishop of Poland, born 1735, died at Berlin 1801.

KRAUS, G. M., a German painter and engraver, 1745-1818.

KRAUS, J. ULRIC, a German engraver, 1645-1718.

KRAUS, M., a German philologist, 1526-1606.

KRAUSE, CHARLES CHRISTIAN FREDERICK, born at Eisenberg 6th May, 1781, died on ember, 1832. Mention of this ingenious and profound metaphysician is introduced here, with the simple view of recommending to the English student one of the most judicious successors of Kant. His writings are altogether fertile. In so far as the writer is aware, he is the first who has thoroughly supplanted the old division of the mind into faculties, by proposing to examine it under its normal modes of action—as it thinks, feels, and wills. In itself a great reform, suggested perhaps by Kant's scheme of three Critiques; Krause has many other claims that would happily be recognized by a thoughtful Englishman. [J.P.N.]

KAUSE, F., a German painter, 1706-1754.
 KAUSE, G. F., a Prus. officer, 1768-1836.
 KAUSE, G. F., a Ger. juriconsult, 1718-84.
 KAUSE, J. C., a Prussian historian, 1749-99.
 KAUSE, J. C. H., a Prus. savant, 1757-1808.
 KAUSE, J. G., a Ger. philologist, 1684-1736.
 KAUSE, KRAUSS, or KRAUS, J. BAPTISTE, earned prelate of the Benedictine order, 1700-62.
 KAUSE, S. A., a Dutch painter, 1760-1825.
 KAY, BARON DE, a native of Hungary, dist. general in the Austrian service, died 1801.
 KEBEL, T. F., a Ger. geographer, 1729-93.
 KEUTZER, RODOLPH, a celebrated musical composer and performer on the violin, 1767-1831.
 KEYSIG, F. L., a Ger. physician, 1770-1839.
 KUDENER, BOURCARD ALEX. CONSTANCE, son De, a Russian diplomatist, 1744-1802. His daughter, JULIETTE VIETINGHOFF, Baroness De Rudener, authoress of 'Valerie,' a romance founded on her own life, and afterwards celebrated as a prophetess, time of Napoleon, 1766-1824.
 KUMMACHER, F. A., a rel. wr., 1768-1845.
 KUNITZ, J. G., a German compiler, 1728-96.
 KUSE, CH., a German savant, 1753-1827.
 KUSEMARK, BARON DE, a Prussian general, afterwards political ambas. to France, died 1821.
 KUSINSKI, J. T., a Polish mission., d. 1754.
 KUHN, C. G., a Ger. med. author, 1754-1840.
 KUHN, M., an Austrian savant, 1709-1765.
 KUHN, E. M., a German poet, 1731-1790.
 KUHL, H., a German naturalist, 1797-1821.
 KUHLMAN, QUIRINUS, a native of Prussia, celebrated for his prophecies, for which he was burned alive in Russia 1689. A list of forty-two works written by him is given in Adelung's 'History of Human Folly.'

KUHN, J., a Prussian savant, 1647-1693.
 KULM, J. A., a German anatomist, 1680-1745.
 His brother, JOHN GEORGE, a physician, d. 1731.
 KULMANN, E., a Russian poetess, 1808-1825.
 KUNCKELL, J., a German chemist, 1630-1702.
 KUNRATH, H., a Ger. alchymist, died 1605.
 KUSTER, G. G., a Ger. historian, 1695-1776.
 KUSTER, L., a German critic, 1670-1716.
 KUTTNER, C. G., a German trav., 1755-1805.
 KUTUSOFF. See KOUTOUSOFF.
 KUYCK, J. VAN, a Dutch painter on glass, born 1530, suffered at the stake 1572.
 KUYP, or CUYP, A., a Dutch pain., 1606-67.
 KUYPERS, G., a Dutch Orientalist, last cent.
 KYDERMYNSTER, or KIDDERMINSTER, RICHARD, a learned eccles. and antiquar., d. 1531.
 KYNASTON, SIR FRANCIS, a courtier of the reign of Charles I., dist. as a poet, 1587-1642.
 KYNASTON, JOHN, an Eng. divine, 1728-83.
 KYRLE, JOHN, a distinguished benefactor, immortalized in the writings of Pope as 'The Man of Ross,' died at the age of ninety in 1754.

[Kyrle's Summer House.]

L

LAAN, H. VANDER, a Dutch engrav., b. 1690.
 LAAR, or LAER, PETER VAN, a Dutch painter called, from his style, Bamboccio, 1613-1675.
 ABACO. See ABACO ANTHONY.
 ABADIE, JOHN, a French Jesuit, who became remarkable as a preacher of new doctrines, and had many followers in France and Germany, 1610-1674.
 ABAN, the father of Rachel and Leah, and the grandson of Nahor, about 1800 B.C.
 ABARRE, S., a French architect, 1764-1824.
 ABARTHE, P., a Fr. traveller, 1760-1824.
 ABASTIE, JOSEPH BERNARD, Baron De, a French archaeologist, editor of a new edition of Marten's 'Science des Médailles,' 1703-1742.
 ABAT, JOHN BAPTIST, a French missionary, son of several relations of his travels, 1663-1738.
 ABBE, C., a French juriconsult, 1582-1657.
 ABBE, P., a French antiquarian, 1594-1680.
 ABBE, PH., a learned Fr. Jesuit, 1607-1667.

LABBEY, F., a French antiquarian, 1653-1727.
 LABE, LOUISE, surnamed 'the beautiful rope-maker,' a native of Lyons, distinguished for her extraordinary talents and courage in arms at the siege of Perpignan; besides her poems in three different languages, she is the author of a dramatic piece, entitled 'Débat de la Folie et de l'Amour,' 1526-1566.

LABEDOYERE, CHARLES ANGELIQUE FRANCOIS HUCHET, Count De, one of Napoleon's generals, shot for rejoining the emperor, 1786-1815.

LABEO, the surname of several Roman families, the most celebrated members of which are—QUINTUS FABIVS, consul, 197 B.C. ANTISTIVS, a senator and juriconsult, died 31 B.C. CAIVS ANTISTIVS, son of the preceding, a juriconsult and historian. ANTISTIVS, a proconsul and painter, of the 1st century; and ATTIVS, a poet, and contemporary of Nero, 1st century.

LABERIUS, a Roman dramatist, died B.C. 44.
 LABEY, J. B., a French geometr., 1750-1825.
 LABIENUS, TITUS, a Rom. general, k. 45 B.C.
 LABORDE, A. DE, a French poetess, last cen.
 LABORDE, H. F., Count De, a Fr. officer, d. 1833.
 LABORDE, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French Jesuit, and writer on the mechanism of electricity, d. 1777.
 LABORDE, JEAN JOSEPH DE, a gentleman of fortune, who became banker to the court of France, and was executed 1794. His son, F. G. JOSEPH, a deputy to the constituent assembly, died in England 1801. His third son, A. L. JOSEPH, count de la Borde, a liberal deputy of the restoration, aid-de-camp to the king after 1830, author of an itinerary of Spain, and of several political and antiquarian works, 1774-1841.

LABORDE, JOHN BENJAMIN DE, first valet de chambre to Louis XV., distinguished as a composer and writer on the hist. of music, exec. 1794.

LABORIE, J. B. P., a Fr. physician, 1797-1823.

LABOULLAYE-MARILLAC, P. C. MADE-LEINE, Count De, a French chemist, 1774-1824.

LABOUREUR, J. LE, a Fr. historian, 1623-75.

LABRADOR, J., a Spanish painter, died 1600.

LABRE, B. J., a monk of La Trappe, 1748-76.

LABROUSSE, CLOTILDA SUSANNA COURCEL-LES DE, born 1741, was an ascetic of the order of St. Francis, who became greatly celebrated by her prophecies at the period of the French revolution.
 Her impulse was to travel over the world, in order to convert the whole human race by her preaching, but her superiors refused their consent, and she addressed a memorial on the subject, with an account of her life, to M. Pontard, the constitutional bishop of Dordogne. This document came into the hands of Dom Gerle, once a monk, who in 1759 entered into a correspondence with her, and in 1790 endeavoured to introduce her into the national assembly. She afterwards went to Rome, preaching to the populace on her way, and proposing to herself the conversion of the pope, but she was arrested in Italy, and imprisoned in the castle of St. Angelo till 1796, when the directory procured her liberation. Two years later she returned to Paris with the French troops, and was surrounded with a circle of believers till her death in 1821.
 The duchesse de Bourbon published some curious particulars concerning her in 1791, and her works were collected by Bishop Pontard in 1797. La-martine has perpetuated the mistaken belief that she died in the castle of St. Angelo, while the chair of the illuminée was occupied by Catherine Theos, the new flame of Dom Gerle, at Paris. [E.R.]

LABRUNE, J. DE, a French historian, d. 1743.

LABRUYERE. See BRUYERE.

LA-CAILLE, NICOLAS LOUIS DE, born March 15, 1713, died March 21, 1762; a celebrated French astronomer; one of the best Observers in modern times. He had no superior in industry, activity, and honour; and few men have ever handled instruments, equal to him in that enviable power, which enables the Observer to produce exactness of result, even though his instrument be imperfect. La-Caille was honourably connected with that measurement of the degree of the meridian in France, which rectified Picard's erroneous estimate, and went to establish the true shape of the Earth; but his principal achievements lay at the Cape of Good Hope, where he remained four years surveying the southern heavens. After fixing places of about ten thousand stars, he returned Paris and published the results of his voyage. His works are numerous, the chief being the Fundam.

Astronomia and the Cælum Australe. His principal catalogue has recently been recomputed with every care, and republished. No name in Observation ranks higher than La-Caille's. [J.P.]

LACARRY, GILES, a French Jesuit, and fessor of polite literature, philosophy, and logic, celebrated as a numismatist, 1605-1684.

LA-CATHELINIERE, NICHOLAS RIPAU
 DE, one of the most daring of the Vendean chiefs, born 1760, executed at Nantes 1794.

LACAZE, L. DE, a Fr. medical writer, 1703-

LACEPEDE, BERNARD GERMAIN ETIEN-NE DE LA VILLE SUR ILLON, Count De, a celebra-French naturalist, pupil of Buffon and Daubenton, author of 'Histoire Naturelle des Quadrupèdes Ovipares et des Serpents,' 'Histoire Naturelle Poissons,' 'Histoire Naturelle des Cétacés,' &c.
 1756-1825.

LACHAN, G. DE, a French antiquarian, last

LACKMAN, A. H., a Germ. philol., 1694-17

LA-CLOS, PETER AMBROSE FRANCIS C
 DERLOS DE, a French officer after the revolution, editor of the 'Journal des Amis de la Constitution' and author of 'Les Liaisons Dangereuses,' 'Poésies Fugitives,' 1741-1803.

LACOMBE, F., editor of the 'Letters of Christina Queen of Sweden,' a 'Dictionary of French,' &c., 1733-1795.

LACOMBE, J., a miscellaneous writer, author of a 'History of Christina, queen of Sweden,' 1801. His brother HONORE LACOMBE

PREZEL, a writer on jurisprudence, born 1725.

LACOMBE-SAINT-MICHEL, JEAN PIERRE
 a French officer, and conventionalist, 1749-180

LA-CONDAMINE, C. M. DE, a Fr. astron-
 au. of travels in the interior of America, 1701-1

LACRAIX, S. F., a Fr. geometrician, 1765-1

LACRETELLE, P. H., a French author, distinguished for his writings on jurisprudence,
 the reform of the criminal code, 1751-1824.

LACRUZ, J. DE, a Spanish painter, 16th c.

LACRUZ, J. INEZ DE, a relig. poetess, 1614

LACRUZ, M. DE, a Sp. his. painter, 1750-

LACRUZ-Y-CANO, R., a Sp. dramat., 1728-

LACTANTIUS. LUCIUS CAECILIUS LAC-TIUS FIRMIANUS, was in all probability a native of Italy, and born about the middle of the 3d century. He studied rhetoric in Africa, as the p-of Arnobius. His own fame as a teacher of the s-art was so extensive, that Diocletian invited him settle at Nicomedia, and open a school of orat-But his career in this Greek city was by no mso successful as might have been anticipated f-imperial patronage; and therefore he devoted hours, not to rhetoric, but to literary composi-When an old man, he superintended the educa-of Crispus, son of Constantine, and he seem-have died in Gaul, perhaps about 330. The pcipal work of Lactantius is his 'Divine Institudivided into seven books; designed to repaganism, and show, in various ways, the sup-purity and lustre of the Christian faith. Lactius wrote also two tracts 'On the Anger of G-and 'On the Workmanship of God,' along with Symposium, an Itinerary, and numerous Epipoems. The disquisition 'On the Death of the Persecutors,' which many critics have assigned to Caecilius, describes the miserable fate of those who attempted to suppress Christianity by sword and fire. The style of this Father has often been admired, and he has been called the Christian Cicero. Certainly he excels all his contemporaries in the classical form of his style, in the graceful and rhythmical construction of his periods, and the easy and lucid sequency of his ideas. His knowledge of theology was very superficial and inaccurate. The editio princeps of his works was printed at Subiaco, in 1465, and other editions have followed at various times and in various places. His book 'On the Death of the Persecutors' has been twice translated into English, by Gilbert Burnet 1687, and by Sir David Dalrymple 1792. [J.E.]

LACY, DON Sr., a Spanish general, 1775-1817.

LACY, JOHN, a dramatic wr. and actor, d. 1681.

ACYDES, a Greek philosopher, B.C. 241.

ADERCHI, J., an Italian historian, d. 1738.

ADERCHI, J. B., an Ital. jurist, 1538-1618.

ADISLAUS, k. of Bohemia. See ULADISLAS.

ADISLAUS, k. of Poland. See ULADISLAS.

ADISLAUS I., king of Hungary, born 1041, succeeded 1079, died 1095, and was canonized for piety by Celestin III., 1198. LADISLAUS II., called the infant, succeeded and died the same year 1200. LADISLAUS III. succeeded 1272, assassined, after a life of debauchery and a disgraceful reign, 1290. LADISLAUS IV., the same as

ADISLAUS V., king of Poland, succeeded his father in the latter dignity, 1435, and was elected by the Hungarians, 1440, killed in battle by the Sultan murath, 1444. LADISLAUS V. succeeded in the 24th year of his age, 1444, and died suddenly 1458.

LADISLAUS VI., son of Casimir IV., king of Poland and called, according to the Polish form of his name, Uladislav II., became king of Bohemia

34 and king of Hungary 1490, died 1516.

ADISLAUS, or LAUNCELOT, king of Naples,

1376, suc. his father Charles (Durazzo) III.

13, defeated by Louis of Anjou 1411, died 1414.

ADVOCAT, J. B., a Fr. Hebraist, 1709-1765.

ADVOCAT, L. F., a Fr. philoso., 1644-1735.

ELIANUS, a Rom. emp., procl. and kil. 266.

ELIUS, CAIUS, a Roman commander, command-in-arms of Scipio Africanus, consul B.C. 190.

ELIUS, of the same name, surnamed 'THE WISE,' was an orator and man of letters, consul B.C. 140.

ENNEC, R. T. H., a Fr. physic., 1781-1826.

ER, PETER DE. See LAAR.

EVINUS, MARCUS VALERIUS, a naval commander of Rome, opposed to Philip of Macedon, who he defeated B.C. 214, consul 210, died 205.

EVINUS, PUBLIUS VALERIUS, con., B.C. 280.

EVNIUS, TORRENTINUS, archbishop of Mecklenburg, distinguished as a Latin poet and ed., d. 1595.

FAAGE, R. DE, a Fr. des. and engr., 1654-84.

FAAYE, A. DE, a Swiss minister, died 1618.

FAAYE, J. ELIE LANIGET DE, a French mathematician, 1671-1748. His brother, JEAN FRAN-COIS, a diplomatist and man of letters, 1674-1731.

FAFAYETTE, GILBERT MOTIER DE, a French military, dist. in the wars with the Engl., b. 1428.

FAFAYETTE, LOUISE MOTIER DE, maid of honour to the queen of Louis XIII., and founder of the convent of Chaillot, where she died, 1665.

LAFAYETTE, MARIE MADELEINE POCHE
DE LA VERGNE, Comtess De, a cel. novl., 1632-93.

LAFAYETTE, MARIE PAUL JEAN ROCH YVES GILBERT MOTIER, Marquis De, one of the most illustrious names in the annals of modern history, was born at Chavagnac, in Auvergne, 1757, and commenced his career at the court of Louis XV., at the period when hostilities were commencing between Britain and her American colonies. At the age of twenty he left the arms of his bride, and, fitting out two vessels with arms and provisions, sailed for Boston; was received by Washington and his army with acclamations, and,
joining their ranks as a volunteer, was wounded in his first action near Philadelphia, and commanded the vanguard of the patriot army at the capture of New York. On returning to France, when peace was concluded with the mother country, Lafayette found himself in possession of an immense popularity, and presently took his seat with the notables, convoked in 1787. The questions of public right in ferment at this crisis are matters of history. Lafayette embraced the popular cause, and was the first to demand the convocation of the estates-general. Elected deputy to the latter body in 1789, he proposed the 'Declaration of Rights,' which he had brought from the free soil of America, as the preliminary of a constitution. Proclamation of this world-renowned document was made July 22, and it furnished the French people with the metaphysical reasons for the 'sacred right of insurrection'—a well-known phrase of Lafayette's. Meanwhile the Bastille had been taken July 14, the national guard organized, and Lafayette appointed to the command. In this capacity he rode a white charger, and shone the impersonation of chivalry, and twice the royal family owed their preservation to his address and courage—the greatest of these occasions being the march on Versailles, 5th and 6th of October. Some months later, 12th May, 1790, he joined Bailly in forming the club of Feuillants to counteract the Jacobins—formerly 'the friends of the constitution,' to which his party had belonged before its final transformation. The arrest of the king at Varennes, being followed by the petition for his deposition on the field of Mars, Lafayette lost much of his popularity by assisting Bailly to disperse the people, which was not accomplished without bloodshed. In the lull of the popular enthusiasm he returned to his native fields, the national guard, on his retirement, presenting him with a bust of Washington, and a sword forged from the bolts of the Bastille. When the coalition was formed, and their armed troops threatened the frontier, he was appointed general of one of the armies opposed to them. While in this command, the progress of the Jacobins, and the outrages committed upon the royal family, provoked him to address letters of remonstrance to Paris, and these not producing any effect, he was chivalrous enough to leave his troops and appear at the bar of the assembly. Before leaving the capital on this occasion, he had arranged with the king for a review of the national guard, when the 'constitution' was to be saved by a coup de main; but the review was countermanded in the night, Lafayette rejoined his army, was burnt in effigy by the sansculottes of Paris, and, at length, endeavouring to escape from France, was captured by the Austrians and imprisoned at Olmutz. He was confined from the failure of the constitution to the assumption of power by Buonaparte, and released in 1797. Lafayette had no share in any of the events connected with the death of the king and the reign of terror, and, in the years following, rejected every overture of the consul and emperor. His first movement in public was made after the battle of Waterloo, when he endeavoured to preserve the chamber of representatives in being, on the principle that it derived its authority from the electors—not from Buonaparte, by whom it was convoked—and with the view of restoring the public liberties. These arguments were urged upon Blücher and Wellington without effect, and Lafayette returned to private life. In the year 1818, he became a member of the chamber of deputies, and, resuming his career as an advocate of constitutional principles, had the satisfaction of seeing the dream of his life realized in 1830. It was to Lafayette, intrusted with the power of a dictator, in his original character of commander of the national guard, that Louis Philippe owed his elevation to the throne. Time, wiser or more capricious than he, allowed him to see the stone hurled at the feet of his idol, and he carried this saddest of all lessons with him into eternity, 1834. [E.R.]

LA-FERTE-IMBAULT, MARIA THERESA GEOFFRIN, Marchioness De, celebrated for her literary abilities, 1715-1791.

LAFFITTE, JAMES, the principal of a famous banking establishment at Paris, distinguished in political history as an Orleanist, 1767-1844.

LAFON-LADEBAT, a political writer of the legis. assembly and council of elders, 1746-1829.

LAFITAU, J. F., a French Jesuit, distinguished by his accounts of the North American Indians, and the discoveries of the Portuguese, died 1740. His brother, PETER FRANCIS, a French prelate and ecclesiastical historian, 1685-1764.

LAHITE, MA. ELIZ. DE, a Fr. writer, 1750-94.

LAFOND, C. PH., a Fr. violinist, 1776-1842.

LAFONT, JOSEPH DE, a dramatist, 1686-1725.

LAFONTAINE, AUGUSTUS HENRY JULIUS, a celebrated German romance writer, 1756-1831.

LAFONTAINE, JOHN DE. See FONTAINE.

LAFOREY, SIR F., a Brit. admiral, 1767-1835.

LAFOREY, J. DE, a French poet, 17th century.

LAFOSSE, C. DE, a French painter, 1640-1716.

His nephew, ANTHONY, a drama. poet, 1653-1708.

LAFOSSE, J. B. J. DE, a Fr. engrav., b. 1721.

LAFOSSE, J. F., a Fr. preacher, 1734-1813.

LAFOSSE, STEPHEN W., and his son, PHILIP STEPHEN, dist. as veterinary surgeons, last cent.

LAGARAYE, CLAUDE TOUS. MAROT, Count De, dist. as the founder of schools for the young, and hospitals for the aged and sick, 1675-1755.

LAGARDE, ANTHONY ESCALIN DES AIMARS, Baron De, a cel. naval tactician and diplom., d. 1578.

LAGARDE, PHILIP BIDARD DE, a French dramatic writer and man of letters, 1710-1767.

LAGARDIE. See GARDIE.

LAGERBRING, S., a Swed. historian, 1707-88.

LAGERLOEFF, PETER, professor of eloquence at Upsala, and historian of N. Europe, 1648-1699.

LAGERSTROEM, MAGNUS VON, a Swedish savant, translator, and natural philos., 1696-1759.

LAGNY, T. F. DE, a Fr. mathema., 1660-1734.

LAGOMARSINI, J., an Ital. savant, 1698-1

LAGRANGE, a Fr. classical transla., 1738-

LAGRANGE, JOSEPH DE CHANCEL DE, a dramatist, cel. for his precocious talents, 1675-1

LAGRANGE, JOSEPH LOUIS, born at T

25th January, 1736, died at Paris, 10th A

1813; a man prevented only by the rivalshi

LAPLACE, from being held, by common co

the most illustrious geometer of modern

The honourable rivalry of these great men w

most life-long; nor could it be easily declar any special date which was foremost in the Living at a time when the exigencies of Sci demanding, and its possessions pointed to new thods and great conquests, their united lab constitute its Modern Epoch: now to one,

then to the other, the glory of the last adv

was due. Speaking of the sum of their ach ments, this perhaps may, without injustice said,—if Laplace, to some extent, surpassed compeer in the range of his view, and manife more of an encyclopædic force, that high n which belongs to intensity in the power of neralizing, and therefore to taste and lucidit composition, must be awarded to Lagrange.

Analyst ever possessed a finer appreciation of thod, than the illustrious Piedmontese; w

name accordingly is inscribed among the Fa

every department of Inquiry which arrested notice. This especial characteristic of his genui best appear through a brief synopsis of his achievements.—I. In reference to the effort

Lagrange to bestow on the Infinitesimal Calc

a logical place in pure Analysis, it cannot po be asserted that success was complete; never less his positive success has been underval

Previous to his time, that Calculus had been cl regarded as a powerful Instrument towards portant positive results. Indeed, if one ex that ever-memorable section of the Principi could not be said that attention had been pai its philosophical basis, so much as to the eff of its methods; nor had the expositions eith

Leibnitz or D'Alembert rendered farther res unnecessary to the solidity and symmetry o

Transcendental Analysis. Desirous to establis symmetry, Lagrange proposed to discard const ation alike of Infinitesimals and Limits; an attach the new Power to the old Foundation presenting differentials as co-efficients of the cessive terms of the Infinite Series represen

a Function in which the variable has received increment. The validity of his proof that a function thus modified, must be represented the series known as Taylor's Theorem, has strongly contested: but apart from such critic

it is very certain that by resting the doctrin

the Calculus, on the doctrine of Infinite Series do not get rid of the Idea of a Limit; seeing we can attach no notion to an Equation, one s which is an Infinite Series, except that the c and apparently definite side expresses the I of that Series: and besides, in every applicati

the Calculus of Functions thus based—wheth

Geometrical or Dynamical Problems—our Ge ter was reduced to the necessity of again dir employing the logic and phraseology of Lim

Unless however, as vitiated by this logical an most technical defect at the threshold, the su of the Theorie des Fonctions cannot be questioned. Lagrange has not succeeded in discarding the consideration of Limits, he has presented Analysis in a greater dependence upon it, than are other branches of Science. After the publication of that remarkable work, it could nowhere be said that the extraneous element inhered in the Method of treatment, but only that it belonged to the nature of the thing treated: and—as a necessary and immediate effect of this disentangling—every pure and positive Method in Analysis assumed its proper generality, and put forth its natural power. The student who would appreciate the gain thus accruing from the Theorie des Fonctions, may refer to what it accomplished in the treatment of Series; or that is yet more special, to its exposition of the nature and treatment of Contacts.—II. The greatest achievement of Lagrange in pure Analysis, was equally illustrative of the peculiar character and grasp of his genius,—we mean the discovery of the Method of Variations. Almost from the cradle of Geometrical Science, problems of maxima minima, had been a favourite and at the same time a difficult exercise with Inquirers: separate solutions varying in ingenuity had through the course of time been attained for specific problems, but was reserved for the differential calculus to place that general method—foreshadowed by Fermat—which diminished the intellectual interest of such problems, by rendering them all easily resolvable. But as this difficulty disappeared, a new class of problems, related to the previous class but much less manageable, gradually absorbed attention; and singularly enough this too became the chosen battle-ground on which the great spirits of Europe contested for superiority. The history of the problem of the solid of least resistance is well known; but it was only one incident in the rivalry of mathematical genius. Now the relation between the new class of problems—problems of Isoperimeters as they were termed—and the old maxima and minima, is the following: a problem regarding a maximum or minimum is this,—to find those values of certain unknown quantities, which constitute a certain specified function or combination of these quantities, a maximum or minimum: an Isoperimetrical problem on the other hand is this,—to determine a function or combination of certain unknown quantities, so that some specified and determinate function of that function, shall be a maximum or minimum. The great access of difficulty and complicity here, is apparent; and to these new problems Lagrange added a new method, as grasping, as exhaustive and the method of the Differential Calculus in the other case. And not only did his Calculus of Variations put an end to all efforts after special solutions; but it became, like the simpler calculus, a general method of immense comprehensiveness and power: even now, its resources and applications are not more perhaps than generally sketched out.—III. Next in order of complicity, if not of difficulty, are the achievements of Lagrange in the methods of Rational Mechanics. This great division of Mathematical Science, also consisted, previous to the publication of the Mecanique Analytique, of separate analytic artifices, whose authority rested on a number of separate general principles. Lagrange combined the whole; or rather he rose above those separate and special principles; producing a method of contemplating mechanics, and a course of procedure, that involved and connected them all. The Principle of Virtual Velocities became in his hands the foundation and summing up of all Statics; and by a dexterous use of D'Alembert's theorem in Dynamics, he succeeded in reducing all Dynamical investigations under the category of strict Statics. His new calculus of Variations was indispensable as an instrument; and it enabled him to realize to the utmost, the grand necessity of his intellect, viz.: to co-ordinate, what he found separate; and so to establish the fixed and final Method of the Science. It is rare that a work like the Mecanique Analytique comes to be valued at once; nor has this work been so: nevertheless, it has been of greater service to Dynamical Theory than the achievements of any man since the times of Galileo. Through some strange caprice, Lagrange, after concluding his imperishable volumes, conceived a strong distaste alike at the subject and his own labours. He did not open the printed volume for a long time; and his thoughts found refuge in meditation on the History of Religion and Medicine. His friends have said, that what the Analyst thought, on these apparently incongruous subjects, would have made the fortune of several ordinary writers.—IV. What we have said of Lagrange refers mainly to his remarkable influence on Method in Analysis. His specific discoveries are as remarkable, although unsuited—even an enumeration of them—to a work like this. It were wrong, however, to omit his crowning achievement in reference to the mechanism of our Solar System; especially characteristic as it is, of the commanding genius of the man. He and his compeer had worked elaborately at the problem of perturbations—that problem which Newton bequeathed to after time. That the several bodies of the Solar System importantly influence each other, and so affect the arrangements of the system, was a consequence of the Law of Gravitation; but the result, or the harmony of those perturbations had yet to be discerned. Drawing his conclusion from a large induction, Laplace had asserted the invariability of major axes of the Planetary Orbits, and of course, the Stability of the System as a fact: Lagrange, from a higher flight, showed the necessity of that Invariability, and therefore of the permanency of the Planetary Mechanism. It was indeed a great discovery: he proved that because of the dispositions of the Planets,—their arrangement nearly in one plane, the uniformity of the directions of their motions, and the proximity of their orbits to the circular form, this stability must exist: so that, if present arrangements come to an end, it will be through no imperfection; but because, that—gorgeous though they are—they are somehow subject to the doom of all finite things, and—notwithstanding their angustness—only part of some development yet more gigantic, beats of the pulse of a still grander life. It is not easy to estimate the amount of this advance beyond the position of Newton, who thought that our system contained the seeds of dissolution, and that, in the words of Leibnitz, a time would come, when Deity, would require to interfere and re-adjust his worn-out mechanism!—The life of Lagrange had some anxieties, but it was crowded with honours. Called to Berlin by the great Frederick, he early obtained the position due to him. Afterwards, for many years, he resided in Paris, in command of the first employments. By rare fortune he escaped the fate of Lavoisier—when 'in a moment a head fell which the world might not replace in a century:' and with Laplace he shared the early labours and glories of the Ecole Normale. Take him as a whole, abstract science has in modern times possessed no other servant so great. [J.P.N.]

LAGRENEE, LOUIS JOHN FRANCIS, a French historical painter, 1724-1804. His brother, JOHN JAMES, called the younger, 1740-1821. The nephew of the latter, ANSELM LOUIS, 1775-1832.

LAGUERRE, L., a French painter, 1663-1721.

LAGUERRE, M. J., a cel. cantatrice, 1755-83.

LAGUILLE, L., historian of Alsace, 1658-1742.

LAHARPE, A. E., a Fr. general, 1754-1796.

LAHARPE, F. C., a Swiss republ., 1754-1838.

LAHARPE, JEAN FRANCOIS DE, born at Paris in 1739, was the son of an artillery captain of Swiss extraction. In early manhood he became an author by profession. His strength lay in literary criticism, which at length became his chief employment. He is a useful and judicious critic, though not a profound one; and his analyses of celebrated works are especially instructive. Much may be learned as to modern literature, and a little as to that of Greece and Rome, from his voluminous 'Lycée, ou Cours de la Littérature,' which contains lectures he delivered in Paris from 1786. He died there in 1803. [W.S.]

LAHIRE, PHILIP DE, a French mathematician and astronomer, 1640-1719. His son, GABRIEL PHILIP, a geometician, 1677-1719. JEAN NICOLAS, brother of the latter, a botanist, 1685-1717.

LAHIRE, S. V. See VIGNOLES.

LA-HUERTA, G., a Span. painter, 1645-1714.

LAHYRE, L. DE, a French painter, 1606-1656.

LAINEZ, ALEX., a French poet, 1650-1710.

LAINEZ, or LAYNEZ, JAMES, a Sp. Jesuit, general of the order after Loyola, 1512-1565.

LAINEZ, S., a French opera singer, died 1822.

LAING, ALEXANDER, a Scotch antiquarian and miscellaneous writer, editor of the 'Eccentric Magazine,' 1778-1838.

LAING, ALEX. GORDON, an African explorer, born at Edinburgh, 1794, murdered on the route from Timbuctoo, 1826.

LAING, MALCOLM, a Scotch hist., 1762-1819.

LAING, W., a Scotch bookseller, 1764-1832.

LAIRE, FRANCIS XAVIER, a French librarian, au. of a 'Catalogue of Printed Books from the Invention of the Art to the year 1500,' &c., 1738-1801.

LAIRESE, G., a Flemish painter, 1640-1711.

LAIS, a Sicilian courtesan, assassina. B.C. 350.

LAISNE, ANTHONY, a Fr. archaeologist, 17th c.

LAJARD, P. A., a Fr. statesman, 1757-1808.

LAKE, ARTHUR, a dignitary of the Church of England, known as a religious writer, died 1626.

LAKE, GEHARD, first Viscount Lake, an English general, distinguished in Germany during the seven years' war, and as commander-in-chief in India, 1744-1808.

LALA, a female painter, 1st century B.C.

LALAMANT, JOHN, a disting. savant, 17th c.

LALANDE, J DE, a Fr. lawyer, 1622-1700.
LALANDE, JOSEPH JEROME LE FRAN DE, born July 11, 1732, died in Paris 4th A. 1807; an observer of much industry, and a minous writer, who contributed something to the vance of astronomy, and much to a diffusion of knowledge of it. He was one of the group of vans whom Frederick the Great gathered around him; and he conducted the observatory established by that eccentric monarch at Berlin. On his return to Paris he pursued his researches; often communicating memoirs to the Academy of Science. He assisted Clairaut with materials for his computation of the return of Halley's comet; published an account of the transit of Venus; completed his great work on astronomy, which extends four 4to volumes; and drew up his catalogue of eight thousand stars. He also edited and wrote many elementary treatises. The catalogue of lande has been recently published in this country and is of considerable value. His systematic historical works have given place to others, though the 'Traité' may still be consulted with advantage by the student. We owe also to Lalande the completion of Montucla's valuable History of Mathematics. [J.P.N.]

LALANDE, M. RICHARD DE, a French composer, celebrated for his ballet music, 1657-1710.

LALANE, P., a French poet, died 1661.

LALAUNE, NOEL DE, a Fr. divine, 1618-1680.

LALLEMAND, BARON, a Fr. gen., 1774-1800.

LALLEMAND, J. B., a Fr. painter, 1710-1780.

LALLEMANDET, J., a Fr. theol., 1595-1660.

LALLEMANT, J. P., a learned Jesuit, as a great adversary of the Jansenists, 1660-1720.

LALLEMANT, L., a learned Jesuit, 1578-1640.

LALLEMANT, P., an ascetic writer, 1622-1680.

LALLEMANT, RICHARD COUTERAY, a French printer and editor, known for his fine editions of the classics, 1726-1807. His brother, NICHOLAS, was associated with him in these works, and his other brother, RICHARD XAVIER FELIX LAMANT DE MAUPAS, was vicar-general of Avignon and president of the Academy of Rome, died 1780.

LALLEMENT, W., a journalist, 1782-1820.

LALLI, GIOV. B., an Italian poet, 1572-1640.

LALLOUETTE, A., a Fr. author, 1653-1710.

LALLOUETTE, F. P., a theologian, died 1710.

LALLOUETTE, J. F., a Fr. compos., 1653-1710.

LALLOUETTE, P., a Fr. physician, 1710-1780.

LALLY, THOMAS ARTHUR, Count De, born at Tullendally, or Tollendal, in Ireland, was descended from one of those devoted adherents of the Stuarts who became naturalized in France, who there acquired distinction in the service of the crown. He was born in Dauphiné, 1702, began his military career in an Irish regiment commanded by his uncle, General Dillon, and greatly distinguishing himself at the sieges of Menin, Ypres, and Furnes, and particularly at the battle of Fontenoy (dating from 1733 to 1749) was appointed (1756) commandant-general of French possessions in the East Indies. On his arrival there, at the end of April, 1758, he was declared with the English, over whom he obtained a series of successes, but was at length defeated before Madras, and then besieged in Pondicherry upon which he had been compelled to fall. Here, with less than a thousand men, he rethe whole English army for several months, and surrendered when reduced to the last extremity, July 16, 1761. He now became the prisoner of the English, but was soon liberated, and, returning to France, was arrested on a charge of treason. All the perils and toils he had undergone were rewarded by the corrupt administration of that expiring monarchy by his judicial murder, in a vain effort to hide from the public eye their infamous dishonesty. He was dragged to the scaffold with a gag in his mouth to prevent him from addressing the people, and was executed May 9, 1766. [E.R.]

LALLY-TOLLENDAL, TROPHIMUS GERARD, Comte de, son of the preceding, was born at Paris, 1751, and though he was ignorant of his parentage until the eve of his father's execution, he devoted himself to obtain the re-establishment of his good name. His filial efforts were virtually crowned with success in 1778, though the last judicial form was never completed in consequence of the troubles of the period, and in 1783 he obtained possession of his estates. In 1789 he became a deputy of the noblesse to the estates-general, and was one of the most popular members of that body when it changed its name to the national assembly, and commenced the erection of a constitution. In the fruitless labours directed towards it he was a warm supporter of Lafayette; but despairing of the monarchy and the constitution, he retired with Necker, in September, 1790, and published an address to the French people. At the 10th of August, 1792, he was arrested by the Jacobins, but escaped the massacres of September, and arrived safely in England; where, as a patriot, and a writer in the interest of the emigrants, he enjoyed a small pension from the government. He was authorized to return to France by the first consul in 1801, but took no part in public affairs till the restoration, when he became a member of the privy council, and, in that capacity accompanied Louis XVIII. to Ghent during the hundred days of 1815. After the second restoration he was made a peer of France; and, remaining true to his principles, resisted the attempts of the Bourbons to resume their arbitrary power. He died a few weeks before the revolution of July, 1830, and has left a name in considerable repute both as an historico-political writer and a poet. [E.R.]

LALONDE, F. R., a Fr. antiquarian, 1685-1765.
LALUZERNE, CÆSAR HENRY, a nephew of Desherbes, min. of foreign affairs under Necker.

LALUZERNE, CÆSAR WILLIAM CARDINAL De, one of the clerical deputies to the estates-general, and the first to propose the establishment of a representative system in France, author of several theological and political works, 1738-1822.

LAMA, J. B., a painter and architect of Naples, abt. 1650-1579. Another of the same name, b. 1660.

LAMA, JULIA, a Venetian painter, last century.
LAMANNA, J., a Sicilian poet, 1580-1640.

AMANON, R. P., a Fr. naturalist, 1752-1787.

LAMARCK, or as his real name is, JEAN BAPTISTE PIERRE ANTOINE DE MONET, an eminent naturalist, was born at Bazantine in Picardy in 1744. He died in 1829. A soldier in his youth, he had already begun to distinguish himself, when an accident compelled him to relinquish the army.

Like many other naturalists, Lamarck's first study was botany. The first work he published was the 'Flore Française,' which, appearing at a time when Rousseau had made botany fashionable, met with an astonishing degree of success. Other botanical works soon followed, and for some time Lamarck seemed completely occupied with these, and works of a more speculative kind, which do not now add much to his reputation. In 1793 he was appointed to a chair attached to the museum of natural history at the Garden of Plants, which had for its object the history of insects and the lower animals, which Linnæus had arranged under the general name of worms. At this time he was fifty years of age, and the study of zoology was nearly new to him. Such, however, were his zeal and assiduity in preparing himself for the duties of his chair, that in a few years he had made himself thoroughly master of the subject; and his great and excellent work, the 'Histoire des Animaux sans Vertébrés,' will ever entitle him to take his place in the very first rank of zoologists. As a conchologist, Lamarck's name stands pre-eminent, and the Lamarckian arrangement of shells is still that of the present day. A sad affliction overtook him in his latter days. He gradually lost his sight, and for some years before his death he was totally blind, while an injudicious investment of his money in some swindling schemes, reduced him in his old age to comparative poverty. [W.B.]

LAMARQUE, F., a Fr. conventionist, 1755-1839.

LAMARQUE, MAX., a Fr. general, 1770-1832.

LAMB, LADY CAROLINE, daughter of the earl of Besborough, and wife of the Hon. William Lamb, afterwards Lord Melbourne, distinguished as a novelist and fugitive writer, 1786-1828.

[House of Charles Lamb]

LAMB, CHARLES, the son of a barrister's clerk, was born in London in 1775. He was educated at Christ's Hospital; and, being disqualified by stammering from being sent to college on the foundation, he became, in 1792, a clerk in the India House. He retained this place for thirty-three years, living with a sister, to whom he devoted himself in circumstances of melancholy interest, and indulging those literary tastes which constituted his happiness.

He died in 1834. From the days of his schoolboy friendship with Coleridge, he always continued to associate with men of letters; no one could have been more admired or liked than he was by his friends; and during the last period of his life his name was one of the most famous of the day, though few of those who knew it were really familiar with his works. He was a man of unquestionable though eccentric genius. His sphere of thinking was very confined, but he moved in it with great independence; his fancy was lively and original, but very irregular; he had great power both of pathos and of quiet humour, and oscillated capriciously between the two extremes; and his taste, keenly alive to the beautiful, was gratified not less by the oddest puns which his teeming fantasy suggested to him. His style is characterized by a singular engrafting of modern peculiarities on the diction of our Old English writers; and he took equal delight in rapturously expatiating on the beauties of Elizabethan literature, and in observing and chronicling the oddities of contemporary life in the aspect in which it presented itself to him. His tragedy of 'John Woodvil,' published in 1801, is a disjointed series of beautiful imitations of the old dramatists: some of his smaller poems are strangely touching. He criticised with intuitive fineness of feeling in his 'Specimens of the English Dramatic Poets' (1808); and there are suggestive criticisms, especially on the drama and the stage, in others of his productions. The most notable of these are the fantastically beautiful 'Essays of Elia.' [W.S.]

LAMB, GEORGE, younger brother of Lord Melbourne, a reviewer and sec. of state, 1784-1834.

LAMB, SIR JAMES BLAND BURGESS, Baronet, only son of George Burgess, Esq., known as a journalist and miscellaneous writer, 1752-1825.

LAMBALLE. The Princess Lamballe, whose fate is one of the most piteous stories of the French revolution, was a descendant of the house of Savoy-Carignan, and was born at Turin, 1749. In 1767 she married the Prince de Lamballe, son of the Duc de Penthièvre, and the year following was left a widow at the age of eighteen. Her subsequent history is closely connected with that of Marie Antoinette, who made her the superintendent of her household, and the agent of her bounty. The queen and the princess were passionately attached to each other; and the latter, who had escaped to England at the commencement of the horrors of 1792, hastened back again when she heard that the queen was in prison, and with heroic fortitude asked, and obtained permission to share her misfortunes in the Temple. This indulgence was thought too merciful by the commune of Paris, who ordered her, at the end of August, to be imprisoned separately in La Force. Immense sums of money, and many agents among the dangerous party were set in motion to save her, but even Hébert and Lhuillier could not conduct her in safety through the ranks of the assassins at the outside of the prison, on the fatal 3d September. The circumstances of her murder are too horrible to repeat. Her head was afterwards paraded at the top of a pike before the windows of the Temple, and conveyed in the same manner, in the midst of a drunken saturnalia, to the Palais Royal. The Duc D'Orleans, who was dining within, went to the window, and, as the writer is assured by a connection of one who was in the room at the time, said to his companion, 'It is only Lamballe; I know her by her beautiful hair!' Writers of all parties agree that the Princess de Lamballe was as good as she was beautiful. Lamartine has given a letter from Marie Antoinette, which was found in the hands of the princess after her assassination, entreating her to provide for her own safety by remaining in the old Duc de Penthièvre. This letter, though unknown, is a touching proof of the friendship which united the unhappy princesses.

LAMBARDE, W., an emin. lawyer and author of a Treatise on the Saxon Laws, 1536-1601.

LAMBECIUS, P., a Dutch historian, 1624-1694.

LAMBERT, a king of Italy, reigned 892-898.

LAMBERT, brother and successor of Guy, Duke of Spoleto in 917, duke of Tuscany also 920-929, deposed and deprived of his sight by his brother.

LAMBERT, a Benedictine chronicler, 11th cent.

LAMBERT, a bishop of Arras, died 1115.

LAMBERT, ANNE THERESE, Marquise de Sade, a lady distinguished for her literary talents and patronage of learning, authoress of writings published after her decease in 1733.

LAMBERT, A. B., an Eng. botan., 1761-1826.

LAMBERT, C. F., a laborious French writer on historical and archaeological subjects, died 1797.

LAMBERT, F., a protestant theol., 1487-1540.

LAMBERT, G., an English painter, 1710-1780.

LAMBERT, JOHN, a general of the parliamentary forces during the civil war, chiefly remarkable for his opposition to the protection of the commons, especially of Richard Cromwell. In the year 1660, when the counter-revolution he was preparing for the contest with Monk, as the chief of the extreme republicans, but was arrested, and after the restoration banished to Guernsey. His taste for the arts of peace was shown in retirement by his devotion to horticulture and flower painting. He was born about 1620, and educated for the law. He became a Roman Catholic, and died 1692.

LAMBERT, JOHN HENRY, a German mathematician and philosopher of Fr. descent, reputed the ablest geometrician of the 18th cent., 1728-1777.

LAMBERT, JOS., a Fr. religious wr., 1654-1728.

LAMBERT, MICH., a Fr. musician, 1610-1680.

LAMBERT, S., a Fr. Jesuit and poet, d. 1680.

LAMBERTI, A., a Neapolitan mission., 17th cent.

LAMBERTI, B., an Italian painter, 1652-1720.

LAMBERTI, L., an Ital. Hellenist, 1758-1820.

LAMBERTY, W. DE, a Fr. polit., 1660-1740.

LAMBESE, CHARLES EUGENE, of Lorraine, colonel of the royal allemands under Louis XIV. and a noted enemy of the revolution, 1751-1820.

LAMBIN, DIONYSIUS, or DENIS, prof. of eloquence and of Greek and Latin literature in the college of France, author of valuable commentaries and translations, 1516-1572.

LAMBINET, P., a Fr. bibliopolist, 1742-1820.

LAMBRECHTS, C. J. M., a juriconsult, political character of Belgium, 1753-1823.

LAMBRUN, MARGARET, the widow of a Scotchman, adherent of Mary Stuart, remarkable for her attempt to assassinate Queen Elizabeth.

LAMBTON, JOHN GEORGE. See DURN.

LAMBTON, WILLIAM, an English officer, director of a great trigono. survey of India, d. 1800.

MESENGERE, P. DE, a Fr. an., 1761-1831.
IMET, ADRIAN AUGUSTINE DE BUSSY DE,
 of the Sorbonne, dist. as a casuist, d. 1691.
IMETH. Three brothers of this name became noted characters in the events of the French revolution, and all had previously distinguished themselves in the cause of American independence, falling in the wake of Lafayette.—1. ALEXAN- DER, the most noted of them, born 1760, distinguished himself in the estates-general by his proposal of organizing the army, which was instantly adopted. He served in the army of the north under Dumouriez and Lafayette, and, sharing in the flight of the latter, was captured by the Prussians, and imprisoned at Magdeburgh during the three years 1793-1795. Being set at liberty, he next entered into commercial pursuits at Hamburgh, and returning to France under the consulate, obtained a seat in the Senate. In this capacity he served the state continuously to the first restoration, but lost favour by accepting office under Napoleon during the hundred days. In 1821 he was returned to the Chamber of deputies, and was an active member of the opposition till his death, in 1829. He wrote a 'History of the Constituent Assembly,' which is valuable as the work of an eye-witness.
 2. CHARLES, the next in importance, born 1757, was one of the first among the noblesse to go over to the third estate in the estates-general, when they reformed themselves into a national assembly.
 He was at first devoted to the people, and was dangerously wounded in a duel with Lautrec, fought in his interest. At a later period he shrunk from the gulf that was opening under his feet, and became more decidedly a constitutionalist. He served in the army of the north as general of cavalry under Lafayette, and fled with the rest of his party, in August, 1792. Returning to France in 1800, he accepted military service under Napoleon. He was elected to the chamber of deputies in 1808, and died a partizan of Louis Philippe 1832.
 3. THEODORE, a constitutionalist like his brothers, and a member of the legislative assembly, fled to Switzerland during the reign of terror, 1793, and was only known subsequently as a representative during the hundred days. Died, aged 81, 1837.
ALBE LAMETHS possessed military skill and personal courage; but they were drawn into the popular cause by vanity and the example of others, and soon lost heart in the movement. [E.R.] LAMETHERIE, JEAN CLAUDE DE, a French politician, dist. as a natur. and phil., 1743-1817.
LA-METTRIE, JULIAN OFFROY DE; born at Malo 1709, died at Berlin 1751:—one of the group of eccentric, and in the main not very reputable persons, whom, under the name of philosophers, Frederick the Great collected at Berlin. It were needless to enumerate, and an idle waste of time, to criticise the works published by La-Mettrie, on what he called philosophy: the man had neither heart nor head; dissolute, foolish, and frivolous, he obtained his degree of repute and influence, through a certain reckless insolence and devil-gaiety. He belonged to the set which proceeded that stupidest and dullest of works the Systeme de la Nature. For Frederick, some apology can be conceived: he brought great men around him, as well as persons like La-Mettrie; and his position of resistance and contest, induced him into a certain sympathy with resistants, irrespective of any critical appreciation of their worth.

 But for writers and thinkers of the La-Mettrie class, there is neither apology nor palliation. Opposing what they term bigotry, they are themselves the most inveterate bigots; attributing received opinions to ignorance, they have never undergone the labour of acquiring any knowledge; without morals, they undertake to dogmatize on morality; incapable of earnest thought, they venture to propagate systems of philosophy! [J.P.N.]

LAMEY, ANDREW, a Ger. historian, 1726-1802.

LAMI, BERNARD, a Fr. ecclesiastic, dist. as a mathematician and religious writer, 1645-1715.

LAMI, F., a French philosopher, 1636-1711.

LAMI, J., an Italian archaeologist, 1697-1770.

LAMIA, governor of Syria, 1st century B.C.

LAMIO, L. M., a Fr. missionary, 1765-1831.

LAMIRAL, DOMINIQUE HARCOURT, a French traveller and writer on Africa, 1750-1795.

LAMMA, AUGUSTINE, a Venetian pain., 16th c.

LAMONNE, B. DE, a Fr. savant, 1641-1728.

LAMOTHE-LE-VAYER, P. DE, a French sa- vant, member of the academy, and preceptor in the royal family, author of works which afford valuable illustrations of the remains of antiquity, 1588-1672.

LA-MOTTE, ANTHONY HOUDART DE, a Fr.
 poet, dramatic author, and critic, 1672-1731.

LA-MOTTE, F., an Austrn. musician, 1751-81.

LA-MOTTE, JEANNE DE VALOIS, Countess
 De, an infamous woman connected with the court of France, implicated with the pretended Count Cagliostro and the Cardinal de Rohan in the fraud of the diamond necklace, by which undeserved disgrace was entailed upon the Queen Marie Antoinette; born of poor parents at Fontette, in Champagne, 1757, died in London 1791.

LA-MOTTE-FOUQUE, FREDERICK HEIN-RICH KARL, Baron De, a German poet and novelist, descended from an ancient Norman family, best known as the author of 'Undine' and for his war songs, 1777-1843. His wife, CAROLINE, also a novelist, died 1831.

LA-MOTTE-PIQUET, TOUSSAINT WM., Count
 De, a cel. naval commander of France, 1720-1791.

LAMOURETTE, ADRIAN, a philosophical divine and constitutional prelate of France, connected with Mirabeau in the revolution, 1742-1794.

LAMOUREUX, a French sculptor, born 1674.

LAMOUREUX, JOHN VINCENT FELIX, a French naturalist, professor at Caen, 1770-1825.

LAMPE, F. A., a Fr. protes. theol., 1683-1729.

LAMPILLAS, F. X., a Span. Jesuit, 1739-98.

LAMPLUGH, T., an English prelate, 1615-91.

LAMPREDI, U., a Neapol. savant, 1761-1836.

LAMPRIDIO, B., an Italian poet, 16th cent.

LAMPRIDIOUS, AELIUS, a Latin histor., 4th c.

LANA, F. DE, an Italian mathem., 1637-1700.

LANA, LUDOV., an Italian painter, 1597-1646.

LANA-PERZI, F., an Italian Jesuit, 1631-87.

LANCAROT, —, a Portuguese navig., 15th c.

LANCASTER. The royal house of Lancaster flourished in two lines. The first commences with EDMOND, son of Henry III. and Eleonora of Provence, and brother of Edward I., employed by the latter as ambassador to Philip of France, and afterwards as commander in the expedition for the recovery of Guienne. Born in London, 1245; died at Bayonne, 1296. THOMAS, his son and successor in the earldom, cousin-german to Edward II., headed the confederacy of barons against Piers Gavaston, and, finally, shared the responsibility of his death with Hereford and Arundel. He was at length taken in arms against the sovereign, and beheaded at Pomfret, 1322. HENRY (previously earl of Leicester), brother and heir of Thomas, joined the conspiracy of Isabella and Mortimer against Edward II., and received the king into his custody at Kenilworth. He was freed from this charge on account of his too great humanity; and, when fortune changed, was appointed guardian and protector of the person of his son, Edward III. He died 1345. HENRY, his son, (previously earl of Derby,) after vainly endeavouring to make peace with John, king of France, under the mediation of the pope at Avignon, was sent with an army into Normandy, and took part in the victory of Poitiers and the subsequent French wars. About this time his title was changed to duke of Lancaster, this degree of nobility being then newly introduced into England. He died 1362.—The next duke of Lancaster commences a new lineage, that of the princes opposed to the house of York. The first in the line was JOHN OF GAUNT, or GHEENT, third son of Edward III., born 1339. He was married successively to the daughter of Henry, the last duke, who died without male issue, and to the daughter of Peter, king of Castile. His name is one of the most celebrated in English history, and in the chivalry of the middle ages. Died 1399. HENRY OF HEREFORD, the successor of John of Gaunt in the dukedom, was son to him by his first wife. He claimed the crown by descent, by the mother's side, from Edmond the first earl, who was popularly supposed to be the elder brother of Edward I., and to have been deprived of the succession by his father for personal reasons. He became king by deposing Richard II., 1399, and was a prince of great ability and valour. He reigned till his death in 1422, and was succeeded by his son, Henry V. The son of the latter also inherited the crown as Henry VI., and in his reign the feuds of York and Lancaster broke out, which ended in the union of the two houses in the person of Henry VII. See YORK. [E.R.]

LANCASTER, CAPTAIN, afterwards SIR JAMES, had command of one of three ships fitted out in 1591 for the first English expedition to India by the Cape. The object was less to establish trade than to harass the Portuguese; but the result was unfortunate. One of the ships was sent home from the Cape with the sick, another was wrecked on the coast east of the Cape; Lancaster's ship only reached India. On her return, however, she was driven by storms to the West Indies and lost, Lancaster and seven men escaping and returning to England in a French vessel. In 1594 he made a predatory voyage to Brazil against the Portuguese. His most important services, however, were rendered in his conduct of the expedition sent out to India by the East India Company in May, 1601, soon after their charter was obtained. In compliment to his zeal in promoting the discovery of a north-west passage, the existence of which he firmly held, Baffin named after him the sound leading from Baffin's Bay (Sea?) to the Arctic Ocean. His death occurred in 1620. [J.B.]

LANCASTER, JOSEPH, well known as a mulgator of the system of national education introduced by Dr. Bell, was born in London of secure parents, of the Quaker persuasion, in 1781. He commenced his career by opening a school for poor children in St. George's Fields, and was publicly known for his enthusiasm in the cause he had adopted. He died at New York in indigent circumstances, 1838.

LANCELLOTTI, or LANCILLOTTI, SEBASTIANO, a learned Italian writer, historian of the 'Conquest of Mount Olivet,' to which he belonged, and author of 'Impostures of Ancient History,' &c., flourished about 1575-1643.

LANCELLOTTI, G., an It. jur., abt. 1510.

LANCELOT, A., a Fr. antiquarian, 1675-1710.

LANCELOT, CL., a Fr. grammarian, 1611-1680.

LANCHARES, A., a Sp. painter, 1586-1640.

LANCILOTTI, F., an Ital. painter, 16th c.

LANCILOTTI, J., an Italian painter, 1507-1570.

LANCISI, GIAMMARIA, or JOANNES MARIUS, an Italian physician, eminent as an anatomist and physiologist, was born at Rome in 1654, and after an undisturbed professional career, in 1720. He surpassed the anatomists of his day in generalizing on form; and while demonstrating the fundamental structure of the arterial coats, the joint action of the nerves and the blood in motion of the heart, he drew the attention of students to more remote causes of structure and motion, and recommended the study of anatomy. Having discovered the lost copper plates of Galen, he edited a set of tables from them; besides the value of his own writings to the profession, bequeathed a magnificent library of 20 volumes to the Hospital of the Holy Ghost. He was physician and chamberlain to several popes between 1688 and his death in 1720, and a member of many learned societies, as well as a master of polite literature. [H.]

LANCJEAN, REMI, a Flem. painter, died 1610.

LANCON, N. F., a Fr. juriconsult, 1694-1750.

LANCRE, PETER DE, a provincial councillor of France, whose name is celebrated in many trials for witchcraft, and as a writer on demonology, d. 1710.

LANCRET, N., a French painter, 1690-1750.

LANCRINCK, PROSPER HENRY, a painter of German extraction, employed by Sir Peter Leyster in painting the grounds, landscapes, flowers, and sometimes the draperies of his principal pictures, born about 1628, died 1692.

LANDAIS, or LANDOIS, PETER, a favourite minister of Francis II., duke of Brittany, formed his tailor, executed by conspirators, 1485.

LANDEN, J., an Eng. mathematician, 1715-1780.

LANDENOLFE, the first of the name, prince of Capua, 884-887; the second, prince of Benevento and Capua, succeeded 982, assassinated 993.

LANDER, RICHARD and JOHN, who completed the solution of the great problem of African geography left half-finished by Mungo Park, were born in Cornwall—Richard in 1804, his younger brother two years later. The former abandoned the trade of a printer, to which both were brought up, in order to accompany Captain Clapperton on a second journey to Africa, in the capacity of attendant. On the death of Clapperton at Sokoto, 13th September, 1827, he proceeded southwards to Funda, intending thence to trace the course the river to its embouchure; but meeting with hostile natives, and being without a companion to cheer him, he was obliged to make for Badagry, on the bight of Benin, by the nearest route.

He reached it in safety on the 21st November, two years two months and fourteen days after his departure from it with Clapperton; and after took ship to England. Having submitted to government a plan for exploring the course of the Niger, which was approved of, and confidence being reposed in him, from the intelligence, address, and bravery he had already exhibited, Lander was commissioned, by instructions dated 31st December, 1829, to trace the course of the river from Katunga, to the sea, to Lake Chad, or wherever its stream should carry him. 'My brother,' says Lander in his account of the journey, 'eagerly volunteered to accompany me, which the government refused to allow him to do, or make him even the promise of a reward.' John's name is mentioned in the instructions; and to him was assigned the duty of making inquiries, as far up as Boussa and Yaori, and the books and papers that belonged to M'Go Park, believed to be in possession of the king of that country. Richard himself was provided with all the articles that he asked for his personal convenience during his journey, together with 200 dollars in coin, and leave to draw for 20 more at Badagry if required; his wife was to be paid £100 during the ensuing year, and on his return a gratuity of £100 was to be paid to him. On such slender means, and such slight temptations, did these two enterprising and high-spirited young men undertake one of the most arduous missions, and accomplish one of the most interesting and important discoveries of modern times. 'Science,' says Lieutenant Becher, 'was the object of the question; and all depended on that noble quality of mind, determination of purpose, and a strong feature in the character of our countrymen without which science itself is of little avail.'—Introduction to Journal in Family Library.) The Landers left England on the 9th January, 1830; and departing from Badagry on the 31st March with a small escort, crossed the country from Katunga, following Clapperton's route in his second journey. Thence they turned northwards to Boussa without separating, as originally contemplated, visited the scene of Park's lamented death, and discovered some portions of his property, but not his journal, or any papers of value. At Yaori, on the 2d August, they began the ascent of the river, and without serious molestation reached as far as Kirree. Here they were met and made prisoners, and taken down the river to Eboe, within the delta. At this place, by the promise of a considerable ransom, for which a written promise was given to a friendly chief, King Ibo, they were delivered from the imminent danger of being sold as slaves, and they pursued their onward course. On the 18th November, 1830, the adventurous travellers reached the sea by the River Nun (Brass river of the English), one of the branches of the Niger, which has its mouth on the bight of Benin,—and thus set for ever at rest the long-disputed question of the course of the great river. The feelings of satisfaction and gratitude which now filled their minds at the success of their mission, and their deliverance from so many dangers, were speedily changed to those of bitter regret and disappointment, by the disgraceful conduct of a countryman. Captain Lake, of the English brig Thomas, on board of which they were taken at the mouth of the river, peremptorily refused to honour their draft for goods and arms in favour of King Boy; and the kind-hearted chief was driven from the ship with terrible threats. On their return home, however, orders were sent out to pay the proper demand. The Landers found their way home from Fernando Po by Rio de Janeiro, and reached Portsmouth on the 10th June, 1831. On their voyage to Rio, they learned that Lake and his crew met a violent death at the hands of pirates. By the kindness of Lord Gode- rich, then colonial secretary, Richard Lander was placed in circumstances of 'honourable competence,' and a government appointment promised to his brother. To Richard also was awarded the first prize given by the Royal Geographical Society, value fifty guineas; and at the same meeting at which it was presented, the African Association, which had accomplished so much for discovery on that continent, was incorporated with the Geographical Society, and thus no longer maintained a separate existence. In the following year, the Landers returned to Africa with the expedition projected by Mr. M'Gregor Laird and other gentlemen of Liverpool, for the purpose of establishing a settlement on the Upper Niger, and opening trade with the interior. From causes, however, which might have been avoided, and could again be foreseen and met, this expedition proved a total failure. Among the great number who perished were the two Landers; Richard, from wounds received in an affray with the natives, and John, from the effects of the climate. An interesting account of their discoveries, their joint production, published before leaving England, forms three volumes of Murray's Family Library. [J.B.]

LANDI, CHEV. G., an Ital. painter, 1756-1830.

LANDI, Cos., an Ital. numismatist, 1521-64.

LANDI, COUNT J., an Ital. moralist, 16th cen.

LANDI, ORTENSIO, an Ital. wr., d. abt. 1560.

LANDI, VERGUSIO, a military chief, 14th cen.

LANDINO, C., an Italian classic, 1425-1504.

LANDO, a pope, who reigned six months in 913.

LANDO, a prince of Capua, reigned 842-862.

LANDO, CONRAD and LUCIUS, the chiefs of one of the troops of mercenaries that overran Italy in the 14th century.

LANDO, M., gonfalonier of Florence in 1378.

LANDO, P., doge of Venice after Gritti, 1539-45.

LANDON, C. P., a French painter, 1760-1826.

LANDON, LETITIA ELIZABETH, the daughter of an army agent resident in London, became favourably known to poetical readers while she was hardly beyond the years of childhood, by many pieces of verse published in the Literary Gazette. In 1824, while she was still very young, appeared, with her early signature of L.E.L., the first of her volumes which attracted general notice. It contained, with smaller pieces, 'The Improvisatrice.' Other poems of considerable extent showed her to possess much affluence of fancy, and excellent power of expressing romantic emotion. Her strength, however, was wasted, like that of Mrs.

Hemans, in a constant succession of small pieces contributed to magazines and annuals; nor did she ever fulfil the promise of high genius held out by her youthful effusions. She was the authoress, also, of three sentimental novels. In 1837 she married Mr. Maclean, the governor of the settlement at Cape Coast; and, accompanying her husband to Africa, she died there in 1838, in consequence of having taken an over-dose of medicine. [W.S.]

LANDUS, an Ital. physician, assassinated 1562.

LANE, SIR RICHARD, a statesman of the reign of Charles I., who made him lord chief baron of the exchequer, and one of the privy council. He is the author of 'Reports' in the court of exchequer in the reign of King James, and in 1640 was counsel for the earl of Strafford. Died in 1650 or 1651.

LANFRANC, archbishop of Canterbury, was born at Pavia in 1005. When but a young man, and after having studied at Bologna, he travelled into France, stayed for a time at Avranches, and entered the monastery of Bec, of which he ultimately became the prior. His teaching here attracted immense crowds of students from all the countries of Europe. William, duke of Normandy, appointed him in 1062 abbot of the monastery of St. Stephen at Caen. He refused the archbishoprick of Rouen, but as counsellor to the Conqueror he came over to England, and was by his influence elected to the see of Canterbury in 1070, and he remained in this high office till he died, May, 1089. Lanfranc was a man of independent spirit, and was no vulgar flatterer of popish pretensions, while he stoutly contested the pre-eminence with Thomas, the archbishop of York. He was also a politician of no mean order, and took an active share in all the business of church and state. He was besides one of the early founders and expositors of the scholastic philosophy. He has left commentaries on the Epistles of Paul, a tract on transubstantiation, and some letters. His works were published by Luc D'Achery, in one volume folio, at Paris, 1648; and in England by Dr. Giles, Oxford, 1844, in two volumes, 8vo. [J.E.]

LANFRANC, an Ital. wr. on surgery, 13th cen.

LANFRANC, or LANFRANCO, GIOVANNI, an Italian painter, pupil of A. Caracci, 1581-1647.

LANFREDINI, J., an Ital. cardinal, 1680-1741.

LANG, CH. N., a Swiss naturalist, 1670-1741.

LANG, or LANGE, JOHN MICHAEL, a German divine and Oriental scholar, 1664-1731.

LANGALLERIE, PHILIP DE GENTIL, Marquis De, a military officer who served thirty-two campaigns in the French army, and, in consequence of a quarrel with his superiors, entered into the service of Austria, and was subsequently known at the courts of Poland and the Hague. He was imprisoned by the Austrians on a charge of intriguing with the Turks, and died at Raab, 1717.

LANGARA, DON J., a Sp. admiral, 1730-1800.

LANGBAIN, GERARD, an English divine, author of several learned works in history and theology, 1608-1658. His son, of the same name, author of 'English Dramatic Poets,' &c., born 1656.

LANGBEIN, A. F., a Ger. writer, 1737-1835.

LANGDALE, LORD, Henry Bickersteth, a celebrated English lawyer, 1783-1851.

LANGDALE, SIR MARMADUKE, an English officer, dist. in the civil wars as a royalist, d. 1661.

LANGE, ANNE FRANCES ELIZARETH, a actress, born at Genoa of Fr. parents, 1772.

LANGE, C., a German philologist, died 1810.

LANGE, F., a French painter, 1676-1756.

LANGE, F., a French writer on law, 1610-1680.

LANGE, J., a Prussian physician, 1485-1550.

LANGE, J., a German juriconsult, 1508-1580.

LANGE, J., a German philologist, died 1810.

LANGE, J. R., a Flemish painter, died 1680.

LANGE, LAURENCE, a Swedish traveller, employed as ambassador to China by Peter the Great, and appointed governor of Irkoutsk on return from his third mission in 1737. He published a narrative of his travels, which contains most interesting information on China and the Chinese.

LANGE, RODOLPH, provost of Munster, distinguished for his learning, and for his zeal in revival of polite literature in Germany, 1440-1500.

LANGE, W., a Danish savant, 1622-1682.

LANGEBECK, JAMES, a learned writer, philologist of Jutland, author of works illustrating Danish history and antiquities, 1710-1770.

LANGELAND. See LONGLAND.

LANGENDYK, P., a Dutch poet, 1762-1810.

LANGERON, COUNT ANDRAULT DE, a French officer in the service of Russia, 1763-1831.

LANGES, N. DE, a Fr. antiquarian, 1525-1580.

LANGETTI, J. B., an Ital. painter, 1635-1700.

LANGHAM, SIMON DE, an English monk, rose to be abbot of St. Peter's, Westminster, finally, archbishop of Canterbury and cardinal name occupies a considerable place in the history of the reign of Edward III., who seized the temporalities of his see, and was a long while at variance with him and his party. He died at Avignon, 1376, but his body was solemnly removed to Benet's chapel in Westminster Abbey, where it still exists.

LANGHORNE, DANIEL, an English divine, as a writer on British history and antiq., d. 1740.

LANGHORNE, JOHN, known as a miscellaneous writer and poet, was born at Kirkby Stephen, Westmoreland, 1735, and lived by his profession as a tutor and curate in the Church of England, was the author of many fugitive pieces, published from about 1759 to 1765, when he became a contributor to the 'Monthly Review,' and, from period to his death, in 1779, enjoyed considerable repute in the literary world—such as it then was. In 1804, his son published an edition of his poems with a life of the author; and his brother, LIAM, who died before him in 1772, had some medical skill, and assisted Langhorne in a translation of Plutarch.

LANGLE, H. M., a Fr. composer, 1741-1810.

LANGLE, J. M., a French divine, 1590-1660. His son, SAMUEL, author of a 'Letter on the differences between the Church of England and Dissenters,' died 1699.

LANGLES, L. M., a Fr. Orientalist, 1763-1810.

LANGLEY, B., an English architect, died 1790.

LANGLOIS, EUSTACE HYACINTHE, a French designer, engraver, and antiquarian, 1777-1810.

LANGLOIS, J., a French journalist, 1770-1810.

LANGLOIS, J. B., a French Jesuit, 1663-1740.

LANGLOIS, M., a Latin poet of the 15th century.

LANGRISH, B., an Eng. med. writer, d. 1810.

LANGTOFT, P., an Eng. chronicler, 14th century.

LANGTON, STEPHEN, an English ecclesiastical writer, 12th century.

ated in France, and appointed to the see of Carbury by Innocent III., in the reign of King John. The quarrel on this occasion, between the pope and the crown, brought the kingdom under interdict, and the king was compelled to yield possession of the diocese, upon which Langton entered in 1213. Langton was a learned man, and wrote commentaries on the Scriptures. He also became a strenuous advocate of the independence of the English Church, and manfully resisted the policy of the pope. Died 1228. [E.R.]

LANGUET, HUBERT, a French diplomatist and political writer, who, being a protestant, narrowly escaped the massacre of St. Bartholomew, and died in the service of the prince of Orange, 1518-1581.

LANGUET DE GERGY, JEAN BAPTISTE JOSEPH, a doctor of the Sorbonne, distinguished as a charitable founder, 1675-1753. His brother, JACQUES JOSEPH, a member of the French Academy, archbishop of Sens, also distinguished for his benevolence, 1677-1753.

LANGUSCO, PHILIP, Count De, a Guelph leader, who held the supreme power at Pavia from 1310 to 1313, died a prisoner at Milan 1315.

LANNIERE, N., an Italian musician, 1568-1646.

LANNINO, B., a Lombard painter, died 1558.

LANJUINAIS, JOSEPH, a French ecclesiastic, converted to protestantism, and an associate of the enlightenmentists, died about 1808.

LANJUINAIS, JEAN DENIS, nephew of the preceding, distinguished as a great Oriental scholar and lawyer, but more especially for his consistent advocacy of constitutional principles, under every regime of the French government, from the assembly of the states-general to the restoration. He is the author of many political and learned works, and was a considerable contributor to the reviews and journals. Born at Rennes 1753, died 1827.

LANNAY, CH. DE, an able general of Brabant, died in the service of Charles V., about 1470-1527.

LANNAY, J. C., a Dutch poet, 1738-82.

LANNEAU, PETER ANTHONY VICTOR MOY DE, a French grammarian and ecclesiastic, 1758-1830.

LANNES, JEAN, Duc De Montebello, one of Napoleon's marshals, was born at Guienne 1769, apprenticed to a dyer. In 1792, he entered the army as a volunteer, and distinguished himself in the first campaign of Italy, and afterwards in the principal actions which have shed such a lustre on the French arms. He was mortally wounded in the battle of Essling, in 1809; and Napoleon paid the remarkable eulogium upon him, that he became greater by every day's experience. At the time he said, Lannes had more valour than genius (it), but his spirit was continually mounting to the level of his courage; and he, whom he had called a pigmy, he lost a giant! [E.R.]

LANOUE, DENIS DE, a Fr. printer, died 1650.

LANOUE, FRANCIS DE, one of the most celebrated Calvinist captains of the 16th century, distinguished in the principal actions fought with the League, and killed at the siege of Lamballe, 1591. He is the author of 'Military and Political Dissertations.' His son, ODET, a man of letters, was also in the military service of Henry IV. and STANISLAUS LOUIS DE LA NOUE, of the same family, served in the French armies in the campaign of 1741 and 1756, and was killed in the affair of Saxenhausen, 1760. He is the author of 'New Military Constitutions.' His life was written by Toustain.

LANOUE, J. S. DE, a Fr. dramatist, 1701-61.

LANSBERG, J., a Bavarian ascetic, died 1539.

LANSBERGHE, P., a Flem. astron., 1561-1632.

LANSSELUIS, P., a Sp. Hebraist, 1580-1682.

LANTARA, S. M., a French painter, 1745-78.

LANTIER, S. F. DE, a Fr. author, 1736-1826.

LANTZANI, A., a Lomb. painter, 1645-1712.

LANZI, LUIGI, an Italian antiquarian and philologist, and writer on the fine arts, 1732-1810.

LANZONI, J., an Italian savant, 1663-1730.

LAO-TSEE, LAO-TSEU, or LAA-KIUN, a Chinese philos., who is regarded as the reformer of the sect of Tao-Tsee, flourished in the 6th c. B.C.

LAPARA, L., a French engineer, 1651-1706.

LAPEROUSE, JEAN FRANÇOIS GALAUP DE, was born at Alby, dep. of Tarn, 1741. At the age of fifteen he was appointed a midshipman in the French navy, and served with great distinction at home, in the East Indies, and in Canada, up till the peace of 1783. Soon after, he was put in command of an expedition destined to explore the Pacific, with instructions admirably laid down, but embracing a range of discovery much too wide for one expedition to overtake in a reasonable time. The French government had been excited by the example of England, and longed to reap such a harvest of glory as had been recently gained for her by her most accomplished and successful navigator.—La Perouse was to determine everything left incomplete by Cook, to fill up every gap in the maritime geography of the globe. Verification of Cook was not contemplated; for the French authorities had full confidence in his accuracy, and La Perouse regarded his memory with 'unbounded veneration.' The expedition consisted of two fine frigates, the Boussole and Astrolabe, fitted out in the most complete manner, and with such a staff of scientific men as had never before been sent afloat. Yet there is hardly an expedition on record which ended so disastrously, and to which a like melancholy interest has so long attached. On the 1st August, 1785, the expedition sailed from Brest, and proceeded westwards by the straits of Magellan; and after visiting several islands in the Pacific, hastened to fulfil instructions by making the American coast in lat. 59° N., and exploring it southwards from the point where Cook had begun his examination, going north. But as La Perouse found it impossible to reach this latitude earlier than June (1786), and as his instructions obliged him to be in China by February, too little time remained for a satisfactory survey of this broken coast. He arrived at Monterey in September, repaired the ships there, and crossing the Pacific westwards, fixed the position of the Ladrone and Bashee islands, and on 2d January, 1787, cast anchor at Macao. The work appointed for the succeeding summer was an investigation of the coast of Tartary from Corea towards the N.E. This La Perouse successfully accomplished, and was the first to give an accurate coast outline of those regions. From Kamtschatka, with the permission of the Russian governor, he sent M. de Lesseps home to France, overland, with his journals and despatches; a duty which this enterprising young man safely fulfilled, and was thus the first who crossed through the whole length of the old world. The expedition now sailed south to the Navigator's islands, where twelve persons belonging to the ships, among whom was M. de Langle, captain of the Astrolabe, were killed in an unexpected attack by the natives. La Perouse soon after reached Botany Bay, where he refitted for his third voyage. Before proceeding upon this, however, he fortunately sent home by some English ships the journals and charts of his various discoveries from the time M. de Lesseps had left. His plan of operations for the future was laid down in a despatch, dated 7th February, 1788; this proved to be the last communication ever made by him. He sailed from Botany Bay in the same month, and from that date till the year 1826, all trace of the expedition was lost—its fate was involved in complete mystery. In 1791, an expedition was sent out under D'Entrecasteaux (q. v.), in search of the lost navigators; but no intelligence was obtained. No further effort was made by the French: but the fate of La Perouse was a constant subject of inquiry to the voyagers of other nations. At length, in May, 1826, Captain Dillon, in the ship St. Patrick, returning from Valparaiso to Pondicherry, and calling at the island of Tucopia, in the northern part of the New Hebrides group, to learn the fortunes of some persons landed there in 1813, from the ship Hunter, Captain Robson, on board of which Dillon had been at the time, found in possession of one of those persons who was a Lascar, a silver sword guard, on which he thought he could trace the initials of La Perouse's name. His curiosity was strongly excited, and he at once instituted inquiries among the natives. From some of them who had visited the adjoining isles, he found that two ships had been many years before wrecked on one to the N.W. called Vanikoro, or Recherche isle; and that several articles of French manufacture were in possession of the islanders. With this intelligence he returned to India; and in January, 1827, was sent out in command of a ship, the Research, to make a full investigation of the facts. He returned to Calcutta in April; and in February, 1828, reached Paris with many relics of Perouse's ships, collected at the island of Vanikoro. Several brass guns were raised from a coral reef; and many articles were purchased from the natives—as fragments of a theodolite, barometer tubes, iron bolts and bars, pieces of china, the backboard of a ship with the fleur-de-lis carved upon it, a silver candlestick, a ship's bell with the inscription 'Bazin m'a fait,' millstones, &c. Count Lesseps, who was still living, believed the backboard to be that of the Boussole, that the guns and millstones were the same as he had seen in the ships; and Sir William Betham determined certain armorial bearings on the bottom of the candlestick to belong to the family of Colignon, the name of the botanist who was on board the Boussole. The natives asserted to Captain Dillon that one of the ships had struck, and then gone down in deep water, at a place pointed out by them; and that the other ran on a coral reef, and kept together till the crew had landed upon the island, where they remained five months, and then sailed away in a small vessel of their own construction. It appears clear, therefore, that it was the Boussole which stuck upon the reef, and Astrolabe that went down. Whether La Perouse was among those who left the island, and what was the fate of those who thus braved the dangers of the sea, must ever remain an impenetrable mystery. Captain Dillon was received with great favour by Charles X., and rewarded with a pension of 4,000 francs. In the following year French navigator Dumont D'Urville confirmed observations of Captain Dillon, and brought additional relics, raised from the reef on which the Boussole went to pieces.

LAPIS, GÆTANO, an Ital. painter, 1704-1771.
LAPLACE, PETER DE, a French mathematician, killed at the massacre of St. Bartholomew, and of 'Commentaries on the State of Religion in the Commonwealth,' 'The Use of Moral Philosophy,' and 'The Excellence of the Christian Religion,' 1526-1572.

LAPLACE, PETER ANTHONY DE, a miscellaneous writer, and translator of many English works into French, including a wretched version of Shakspeare and Otway, 1707-1793.

LAPLACE, PIERRE SIMON, Marquis DE, at Beaumont-en-Auge, near Honfleur, in Normandy, 1749, died in Paris on 5th May, 1827. It is vain indeed to propose to present within the rigorous limits of our volume, either the character or the achievements of this titanic Geometer. The works of his illustrious compeer La Grange are also, in their detail, utterly remote from the appreciation, unless by masters in mathematical science; but then, through the exquisite taste of that great man, his perfect conception of mathematics, and his eminent possession of that blending of fusing imagination, which—on whatever it turns itself withal—demands, as a necessity, the imposition of unity and symmetry,—the eye of the ordinary onlooker, cannot rest on the achievement of his, without discerning something of its import and beauty, and of its value in tending or rearranging some large domain of Analysis. That La Place had nothing of the Æsthetic Faculty, it would require indeed something beyond hardihood to assert,—seeing that the Système du Monde he has left a resumé of all Modern Astronomy, unsurpassed, for perspicuity and elegance, in any Scientific Literature: a verdict scarcely less favourable must be pronounced on parts of the Essai Philosophique sur les Probabilités and those exquisite, but too brief sketches of Mathematical History. Nevertheless, it is unfortunately true, that in his massive works—especially in that one which his imperishable monument, the Mécanique Céleste—he has shown so great a negligence and disdain of art in composition, that to this day, and chiefly through this defect, it is, to the uninitiated, a heaviest labour to peruse it. Though apparently always of results, and rarely ever of methods, he starts from one mode of position to another, with perplexing rapidity, not caring apparently, provided he can co-ordinate or rather present in successive order the truth, has to expose, from what source his power exhibit them comes, or whether or not they set down as flowing easily and naturally from each other. Something of this apparent negligence ought undoubtedly to be laid to the giver of his enterprise—one that could have valled in its vastness at no former time, which no one has ventured to undertake it was not like that which fell to the lot of viz.: the privilege to explain and for ever a grand Law of Nature,—but suit of that Law through all the intricacies actual Universe, the tracking of it as by conditions and circumstances, and ise evaluation of its effects. Still further; by no means unlikely, that this over-

—so to speak—of his subject-matter, al-him to permit himself that supreme indif-which has so often induced reprehension, ing the claims and discoveries of his pre-and rivals. Lagrange's name, for instance, ly mentions; one of the finest analytic disco-of that Geometer he simply calls 'the formula
' 21 of the second book of the Mecanique Celeste.
he treats more summarily still, the remarkserts of our own Brook Taylor; nor indeed any one go to his volumes for information story, unless he is first in possession of stantive merits of all our Analysts. If aly, or any feeling akin to it, gave rise to ingular reticence, the jealousy must indeed ween morbid; for, irrespective of the debt e him for his immense compositions, La-had achieved enough, of distinct and posidiscovery, to secure as enduring a fame as l to any man, since the lifetime of Newton.
strokes, it is true, are apart and rugged; but ere both wide and deep. With an infelicity table in him, Napoleon is said to have omptuously designated Laplace the 'infinitesimal philosopher.' Infelicitously; inasmuch reely any epithet could have been selected pplicable: there is no modern mathemawhose power of generalizing was more rang, or in whose mind it more preponderated.
almost at any page, for instance, of the extraordinary Theorie des Probabilites:—from the one chapter which unfolds the yet unfathomed Calculus of Generating Functions, down to the where are sown through it, as if broadcast, of fresh methods—such as that with regard to finite integrals—and of wholly unsuspected naïvetés. It is the same with all writings of his, dealing on the metaphysics of his subject; ever when we find the largest views indicated in a simple or unpretending phrase; and—in still unpalpable illustration—it may be permitted us to note that far-famed 'Nebular Hypothesis,' which, be it exactly accurate or not, leads the established imagination—searching a solution of fundamental constitution of our planetary system—back into the depths of ages, when organized orbs were not, or existed only in the thought of the Generic Powers, that were then bringing their birth! From a mind of such a depth, and indeed from no other, could have issued his specific and lustrous contributions to Astronomy, for instance—the discovery of the inequality of Jupiter and Saturn—the settlement of the old puzzle regarding the acceleration of the mean motion of the Moon—the theory of Jupiter's Satellites—or that earliest indication of perturbations of stability within our system. Beyond all these, however, the crowning glory of the 'infinitesimal philosopher' is unquestionably the power that conceived, and the corresponding fortitude that executed the Mecanique Celeste. This book, as we have said, had no predecessor; and a second Laplace must arise, ere it shall be threatened by a rival. Extending to five quarto vols.

of investigation generally abrupt through its over-condensation, it is divided into the sixteen books whose general titles we subjoin. 1. The General Laws of Equilibrium and Motion. 2. The Law of Universal Gravitation, and the Motion of the Centres of Gravity of the Celestial Bodies. 3. The Figure of the Celestial Bodies. 4. The Oscillation of the Sea and the Atmosphere. 5.
The Rotation of the Celestial Bodies. 6. Particular Theories of the Planets. 7. Theory of the Moon. 8. Theory of the Satellites of Jupiter, Saturn, and Uranus. 9. Theory of Comets. 10.
Miscellanea, Refraction, &c. 11. Figure and Rotation of the Earth. 12. Attraction and Repulsion of Spheres, and the Statics and Dynamics of Elastic Fluids. 13. Oscillation of Fluids covering Planets. 14. Precession, Libration, and the Ring of Saturn. 15. Supplement to Book II. 16.
Further views concerning the Satellites.—Within this immense programme—placed as if parenthetically—one finds the most striking notices on almost every important problem of mechanical physics; any one of which, would have made the fortune of an ordinary mathematician. The Student, betaking himself to Laplace, must not go, however, under any delusion. To the best informed we have said, the perusal of this stupendous work is no holiday task: nor should that valuable assistance be declined, afforded by the annotated translation of the Mecanique, munificently presented to the world by the excellent American DR. BOWDITCH.—In an unhappy hour for the completeness of his fame, Laplace went aside from the field of pure science to become a politician.
The cause of Napoleon's displeasure with him is unknown; certainly the Emperor himself gave no correct account of it. For many reasons, indeed, we should consider Laplace quite unlikely to take successful part in that great game, in which Empires were the stakes; but that had signified less, if he had preserved an ordinary constancy. To the FIRST CONSUL, he had dedicated the First Edition of the Mecanique,—not living to publish a second. But from the Second Edition of the Theorie des Probabilites—published after the Restoration—he meanly struck out the former dedication to NAPOLEON EMPEREUR. One has required so often to lament political degeneracy among Scientific men in France, and their proneness to bend the knee before existing power, that it is refreshing to turn to the unsullied integrity of our late illustrious ARAGO.—Another charge, commonly brought in this country against our mathematician, we are constrained in all honesty to repudiate; at the very least, we demand the verdict of Not Proven. Originating, we believe, in Professor Robison's feverish book on continental Free Masonry, and further sustained by mistaken views as to the relations of the 'Nebular Hypothesis,'—the rumour has gone wide abroad, among the religious public of Great Britain, that this great Geometer professed himself, or was an Atheist. It is scarcely necessary to say that Laplace never wrote on Ontology: but we deem it incumbent to add, that after a careful review of his written works, with reference to this interesting point, we are prepared to disallow the title of any one to repeat such an assertion. In the present state of thought and language on such matters, there is no rule which ought to be more sacred than this.—Sentiments ought never to be imputed; nor that right tampered with, which belongs to every man—the right to define and designate his own. Concerning those loftier verities of Ontology, vision, alas! does not come equally clearly to all! But one's apprehension of Realities so aweful, must not be measured by his degree of glibness in speech, or that often irreverent aptness in the repetition of words and formulas, which in itself, argues, after all, nothing superior to the parrot's faculty. To the failings of this great French Geometer, the splendour even of his achievements, ought, indeed, in nowise to blind us: in regard to the relations of his inner soul to the Infinite, if we cannot rest without curiosity, at least let us judge justly, in charity, and with hope—recalling, in all humility, his own last words on Earth—Ce que nous connaissons est peu de chose; ce que nous ignorons est immense! [J.P.N.]

LAPO, JAMES, or JACOPO, of which it is the diminutive, a distinguished Florentine artist, died 1262. His son, ARNOLFO, an architect and sculptor, died 1300. Another LAPO, or JACOPO, distinguished as a canonist, died 1381; and RICCIO DI LAPO, a painter of Florence, and grandfather of Giotto, was born 1330.

LAPPOLI, MATTHEW, an Italian painter, died 1504. His son, J. ANTHONY, a painter, 1492-1552.

LARA, a celebrated Spanish family, the founder of which was Ferdinand Gonzalez, count of Castile and Lara, died 970. In 1130, the family was divided into two branches, the first with MANRIQUE DE LARA, who took the title of viscount of Narbonne, for its stock; and the second deriving from ORDOGNO PEREZ, and preserving the title of count of Lara, until it became extinct in the latter half of the 14th century. The members of this family played an important part in the civil wars of Castile, under Alphonso X., Sancho IV., Ferdinand IV., and Alphonso XI., with whom they often disputed the crown.

LARCHER, P. H., an eminent French critic and Hellenist, author of remarks on Voltaire's philosophy of history, under the title of a 'Supplement,' &c., 1726-1812.

LARDIZABAL, DON MANUEL DE, minister of Ferdinand VII., 1750-1823.

LARDNER, DR. NATHANIEL, a learned dissenting minister, author of 'Credibility of the Gospel History,' 'Letter on the Logos,' 'A Vindication of Three of our Saviour's Miracles,' 'The Testimonies of the Ancient Jews and Pagans in favour of Christianity,' a 'History of Heretics,' &c. Dr. Lardner was educated among the presbyterians, and, in 1729, became assistant minister at Crutched Friars, 1684-1768.

LA REVEILLERE-LEPEAUX, LOUIS MARIE, described by Napoleon as a hot and sincere patriot, and a fanatic by temperament, was born 1753, and became a member of the constituent assembly, the convention, the council of elders, and the directory. He had a considerable share in the direction of affairs, and was chief of the sect of Theophilanthro-pists. His peculiar talents led him to give attention to the details of business, while he left Barras the exercise of authority. Died 1824.

LARGILLIERE, N., a Fr. painter, 1656-1

LARIVE, J. M. DE, a Fr. tragedian, 1744-1

LARIVEY, P. DE, a Fr. dramatist, died 1

LARIVIERE, P. J. H., a member of the Fr. assembly and convention, dist. among the Girondists, whose fate he escaped by flight, 1760-

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD. See ROCHEFOUCAULD.

LA ROCHEJAQUELEIN. See ROCHEJAQUELEIN.

LA ROMANA, MARQUIS DE, a Spanish general, against the French in the late war, died 1

LARON, M., a Dutch painter, 1653-1705

LARREY, DOMINIQUE JEAN, Baron, a celebrated military surgeon, and devoted follower of Napoleon Buonaparte, who pronounced him the most virtuous man that he had known, 1766-1

LARREY, ISAAC DE, a French historian and reformed religion, who fled to Holland on the execution of the edict of Nantes, an. of a 'History of England,' a 'Hist. of Louis XIV.,' &c., 1638-1

LARRIVEE, H., a French actor, 1733-180

LARROQUE, MATTHEW DE, a French priest and controversial divine, 1619-1684. His Daniel, a protestant minister, and author of Véritables Motifs de la Conversion de l'Abbe la Trappe, 1660-1731.

LARRUYA, E., a Span. statistician, died 1

LARUE, GERVAIS DE, a French ecclesiastic and antiquarian savant, author of 'Histoire Trouvères,' &c., 1751-1835.

LARUE, J. S. DE, a Fr. historian, 1765-18

LARUETTE, J. L., a French actor, 1731-1

LA SALLE, ANT. C. L. COLLINET, Count, general of cavalry, killed at Wagram, 1775-18

LA SALLE, H., a French author, 1765-18

LASCA, the assumed name of A. F. GRAZIANI, a burlesque poet and novelist of Florence, b. 1

LASCARIS. Two learned Greeks of this name were among the fugitives who quitted Constantinople in 1454. The first, CONSTANTINE LASCARIS, died at Messina 1493. He is the author of the first book printed in the Greek character.

The second, ANDREW JOHN LASCARIS, of the same family, distinguished as a scholar and ambassador, was patronised by Leo X., and became principal of the Greek college founded at his own instance. Died at Rome 1535. Constantine Lascaris is usually called BYZANTINUS, and John, or ANDREW JOHN, RHYNDACENUS.

LASCARIS, A., an Ital. economist, 1776-1

LASCARIS, P., grand mas. of Malta, 1560-1

LASCARIS, THEODORE, a Greek prince, known as THEODORE I., son-in-law of Alexis Angel emperor of Constantinople. After the taking of that city by the crusaders in 1203, Lascaris possessed himself of Bithynia, Lydia, the coast of the Archipelago, and of a part of Phrygia, which he formed into a kingdom, with Nicæa as its capital, and reigned over it from 1206 to his death 1222. The second of the same name, born 1201, succeeded his father, John Duca, as emperor of Nicæa 1255, and died 1259. The son of the latter named JOHN LASCARIS, succeeded him when a few years of age, and died the same year. His successor was Michael Palæologus.

LAS CASES. The count of this name, MARIN JOSEPH EMMANUEL AUGUSTE DIEUDONNE, was a Frenchman of patrician origin, whose history is that of a chivalrous devotion to Napoleon Buonaparte. He was born at the chateau of Las Cases, in the department of the Haute-Garonne, in 1766, and acquired distinction in several actions as a military officer; among these, was the storming of Galtair by the combined fleets of France and Spain. At the outbreak of the French revolution, he joined the emigrants at Coblenz, and after sharing in the fruitless efforts of the Vendean war on the expedition to Quiberon, settled in England. He was among the first of the emigrants to return to France on the invitation of Napoleon; and having engaged himself as a volunteer under Bonaparte, when the English attacked Flushing in 1809, he became known to the emperor, and gradually rose high in his confidence. His loyalty to Napoleon shone the brighter for his reverses in 1810 and the year following, when he accompanied him to St. Helena, and remained in the closest intimacy with him for eighteen months. At the close of each day, Las Cases noted all that transpired, and every thought expressed by the emperor, in a journal, which has since been published as a 'Mémorial de Sainte Hélène;' and in the perusal of which, it must be remembered, that it came under the eye of Napoleon, leaf by leaf, as it was written. This modern Bayard was at length sent a prisoner to England, and treated with every indignity not to say petty spite, by the government of the time, under Lord Castlereagh. The Emperor Francis at last interfered in his favour, and he was allowed to pass the remainder of his days in peace in the vicinity of Paris. Died 1842. [E.R.]

LASCO, or LASKI, JOHN A., a Polish theologian, known as a promoter of the reformation, d. 1560.

LASCY, or LACY, PETER, Count De, an Irish noble, who entered into foreign service after the conquest of Ireland by William III., and became a field-marshal of Russia, and governor of Lithuania, 1640-1751. His son, JOSEPH FRANCIS MAURICE, Count De Lascy, born at St. Petersburg 1725, became a marshal in the service of Austria, d. 1801.

LASERNA SANTANDER, CH. AN., a learned Spaniard, au. of 'Diet. Bibliographique,' d. 1813.

LASIUS, L. O., a Ger. philologist, 1675-1750.

LASNE, M., a French engraver, 1596-1667.

LASSALA, M., a Spanish poet, 1729-1798.

LASSALLE, A. DE, a Fr. metaph., 1754-1829.

LASSELS, RICHARD, an Oxford scholar, who became a convert to Romanism, and wrote 'Travels in Italy,' born 1603, died at Montpellier 1668.

LASSO, ORLANDO DI, an eminent musician of Ferrara, author of a great number of sacred compositions, 1520-1596. His works were published by his sons, RUDOLPH and FERDINAND, both of whom distinguished themselves in the same profession.

LASSONE, J. M. F., a Fr. physician, 1717-88.

LASSUS, a Greek poet, about 500 B.C.

LASSUS, P., a French pathologist, 1741-1807.

LASTESIO, NOEL, an Ital. savant, 1707-1792.

LASTMAN, PETER, a Dutch painter, 1581-1649.

LATHAM, NICHOLAS, a painter and engr., b. 1619.

LATHAM, F. DE PAULE, a French botanist, author of 'Hortus Burdigalensis,' 1739-1823.

LATHAM, JOHN, an English physician, eminent as an ornithologist and antiquarian, author of 'A General Synopsis of Birds,' in 6 vols. 4to; an 'Index Ornithologicus;' and 'A General History of Birds.' The latter is contained in 10 vols. 4to, and is esteemed his greatest work. Born at Eltham in Kent 1740, died 1837.

LATHAM, JOHN, a physician of London, author of several contributions to the Medical Transactions, and of a work on 'Diabetes,' 1761-1843.

LATIL, J. B. M. A. ANTHONY DE, cardinal and archb. of Rheims, conf. of Charles X., 1761-1839.

[Birth-place of Latimer.]

LATIMER, HUGH, one of the early English reformers, was born at Thurcaston, near Mount Sorrel, in Leicestershire, about 1472. After taking his degree at Cambridge, he entered into holy orders, and was quite a zealot on behalf of popery. The influence of Thomas Bilney induced him to scan the subject more thoroughly, and to study the Bible. His eyes were gradually opened, and at the age of fifty-three he renounced Romanism. His bold opinions against many Romish errors soon made him notorious in his own university and elsewhere. He even ventured to remonstrate with Henry VIII. on the sin and danger of prohibiting the Bible in English. Through the patronage of Thomas Cromwell he was appointed to a living in West Kinton, Wiltshire, where he preached with great earnestness and fervour the evangelical truths of the reformation; and he first became chaplain to Ann Boleyn and then bishop of Worcester in 1535. When the act of the six articles was passed, he dissented, and proved his sincerity by resigning his bishoprick. For his disinterestedness and firmness he was committed to the Tower, where he lay a prisoner for six years; and though the accession of Edward led to his liberation, he would on no account resume the government of his see. No sooner had Mary ascended the throne, than Latimer, as might be anticipated, became a marked object of papal vengeance. He refused to fly from the royal citation, conscious that his hour was come. After a manly vindication of his opinions, he was, along with Ridley, condemned to the flames. On the day of his martyrdom at Oxford, 16th October, 1555, he appeared in a shroud, was, with his fellow-sufferer, bound by an iron chain to the stake, and five bags of gunpowder were fastened round his body. The faggots were kindled, and Latimer, turning to Ridley, cried with prophetic voice, 'Be of good comfort, master Ridley, and play the man. We shall this day light such a candle, by God's grace, in England, as, I trust, shall never be put out.' Latimer's sermons, which were collected and published, London, 1825, in two octavos, are distinguished by quaint and homely sense, and pointed and vigorous admonition, the offspring of a playful temper, a happy disposition, and a sincere and noble heart. [J.E.]

LATIMER, W., a dist. scholar of the 16th cent.

LATINI, BRUNETTO, a literary savant, and partizan of the Gueffs, author of 'Trésor de Toutes Choses,' a species of encyclopædia, written in French, and inventor of the Terza Rima. He was one of the first teachers of Dante, 1220-1294.

LATINI, LATINO, an Italian critic, 1513-1593.

LATOMUS, J., an adv. of Luther, died 1544.

LA TOUCHE-TREVILLE, LOUIS RENE MADELAIN LAVASSOR DE, vice-admiral of France, and deputy of the noblesse, 1745-1804.

LATOUR, THEODORE, a general and count of the Austrian empire, born 1780, appointed minister of war, and barbarously murd. by the popul. 1848.

LATOUR-MAUBOURG, MARIE VICTOR FAY, Marquis De, a royalist general, minister of war in 1820, afterw. gov. of the 'Invalides,' 1756-1831.

LATOUR. See DE LATOUR, TOUR.

LATREILLE, PETER ANDREW, one of the greatest entomologists of France, member of the Academy of Sciences, and professor at the Museum of Natural History, 1762-1833.

LATROBE, B. H., an Eng. architect, d. 1820.

L'ATTAINANT, GABRIEL CHARLES DE, a French ecclesiastic, known as a popular poet and gallant, 1697-1779.

LATUDE, HENRY MAZERS DE, a French courtier, who was liberated from the Bastille in 1784, after an imprisonment of thirty-five years, occasioned by his intrigues against Madame Pompadour. He is the author of 'Memoirs,' which have made his name cel. throughout Europe, 1724-1804.

LAUD, WILLIAM, archbishop of Canterbury, and favourite minister of Charles I., was a prelate of great learning, and in all probability of sincere intentions, but he was carried away by the high sacerdotal and regal doctrines which prevailed under the Stuarts. He was born at Reading 1673, became fellow of St. John's College 1693, obtained a living in the Church of England 1607, and was appointed chaplain to James I. in 1611. With Laud's abilities and doctrines, promotion followed as a matter of course, and it became the aim of his life to unite the three kingdoms in one profession of religion. The power of the Star Chamber, courts of high commission, fines, penances, and all the means he could command, were strained to this purpose. Since the Union, the Scotch presbyterians had infused much of their own spirit into the English puritans, and when Prynne, Bastwick, and Burton, came bleeding from the scaffold, such a spirit was aroused as only the blood of those who had provoked it could allay in the minds of the people. It was in 1628 that Laud succeeded the duke of Buckingham as prime minister; in 1630 he became chancellor of Oxford; in 1633, archbishop of Canterbury, and chancellor of the university of Dublin: and in 1637, he procured that decree of the Star Chamber which destroyed the liberty of the press, and made him the universal censor and demi-gorgon of opinion in England. With full allowance for all that is urged in favour of his zeal for religion, and cause of learning, it is neither surprising nor regretted that he shared the fate of Strafford. Pity for an infirm old man, and the well-known bigotry of his enemies, would persuade us otherwise. The historian, however, is bound to choose between these emotions and the demonstration of a nation, to be followed eventually by horrors as those of the French revolution. Laud was declared guilty of treason by a bill of attainder, and executed on Tower Hill, January 1645.

LAUDER, SIR TH. DICK, Baronet, a famous novelist and miscellaneous writer, known as a contributor to Blackwood's and Tait's Magazines, for his works descriptive of Scottish scenery, at Edinburgh 1784, died 1848.

LAUDER, W., a Scotch writer, known for false accusations of plagiarism agt. Milton, d. 1700.

LAUDERDALE, DUKE OF, an English statesman, minister of Charles II. from 1670 to 1688.

LAUDERDALE, JAMES MAITLAND, earl, a statesman of the party of Fox, born 1759, succeeded his father as a Scotch peer 1789, to seat in the House of Lords as one of the representative peers of Scotland 1790, created a peer of the United Kingdom, and became chancellor of land 1806, died 1840. The earl of Lauderdale is the author of 'Letters to the Peers of Scotland,' published 1794, and devoted the last ten years of his life to agricultural pursuits.

LAUDIVIO, L., an Italian poet, 15th cent.

LAUDON, GIDEON ERNEST, Baron Von, a distinguished Austrian gen. of Scotch descent, 1710-1790.

LAUDOUNIERE, RENE DE, a French general, distinguished in an attempt to conquer Florida, when nearly all his companions were massacred by the Spaniards, author of 'Histoire Notable de la Floride,' published 1586, twenty years after his adventure.

LAUGIER, A., a French chemist, 1770-1810.

LAUGIER, M. A., a miscel. writer, 1718-1780.

LAUGIER DE TASSY, a Fr. hist., last of the name, 1718-1780.

LAUJOU, P., a French dramatist, 1727-1780.

LAUNAY, or LAUNEY, BERNARD

LAUNAY, Marquis De, governor of the Bastille at the commencement of the French revolution, born in that fortress, of which his father was governor before him, in 1740. The circumstances which he was placed by the attack of the people were so unprecedented, that it is not surprising that the most contradictory charges have been brought against him. Early in July, 1789, he was visited by three strangers above the common rank, who asked him what he intended to do if the fortress should be attacked? 'My conduct,' he replied, 'is regulated by my duty: I shall defend it.' Afterwards, he caused an immense quantity of powder to be transferred from the arsenal to the Bastille, and, on the 14th of the month, the fortress was besieged and taken. Rather than yield, De Launay had seized a cannoner's match to blow up the place, but he was turned back from the match by two of his own officers with fixed bayonets. After the capitulation of the garrison he was murdered, and his head paraded through the streets with six others, elevated on pikes. What part of his body is not known.—The Bastille was ed in 1383, and when it was destroyed only prisoners were found in it. It was levelled to the ground as the monument of an arbitrary power which had endured for ages; and the Me- of Latude, who had issued from its gloomy cells in 1784, after a confinement of thirty-five years, were in all probability a great provocative to destruction. [E.R.]

[Siege of the Bastille.]

LUNEY, J. B. DE, a Fr. deputy, 1752-1831.
LUNOY, J. DE, a doctor of the Sorbonne, known as a theologian and critic, 1603-1678.

LURA, or LAURI, F., an Ital. paint., 1623-94.
LURAGUAIS, LOUIS LE FELICITE, Duc De Bracas, and Count De, a French dramatist and miscellaneous writer, 1733-1823.

LURATI, P., an Italian painter, 1282-1340.
LUREMBERG, W., a Ger. physician, 1547-1600. His son, JOHN, a mathematician, d. 1658.
LURENBERG, P., a physician, naturalist, astronomer, 1585-1639. His brother, JOHN, a Greek and Latin poet, hist., and math., 1590-1658.

LURENCE, FRENCH, professor of civil law at Orléans, known as a miscellaneous writer, died 1600. His brother, RICHARD, professor of Hebrew, archbishop of Cashel, and a distinguished theologian, 1760-1839.

LURENS, ANDREW DU, a French physician and anatomist, died 1609. His brother, HONORIUS, archbishop of Embrun, under Henry IV., d. 1612.

LURENS, HENRY, an American statesman and ambassador, 1724-1792. His son, JOHN, a diplomat and friend of Washington, killed towards the close of the war at the age of twenty-six.

LURENS, L. DES, a Fr. theologian, died 1671.

LURENT, J. A., a Fr. painter, 1763-1833.

LURENT, P., a French engraver, 1739-1809.

LURENT, PETER JOSEPH, a mechanic of Flanders, celebrated as an hydraulic engineer, and in the construction of artificial limbs, 1715-1773.

LURIERE, E. J. DE, a Fr. jurist, 1659-1728.

LURISTON, JAMES ALEXANDER BERNARD marquis of, a diplomatist and marshal of France, grandson of Law, the financial projector, born 1768. He was distinguished in the wars of the empire, and became ambassador to England as the bearer of the propositions of peace, or preliminaries of peace between Great Britain and France in 1802. He was promoted to the highest rank under Louis XVIII., and d. 1828.

LAUTREC, ODET DE FOIX, Seigneur De, one of the bravest captains of France in the 16th century, died at the siege of Naples 1528.

LAUWERS, N., a Flemish designer, born 1620.

LAUZUN. The Duke de Lauzun, formerly Count Antonine Nompar de Canmont, is the hero of an intrigue with Mademoiselle de Montpensier, the granddaughter of Henry IV., to whom, it was alleged, he was secretly married. Died, after a long imprisonment and exile, 1723.

LAVALETTE, ANTH. DE, a cel. Jesuit, whose shameful practices in the middle of last cent. contributed to the expulsion of his order from France.

LAVALETTE, MARIE CHAMANS, Count De, a distinguished soldier of the French revolution, who was born 1769, and, becoming a favourite of Buonaparte, was appointed director-general of the post office, and counsellor of state under the empire. He shared the misfortunes of the emperor in 1814, but resumed his functions and promoted the cause of Napoleon during the hundred days, for which, after the restoration, he was condemned to death. By the aid of his wife, and three English gentlemen at that time in Paris, he had the good fortune to escape from prison. Died 1830.

LAVALETTE, EMILIE LOUISE DE BEAUHARNAIS, countess of, and wife of the preceding, deserves a separate notice for her conjugal fidelity and courage. Being a niece of the empress Josephine, she was married to Lavalette at the instance of Napoleon towards the close of the last century, and after the condemnation of her husband in 1815, whose execution was fixed for the 21st of December, she exchanged clothes with him in prison, and thus enabled him to escape. For her conduct on this occasion she was accused, along with her accomplices, of a conspiracy against the state; and though the charge could not be supported, the anxiety she had undergone, and the loss of her husband, ended in insanity.

LAVALLEE, JOHN, Marquis De, a Fr. drama. and miscellan. writer in the magazines, 1747-1815.

LAVATER, H., a Swiss physician, 1560-1623.

LAVATER, JOHN GASPAR, the famous writer on physiognomy, was born at Zurich 1741, and died in 1801 of the wounds which he received when his native town was taken by the French, under Massena, when he was busy in the streets animating the defenders and aiding the sufferers. He was pastor of the principal church in his native place, and has left a high character for moral purity and benevolence of disposition. His 'Physiognomy,' consisting indeed only of fragments, or materials, towards a system, was published in 4 volumes 4to, 1775, illustrated with numerous engravings. The popularity it immediately acquired was due, in some measure, to the fact that many of the heads were portraits, and his descriptions often a good-humoured satire upon well-known characters. Some of his hints are very valuable, and his inductions sufficiently supported by facts; but there are many crude observations, and proofs of hasty generalization, which have done much perhaps to prevent physiognomy from making any considerable progress. Besides this popular work, Lavater wrote 'Aphorisms on Man,' 'Jesus the Messiah,' 'Swiss Lays,' 'Spiritual Hymns,' 'A Look into Eternity,' and 'The Secret History of a Self-Observer.' He is unjustly ridiculed for his belief in spirits, and their agency in human affairs, which is nevertheless a characteristic common to the greatest names in literature and history. His real fault is want of method, without which the greatest philosophical insight must fail to create a system. It cannot be denied, however, that he excels as a moralist, and the more, perhaps, for this very deficiency. As an art-writer he may be more open to criticism, yet his work contains many valuable precepts. [E.R.]

LAVATER, L., a Swiss theologian, 1527-1586.

LAVAU, W. DE, a French author, 1653-1730.

LAVAU, C., a French advocate, 1747-1836.

LAVAU, J. C. T., a Ger. lexicog., 1749-1827.

LAVICOMTERIE DE ST. SAMPSON, LOUIS, a political writer, and partizan of the French revolution, au. of 'Crimes des Rois de France,' d. 1809.

LAVINGHAM, R., a prior of Bristol, au. of an abridgment of Bede's History, close of 14th cent.

LAVINGTON, GEORGE, bishop of Exeter, chiefly known for his 'Enthusiasm of the Methodists and Papists Compared,' was born 1683, and died 1762. This work, possessing singular humour, and marked by much learning, is utterly deficient in a true appreciation of the facts contained in the Diary of Wesley. As the raillery of a gentleman and a scholar, the book may be unexceptionable, but it is a singular production for a prelate of the church, and can only be excused by the extravagances it was intended to correct, and the ignorance of its author. Besides this amusing work, and its continuation applied to the Moravians, Bishop Lavington published some occasional sermons. [E.R.]

LAVOISIER, ANTOINE LAURENT, born in Paris 1743, guillotined 1794. With the advantages of birth and station, Lavoisier acquired an excellent education, distinguishing himself at an early period by the precocity of his talents. Although Lavoisier might probably have gained celebrity by the discovery and determination of the characters of new bodies, he chose a more important field, viz. that of generalization, and of thus explaining the bearings of what appeared to others isolated facts of comparatively little import. It was by making use of the discovery of oxygen by Priestley that he was enabled to supply a theory of oxidation and combustion, which has stood the test of three quarters of a century, although he has laid himself open to the charge of at least want of candour in appearing to deprive Priestley and Rutherford of the credit of their discoveries of oxygen and nitrogen. By this theory he extinguished the idea of phlogiston which had only served to obscure all new discoveries. Another valuable contribution to the science by Lavoisier, was the chemical nomenclature which he is understood to have invented, and which is still retained, having served as the basis of all subsequent improvements in this important branch of the literature of the science. Occupied in his researches on respiration, and in the discharge of his government duties, he was suddenly deprived of life during the horrors of the French revolution. [R.D.T.]

LAW, EDMUND, bishop of Carlisle, was born at Cartmel, in Lancashire, and lived 1703-1787. He was the author of an 'Inquiry into the Ideas of Space, Time,' &c., published 1734 or 1735, in a controversy with Dr. Clark, arising out of a previous translation by Law of Archbishop King's upon the Origin of Evil. His other work 'Considerations on the Theory of Religion,' reflections on the Life and Character of Christ the works of Locke, with a life and preface. to these his sermons and lesser tracts on physical and theological subjects. Law was posed to the doctrine of analogy assumed by bishop King and Bishop Brown, and held the moral attributes of the human mind the same as those of the divine, only that the greater in the latter case. See KING.

LAW, EDWARD. See ELLENBOROUGH.

LAW, JOHN, the celebrated financial projector was born at Edinburgh, son of a banking smith there, about 1670; and being a clever mathematician and accountant, was employed by government to bring the accounts of the revenue into order. Thus initiated into the knowledge of finances and of public business, and possessing a restless, scheming disposition, it appeared that the industry of the country was languishing for want of money to employ it. This led to a famous project for a Land Bank. A vicious mercantile theory prevailed at that time, which its rise from the recent introduction of bank notes and the supposition that a large currency constituted the wealth of a country without regard to commercial wants. The Bank of England, the British banks generally, had acted upon a mistaken notion, and created great disappointments and irritation, by suddenly limiting loans when they discovered the drain of gold it created. It was at this juncture that Law forward with his scheme for issuing paper money equal to the value of all the lands in the kingdom, and on his proposal being rejected by the parliament of Scotland, carried it to the continent, finally procured its adoption by the duke of Orleans, regent for Louis XV., then in his minority. Hitherto bank notes had not been so common in France. Mr. Law commenced his operations in 1717, and between that period and 1720, when the bubble burst, France was converted into one stock exchange, and at last covered with paper money. Our limits do not admit of particulars in so difficult of explanation as financial operations, but the basis of Law's project was the idea that paper money may be multiplied to any amount, provided there be security in fixed stock; the truth is, if the bulk of a currency is increased beyond the actual wants of commerce, all its separate coins and notes, must depreciate in proportion. In the working out of Law's scheme, a trading company was created which had been conveyed to it the whole province of Louisiana, the possessions of France on the banks of the Mississippi, which, besides, obtained by purchase charters and property of the Senegal Company, the India Company, and the China Company, and came the sole public creditor by farming the collection of the taxes and revenues of the kingdom. The ruin of this vast machinery at that particular moment, and with the suddenness that it occurred, was produced by an edict of the regent, in 1720, reducing the value of the notes, in defiance of Mr. Law's protestations, to an equality with the value of the French coinage, which, in former times, had frequently been altered by the government.

inconvenience. This breach of faith instantly checked their circulation, the deplorable results of which went on to produce an insurrection of the people. Law became an exile, and after wandering in England, Holland, and Germany, at last died in Venice, fully convinced of the solidity of his system, 1729. See LAURISTON. [E.R.]

LAW, WILLIAM, one of the most powerful and original of English writers in the interest of religion, was born at Kingscliffe, in Northamptonshire, 1686, and educated for the Church of England at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of M.A., and obtained a fellowship.

11. On the death of Queen Anne, 1714, he refused to take the necessary oaths of allegiance to the new dynasty, and thus cut himself off from all hope of preferment in the church. In 1717, the Augustinian controversy was commenced by the attack of Hoadley on the principles and practices of the nonjurors, and Law defended his cause in 'Free Letters,' remarkable for their logical compactness and command of language. In 1721 and 1722 he made a further exhibition of his principles in remarks on the Fable of the Bees, and 'The Usefulness of Stage Entertainments.' In the latter year he also published his 'Christian Perfection' and in 1729 his 'Serious Call to a Devout and Holy Life.' This work is universally acknowledged to be the most stirring appeal to the practical common sense of mankind, in behalf of religion, ever written, and its 'characters' are not inferior in power and conception to those of La Bruyère. It is the only work by which Law is known to the public at the present day. Our author had now become domesticated in the family of Gibbon, as he is to the historian's father, with whose sister, M. Hester Gibbon, and her friend, Mrs. Hutcheson, he afterwards established himself at Kingscliffe in the capacity of chaplain and almoner. After his 'Serious Call,' he published one of the most original of his logical works, entitled 'The Case of Reason,' in answer to Tindal's 'Christianity as it is in the Creation;' and this, excepting such correspondence as he carried on—in which he was a master—was the last production of his pen before his adoption of the principles of Jacob Boehme. His acquaintance with those works may be traced to the years between 1733-1736. In 1737 he sprang like the eagle from fresh fastnesses, and published his book of the 'Sacrament' in answer to Hoadley, which unfolds his new philosophical divinity in the happiest manner. In 1737 appeared his 'Christian Regeneration,' which is really another 'Serious Call,' written from his own ground, followed by his 'Earnest and Serious Answer to Dr. Trapp,' who had attacked his 'Christian Perfection' and 'Serious Call.' In 1740 his 'Appeal' was given to the public, the aim of which is to confute Arianism and Deism from the nature of things; and, in the same year, a rejoinder to his opponent, entitled, with a fine sense of the humorous, 'Dr. Trapp Vindicated from the Imputation of being a Christian.' In 1741 his 'Way to Divine Knowledge' opened the doors of a positive religion, founded on the principles contained in the writings of his master. It was followed by the 'Spirit of Prayer,' introduced by the 'Spirit of Love,' published 1752, which is a masterly demonstration that the wrath to be quenched is not in God, but the creature, who can possess no goodness by birth of his natural parents. Law died in 1761, immediately after completing the most eloquent and perfect of all his works, 'An Humble, Earnest, and Affectionate Address to the Clergy.' It is not easy to do justice to his character and influence in few words; but he was the first teacher of Wesley, who afterwards quarrelled with him; and England owes him a great debt in the revival of evangelical religion, and the reaction against the worldliness of the church establishment, which characterized the commencement of last century. However mistaken in the foundations of his mystical system, he was always guided by high principle, even to the matter of his bachelorship, which he maintained to the end of his days. Besides the works we have mentioned, he edited an edition of Boehmen, in 4 volumes 4to, which are embellished with drawings, made by a German named Frere. There are likewise some minor tracts from his pen, not included in our enumeration, and among these is a dialogue on 'Justification,' between a churchman and a Calvinistic methodist, published 1759, in answer to Beveridge. All the memoirs of Law are miserably deficient in appreciation of his genius and consistency. [E.R.]

LAWES, HENRY, the court musician of Charles I., and the composer of Milton's 'Comus,' &c., 1600-1662. His brother, WILLIAM, also a musical composer, the subject of the next notice.

LAWES, WILLIAM, a celebrated composer, was the son of Thomas Lawes, vicar-choral of Salisbury, of which city he was a native. In his early life he was a member of the choir of Chichester, from which place he was called to become one of the gentlemen of the chapel royal in 1602, and afterwards one of the church musicians to King Charles I. He lost his life at the siege of Chester, in the year 1645. [J.M.]

LAWLESS, JOHN, an Irish agitator, 1772-1837.

LAWRENCE, FRENCH. See LAURENCE.

LAWRENCE, J., an Eng. agricul., 1756-1836.

LAWRENCE, S., an E. Indian gen., 1697-1775.

LAWRENCE, THOS., an English physician and medical wr., an. of the life of Harvey, 1711-1783.

LAWRENCE, SIR THOMAS, P.R.A., was born at Bristol, 4th May, 1769. He obtained an early reputation at Bath as a portrait painter in crayons, and as early as 1787 established himself as a portrait painter in oils in London, where four years afterwards, 1791, he was elected an associate of the Royal Academy, and in 1795 an academician; he had previously succeeded Sir Joshua Reynolds as painter to the king. He was knighted by the prince regent in 1815, and in 1820 succeeded West as president of the Royal Academy. He died in London, 7th January, 1830.—Sir Thomas had perhaps, since the days of Vandyck, an unrivalled career as a portrait painter; he, however, owed his chief success to the skilful flattery of his female portraits, the complexions of which left nothing to be desired: his male pictures, as a rule, bear no comparison with his female; besides being ill-proportioned, they are wanting in manly character; still his portraits of the emperor Francis, of Pius VII., and of the Cardinal Gonsalvi, in the Waterloo Gallery at Windsor, are among the greatest masterpieces of the art extant.—

(Williams, The Life and Correspondence of Sir Thomas Lawrence, 1831.) [R.N.W.]

LAWSON, SIR JOHN, a naval commander and royalist, killed in action with the Dutch, 1665.

LAX, REV. W., an eminent astronomer, d. 1836.

LAYA, J. L., a French dramatist, 1761-1833.

LAYARD, C. P., a divine and scholar, d. 1803.

LAZARUS, prince of Servia, 1886.

LAZERI, P., an Italian theologian, 1710-1789.

LAZIUS, WOLFGANG, a learned physician, and writer on history and antiquities, 1514-1565.

LAZOWSKI, a Polish refugee, distinguished as an active agent in the Fr. revolution, died 1793.

LAZZARA, N., an Ital. archæologist, 1744-1833.

LEACH, WM. ELFORD, an eminent naturalist, and curator in the British Museum, 1790-1836.

LEAD, JANE, was a mystical writer, whose works date from 1683, or thereabouts, to the close of the century, and who died in 1704. She wrote from her own experience of the spiritual life, and the state of departed spirits, but qualified by a previous acquaintance with the system of Boehmen. Her works are a 'Revelation of Revelations,' explaining a portion of the Apocalypse, 'The Laws of Paradise given forth by Wisdom to a Translated Spirit,' 'The Wonders of God's Creation Manifested in the Variety of Eight Worlds,' &c. This woman, of singular learning and experience, belonged to a society of 'illuminati,' presided over by Dr. Pordage, and, at a later period, to the 'Philadelphians,' among whom Dr. Francis Lee was eminent. The latter has written the life of Jane Lead, and some prefaces to her works. She lived at a period when some great development from the spiritual world was universally expected, but especially in Germany. See SWEDENBORG. [E.R.]

LEAH, the wife of Jacob, and mother of Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Judah, Issachar, Zebulun, and Dinah, dates uncertain.

LEAKE, JOHN, a phys. and medi. wr., d. 1792.

LEAKE, RICHARD, one of the bravest officers that ever served in the English navy, created master-gunner of all England, and celebrated for his skill in pyrotechnics, 1629-1696. His son, SIR JOHN, admiral of England, celebrated for the relief of Gibraltar, &c., 1656-1720. STEPHEN MARTYN LEAKE, nephew and biographer of Sir John, distinguished in heraldry and numismatics, 1702-1773.

LEANDER, a French ecclesiastic, died 1667.

LEANDER, a youth of Abydos, who was accustomed to swim across the Hellespont in order to visit his mistress on the opposite shore, and was at last drowned in a tempest, date unknown.

LEANDER, ST., archbishop of Seville, 6th cen.

LEAPOR, MARY, the daughter of a poor gardener, authoress of original poems of great merit, and 'The Unhappy Father,' a tragedy, 1711-1735.

LEARCHUS, a Greek sculptor, B.C. 700.

LEBAILLY, A. F., a Fr. author, 1756-1832.

LEBAS, J. P., a French designer, 1707-1784.

LEBAS, P. F. J., a member of the French convention and Committee of Public Safety, killed himself when arrested with Robespierre, 1765-94.

LEBAUD, P., a French historian, 16th century.

LE BEUF, JOHN, a Fr. historian, 1687-1760.

LEBID, BEN RABIAT, an Arab. poet, died 673.

LEBLANC, CLAUDE, b. 1669, secretary of war to Louis XV. during the years 1713-1726, d. 1728.

LEBLANC, F., a Fr. numismatist, died 1810.

LEBLANC, H., a painter of Lyons, 17th cen.

LEBLANC, J., a French poet, died about 1700.

LEBLANC, J. B., a French author, 1707-1780.

LEBLANC, MARCEL, a Jesuit mission, to Ceylon, 1653-1658.

au. of a 'Hist. of the Revol. of Siam,' 1653-1658.

LEBLANC, R., a French classic, about 1510.

LEBLANC, T., a Fr. commentator, 1592-1650.

LEBLANC, V., a Fr. traveller, abt. 1650.

LEBLANC, W., bishop of Toulon, distinguished as a philologist and Latin poet, 1620-1688. nephew, of the same name, also a prelate. Latin poet, 1661-1601.

LEBLANC DE GUILLET, ANTHONY BERNARD, a dramatic author, 1730-1799.

LEBLOND, G. M., a Fr. numisma., 1738-1800.

LEBLOND, J. B., a Fr. naturalist, 1747-1800.

LEBLOND, W., a Fr. mathematician, 1704-1780.

LEBON, JOS., a mem. of the conv., 1765-1800.

LEBRET, H., a Fr. historian, died about 1700.

LEBRUN, A. L., a French author, 1680-1750.

LEBRUN, C., a cele. French painter, 1618-1690.

LEBRUN, C. F., duke of Placentia, dist. statesman and scholar, time of Napo., 1739-1800.

LEBRUN, D., a French juriconsult, died 1780.

LEBRUN, J. B. P., a French painter, 1743-1800.

LEBRUN, L., a Jesuit and poet, 1607-1680.

LEBRUN, PIERRE, a French theologian, author of 'Histoire des Pratiques Superstitieuses,' 1661-1740.

LEBRUN, PIGAULT, a Fr. novelist, 1742-1800.

LEBRUN, PONCE DENIS ECOUCHARD, one of the most celebrated of French lyric poets, flourished at Paris, 1729-1807.

LEBRUN-DESMARETTES, J. B., a Jesuit writer, au. of a 'Life of St. Paul,' &c., 1650-1700.

LECAT, C. N., a surgeon of Picardy, 1700-1780.

LECCHI, G. A., an Ital. mathema., 1702-1780.

LECENE, C., a Calvinist minister, 1647-1700.

LECERE, P., an ecclesiastical wr., 1677-1740.

LECERE DE LA VIEVILLE, J. H., chancelor of Normandy, and a wr. on music, 1674-1740.

LECLERC, DAVID, professor of Hebrew at Geneva, 1591-1665. His brother, STEPHEN, a physician and scholar, died 1676.

LECLERC, JOHN, nephew of the preceding, a laborious theological writer and critic, whose works are well known, and frequently quoted, by scholars. The most famous of his writings on biblical history, and consist of commentaries written in Latin, lived 1657-1736. His brother, DANIEL, celebrated as a medical writer and anatomist, 1652-1728. LAURENT JOSSE LECLERC, son of John, also a learned writer, died 1736.

LECLERC, JOHN, a French painter, 1687-1740.

LECLERC, J. B., a member of the French Academy, and writer on music, 1755-1826.

LECLERC, M., a dramatic writer, 1622-1700.

LECLERC, N. G., a French physician, au. of 'Histoire Physique, Morale, Civile, et Politique de la Russie,' 1726-1798.

LECLERC, P., a famous Jansenist, 1706-1780.

LECLERC, S., a cele. Fr. engraver, 1637-1700.

LECLERC, VICTOR EMANUEL, a French general, who distinguished himself in Italy, and married to Pauline, the sister of Napoleon, afterwards became the wife of Prince Camille de Polignac. Leclerc, who entered the republican army as a volunteer, was born in 1772, and died of the low fever on an expedition to St. Domingo, 1800.

CLERCQ, C., a French missionary, 17th ct.
COAT, YVES MARIA GABRIEL P., a French
ral, appointed by Buonaparte military chief of port of Boulogne, 1757-1826.

COCQ, R., a politician of the 14th cent.
COINTRE, LOUIS, called 'Lecointre of Ver', a deputy to the legislative assembly and French convention, and a bitter enemy of the Girondists, born 1750, died unnoticed 1805.

COMTE, F., a French sculptor, 1737-1817.
COMTE, J., a Latin poet, died 1707.

COMTE, L., a Jesuit and astronomer, author of 'Memoirs on the State of China,' died 1729.

COMTE, L., a French sculptor, 1643-1695.

COMTE, M., a female engraver, born 1719.

CONTE, A., a French juriconsult, d. 1586.

CONTE, L. J. F., a French author, d. 1740.

CONTEUR, JOHN, a native of Jersey, dist. officer of the British army in India, where he was the prisoner of Tippoo Sultan, 1761-1835.

COOT, JAMES, a lawyer of Geneva, 1560-1614.

CORDELIN, J. H., a Ger. philolog., 1672-1737.

CORDELL, M. F., a physician of Nuremberg, au. of a work on the microscope, 1719-1760.

CORDELL, A. DE, a Spanish poet, 1552-1623.

CORDELL, C., a French architect, 1736-1806.

CORDELL, A. P., a French botanist, 1761-1831.

CORDELL, N. P., a French physician, 1731-1807.

CORDELL, E., an Irish antiquary, 1739-1823.

CORDELL, JOHN, a famous American traveller, born at Groton, in Connecticut, 1751. After his residence among the Indians he came to England, and sailed with Captain Cook on his second voyage, the narrative of which he published. His enterprise was a pedestrian tour round the globe; but being prevented from continuing his journey by the Russian government, he returned to London, and was employed by the African Association. He had proceeded as far as Grand Cairo, in the design of penetrating the interior of that interesting country, when he died of a virulent fever, 1788.

LEE, ANNE, sometimes considered the founder of the Shaking Quakers, was born at Manchester,

1731, and after becoming the mother of several children, whom she lost at an early age, gave herself up to religious contemplation, with the exception that the union of the sexes was the great sin. The society to which she attached herself had been founded by three prophets from the Jevennes, who came to London in 1705, and it was greatly advanced by a person named James Wiley, in 1747. Anne Lee, having become the medium of a spiritual manifestation, was recognized as their spiritual head, or 'mother in Christ,' in 1771. In 1774, she accompanied some of her people to America, in order to escape persecution, and after travelling through New England, fixed her abode in the neighbourhood of Albany, where she died, or, in the language of her proselytes, 'withdrew from their bodily view,' 1784. Her case is a very remarkable one. Among other statements, she declared that no one had entered into heaven until the year 1731, which marked the commencement of a new dispensation; and she claimed for herself to be regarded as the 'Bride of the Lamb,' mentioned in the 12th chapter of the Apocalypse. Her followers increased to a considerable number after her death, and, for a short time at least, established a community of goods. [E.R.]

LEE, CHARLES, a British officer, who engaged in the service of General Washington in the American war of independence, died 1782.

LEE, EDWARD, archbishop of York in the reign of Henry VIII., and a zealous opposer of Luther, 1482-1544.

LEE, FRANCIS, a learned writer on philosophical, scriptural, and mystical subjects, was a physician, descended, by his mother, from the Percies of Northumberland, and by his father from the same family as the earls of Lichfield. He was born in 1660, and being left an orphan when between four and five years of age, was educated under the care of his aunt, Mrs. Elizabeth Jenkins. On receiving a fellowship at Oxford, he became tutor to Sir W. Dawes, afterwards archbishop of York, and at a later period to the son of Lord Stawell, with whose family he remained on terms of intimacy many years after. From 1691 to 1694 he travelled in Italy, and practised as a physician for some time at Venice.
In 1708 he was in London. In 1719 he went to France, and died on his journey at Gravelines. It is a curious circumstance that he was known to Peter the Great, and, at his request, drew up proposals for the advancement of his kingdom, the spirit of which, if not the form, has continued to guide the czars of Russia. His works are very numerous, but they were all published anonymously, or in the names of others. Some of them were collected in two volumes octavo, and published for the benefit of his wife and daughter, but these were by no means his most important labours—among which may be reckoned his 'History of the Montanists.'
His mystic poems are among the highest of that class, and his scriptural commentaries, though false in essential principles, exceedingly ingenious. [E.R.]

LEE, HENRY, an American general, who commenced his career in the army of independence, and was afterwards governor of Virginia, 1756-1818.

LEE, NATHANIEL, an English dramatic writer, author of the 'Rival Queens,' &c. Having attempted the stage as an actor without success, he directed his powers to dramatic composition, and produced a number of tragedies. He latterly became insane, and was two years an inmate of Bedlam, died 1692.

LEE, RACHEL FANNY ANTONINA, a lady of fortune, au. of an 'Essay on Government,' d. 1829.

LEE, SAMUEL, a nonconf. divine, 1625-1691.

LEE, Rev. SAMUEL, D.D., late regius professor of Hebrew in the university of Cambridge, and a great master of biblical and Oriental literature, was originally a poor carpenter, and was born in the neighbourhood of Shrewsbury, 1783. He is one of the most remarkable instances on record of perseverance in self-education under the most embarrassing circumstances, rewarded at last by the highest success in the honourable career he had chosen. His principal works are a Hebrew Grammar, a Hebrew Lexicon, and a new translation of Job. He was editor of the Scriptures in the Arabic, Persian, and Malay languages. Died 1852.

LEE, SOPHIA, a novelist and dramatic writer, author of 'The Chapter of Accidents,' and of three stories in the 'Canterbury Tales' of her sister, Miss Harriet Lee, born in London 1750, died 1824.

LEECHMAN, W., a Scottish divine, 1706-1785.

LEEM, CANUTE, a savant of Norway, 1697-1774.
 LEEPE, J. A. VAN., a Dut. painter, 1664-1720.
 LEEUW, G. VANDER, a Dutch paint., 1643-88.
 His br., PETER, of the same profession, 1644-1705.
 LEEUWEN, S., a Dutch jurist, 1625-1682.
 LEEVES, WILLIAM, a country clergyman, and composer of sacred music, author of the air of 'Auld Robin Gray,' 1749-1828.

LEFEBRE, V., a Flemish engraver, born 1642.
 LEFEBURE, S., a French engineer, died 1770.
 LEFEBURE, L. H., a Fr. botanist, 1754-1839.
 LEFEBVRE, A. B., a Fr. engineer, 1734-1807.
 LEFEBVRE, FRANCIS JOSEPH, duke of Dantzic, a marshal and peer of France, commander of the imperial guard at the battle of Jena, 1755-1820.

LEFEBVRE, P., a French author, 1705-1784.
 LEFERON, J., a Fr. wr. on heraldry, 16th cent.
 LEFEVRE, A. M., a Fr. antiquarian, last cent.
 LEFEVRE, CL., a French painter, 1633-1675.
 LEFEVRE, F. A., a Jesuit and poet, 1670-1737.
 LEFEVRE, J., a French astronomer, d. 1706.
 LEFEVRE, J., an old chronicler, died 1390.
 LEFEVRE, N., a French philologist, 1544-1612.
 LEFEVRE, N., a French chemist, died 1674.
 LEFEVRE, P. F. A., a drama. au., 1741-1813.
 LEFEVRE, R., a cele. portrait painter, d. 1677.
 LEFEVRE, T., a French savant, 1615-1672.

LEFEVRE DE BEAUVRAY, PETER, au. of a 'Dict. of Hist. and Philosophical Research,' b. 1724.

LEFEVRE DE LA BODERIE, WILLIAM, a learned Orientalist, part editor of the Polyglott Bible of Antwerp, 1541-1598. His brother, ANTHONY, an able negotiator, and the discoverer of the treason of Biron, author of an account of his embassies to England, died 1615.

LEFEVRE-GINEAU, LOUIS, professor of natural philosophy and mechanics in the college of France, distinguished also as a politician, and for his share in the introduction of the new system of weights and measures, 1751-1829.

LEFORT, FRANCIS JAMES, a native of Geneva, who became the favourite of Peter the Great, and the founder of the Russian army, 1656-1699.

LEFREN, LAURENCE OLAVESON, a Swedish savant, author of 'Discourses in Philosophy and Theology,' 1722-1803.

LEFRERE, J., a French historian, died 1583.

LEGALLOIS, JULIAN J. C., a phys. of Brittany, au. of 'Exp. on the Principle of Life,' 1775-1814.

LEGAUFFRE, A., a French jurist, 1568-1635.

LEGAY, LOUIS P. P., a Fr. author, 1744-1826.

LEGENBRE, ADRIAN MARIE, born in Paris 1751, died there on the 16th January, 1833. A mathematician who would have been at the head of the most illustrious School in modern Europe, had he not possessed as compeers LAGRANGE and LAPLACE. The contributions of Legendre to Analysis, were numerous and important, but it is less easy to give an account of them, as they consist rather of individual achievements in various departments of Science, than in the completion and co-ordination of comprehensive theories. But it may be said of him with perfect justice, that he rarely touched a subject without advancing our knowledge of it, and connecting his name permanently with its progress: we owe him, for instance, the celebrated proposition regarding the spherical excess in Trigonometry; and in his memoir on the Orbits of Comets, is the earliest proposal to employ the fertile method of the Least Squares. Legendre's chief works are his Exercices du Calcul Integral, in which he first sketched the determination and development of Elliptic Integrals, a subject afterwards treated by him more fully in the Traite des Fonctions Elliptiques, &c. Theorie des Nombres; and his Elements de methode,—a work of high elegance. A translation of this work into English with important additions by Legendre himself, was edited by Sir H. Brewster, and is well known in this country, attracted, at the time of its publication, considerable notice, by the fresh impulse it gave to discussions on the vexed question of Parallelism,—a subject which at different periods of history had much occupied M. Legendre. It is certainly not true that the effort of the French Geometers to surmount the difficulty by aid of the mere algebra of Functions, met with any success; nevertheless his process, and the criticisms to which it was subjected, seem to lead pretty nearly to the seat of that difficulty. If a proposition cannot be demonstrated, or is made to lean on assumptions or paralogisms, there is no doubt that imperfectly exists where there ought to be none. An imperfection must be either a flaw in the deductive process, or an inadequate statement of the fundamental principles,—the axiomata not being sufficient to sustain the whole science. There is certainly no flaw in the logic of Geometry: therefore must exist in the list of axioms. It indeed appears the opinion of all Geometers that most have fallen into the error of supposing that the defect necessarily relates, to the subject of that specific proposition, where difficulty appears. This is in nowise a legitimate conclusion: and nothing but failure could attend effort to supply the deficiency by new postulates or axioms regarding parallel lines. The human faculties can lay down no axioms regarding infinity, and are not entitled to the concession of any postulate. Infinity, in our highest attainable expression of it, is simply the negation of finiteness, and no qualities can be predicated concerning it, unless they be negations, or the limit to which the qualities of a series of finite forms may be shown to tend. The imperfection of Elements of Geometry cannot, accordingly, have anything to do with the theory of parallelism: it merely happens that in our usual system of existence of some fundamental defect first appears when that theory is treated of. The defect seems to lie in Euclid's inadequate conception of the necessarily distinctive nature of two definite quantities of geometrical quantity—form and magnitude. The Greek Geometer did not trace out the manner in which we acquire our notions of these attributes, and he did not therefore recognize it as an attribute that the attribute of form has no dependence on the attribute of magnitude. The phenomenon of Universal Belief, indeed, amply sustains the position—'If any figure exists or is conceivable, it must exist or be conceivable with the same magnitude, whatever its magnitude;' or any other element, involving the truth, that in our Perception of the Geometrical qualities of an Object, form is definite; Magnitude being indefinite; and an analysis of the process of Perception reveals the root of that belief; the notion magnitude involving an estimate of the distance of the object, while the notion of Form is, at its source, independent of every variable quantity. Now, the foregoing axiom, or some one similar to it, is involved in Legendre's mise en équation as well as in the subsequent processes of the l'ind himself; and—that step justified—Legendre's process is correct. It does not, however, require aid from the notation or procedures of Geometry, to remove the long known imperfection of Geometry: a judicious use of the principle now referred to, being quite adequate, without our departing from ordinary methods.—Legendre's life was spent in privacy and strenuous labour in the service of Science. He was not a favourite with any of the governments of France; but felt satisfied with the moderate competency that accrued from the application of his attainments. [J.P.N.]

LEGENDRE, GILBERT CHARLES, marquis of Sablin Sur Loire, an antiquarian and historical writer, 1688-1746.

LEGENDRE, LOUIS, one of the principal actors in the French revolution, was born at Paris, 1756, and commenced life as a sailor. The year 1789 found him occupied as a butcher, and well prepared for the roughness of his two professions to take a part in popular tumults. He was soon recognized as a leader of the people in his own quarter, and greatly distinguished himself at the storming of the Bastille. His influence now became very considerable, and he took an active part in the insurrectionary movements of the 5th and 6th of October, 1789, when the people marched upon Versailles—of the 20th of June, 1792, when they invaded the Tuileries—and of the 10th of August following, when the guard were massacred, and the royal family imprisoned. He acted between Danton and the lower classes of the people as founder of the Cordeliers Club in October, 1789; and it is a singular proof of the savage sincerity which existed between the men, that they covenanted whichever of the two should detect the other in any defection from the popular cause should poinard him. Legendre found his way from the convention into the Committee of Public Safety, and he was the principal speaker in favour of Danton, when accused by Robespierre. The latter easily talked him down, and when Danton was executed, Legendre fawned upon the destroyer until the 9th Thermidor, when he changed his friend by joining the reaction. He was the chief instrument of the convention in defeating the subsequent attempt of the Jacobins, and finally became a sober member of the council of 500. He died in 1797, and by bequeathing his own property for dissection, made it appear somewhat less wonderful that he should have proposed to cut up the body of Louis XVI. among the eighty-six departments of France. [E.R.]

LEGENDRE, L., a French historian, 1655-1733.

LEGER, ANTHONY, a learned protestant divine of Piedmont, 1594-1661. His nephew, JOHN, also a learned divine, pastor of the Walloon church of Genéve, and author of a history of the Vaudoise churches, 1615-1670.

LEGER, FRANCIS BARRY BOYLE ST., a barrister-at-law, known as a fugitive wr., 1799-1829.

LEGER, F. P. A., a Fr. dramatist, 1765-1823.

LEGER, ST., bishop of Antrim, and one of the most important personages of the 7th century.

LEGGE, GEORGE, baron of Dartmouth, commander of the fleet in the interest of James II., died while imprisoned in the Tower, 1647-1691.

LEGGIER, P., a French dramatist, 1734-1791.

LEGNANO, STEFANO MARIA, commonly called 'Il Leganino,' an Italian hist. painter, 1660-1715.

LEGOBLEN, C., a French historian, 1653-1708.

LEGONIDEC, J. F. MA-MAU. AGATHO, a native of Brittany, dist. as a Celtic scholar, 1775-1838.

LEGOTE, P., a Spanish painter, died 1662.

LEGOUE, J. B., a French gentleman, distinguished as a man of letters, 1730-1782. His son, GAB. MA. JEAN BAPTISTE, a dramatist, 1764-1813.

LEGRAIN, J., a French historian, 1665-1642.

LEGRAND, ALBERT, a Dominican preacher, au. of the 'Lives of the Saints of Brittany,' d. 1640.

LEGRAND, ANTHONY, a French ecclesiastical and theologian, the first to reduce the philosophy of Descartes to the scholastic method, 17th century.

LEGRAND, J., a French moralist, 1350-1422.

LEGRAND, J., a French historian, 1653-1733.

LEGRAND, JAMES WILLIAM, a famous architect, and writer on the edifices of Paris, 1743-1807.

LEGRAND, L., a French theologian, 1711-1780.

LEGRAND, L., a Fr. juriconsult, 1588-1664.

LEGRAND, M. A., a French actor, 1673-1728.

LEGRAND, PETER, a celebrated buccaneer, dist. against the Spaniards time of Louis XIV., d. 1670.

LEGRAND, S. A. M., a Fr. Orient., 1724-1784.

LEGRAND D'AUSSAY, PIERRE JEAN BAPTISTE, a learned Fr. Jesuit and fabulist, 1737-1800.

LEGRAS, J., a French singer, 1739-1794.

LEGRAS, N., a French Hebraist, 1675-1751.

LEGRAS, P., a French sculptor, 1656-1719.

LEGUANO, S. M., an Ital. painter, 1660-1715.

LEGUAT, F., a French traveller, died 1735.

LEHMANN, C. G., a German savant, author of a 'Précis of the Natural Hist. of Man,' 1765-1823.

LEHMANN, J. G., a Ger. mineralogist., d. 1767.

LEIBNITZ, GODFREY WILLIAM; born at Leipzig, 3d July, 1646; died at Hanover, 14th November, 1716: his tomb may be seen at the extremity of the Grand Alley near the gates; it is a small temple, with the inscription Ossa Leibnitzi. There has been but one man in modern Europe who, in the attributes either of universality or intensity of genius, can be named as compeer to the marvellous intellect we are now to contemplate — his compatriot, GOETHE. The sphere of the latter, indeed, lay chiefly within the domain of our human sentiments, and the strifes, the defeats, and victories of Practical Life; nevertheless, across this fundamental diversity, it is easy to recognize a co-ordinate catholicity and force, raising both to conscious and serene supremacy, and stamping them as law-givers. Within the vast regions of speculative Thought, there was no department unvisited by the ever-living activity of Leibnitz, or unilluminated by his brilliancy: nor—in consequence of the very profundity of his conceptions—is there any writer, whose speculations it is more easy to divest of their relation to occasion and time, and present as a contribution to all ages. Juriconsult, historian, theologian, naturalist, mathematician, metaphysician of the highest order — Leibnitz has left everywhere the firm impress of his all-piercing Intellect, and sleepless industry; there being not more than one of those large ranges of thought, that can well be described and presented now, apart from commemoration of his achievements. A Jurisconsult by early profession and predilection, he descended, like a flash, towards the necessary principles of all Law—and alone in his time, recognized the pre-eminent grasp and philosophy of the Jurisprudence of ROME. A philosophical Jurist, it is the fashion with men of practice and detail, to scorn as no lawyer, but rather as the jurist of the closet or the drawing-room: the industry and accuracy of Leibnitz however, might well affright the most plodding practitioner; and he showed that the philosopher alone, can attain the faculty to track and interpret those practical labyrinths. We appeal to his Essay, Nova Methodus Discendæ Docendæque Jurisprudentiæ, to the Traite Sur le Droit de Souveraineté et d'Embassade, or to the elaborate Codex Juris Gentium Diplomaticus. Solicited by the elector of Brandenburg to prepare a memoir of that rising House—how untiring the energy he displayed! Throwing off in the way of bye-play such treatises as the Disquisition de Origine Francorum, the Accessiones Historiæ in two vols. 4to, and various pieces in the Collectanea Etymologica,—he prepared for the House of Brandenburg, a history from the era of its birth, such as the greatest of European States might not unjustly envy;—the results of which immense and conscientious labours, are now republishing by M. Pertz. Again, as Naturalist,—with foresight like GOETHE, and a superior method—let his wonderful PROTOGÆA speak for him! Catching apparently, at a glance of the phenomena—unanalyzed as all these then were—the main force of their indications, he seizes firmly the two grand originators of present inorganic forms, viz.: the aqueous and the igneous: and the honour fell to him, first among Europeans, to repudiate the common opinion that petrifications are mere freaks of Nature, but instead, relics of her history. The Protopæa, indeed, is rather a sketch than a finished work,—a mode of composing not unusual with Leibnitz; for, although no man was less of a visionary, his conceptions of the attainable, extended far beyond what even an age could accomplish. In the Protopæa, and wherever he has left his track, his power to discern the extent of any sphere of Thought, and to lay down its grander outlines, seems even more vigorous than his power to fill in details: without such a faculty, indeed, he could not have been the Lawgiver:—over the unparalleled diversity of Ideas, which our modern world owes to his genius, no intellectual Force could have held sway, unless its instinct of Unity, or its faculty of Generalizing, had been at least as strong as its ambition to acquire. With the exception, perhaps, of the great Name already mentioned, modern Literary History exhibits a grander spectacle nowhere, than the Intellect of this Hanoverian, moving with so supreme a power, through so wide a diversity of regions, and, in its own sovereign fashion, subjecting all to itself. —But we must speak much more in detail, of the Metaphysical, Religious, and Mathematical Speculations of this illustrious Man.—I. The writings and achievements of Leibnitz in Mental Philosophy are great and various. One important work, is purely psychological—Nouveaux Essais sur l'Entendement

Humain. It is avowedly a critique on Locke's Essay on the Understanding: and notwithstanding Reid, Stewart, and Cousin, have since written, not overstepping justice to term it the most valuable criticism to which that Essay has ever yet subjected. None of Locke's mistakes regarding doctrines of Des Cartes, escapes the eye of the man Philosopher; and very few of the correct which the general views of the Englishman since received, are not initiated in that remarkable work. Had Mr. Stewart and his immediate successors in this country, been earlier acquainted with these Essays—which are not in the edition of tens—much of their own exposition would have been taken on a mere scientific form. But the achievements of Leibnitz in this field, transcend the sphere of mere psychology. They are manifold, and as follows;—FIRST:—Starting from the true Cartesian foundation—avowing that Human Mind can obtain no conception of Existence, save through its Intuitions—SPINOSA had recently asked with clear and resolute spirit, what ultimate information reaches us through these intuitions,—what mean we by the Notion of Substance, which is the basis of all our ideas of External or Independent Being? Following, fortunately, not only the method, but also the specific psychology of Des Cartes, that eminent Thinker described our primary Idea of Substance as characterized in the main by the attributes of Extension; and in stern logical deduction found this fallacy, he reared his huge, but symmetrical Scheme of Pantheism. Logical to the uttermost, his views took fast hold on Philosophy; nor was gloomy despotism challenged, until it succumbed and fell at the command of Leibnitz. What, greater Thinker inquired afresh,—what really is our primary Idea of Substance? What truly is the Notion, which—in virtue of the necessities of Being—we accept as the foundation of our Idea of External Existence? Is it, that such existence is mere extension—an inert mass, on which characters are impressed, or within which, as mere modifications, they proceed? Or, on the contrary, is the conception of ACTIVE FORCE, inwoven with it? Can we form a rational conception of an external Substance, unless as an External Energy, which, by its inherent Activities, makes itself known to us? Leibnitz, by simply putting the foregoing question, succeeded in henceforth associating the Idea of Cause, indissolubly with the Idea of Substance: he broke down, at once, for ever, Spinozistic Pantheism; and established the ground of his own scheme of MONADS. It was wrong, perhaps, to speak of the celebrated scheme of Monads as a System properly so called: at events, it is by our accepting it as an illustration that it most readily becomes intelligible to the English Mind. What know we then of Existence, except that it is a Force? What for instance the Creative—that 'Geometer of inanimate Nature'—unless an Energy or simple Power, having the capacity to assimilate what is external, and therewith build a fabric in accordance with definite laws? What, Animal, if not an Energy alike primal and indivisible, unfolding its Nature and attributes, through the forms into which it constrains whatever it assimilates? What is Man—save a loftier MONAD, operating sovereignly on what is around it, challengper sphere, and, so to speak, establishing its dynasty? Stretch higher still; what else worlds, those vast globes swimming in Ether, tentates or Primal Faculties; or what those and unseen Intelligences among whom as the Eternal has apportioned his offices? for a moment under the Idea of the Extended universe, according to this conception of it, only if an illustration could be found, more apt and expressive? No dead Extension, of which the human frame no conception; but, around and beneath our feet in the dust, and aloft in the great vault of Heaven—Energy and Force; Existence synonymous with Force; the forms and forms of Things, but indices of Powers and Realities! That primary notion of Substance—knowledge across which we pass to our conception of Realities,—analyze it profoundly as you will, you find it represented best by the scheme of Leibnitz.—Often more than once it has been asserted the more one gets rid of the mere terms and forms of modern Speculation, the more one is conscious of rising into unexpected harmony with Leibnitz. A truth still more deeply felt, one analyses his SECOND great metaphysical conception—his notion, viz.: of PRE-ESTABLISHED HARMONY. This very remarkable scheme is naturally out of that of Monads. If Existence as we apprehend it, is the development of dependent individual Energies, how comes it the Energy does not distract or possibly annihilate another, but rather assists it? How are sensation, intercourse, progress, possible? Is it not simply because the sphere, the necessities, the limits of each Monas, are primarily, by sovereign and premeditated Wisdom, adjusted to all that enters it? To appreciate these questions aright, we must reflect on Man. The utmost we can predicate of Man is this,—he is a primal Force, building up a wonderful scheme of nerves, and by that instrumentality, holding intercourse with everything around. But how is that intercourse realized? We perceive through these nerves nothing but sensations. No image or direct picture of anything without, is ever substantially presented to us—how then, on being aroused by a simple sensation, does the Monas read its cause, or touch the great Universe that hems it in? This question reaches the mystery of our Intuitions, or that obscure and inexplicable Faculty, by which we pass from what is FELT to what IS: and by means of speech can the nature or affluence of the sensation be better indicated, than by the term Pre-established Harmony. We spring towards the cause of sensation, simply because the Soul,—every Monas—is by pre-adjustment, in perfect harmony with all things; and because in the highest stage of self-consciousness, that Harmony is perfect. In ourselves in fact, we possess the nature of all things: the Soul is a glorious microcosm, within which every phenomenon and law, every form and energy, has its correspondent and counterpart: so that, the stroke of an undulation in the ear, the stroke of another on the eye, reveal, beyond doubt or illusion, that wonderful Universe of ours and sounds; so that, at the stroke of a sensation, Space, Time, Extension, Form, Quality—all spring up as by miracle; and so those subjective relations or Categories of the Understanding, and those more spiritual Ideas of the Reason, are known to be counterparts of material systems wherein these relations are realized, and of farther off and as yet scarcely descried, pure but real Intelligences. Go to the roots of the mysterious subject, and in something of this sort, all theories of perception and all such philosophies must end. And if this, or aught like it be true, no marvel that the theory of our Intuitions—examined apart—should have been found so fraught with difficulty and fertile of doubt. Self-consciousness being the highest and last attainable knowledge; that which lies at the root of our being, is not likely to be discerned, or reduced within logical theme, while culture is only painfully unfolding. To have defined the strict but extensive domain of INTUITION, is, we believe, one of the main glories of KANT: not only, however, need it cause little uneasiness that he accounted so many of those laws and Ideas, subjective only; but, it may be asserted, that as Humanity advances, others now but dimly recognized as dreams, will advance through clearer Subjective reality, into fullest Objective distinctness.—II. A very large amount of meditation and personal exertion were given by Leibnitz not only to the subject-matter of RELIGION, but also to the affairs of the CHURCH. We can refer in this place, only to the leading results of his Thoughts, and the spirit in which he approached such themes. Recognizing through a high metaphysic, the necessary existence of God in his fullest personality, he bows before him as Creator of the sub-lunary Machine, and as Ruler of Spirits. Because He is a Being of perfect Wisdom, no work of His can be other than perfect; hence, says Leibnitz, the condition of things around us, is the 'best possible';—an Optimism with which he endeavours to reconcile the mystery of Physical and Moral Evil, in his Theodicee. Evil, he conceives the sign and consequence of limitation; and that each Monas inferior to the Supreme, must experience limitations, simply because it is Finite. Whether, by this striking and ingenious scheme, Leibnitz has succeeded better than others, in reconciling with Man's Intellect and Heart, that painful mystery of Evil—that painfulest mystery of SIN—it were beside our purpose at present to inquire. But it is necessary to remark that the optimism of the Hanoverian differs toto celo, from that of Pope and Bolingbroke. According to the 'Essay on Man' the maxim 'whatever is, is best,' simply represents an imaginary co-existence of all forms and grades of Being, from zero up to Deity; while Leibnitz strove to demonstrate, that the Universe is a compact Harmony, in which each Being has indeed an independent place, but an independence insured by the necessity of its Existence to the Existence and Life of all others. The two views stand in utter contrast: the one deducing harmony from activity and duty; the other, identifying independence with simple isolation.—More important, however, than any attainable positive result on matters so mysterious, appear to us, the Spirit and Method moving these inquiries. Satisfied that no Faith could be real, or even intelligible, unless its foundations were detected in the Human Reason,—Leibnitz, in this sense, was a Rationalist. Attached to the Church, he yet sought incessantly for the ground of its Beliefs: and on no occasion did he falter in his adhesion to that law of Human Liberty, which is the source of Toleration. It is needful to keep the foregoing truth in view, to interpret aright the position of Leibnitz with regard to the affairs of the Church. Attracted, like every great Mind and Statesman of that time, by the influence of Church questions on the peace and destinies of Europe—he conceived the project of reconciling differences; and he conducted a remarkable correspondence with Bossuet and Pelisson, with the view to discern a basis of reconciliation. For once Leibnitz's practical sagacity was in fault:—Bossuet soon informed him, that truth belonged to the Church alone; that the only possible aim of dealing with the Protestants of Augsburg, was that they might recant and re-enter the Church. Bossuet had not reached the position of Leibnitz: nor did he care, in political transactions, to acknowledge what he well knew—viz.: that although Religion, like every Transcendental subject, must rest on what 'passes all Understanding,'—even the greatest of its verities can have no hold or standing place, if dissevered from relationship with the Reason of Man. An external Rule in Morality grows into a Principle, only when it has become harmonized with the Moral Nature of the Agent: and so, Transcendental Propositions, are Dogmas only and not Beliefs, until they have possessed themselves of what is universal and inherent in the REASON, which avows adhesion. But between the Mind and all transcendental Truth, there is this natural Harmony; and on such conviction Leibnitz grounded his hopes. The age of the Revolution of the Edict of Nantes however, was not—any more than those recent ones through which the world has rolled—an age for 'Religious Union.' To this phase of our Philosopher's activity belongs the work recently published in this country under the title 'A System of Theology, by G. W. Von Leibnitz.' His recent Editor Guhrauer, has quite traced the origin of this treatise. Its real title is 'An Exposition by a Protestant, of the Doctrine of the Catholic Church, made with a view to re-establish Unity.' Leibnitz simply desired to express, with that specific aim, the most catholic views then held by the Church.—III. Pass now, however, into an undebatable land. Not one, in which the vast powers of our remarkable Thinker are most conspicuously shown; but where neither they nor his achievements can be subject of dispute. The epoch we write of, was one of great Mathematicians: but, on the continent, Leibnitz was Primus inter Primos; and this, although he was not a professional mathematician. He did not attain this place, through mere ingenuity or success in the solution of problems; although in neither, when he pleased, was he ever second: but through that rooted attachment to Method, which characterized all his intellectual nature. In Dynamics and Mathematics, his achievements uniformly tended towards the generalization and perfecting of the foremost conceptions floating in his time; and he cared little for distinction of any other kind. That memorable success of his, which will ever retain his name in the foremost rank of scientific Discoverers, was of this class. We allude, of course, to the Infinitesimal Calculus; the honour of which, it is a signal national misfortune, that our English mathematicians endeavoured so vainly to wrench from him. That NEWTON also discovered that powerful method, no Historian of Science can do the regret is, that in course of the association of these Kings and Peers, any person could have induced our Countryman, to question the pretensions of his rival. His Rival have said: did rivalry really exist? Not in true sense. Not in their respective functions, not in the nature of their respective faculties: these were incommensurable. It has been his habit, with writers English and Foreign, to compare these two vast Intelligences: but they failed, as intense and limited power, differs from the glance of an Eagle—surveying the headland of a Universe. Which Potentate was greatest, accordingly not easy to decide. We reverence before the Image of the immortal Englishman, piercing to the depths of one universal law of Mental Nature: is the spectacle less admirable, Mind, contained by no limits, and upborn by sympathies large and various as the bonds that unite intelligence with matter, penetrating everywhere, and if not always discerning Laws, approaching more nearly to their discovery than any, even its greatest predecessors? Dugald Stewart may well and unhesitatingly declare—that Literature and Science, in their widest significance, grow more by the universality of Leibnitz, than any special subject could have lost through the division of his powers.—The private habits of this illustrious Inquirer, were those of a sedentary student. He mingled freely—personally—as by correspondence—with all the remarkable men of his time: but his hours were chiefly spent in his chair. He was of small stature, slight, but his head very large, and with small piercing eyes. So long as Germany valued the supremacy in the Empire of Thought—a supremacy that has raised her above both Greek and Roman fame—she will cherish as one of her precious monuments, that little temple which teets the Ossa Leibnitzi. [J.F.]

LEICESTER. See DUDLEY.

LEICESTER, THOMAS WILLIAM, earl of Viscount Coke, distinguished for his munificent encouragement of agriculture; born 1752, rose to the peerage, after sitting in parliament for years as a partizan of the Whigs, 1837, died 1841.

LEICH, J. H., a German philologist, 1720-1800.

LEIGH, CHARLES, a physician and medical author, of a 'Natural History of Lancashire,' 17th century.

LEIGH, SIR EDWARD, a theologian, historian and critic, distinguished in public life as a member of parliament, a member of the assembly of divines, and a colonel in the parliamentary service, an author, by his 'Critica Sacra,' 1608-1671.

LEIGHTON, ALEXANDER, a Scottish divine and physician, professor of moral philosophy at Edinburgh, and author of 'Zion's Plea,' 'The Looking-glass of the Holy War.' His works being reputed as seditious, Leighton was prosecuted by the Star Chamber, and cruelly persecuted. He is said to have died insane, after a imprisonment of eleven years, 1568-1644.

LEIGHTON, ROBERT, son of the preceding, became an episcopalian, and is known as an able theologian and eloquent preacher, 1613-1680.

LEISMAN, J. A., a German painter, 1604-1698.
 LEISSEGUES, CORENTIN URBAIN JAMES
 BERTRAND DE, vice-admiral of France, disting.
 the capture of Guadaloupe, &c., 1758-1832.
 LEJAY, C., an ecclesiast. wr. of Geneva, d. 1552.
 LEJAY, GAB. F., a Fr. philologist, died 1734.
 LEJAY, GUY MICHEL, an advocate of the parliament of Paris, distinguished by publishing a pycloft Bible, 1588-1674.
 LEJEUNE, J., a French priest, 1592-1672.
 LEJEUNE, P., a French missionary, 1592-1664.
 LEKAIN, H. L., a French actor, 1728-1778.
 ELÆ, CL. M., a French poet, 1745-1791.
 LELAND or LAYLONDE, JOHN, a famous antiquarian, born in London at the commencement of the 16th century. He was educated for the church, after taking holy orders became chaplain and librarian to Henry VIII., who, in 1533, appointed him his 'Antiquary,' with a commission to investigate 'England's antiquities, and peruse the libraries of all cathedrals, abbeys, priories, colleges, and places where any records, writings, or secrets of antiquity were deposited.' He executed this commission with the most unwearied diligence, and died in 1552, after suffering two years from mental derangement. Twelve volumes of his MSS. were afterwards deposited in the Bodleian library, and the remaining portion in the Cottonian collection of the British Museum. They have been greatly sorted to by antiquarian and historical writers, and some portion of them published.
 LELAND, JOHN, a learned presbyterian minister, located in Dublin, and dist. by his analysis and refutation of deistical writings, 1691-1766.
 LELAND, THOS., a divine and classical scholar, born in Dublin 1722, author of a 'History of Ireland,' a 'Life of Philip of Macedon,' &c., d. 1785.
 LELIE, A. DE, a Dutch painter, 1755-1820.
 LELLI, HERCULES, an Italian painter, architect, sculptor, and engraver, Bologna, about 1700-1766.
 LELLI, J. A., an Italian painter, 1591-1640.
 LELONG, JAS., a priest of the oratory at Paris, famous as an historian and bibliographer, 1665-1721.
 LELY, SIR PETER, a famous portrait painter of the restoration, whose family name was Vander Meer. He was born in Westphalia, 1617, and received the honour of knighthood from Charles II.
 died 1680.
 LEMAIRE, J., a Dutch navigator, died 1616.
 LEMAIRE, JEAN, a French historian and poet, who flourished about 1473-1547.
 LEMAIRE, M. E., a French classic, 1767-1832.
 LEMAN, THOMAS, a Church of England clergyman, distinguished by his researches in Roman and British antiquities, 1751-1827.
 LEMARE, P. A., a Fr. grammarian, 1766-1835.
 LEMAURE, C. N., a Fr. cantatrice, 1704-1783.
 LEMENE, F., an Italian poet, 1634-1704.
 LEMENS, B. VAN, a Flem. painter, 1637-1704.
 LEMERY, L. R. J. C., a Fr. astron., 1728-1802.
 LEMERY, N., a French chemist, 1645-1715.
 LEMETAY, P. C., a Fr. painter, 1726-1760.
 LEMIERRE, A. M., a Fr. dramat., 1723-1793.
 LEMIRE, A., a Brabant historian, 1738-1640.
 LEMIRE, N., a French engraver, 1724-1801.
 LEMOINE, F., a French painter, 1688-1737.
 LEMOINE, J., a French cardinal, died 1313.
 LEMOINE, P., a French poet, 1602-1672.
 LEMOINE, S., a protestant divine, 1624-1689.

LEMON, G. W., an Eng. etymologist, 1726-97.
 LEMONNIER, ANICET C. GABRIEL, a French hist. painter, and pupil of Vien; Rouen, 1743-1824.
 LEMONNIER, NICHOLAS, a French professor, author of 'Cursus Philosophiæ,' 1675-1757. His eldest son, PETER CHARLES, a learned astronomer, first teacher of Lalande, 1715-1799. His second son, LOUIS WILLIAM, distinguished as a physician and experimental philosopher, and a contributor to the Encyclopædia, 1717-1779.
 LEMONNIER, P. R., a dramatic wr., 1731-96.
 LEMONNIER, W. A., a class. transl., 1721-97.
 LEMONTY, PETER EDWARD, a member of the French assembly, distinguished as a poet and historian, by his 'History of the Regency,' his remarkable work entitled, 'An Essay upon the Mo-narchic Establishment of Louis XIV.,' and various dramas and poems, 1762-1826.
 LEMOS, P. J., Count De, a Spanish statesman, born about 1560, president of the council of the Indies 1609, viceroy of Naples 1611, died 1634.
 LEMOS, THOS., a learned Spanish monk of the Dominicans, au. of 'Panoplia Gratiæ,' 1550-1629.
 LEMOT, F. F., a French sculptor, 1773-1827.
 LEMOYNE, JEAN BAPTISTE, or, more correctly, MAYNE, a French opera compos., 1751-96.
 LEMOYNE, J. L., a French sculptor, 1665-1755. His son, J. BAPTISTE, same prof., 1704-78.
 LEMOYNE, P., a French Jesuit, 1602-1671.
 LEMPRIERE, JOHN, best known as the author of a 'Classical Dictionary,' first published in 1788, was an English scholar and divine, born at Jersey about 1775, appointed to the rectory of Meeth in Devonshire, 1811, died 1824.
 LEMUET, P., a French architect, 1591-1669.
 LEMUET, R., a Fr. mathematician, died 1739.
 LENCLOS, ANNE, or NINON, DE, a woman of pleasure, remarkable for her personal charms, and her influence over the men of learning, of the 17th century, born at Paris 1616, died 1706.
 LENFANT, A. C. ANNE, a French Jesuit and preacher, born 1726, massacred in Sept., 1792.
 LENFANT, J., a French painter, 1615-1674.
 LENFANT, JAMES, a protestant minister and controversialist, author of a history of the 'Council of Constance,' 'History of Pisa,' 'History of the Wars of the Hussites,' &c., 1661-1728.
 LENG, JOHN, bishop of Norwich, disting. as a classical translator and commentator, 1665-1727.
 LENGLET-DUFRESNOY, NICHOLAS, a Fr.
 ecclesiastic, who was five times committed to the Bastille for his writings and independent conduct, author of a 'Method for Studying History,' 'History of the Hermetic Philosophy,' &c., 1674-1755.
 LENGUICH, GODFREY, an historian and publicist of Dantzic, 1690-1744. CHARLES BENJA-MIN, of the same family, a numismatist, 1742-1795.
 LENNARD, SAMPSON, a companion-in-arms of Sir Ph. Sidney, disting. as a translator, died 1633.
 LENNEPH, J. D. VAN, a D. Orient., 1714-71.
 LENNOX, CHARLOTTE, of whose personal history little is known, save that she was the daughter of Colonel James Ramsay, lieutenant-governor of New York, and a youthful widow, distinguished herself as a novelist and dramatic writer and translator, in the time of Dr. Johnson. She was highly esteemed by her personal friends, Johnson and Richardson, but outlived them, and died in penury in the eighty-fourth year of her age, 1804.

LENOIR, A., a French archaeologist, 1762-1839.
 LENOIR, J. C. P., a Fr. magistrate, 1732-1807.
 LENOIR, N., a French architect, 1726-1810.
 LENOIR, STEPHEN, a celebrated maker of mathematical instruments, 1744-1832. His son, P. S. M. LENOIR, accompanied the savants in Napoleon's expedition to Egypt, 1776-1827.

LENOTRE, A., a famous gardener, 1613-1700.

LENS, A. C., a Flemish painter, 1739-1822.

LENS, BERNARD, a designer and engraver, flourished in London 1659-1725. His son, of the same name, an engraver and painter of London, born 1680. Another BERNARD LENS, also an engraver, was born at Brussels about 1730.

LENTHAL, WILLIAM, speaker of the House of Commons in the parliament of Charles I., from which office he was dismissed by Cromwell in 1653, but re-elected in the following year, and also in the rump parliament. Born 1591, died after the restoration, when he was pardoned by the king, 1663.

LENTULUS, the surname of a branch of the famous Cornelian family of Rome, the principal of whom are—PUBLIUS CORNELIUS LENTULUS, an accomplice of Catiline, consul 71 B.C., strangled in prison 66. LENTULUS SPINTHERUS, a friend of Cicero, and a partizan of Pompey. CNEIUS CORNELIUS LENTULUS, surnamed Gæulicus, consul A.D. 26. LUCIUS, son of the latter, put to death for conspiracy in the reign of Caligula.

LENTULUS, a supposed proconsul of Judæa, to whom a letter, describing the Saviour, has been attributed, but which is pronounced a fabrication.

LENTULUS, a mimic, or comedian, 1st century.

LENTULUS, C., a German savant, 17th cent.

LENTULUS, CÆSAR J., a Swiss officer in the service of Austria, 1683-1744. His son, R. SCIPIO LENTULUS, dist. in the seven years' war, 1714-86.

LENZ, C. G., a German savant, 1763-1809.

LEO, a disciple of Plato, killed 350 B.C.

LEO, archbishop of Thessalonica, 9th century.

LEO, an ecclesiastic and hist. of Ionia, 10th cen.

LEO, 'the grammarian,' one of the authors of the Byzantine History, begun by Theophanes, wrote his part about the year 1013.

LEO I., pope of Rome in the age of Attila, and a saint of the Roman calendar, author of letters, sermons, &c., and distinguished by the surname of 'Great,' reigned 440-461. LEO II., who introduced the custom of sprinkling with holy water, and is also acknowledged a saint, reigned 682-683. LEO III., re-established, after a conspiracy, by Charlemagne, whom he crowned emperor, 795-816. LEO IV., who was principally engaged in restoring the city, and securing it against the Saracens, 847-855. LEO V., elected, and deposed, and died in prison, within a few weeks, in 903. LEO VI., who is also believed to have died in prison, after reigning about six months, in 928. LEO VII., famous as a disciplinarian, and an advocate for the marriage of priests, 936-939. LEO VIII., whose reign was one long scene of political disturbance, 963-965. LEO IX., a saint of the Roman calendar, distinguished by his efforts to reform the clergy, and for his capture by the Normans, who defeated him near Beneventum, born 1002, reigned 1049-1054. LEO X.; see next article. LEO XI., a pope of the Medici family, like Leo X., succeeded and died a month after his election in 1605. LEO XII., whose reign was disturbed by the Carbonari and other secret societies, and was chiefly occupied with the internal police states, and in political negotiations, born reigned 1823-1829.—An anti-pope, named contested the papacy with Benedict VIII., the name of Gregory VI., in 1012.

LEO X., POPE. GIOVANNI DE MEDICI, a son of Lorenzo the Magnificent, was born Florence on the first day of December, 1475, was early destined to the church, receiving tonsure when but a boy seven years old, and a year following got several ecclesiastical promotions. At the age of eleven he was made cardinal by the title of S. Maria in Domini. Three years afterwards he took up his residence in Rome as one of the princes of the church, but the election of Alexander VI. he was obliged to retire to Florence. After some turns of fortune in consequence of the broils among the various states of Italy and France, he was raised to the papacy in 1513, under the name of Leo X., crowned with unusual pomp and ceremony, successor of the Galilean fisherman. Several of political generosity graced the commencement of his reign. His great desire was to re-establish the peace of Europe, and he entered into a league with Louis XII. He also renewed the sixth general council, and brought to a conclusion in 1517. Afterwards he joined a league against Francis I., but ultimately entered into a concordat with him. As the tide of fortune ebbed and flowed, he made occasional attempts to rouse the Swiss against the French, and leagued himself with Maximilian and Henry of England, and at a future period, for the same purpose, with Charles V. in 1521. A formidable conspiracy on the part of some of the cardinals against him was discovered in 1516. Cardinal Petrucci, who was at the head of it, was condemned and strangled in prison. In defence Leo created at this period in one day twelve new cardinals. He carried the glory of the Roman see to a pitch of unparalleled splendor, and the grateful citizens of his capital erected a statue in his honour. His heart was set on the defeat of the Turks, and he endeavored to combine the princes of Europe against them. The project which seems always to have occupied his mind, was the expulsion of the French power from Italy, but in the midst of his troubles at Milan and Parma, he suddenly died, 1st December, 1521, not without great suspicion of having been poisoned. The completion of the church of St. Peter was another of his cherished plans, and papal indulgences issued to raise the necessary funds, created or fostered that discontent which in a short time to the reformation in Germany. Leo was at first wishful of gentle measures toward Luther, but ultimately published the famous bull which Luther so publicly and contemptuously burnt before the gate of Wittenberg. The brief pontificate of Leo was so unsuited to his patronage of literature and the arts was so inefficient, as was exhibited in his restoration of the Roman academy, his founding of the Greek school, and the establishment in Rome of a printing press, his encouragement of search after Egyptian manuscripts, his handsome treatment of new letters, such as Musurus, Ariosto, and Vid presentation of the library of the Vatican, and propitious employment of Raffaele the painter in a variety of immortal works. As the head of an Italian ducal house, Leo would have eclipsed all his contemporaries. Though his character and actions did not in all respects comport with the idea of his being the visible head of the church, yet he is better than very many of his predecessors. His talents were good, though his erudition was not profound. His tastes were fine in the arts, but his politics were crooked, and his diplomatic schemes had more cunning than wisdom about them. In all his capacity for the popedom, he never forgot the advancement of the house of the Medici. Apart from his ecclesiastical status, he must be regarded as one of the zealous and successful co-operators in the revival of letters. [J.E.]

LEO I., emperor of the East, surnamed 'the Great' and 'the Great,' was a Thracian of obscure birth, and succeeded to the throne of Constantinople 457. After restoring peace to the empire, which had been rent by religious quarrels, and devastated by the barbarians, he died 474. LEO II., surnamed 'the Younger,' grandson of the preceding, succeeded him, and is supposed to have been reigned ten months afterwards, 474. LEO III., surnamed 'the Isaurian,' distinguished by his struggles against the Saracens, reigned 717-741. LEO IV., grandson of the latter, and husband of the famous Irene, reigned 775-780. LEO V., surnamed 'the Armenian,' dethroned Nicephorus, and reigned for seven years, disturbed by the inroads of the Bulgarians, and the religious struggles of the icon-worshippers, 813-820. LEO VI., surnamed 'the Philosopher,' distinguished himself by the defeat of the Hungarians; but sustained a disastrous war with the Saracens, who at last defeated him, 891. He was succeeded by his brother, Alexander, and his son, Constantine VI., and is the author of an esteemed work on Tactics.

LEO I., prince or king of the Armenians, established in Cilicia, began to reign 1123, was taken prisoner by John Comnenus in 1137, and died in prison 1141. LEO II., called 'the Great,' grandson of the preceding, obtained the permission of the emperor, Henry VI., and the pope, Celestine III., to take the title of king, and reigned 1185-1193. LEO III., who greatly aggrandized his kingdom, reigned 1269-1289. LEO IV., succeeded 1285, and was dethroned and slain by a Mongul general 1308. LEO V., who saw his kingdom devastated by civil wars, and the invasion of the Mamelukes and Turcomans, reigned 1320-42. LEO VI., proclaimed king 1361, was chased from his kingdom by the sultan of Egypt 1375, and, retiring into France, died there 1393.

LEO, THE HEBREW, a cabalist of the 15th cen. LEO, JOHN, surnamed 'Africanus,' a traveller and geographer, born of Moorish parents, who was converted to Christianity by Leo X., and, becoming an Italian scholar, translated into that language his 'Description of Africa,' originally written in Arabic, died about 1526.

LEO, LEONARDO, an eminent musician, regarded as one of the greatest opera composers of his times, 1694-1745.

LEO OF MARSI, a chronicler of the 12th cent.

LEO OF MODENA, a learned rabbi, died 1654.

LEO OF ORVIETO, an Ital. chronicler, 12th c.

LEO, PILATUS, first professor of Greek at Florence, who lectured there about 1360.

LEON, DIEGO, a Spanish general and partizan of Espartero, born 1804, executed 1840.

LEON, F. L. DE, a Spanish poet, 1527-1591.

LEON, P. L. DE, a Spanish historian, 16th c.

LEONARD, N. G., a French poet, 1744-1793.

LEONARD, ST., an anchorite of Limousin, founder of a monastery near Limoges, died 559.

LEONARDI, F., a Venetian painter, 1654-1711.

LEONARDI, J., a religious founder, 1540-1609.

LEONARDO, A., a Span. painter, 1580-1640.

LEONARDO, J., a Span. painter, 1616-1658.

LEONE-Y-GAMA, ANTONIO, cele. for his extensive knowledge of Mexican antiquities, d. 1802.

LEONIDAS, the first of the name, king of Sparta, immortalized by his glorious defence of the pass of Thermopylae against Xerxes, reigned 491-480 B.C. The second of the name, began to reign B.C. 257, was banished, and replaced by Cleombrotus, 254, recovered his throne 239, died 238.

LEON-LEAL, F. DE, a Span. painter, 1610-87.

LEONTIUS, an ecclesiastical historian, 6th cen.

LEOPARDI, A., a Venetian architect, d. 1510.

LEOPARDI, J., an Italian poet, 1798-1837.

LEOPOLD, duke of Lorraine, father of Francis I., emperor of Germany, was the son of Charles IV., and was born 1679. He was restored to his dukedom, of which Louis XIV. had despoiled him by the peace of Ryswick, 1697, and was married to Elizabeth of Orleans, niece of Louis XIV., d. 1729.

LEOPOLD OF AUSTRIA, elected duke of Bavaria, after the death of Henry the Proud, 1138-42.

LEOPOLD, margrave of Austria, and a saint of the Roman calendar, succeeded 1096, married Agnes, sister of the emperor Henry V., and died 1139. He was canonized 1485. LEOPOLD I. or II., surnamed 'the Glorious,' third son of Albert I., succeeded as duke of Austria 1308, and compelled Louis of Bavaria to divide the empire with his brother, Frederick; died 1313. LEOPOLD II. or III., surnamed 'the Courageous,' born about 1350, took a part in the Italian wars, and was slain in a battle with the Swiss, 1386.

LEOPOLD I., emperor of Austria, born 1640, succeeded his father, Frederick III., 1658, died 1705. Having defeated the Turks in 1664, the commencement of his reign was signalized by a truce of twenty years which he concluded with them. From 1672 to 1679, he sustained a disastrous war with Louis XIV., which was then concluded by the peace of Nimwegen. A truce of twenty years with Louis XIV. did not prevent a renewal of hostilities in 1688, which were terminated by the peace of Ryswick in 1697. During this latter interval, the Hungarians, headed by Tekeli, and supported by the Turks, rose in arms 1677, and even besieged Vienna, which was relieved by Sobieski and the Poles 1683. The other principal events of his reign were the elevation of Hanover into an electorate 1692, of Brandenburg into a kingdom 1702, and a new war with the Turks, who were conq. by Prince Eugene 1697.

LEOPOLD II., emperor of Germany, second son of Francis I. and of Maria Theresa, was born 1747, and succeeded his brother, Joseph II., 1790. The events of his reign were some successes obtained over the Turks, a quarrel with Prussia, terminated by the treaty of Sistow 1791, the troubles in Belgium 1790, and the famous declaration of Pilnitz against the French revolution. He died March 2, 1792, and was succeeded by his son, Francis II.

LEOPOLD, A. D., a Germ. author, 1691-1753.

LEOPOLD, C. G. DE, a Swed. poet, 1756-1829.

LEOPOLD, G. A. S., a Germ. wr., 1755-1827.

LEOWITZ, C., a Bohem. astrologer, died 1574.

LEPAUTRE, ANTHONY, a French architect, 1614-1691. His brother, JOHN, a designer and engraver, 1617-1682. PETER, son of Anthony, a sculptor, 1659-1744.

LEPAYS, R., a French poet, died 1690.

LEPEKHIN, J. I., a learn. Russian, 1739-1802.

LEPELLETIER, C., a Fr. theologian, d. 1743.

LEPELLETIER, C., a Fr. financier, 1683-1689.

LEPELLETIER, J., a French savant, distinguished in art, languages, mathematics, medicine, and alchemy, 1633-1711.

LEPELLETIER - DE - SAINT - FARGEAU, LOUIS MICHAEL, one of the old French noblesse, and a deputy of his order to the estates-general in 1789, was born in Paris 1760, and inherited a large fortune from his parents. On the 4th of August of the year first mentioned, he voted for the abolition of feudal privileges, and, what is more, carried the decree into full effect in his own person. When the estates-general resolved itself into a constituent assembly, St. Fargeau joined the patriots of the left, and was returned again to the national convention in 1792. His votes in the process against the king had great influence over the court, and led immediately to his own death. On the eve of the king's execution, and before the votes were summed up, St. Fargeau had stepped out for refreshment, and was in the act of paying the restaurateur, when a stranger, who proved to be one of the king's body guard, suddenly approached and asked him if he were not Lepelletier who had voted for the king's death? he replied 'yes,' and added that he had voted as his conscience had dictated. 'Scélerat,' exclaimed his interrogator, 'voilà ta récompense!' and instantly ran him through with a sword which he had concealed under his cloak. Lepelletier St. Fargeau was the author of several works on law and politics, and of a life of Epaminondas. [E.R.]

LEPIDUS, MARCUS EMILIUS, the Roman triumvir, had been edile B.C. 52, prætor 49, and consul with Cæsar 46. The latter, when he became dictator, made Lepidus general of the cavalry, and, on Cæsar's death, he divided the empire with Octavius and Mark Antony. At first he had the whole of Spain and Gallia Narbonensis, but on the defeat of Brutus and Cassius, he was compelled to exchange those provinces for Africa, which left him without any real authority in the state. He was included in the triumvirate of B.C. 37, but was deserted by his troops, and banished to Circeii by Augustus. Died 12 or 13 B.C.

LEPRINCE, A. X., a Fr. painter, 1799-1826.

LEPRINCE, J., a French painter, 1733-1781. His sister, MARIE LEPRINCE DE BEAUMONT, a writer of works for young people, 1711-1780.

LEROUX, J. J., a Fr. med. writer, 1749-1832.

LERY, J. D., a French navigator, 1534-1611.

LE SAGE, ALAIN, born in 1668, was the son of a lawyer in Brittany, and, being left an orphan in childhood, lost his patrimony through the carelessness of his guardian. In 1692, after having studied at the Jesuit college of Vannes, he came to where he was admitted as an advocate, but betook himself exclusively to literature. His was for many years very obscure; few of his were successful, and he long wrote for the theatres only. Whatever the reason may been, he received no share of the patronage the government lavished on many men who much inferior to him; but he was well received in good society. Entering on the study of literature, and using the comedies of that land with ability, but with little success, in his he turned the Spanish models to a more fortunate use in his comic novels. Some of these are the liveliest and wittiest of their class, and capable as cool and observant dissections of human weaknesses. The earliest of them, appeared in 1707, was 'The Devil on Two Sticks' (Le Diable à Boiteux), avowedly a continuation of a Spanish story. His most celebrated work, 'Gil Blas', though it has been charged with plagiarism, seems to have really been as much his own as sign as it certainly was in those details, which constituted its eminent merit. In 'The Adventures of Guzman D'Alfarache,' he confessedly borrowed largely from a Spanish original. Le Sage died at Boulogne in 1747.

LESAGE, G. L., a learned physician, 1724-

LESCAILLE, JAMES, a Dutch printer, distinguished himself as a poet, 1610-1677. His daughter, CATHERINE, a poetess and dramat. wr., 1649-

LESCAN, J. F., a Fr. mathematician, 1749-

LESCURE, L. M., a French royalist, 1760-

LESKO, the names of several dukes of the best known of whom are LESKO IV., reigned 913. LESKO V., 1194-1202. LESKO VI., 1212-

LESLEY, A., a Scottish antiquary, 1694-

LESLEY, JOHN, bishop of Ross, in Scotland, celebrated as the advocate and ambassador of Stuart, in whose defence he wrote several elaborate works, born 1527, retired to the continent in 1560, became bishop of Constance 1593, died 1605. He was buried in the monastery of Guirtenberg, near Brussels, 1605.

LESLIE, JOHN, a native of Scotland, who successively bishop of the Orkneys and of Inverness, and Clogher in Ireland, and is distinguished as a linguist; he died more than a hundred years ago, 1671. His son, CHARLES, author of the first books, entitled 'The Snake in the Grass,' 'The Short and Easy Method with the Deists,' distinguished also by his adherence to the Pretense, in consequence of which he lost all hope of advancement in the church, was born in Ireland 1650, and died 1732.

LESLIE, SIR JOHN, born at Largo, in Inverclyde shire, 16th April, 1766, died 3d November 1832, at his seat at Coates. Leslie's life was an extraordinary one, and he rose to a considerable place in the history of his country. He succeeded Professor Playfair in the chair of mathematics in the university of Edinburgh in 1800, on the death of that eminent man, he again succeeded him in the chair of natural philosophy in 1803. His contributions to British science were various: he occupied himself with the caloric theory of Heat, and produced, as he called it, several delicate instruments, such as the differential thermometer,—his claim to the invention of the latter, however, has been strongly contested. It was not easy to challenge for him very sound judgment.

ch impartiality in his philosophical estimate of Inquirers; nor was his style of exposition, written or oral, remarkably well suited to a philosophical subject. Still, he had the faculty of intuition, and a dash of what, in one sense, may be called genius. His knowledge was extensive; reading having been vast, and his memory remarkably tenacious. Leslie at one time obtained a singular popular repute, from the effort of a Church, to hinder his induction as professor of mathematics. The hostile charge was of some form of infidelity, based on his espousal of Hume's views as to the Idea of Necessary Connection. The interference failed, and certainly was judicious. It is not often that inferences as to political life or religious sentiment, based on speculative views, have been approved by succeeding ages. If Leslie's doctrine was incorrect under the point of view, that of his opponents was quite untenable, viewed from another. The controversy, however, gave rise to many ingenious pamphlets, among which was the Essay on Cause and Effect, of the late Dr. Thomas Brown. [J.P.N.]

LESSER, AUGUSTIN CREUSE, Baron De, a dramatic author and man of letters, 1771-1839.

LESSER, F. C., a Germ. naturalist, 1692-1754.

LESSING, GOTTHOLD EPHRAIM, the son of a Lutheran pastor, was born, in 1729, at Kamenz, Upper Lusatia. In 1746 he entered the University of Leipzig, where he continued to prosecute literary studies with extraordinary activity, and in many directions, but showed a strong disinclination to attach himself to any professional pursuit. His dissatisfaction of his father, who was both a stern man and severely orthodox, was increased by the intimacy which the youth contracted with actors, and by his writing one or two little theatrical pieces. After being recalled home, and visiting Berlin, he completed his academical course at Wittenberg.—In 1753 he cast himself fairly on the world as a man of letters, taking up his abode in Berlin, where he remained for seven years. In this opening stage of his career, he firmly established his position as the earliest and most energetic of the pioneers who prepared the way for an original development of German literature. His chief friends and coadjutors at this time were the philosophical Jew, Moses Mendelssohn, and Goldsmid, the author and bookseller. With these he operated in laying the foundation of criticism in Germany, by the 'Bibliothek der Schönen Wissenschaften,' and the 'Literatur-Briefe.' His studies in Italian, Spanish, and German, directed especially to the drama, furnished him with abundant materials for his denunciation of the dryness and formality of the French taste, which then prevailed among his countrymen. His own imitation of the English drama, having no higher model than Lillo, produced at first nothing better than his domestic tragedy in prose called 'Miss Sara Sampson.' About this time, however, he turned to verse, and composed, also in prose, his vigorous and impressive tragedy of 'Emilia Galotti,' a modern adaptation of the story of Virginia. To this period likewise belong his 'Fables,' which, both the metrical and the prose ones, are very striking pieces of reflection, and, like all his other writings, models of clear and symmetrical style.—For five years, in 1760, he lived at Breslau, as secretary to the commandant. Here he seems to have been less steadily industrious than before, mixing a good deal in society, and having for a time a strange fondness for the hazard-table. But, at Breslau, among his military acquaintances, he planned or composed his spirited drama, 'Minna von Barnhelm.' Here also the study of the arts of design, to which, as exhibited in the master-pieces of Greece, Winkelmann was now inviting attention, led him to begin the composition of that which is the most valuable of all his works, 'Laocoon,' or an 'Essay on the Limits of Poetry and Painting,' which was published in 1766. The title of this admirable work indicates but imperfectly its commanding scope. The comparison instituted is between Poetry on the one hand, and the Arts of Design on the other; and between the several Fine Arts (Poetry included), as contrasted with each other. The purpose of all these arts being assumed to be substantially the same, those differences of process are indicated, which arise between the arts by reason of the differences in their instruments. This, like all Lessing's other philosophical speculations, is merely a fragment, a collection of hints, not the exposition of a system; but the principles which he has here established go farther towards founding a just theory of literature and art, than any other æsthetical work that could be named.—For some years after leaving Breslau, Lessing led a shifting and uncomfortable life. His longest residence was at Hamburg, where he became, by necessity, not from choice, director of a theatre set on foot by some sanguine lovers of the drama. One satisfactory fruit of this abortive undertaking, was the series of masterly criticisms on celebrated plays, which he called the 'Hamburgische Dramaturgie.' In 1770, after marrying the widow of a Hamburg merchant, he removed to Wolfenbüttel, being appointed keeper of the library. Here he spent the last eleven years of his troubled life, but not in peace. He was, indeed, meritoriously active and useful in discharging the duties of his office; but he became entangled more hotly than ever in those theological controversies, which he seems to have entered at first only as the champion of literature and the drama, but in which he now became the assailant in his turn. His deviations from orthodox belief were denounced loudly on his publishing a piece called 'Fragments of an Anonymous Writer,' which he asserted to have been discovered in manuscript in the library, but which was confidently alleged to have been composed by himself. His dramatic poem, also, 'Nathan the Wise,' published in 1780, while it is fine and interesting as a series of epic pictures and solemn thoughts, is at least equivocal in its religious aspect. Lessing's last work was his short treatise on 'The Education of the Human Race.' A voluminous correspondence, and many critical papers and notes, are brought together in the collected editions of his works. After much sickness and vexation, he died at Wolfenbüttel in 1781. [W.S.] At the date of Lessing's birth, it could hardly be said that a national German Literature existed, nor had those peculiar philosophic and critical movements begun which have now long inspired its peculiar life. But the period was auspicious for a revival. Frederick the Great had just burst the limits that restrained the political influence of Northern

Germany, and by a series of exploits unparalleled in modern warfare, was evoking the heroic in Teutonic genius, and teaching his people self-respect and self-dependence, by his vigorous compulsion of Europe to recognize Prussia as one of her integrant nations. Lessing was the Frederick of Thought. By nature wholly Teutonic, he too, sounded a trumpet call; and with a restless energy in nowise inferior to Frederick's, an activity and plenitude of resources that overlooked no opportunity, he dashed, now into this region of dormant literature, now into that unpenetrated department of philosophy, until he had laid the foundation of almost every conquest that has illustrated the recent ever-memorable career of his kindred. The earliest efforts of this remarkable person lay in that direction in which he accomplished one of his latest and greatest triumphs, viz.: literary Criticism and Æsthetics. His History of the Theatre; on Letters on Literature; his Life of Sophocles; his Dramaturgy; his Fables perhaps, and his Theory of the Apologue, belonged to a career which culminated in the Laocoon,—that great classic treatise on the respective limits and characteristics of Painting and Poetry. Without forgetting the immense debt that must ever be held due to Winckelman, it may be averred with justice, that in Lessing's Laocoon, all those rich thoughts and aspirations concerning Art, which so enrich modern Teutonic speculation, find their natural root. Striking at once at the principle of distinction, he establishes, that as the arts of Design labour for the gratification of the outward sense, their proper sphere is within the Beautiful; whereas Poetry and written thought, appeal to the Imagination, which can reconcile itself even to deformity. 'The consequences,' says Goethe, 'of this splendid thought were illumined to us as by a lightning flash; all the criticism that had hitherto passed sentence was thrown away like a worn-out garment; we thought ourselves redeemed from all evil, and fancied that we might venture to look down with some compassion upon the otherwise so splendid sixteenth century, when, in German sculptures and poems, they knew how to represent Life only under the form of a well-bedizened fool, Death under the misformed shape of a rattling skeleton, and the necessary and accredited evils of the world under the image of a Devil in Caricature.'—Lessing, however, did not confine himself to precepts, he led the way by his own admirable dramas, to the practical revival of that highest and profoundest Art. Beginning with a drama of common life, Miss Sarah Sampson, he entered a vigorous protest against the frivolities of the super-classic school, and asserted the true function of the Drama. Next and far more perfect, Minna Von Barnhelm; then his still greater work, Emilia Galotti; and he crowned his triumph by the incomparable Nathan the Wise. Incapable of their reach of imagination, and by no means gifted with the amazing penetrating power of a Shakespeare or a Goethe, nevertheless, Lessing has been surpassed by few in that species of Drama, named the moral Drama—rather one, which, in the largest sense, aims at manifesting systematically, through the Dramatic form, the sphere and aspects of some great principle. His analytic faculty was of the first order; his conceptions unequalled in definiteness; and his mode of expression especially excelled in chastity energy and precision. Who has read Nathan, and can again sight of him? Few creations surpass this Hero the qualities of repose and elevation; nor do so of the inferior characters fail to attract corresponding admiration. It was Lessing's last work—the song of the Swan: but its accents provoked more than an empty and dying they have raised many hearts to the highest conception we can form of the virtues of Chastity and Tolerance.—The intellect and influence of Lessing extended far beyond the range of Æsthetics and the Drama: nor perhaps, has his sway in Germany, or rather his profound appreciation of tendencies, and foresight of their effects, more striking illustration and record, than in the celebrated Wolfenbützel Fragments. The work of Reimarus although shaped and annotated by Lessing,—these remarkable writings first stirred that spirit, which issued in the memorable critical and rational school of Germany. In these Fragments appear the formal attack on the then unquestioned tenets of Protestant Churches—the absolute authority of Scriptures. These writings are declared to be Historical documents, which, like all other documents, must be subjected to the test of criticism: it is asserted that the foundations of Christianity are not solely in the gospels—which may be modified by Inquiry, their text altered, much of it repudiated as spurious: Christianity all the while not losing its truest foundation which is in the heart and the reason of Man. were, of course, quite out of place to criticise favourably or unfavourably, these Wolfenbützel positions: the important point is, that under conduct of Lessing, they foreshadowed, for good or evil, so much of the future of German thought.—how new they were at the time, appears in reclamations of Pastor Goeze of Hamburg, dealt with them after the manner of Ananias. Lessing followed up with his tract on Education of the Human Race, in which he tempts to shadow out more definitely, the probable relation of Humanity to the Christian revelation.—It is more difficult to state with precision the attitude of Lessing towards speculative philosophy properly so called. Practical as he was and earnest, he thought and speculated chiefly in reference to practical problems and interests; nevertheless, the speculative schemes of his great predecessors could not be indifferent to him. Just after Lessing's death, disclosed in certain letters Mendelssohn, the particulars of a private conversation, tending to establish that his friend had fallen into the pantheism of Spinoza. The reporting of such conversation must ever be protested against as breach of confidence; and it is almost as certain a source of misrepresentation;—what thinker could, in the frankness and confidence of intercourse, give utterance at times to momentary expressions, as if they were his abiding ones? This much is unquestionable—Lessing has not written one solitary word inconsistent with a firmest persuasion in the Personality of Man. This great work indeed, belongs to a class of minds very easily misapprehended—minds, which none but others so far akin to them, can rightly understand.

finest in antagonism, or in a critical attitude, thinkers like Lessing do not generally express their whole thought; they dwell only on the part of the common thought, from which they dissent. So far, however, from being ruled by mere negations, it is certainly more probable that their dissent arises from a completer view and possession of truth; and that their effort is confined, to the desire to separate truth from error, or, at all events, from essentials. Be that as it may, the writer whom we speak, stands fitly as the herald of a modern era in his native land:—he polished his mother tongue and made it classical; and as we have seen, he initiated several of the more remarkable movements for which our Teutonic brethren are now famous. His life was that of a true unbending literary man. Not exempt from the disasters of such a life, he was not exempt from all its errors: but even amidst error he possessed himself,—he did not resign the freedom, or compromise the dignity of the Thinker. [J.P.N.]

LESSIUS, LEONARD, a learned Jesuit, successively professor of philosophy and divinity at Leuven, 1554-1623.

LESTANG, ANTHONY DE, a French savant, author of a 'History of the Gauls,' d. 1613 or 1617.

LESTERPT-BEAUVAIS, B., a partizan of the Condists in the convention, executed 1793.

LESTRA, F., a French traveller, 17th century.

LESTRANGE, or LETRANGE, RENE D'HAUFFORT, Viscount DE, gov. of Puy in the interest of the Leaguers, seneschal 1595, died about 1621.

LESTRANGE, SIR ROGER, a partizan of Charles I., famous as a political writer, and translator from the learned languages, 1616-1704.

LESUEUR, EUSTACE, one of the greatest painters of France, called the French Raphael, 1617-55.

LESUEUR, J., a French historian, died 1681.

LESUEUR, J. F., a Fr. composer, 1763-1837.

LESUEUR, PETER, a French wood engraver, 1616-1716. His son, of the same name, who died 1718, and his son, VINCENT, died 1743, followed the same art. Their nephew, NICHOLAS, d. 1764.

LESUEUR, TH., a famous mathematician, au. of 'Principles of Natural Philosophy,' &c., 1703-70.

LESUIRE, R. M., a French author, 1737-1815.

LETHIEULLIER, SMART, a native of Essex, living as a naturalist and antiquarian, died 1760.

LETI, GREGORIO, author of an immense number of works on history, which are generally regarded as more entertaining than trustworthy, was born at Milan in 1630, and died 1701. Among his works are a 'History of Sixtus Quintus,' three volumes, 1669; a 'History of Philip II.,' 1679; a 'History of England,' 1682; 'The Cardinalism of the Roman Church;' 'Life of Queen Elizabeth;' 'The Nepotism of Rome,' &c.

LETSOSNE, W. F., a Fr. economist, 1728-1780.

LETTICE, JOHN, an English clergyman, known as a poet and miscellaneous writer, 1737-1832.

LETTSON, JOHN COAKLEY, a native of the West Indies, distinguished in London as a physician, author of professional works and writings on natural history, 1744-1815.

LEU, J. J., a Swiss author, 1689-1768.

LEU, PH. DE, a French engraver, born 1570.

LEUCHT, C. L., a Ger. jurisconsult, 1645-1716.

LEUCIPPUS, a Greek philosopher, who lived between the 4th and 5th centuries B.C., and to whom the first idea of the atomic system is attributed, which was afterwards perfected by his disciple Democritus. Kepler and Descartes were much indebted to the ancient doctrines of these masters for the explanation of the planetary vortices. Bacon remarks that Democritus and Leucippus were so much taken up with the particles of things as to neglect their structure.

LEUCKFELD, J. G., a Ger. savant, 1668-1726.

LEUSDEN, J., a Dutch Hebraist, 1624-1699.

LEUTINGET, N., a Ger. historian, 1547-1612.

LEUWENHOECK, ANTOINE, a celebrated naturalist, was born at Delft in 1632. He died in 1723. His first title to distinction was derived from the superior skill he manifested in cutting glasses for microscopes and spectacles. He afterwards became more famous for the use he applied the microscope to. His whole life, which was a long one, was devoted to making anatomical observations and experiments, and researches in natural history; and his numerous papers in the Philosophical Transactions of London show his industry and perseverance. His observations upon the continuous nature of arteries and veins; upon the composition of the blood; upon the structure of the crystalline lens of the eye; upon the spermatie animalcules; and the history of some of the more minute animals as observed by the microscope, have established his reputation as an accurate observer, and diligent inquirer into the secrets of nature. His fame during his lifetime had spread far and wide; and when Peter the Great of Russia passed in 1698 by Delft, Leuwenhoeck was expressly invited to an interview with his majesty, and delighted him by exhibiting through his microscope the circulation of the blood going on in the tail of an eel. [W.B.]

LEVACHER, G., a French surgeon, 1695-1760.

LEVAILLANT, FRANCIS, a native of Guiana, dist. as an African trav. and naturalist, 1754-1824.

LEVASSOR, M., a French historian, 17th cent.

LEVE, ANT. DE, a cele. Span. general, d. 1536.

LEVEQUE, P., a French historian, 1713-1781.

LEVER, SIR ASHTON, a gentleman of fortune, who impoverished himself by collecting a museum of natural history, which was exhibited in Leicester Square from 1775 to 1785. Died 1788.

LEVER, THOMAS, an eloquent minister of the reign of Edward VI., au. of sermons, &c., d. 1577.

LEVERIDGE, R., a famous singer, 1670-1758.

LEVESQUE, L. C., a Fr. authoress, 1703-1745.

LEVESQUE, P. C., a learn. histor., 1736-1812.

LEVESQUE-DE-CARAVALLIERE, P. A., the author of 'Poésies de Roi du Navarre,' 1697-1762.

LEVESQUE-DE-POUILLY, L. J., a French magistrate and political writer, 1691-1750. His son, J. SIMON, also an author, and member of the Academy of Inscriptions, 1734-1820.

LEVI, the third son of Jacob and Leah.

LEVI, DAVID, a tradesman of London, remarkable for his self-acquired learning, author of 'Letters to Dr. Priestley, in answer to his Letters addressed to the Jews,' a 'Hebrew-English Dictionary,' a 'Hebrew Grammar,' 'The Rites and Ceremonies of the Jews,' &c., 1740-1799.

LEVI-BEN-GERSHOM, a learned rabbi and disciple of Aristotle, born in Provence, 1290-1370.

LÉVIEUX, R., a Fr. painter, time of Louis XV.

LEVINGSTON, JAMES, a Scottish royalist, created by Charles I. Lord Levinston of Almont and earl of Callendar, died 1672.

LEVIS, FRANCIS, Duke De, a French marshal, distinguished in Canada, 1720-1787. His son, PIERRIA MARIA GASTON, Duc De Levis, a member of the constituent assembly, known as a political writer and moralist after the restor., 1764-1830.

LEVIZAC, JOHN PONS VICTOR LECOUTZ DE, au. of several works on French literature, d. 1813.

LEWELLIN. See LLYWELYN.

LEWENHAUPT, A. L. COUNT DE, a Swedish general, who died in Russia after a captivity of ten years, 1719; author of 'Memoirs,' published 1757.

LEWENHAUPT, C. E., of the same family as the preceding, sent to Finland against the Russians in 1742, and, failing of success, beheaded in 1743.

LEWIS, JOHN, a Church of England divine, dist. for his antiquarian learning, au. of a 'History of John Wickliffe,' 'History and Antiquities of the Abbey Church of Faversham,' &c., 1675-1746.

LEWIS, MATTHEW GREGORY, a popular novelist, author of 'The Monk,' &c., 1773-1818.

LEWIS, CAPTAIN MERIWETHER, had the joint conduct with Lieutenant Clarke (q.v.) of the first expedition across the Rocky Mountains undertaken by the United States government.

LEY, or LEIGH, SIR J., an em. lawyer, created Baron Ley and earl of Marlborough, 1552-1628.

LEY, JOHN, a controversial divine, 1583-1662.

LEYBOURN, W., a mathematic., d. about 1690.

LEYDECKER, MELCHIOR, a Dutch theologian, au. of 'The Rep. of the Hebrews,' &c., 1652-1721.

LEYDEN, JOHN, a Scotch physician, eminent as a linguist, antiquary, and poet, 1775-1811.

LEYDEN, JOHN OF, a famous leader of the anabaptists, was a tailor's apprentice at the Hague at the close of the 15th century, and his proper name was John Boccold, or Bockels. The events which have handed his name down to posterity form a bloody episode in the history of the Reformation. The movements of Luther had been preceded by political and social commotions in Germany, and as it gained strength, the spiritual freedom which it promised was carried down into these disaffected elements. Political sects everywhere sprung up, who grounded their dogmas in the religious principles of the reformers, and raised the cry of equality against the princes and nobles who had so long oppressed them. The ignorant, the poor, the hopeless, the turbulent, swelled these dangerous bodies to scores of thousands, and they were only vanquished in one principality to rise with fresh vigour in another, and begin a new reign of terror under other and more daring leaders. One such was John of Leyden, who began to acquire influence among them in 1533, about which time he associated himself with the anabaptist Mathison. The name of the party was derived from the alleged necessity of rebaptism into the church, (that of infants being held invalid,) and as the church with them was also the state, this baptism became as the oriflamme of an armed propaganda which threatened every form of existing order. In 1534, the city of Munster was divided into two hostile camps, the anabaptists having become so numerous as to proclaim a new religious and political constitution. The prince-bishop was soon deprived of all authority, and collecting his adherents around him, and adding to their number troops of mercenaries, he laid regular siege to 'New Israel.' Meanwhile, Jehn of Leyden and wife had been proclaimed king and queen, and more than six months their devoted followers defended the city. At length, in June, 1535, troops were admitted by treason in the still of night, but not to an easy conquest. Possee was disputed street by street, and the greater number of the anabaptists perished in the combat, city afterwards being delivered up to pillage eight days. John of Leyden, and some two accomplices, were taken alive, and executed in May, 1536, with the cruelty usual at that period. The anabaptists accepted the free principles of Reformation without the Bible, in place of which they laid claim to particular inspiration. Like Quakers, their more peaceful successors, they the subjects of preternatural convulsions, visionary hallucinations, which often ended in frenzied and demoniac possession. See STORCH, M. CER.

LEYDEN, J. G. VAN, a D. chronicler, d. 1611.

LEYDEN, LUCAS VAN. See JACOBS.

LEYSER, A., a Prussian jurist, 1663-1752.

LEYSER, POLYCARP, a theologian of the confession of Augsburg, 1552-1601. His nephew, of the same name, a literary savant, d. 1728.

JOHN, of the same family, author of numerous works in favour of polygamy, 1631-1678.

LEYSENS, N., a Flemish painter, 1661-1710.

LETO, A., a Spanish painter, 17th century.

LEYVA, J. DE, a Spanish painter, 1580-1640.

LEZARDIERE, MARIE PAULINE DE, au. of 'Theorie de la Politique de la Monarchie Icaise,' 1754-1835.

LEZAY - MARNESIA, CLAUDE FRANK ADRIAN, Marquis De, a man of letters, known as a deputy to the estates-general, and for his attempts in 1790 to form a colony in North America, 1735-1800. His son, ADRIAN, Count De Marnesia, a political wr. and diplom., 1770-1810.

LHOMOND, C. F., a Fr. grammar., 1727-1780.

L'HOPITAL. See HOPITAL.

L'HOSE, NESTOR, a Fr. Orientalist, 1804-1840.

LHUYD, EDWARD, a Welch antiquarian, au. of an 'Irish-English Dictionary,' 'Archæologia Britannica,' &c., 1670-1709.

LHUYD, LHUYD, or LHOYD, H., a learned antiqu., au. of a 'History of Cambria,' &c., d. 1709.

LIANS, T. P. DE, a Span. painter, 1575-1640.

LIARD, JOSEPH, a Fr. engineer, 1747-1800.

LIBANIUS, a famous rhetorician, born at Antioch, and educated at Athens, author of numerous oratorical and moral treatises, most of which still extant, flourished in the time of the emperor Julian, about 314-390. Libanius was the teacher of St. Basil and John Chrysostom.

LIBANIUS, G., a German savant, 16th century.

LIBARID, a Georgian general, who made himself independent in 1045, and was assassinated in 1060.

LIBARIUS, A., a German physician, distinguished as the first to speak of the transfusion of blood from one living being to another, died 1610.

LIBERALE, G., an Italian painter, 16th century.

LIBERALE, V., an Italian painter, 1451-1510.

LIBERATUS, an eccles. writer of the 16th century.

LIBERGE, M., a Fr. juriconsult, died 1540.

LIBERI, C. P., an Italian painter, 1605-1670.

LIBERIUS, the successor of Julius as pope, died 366.

rome, 352. At first the friend of Athanasius, he was exiled on his account by the emperor Constantius, but afterwards most weakly and wickedly subscribed to the Arian tenets. Liberius, however, at last died a good catholic in 366.

LIBICKI, J., a Polish poet of the 17th century.

LIBURNIO, N., a Venetian savant, 1474-1557.

LICETI, F., an Italian philosopher, 1577-1657.

LICHERIE, L., a French painter, died 1687.

LICHTENAU, WILHELMINA EUKE-RIETZ, countess Von, a favourite of Frederick-William king of Prussia, author of 'Memoirs,' 1754-1820.

LICHTENBERG, GEORGE CHRISTOPHER, a natural philosopher and moralist, author of many pieces of wit and humour, including a satire on the system of Lavater, entitled 'The Physiognomy of Tails,' and really distinguished for his contributions to the physical sciences, 1742-1799.

LICHTENSTEIN, JOSEPH WENCESLAUS, prince Von, an Austrian field-marshal, 1696-1772.

LICHTENSTEIN, JOHN JOSEPH, Prince Von, an Austrian general and diplomatist, time of Napoleon, 1760-1833. His cousin, ALOYS GON-NAQUE, distinguished himself at Leipzig 1813, and the campaigns of 1814-1815.

LICHTNER, M. G., a Ger. fabulist, 1719-83.

LICINIUS, CAIUS, a Roman poet, 1st c. B.C.

LICINIUS, CAIUS FLAVIUS, a native of Dacia, of obscure origin, who was born about 263, and became emperor of Rome in 312. He was deposed by Constantine 323, and put to death the year following. His son, FLAVIUS VALERIUS, who had been declared Caesar in 317, was put to death at Constantinople in 326.

LICINIUS-STOLO, a Roman plebeian, who became tribune B.C. 375, and consul 363 and 360.

LICINIUS-TEGULA, a Roman poet, 200 B.C.

LIDDEL, DUNCAN, a Scotch physician and mathematician, founder of a professorship, 1561-1613.

LIDEN, J. H., a Swedish writer, author of a history of the Poets of Sweden, mid. of last cen.

LIDNER, B., a Swedish poet, 1759-1793.

LIEBE, CH. S., a Gr. numismatist, 1687-1736.

LIEBLE, PH. L., a French ecclesiastic, an. of the Limits of Charlemagne's Empire, 1734-1813.

LIEMAKER, N., a Flemish painter, 1675-1647.

LIERRE, J. VAN, a Flem. painter, abt. 1530-83.

LIEUTAUD, J., a Fr. astronomer, 1660-1733.

LIEUTAUD, J., a Fr. anatomist, 1703-1780.

LIEVEN, COUNT VON, a Swedish general and major, dist. at Narva and Pultowa, 1670-1733.

LIEVENS, J., a Flemish Hellenist, 1546-1599.

LIEVENS, J., a Dutch painter, 1607-1663.

LIGARIO, P., an Italian painter, 1686-1752.

LIGHTFOOT, DR. JOHN, a Hebrew scholar and divine of the period of the parliamentary wars, born in Staffordshire 1602, died, vice-chancellor of Cambridge, 1675. He was a great master of rabbinical learning, and was much admired for his temper and disinterested conduct in the difficulties through which he had to pass. The Polyglott Bible, and Poole's Synopsis Criticorum, are among the great works promoted by him. His own works are published in 2 vols. folio, 1684, a second edition in 1686, and one of three vols. in 1699.

An octavo vol. of his 'Remains,' with some notices of his life, was published by Strype.

LIGHTFOOT, JOHN, a Church of England minister, who dist. himself as a botanist, 1735-88.

LIGNAC, JOSEPH ADRIAN LE LARGE DE, a priest of the oratory at Paris, distinguished as the author of several curious works in natural history and theology, died 1762.

LIGNE, CHARLES JOSEPH, Prince De, was born of an ancient family at Brussels in 1735, and distinguished himself as a general in the Austrian service from the period of the seven years' war to the congress of Vienna, during the session of which he died, in 1814. He is author of several political works, and of 'Memoirs' of great interest. His works were collected in 6 volumes 8vo, 1817.

LIGONIER, JOHN, earl of, a companion-in-arms of Marlborough, born 1678, commander-in-chief 1757, died 1770.

LIGORIO, PIERO, an architect and antiquary of Naples, who shared the direction of the works at the Vatican with Michelangelo, and that of the erection of St. Peter's with Vignola. He died in 1583, and his MSS. and designs collected from the antique, form thirty folio volumes.

LIGOZZI, J., an Italian painter, 1543-1627.

LIGUORI, A. M. DE, an ascetic wr., 1696-1787.

LILBURN, JOHN, a famous English republican, whose merits far surpass the reputation in which he has been held, was born of an old family in the county of Durham, 1613, and, after receiving a common education, became a clothier in London. He was thoroughly imbued with the temper of the times, and was first known to the public through a prosecution of the Star Chamber for complicity with Bastwick. His intrepid defence of his rights as a free-born Englishman, before that dreaded bar of the high church party, gained for him the familiar appellation of 'free-born John.' He was condemned to receive 500 lashes at the cart tail, and to stand in the pillory; but his spirit was only aroused by this disgraceful punishment, his name became the watchword of a large and tumultuous party, and the House of Commons voted the sentence 'barbarous and illegal.' Such a man was not likely to be 'slow' when active measures were resorted to by the parliament. He fought bravely at Edge Hill and Marston Moor, and became lieutenant-colonel under the earl of Manchester; for an assault upon whose character he suffered imprisonment, and underwent many hardships. His chief fault was the want of a more statesman-like spirit, so that he was continually sinking from the leading position he might have held, in virtue of his integrity and intrepidity, to that of a demagogue. He boldly accused Cromwell and Ireton of treason, and the former tried, in vain, to make him comprehend the real situation of affairs, and seems at last to have given him up in despair, and to have prosecuted him from necessity, while he valued his steady qualities and incorruptible nature. Reduced to quiescence under the iron hand of the Protector, his political enthusiasm subsided into the religious, and the famous John Lilburne became a preacher among the Quakers. Died 1657. [E.R.]

LILIEBLAD, G., a learned Swede, 1651-1710.

LILIECRANTZ, J., a Sw. statesm., 1730-1815.

LILIENBERG, J. G., chancellor of Sweden, and president of the council of mines, in the reign of Frederick I., died at the end of the last century. His brother, ERIC GUSTAVUS, served in France under Marshal Saxe 1740, and died 1770.

LILIENTHAL, M., a Germ. divine, 1686-1750

LILIO, LUIGI, in Latin, LULIUS, an Italian mathematician, author of the plan for reforming the calendar effected by Gregory XIII., died 1579.

LILLO, GEORGE, an English dramatic writer, famous in the delineation of domestic tragedy, author of 'George Barnwell,' 'Fatal Curiosity,' 'Arden of Faversham,' and other pieces. Lillo carried on the business of a jeweller, and was a man of unblemished character, 1693-1739.

LILLY, JOHN, a dramatic writer, author of 'Endymion' and 'Midas,' acted before Queen Elizabeth, and of a famous pamphlet, entitled 'Martin Mar-Prelate,' about 1553-1600.

LILLY, WILLIAM, whose reputation as an astrologer raised him to considerable importance at the time of the parliamentary wars, was born in Leicestershire, 1602, and was in service in London as a bookkeeper, when his master died, and gave him the opportunity of marrying his widow. This lady possessed a small fortune of about £1,000, and dying six years afterwards left him master of considerable leisure, and of the art of invoking spirits, which he had derived from the instruction of Evans, a Welch clergyman, and from the study of Cornelius Agrippa. The first public trial of his art, however, was an attempt to discover a buried treasure in the cloisters of Westminster Abbey with the use of the divining rod, the chief movers in which were Ramsay and Scot. The actors in this scene were terrified from their purpose by a storm which threatened to bury them beneath the ruins of the abbey, and Lilly, who claims the merit of having 'laid the spirits' by which it was raised, attributed their failure to the want of faith and better knowledge in his companions. In 1634 Lilly ventured on a second marriage, which proved unfortunate as a commercial speculation, for though the bride possessed a dowry of £500, she spent more than she brought. In 1644 he published the first of his almanacks, which he continued during the remaining thirty-six years of his lifetime, under the title of 'Merlinus Anglicus.' The predictions contained in this ephemeris, and his interpretation of the three suns which appeared in the heavens that year, on the birth-day of Prince Charles, brought our astrologer a valuable reputation, and he was soon consulted by both the political parties who divided the kingdom. There can be no doubt that his advice was often well-founded, and his predictions frequently verified by the events; but it is just as certain that he was a man of no character. He was a double-dealer and a liar by his own showing, but as staunch a believer in his own honesty as in the truth of his art, and perhaps as decent a man as a trading prophet could well be under any circumstances. It is some excuse that he was courted by noble and crowned heads at home and abroad, and richly rewarded by them. In 1648 the parliament of England gave him an annual pension of £100, which he threw up in disgust two years afterwards on receiving some affront; yet he was able to lay out large sums in the purchase of landed property. He died in 1681, leaving works of great interest in the history of astrology, and of some importance as characterizing the times in which he lived, and the historical persons with whom he was associated. [E.R.]

LILY, WILLIAM, first master of St. Paul's school, author of a well-known Latin grammar, 1468-1522. His son, GEORGE, a dignitary of church, and writer of history, died 1559. PETER, brother of George, and his son of the same name were also distinguished in the church, and the latter, who died in 1614, is author of 'Sermons.'

LIMBORCH, H. VAN, a D. painter, 1680-1712.

LIMBORCH, PHILIP, pastor of a congregation of Dutch Remonstrants, and professor of divinity was born at Amsterdam 1633, and died in 1712. He was nephew, by the mother's side, of Episcopius, and edited some of his papers in conjunction with Hartsoeker. His own works are 'Theologia Christiana,' a defence of Arminian principles; a 'History of the Inquisition,' a 'Commentary on the Apostolic Writings,' &c.

LIMIERS, H. PH. DE, born of French parents in Holland, cele., as a critic and historian, d. 1717.

LIMNEUS, J., a German publicist, 1592-1644.

LINACRE, THOMAS, a physician and scholar, greatly distinguished in the reigns of Henry VIII. and Henry VIII., 1460-1524.

LINCK, J. H., a German naturalist, 1674-1717.

LIND, JAMES, an English physician, died 1717.

LINDANUS, W. D., a native of Dort, distinguished as a controversial divine, and theologian of the Roman Catholic Church, 1525-1588.

LINDBLOM, A., a Swedish prelate, 1747-1817.

LINDEN, J. A. VANDER, a D. phys., 1609-1680.

LINDERN, F. B. VON, a Ger. botan., 1682-1750.

LINDET, A. T., a French priest, and member of the convention, 1743-1823. His brother, J. ROBERT LINDET, a member of the Committee of Public Safety, died 1825.

LINDSAY, SIR DAVID. See LYNDSAY.

LINDSAY, J., a nonjuring minister of London, au. of a 'History of the Regal Succession,' d. 1717.

LINDSAY, R., a Scottish historian, 16th century.

LINDSEY, THEOPHILUS, a Church of England divine, afterwards known as a preacher and writer on Socinianism, 1728-1808.

LINDWOOD, W., an English divine, died 1417.

LINGARD, DR. JOHN, the Roman Catholic historian of England, was born in Winchester 1771, and made his first appearance as an author in 1805, when he wrote a series of letters in the Newcastle Courant, entitled 'Catholic Loyalty Vindicated.' To Dr. Lingard belongs the honour of refusing a cardinal's hat. He died, after a life of 'illustrious obscurity,' 1851.

LINGLOIS, P. F., a French jurist, 1580-1610.

LINGUET, SIMON NICHOLAS HENRY, a celebrated political writer and historian, born 1734, executed after taking an active part in the French revolution, 1794.

LINIERE, F. P. DE, a French poet, 1628-1717.

LINIERS - BREMONT, DON SANTIAGO, Spanish commander, who defended Buenos Ayres against the English in 1806-7, and having treated with Buonaparte, was shot by a party of revolutionists, 26th August, 1809.

LINLEY, THOMAS, a distinguished vocal composer, received his first instructions in music from Thomas Chilcott, and afterwards from the celebrated Paradies. Linley was for many years conductor of the oratorios and concerts at Bath and has been called the restorer of the music of Handel, in the same sense as Garrick was of the plays of Shakspeare. Linley went to London and became joint patentee of Drury Lane theatre with his son-in-law, Richard Brinsley Sheridan, in which establishment he, for many years, conducted the musical department of the entertainments. He composed music for the following pieces, namely 'The Duenna,' 'The Carnival of Venice,' 'Selima and the Royal Merchant,' 'The Camp,' 'The Spanish Maid,' 'The Stranger at Home,' 'Love in the East,' and many other pieces. His madrigal for four voices,—

'Let me, careless and unthoughtful lying,
Hear the soft winds above me flying,' considered equal in all respects, and superior to very many of the most celebrated compositions of the same class. Linley died in London in 1795, and was buried in Wells cathedral, in the same vault with his daughters, Mrs. Sheridan and Mrs. Pickell. [J.M.]

LINLEY, THOMAS, a son of the preceding, celebrated as a violinist, drowned at the age of twenty-two, 1778. His younger son, WILLIAM, a writer and composer of songs, born about 1767.

LINN, WILLIAM, a minister and protestant minister of New York, 1752-1808. His son, JOHN LAIR LINN, a distinguished poet, 1777-1804.

LINNÆUS, CHARLES, or CARL VON LINNÉ, one of the greatest systematic botanists and naturalists the world has ever seen, was born in Udden in 1707. He died in 1778. Sweden is justly proud of having given birth to Linnæus. His father was a poor clergyman in a rural district, who could scarce afford to give his son an education for a profession, and was at one time only apprenticing him to a shoemaker; and yet to see this son in after years, by dint of his own genius and talents, rising to the rank of a nobleman, and exercising, even while alive, a most extraordinary and universal influence over the whole science of natural history. During the earlier years of his life he endured many privations and much poverty; but his extensive acquirements procured him numerous friends, and in 1741, at the age of thirty-four, he succeeded in being appointed to the professorship of medicine at the university of Upsala, where he had studied in his youth; Rosen was professor of botany, a chair which Linnæus would have preferred, but by an amicable arrangement the former lectured on medical subjects, while the latter taught natural history. Previous to his appointment to this chair Linnæus had travelled through Lapland, where he had been sent to the Academy of Sciences for the purpose of exploring the natural history of that arctic region; he had visited and examined the great mines of Sweden, where he acquired a good knowledge of mineralogy; he had explored the natural history of Dalecarlia, for which purpose he had been sent by the governor of that province; he had visited Denmark, Germany, Holland, and England, and thus laid up a vast store of knowledge in all the three kingdoms of nature. The extent of this knowledge may be judged of from his 'Systema Nature,' a work which has now been before the world for more than a century; and which, notwithstanding that our acquaintance with the objects of nature has increased a hundred-fold since that time, is almost indispensable to every naturalist even at the present day. His acquirements in natural history were universal; still it is in botany that he has obtained most success and his greatest glory. His arrangement of plants by the sexual system, or by the number, disposition, &c., of the stamina and pistils, maintained the pre-eminence over all rival systems till very lately, and even now, though superseded in a great measure by the natural method of Jussieu, retains a most useful place in the study of botany. The binomial nomenclature which he introduced into botany and zoology, or the use of trivial or specific names appended to the generic, to distinguish the different species of animals and plants, is one of the most important helps to the advancement of the study of natural history that has ever been discovered, and which alone would have immortalized the name of Linnæus.—In 1747 Linnæus was appointed physician to the king; in 1753 he was created a knight of the Polar Star; and in 1757 he was raised to the rank of nobility. [W.B.]

LINT, PETER VAN, a Flemish historical and portrait painter, 1609-1668. His brother, HENDRICK, a painter and engraver, end of the cent.

LINTHOCST, J., a Dutch painter, 1755-1815.

LINUS, a supposed bishop of Rome, 1st cent.

LINWOOD, Miss, famous for her exhibition of needle-work pictures in Leicester Square, was born in Birmingham, 1755, and died 1845. Her copies of pictures from the old masters possessed extraordinary merit, and for one of them, which she bequeathed to the queen, she is said to have refused an offer of three thousand guineas. The collection met the usual fate of such things after her death, and was dispersed by auction.

LIONEL, lord of Ferraro and Modena, 1441-50.

LIOTARD, JOHN STEPHEN, a famous enamel painter, who was called 'the Turk' on account of adopting the Turkish costume, born at Geneva 1702, died about 1776. His brother, JOHN MICHAEL, distinguished in Paris as an engraver, died after 1760.

LIOTARD, PETER, a Fr. botanist, 1729-1796.

LIPENIUS, M., a German divine, 1630-1692.

LIPPERT, P. S., a German artist, 1703-1785.

LIPPI, FRANCESCO FILIPPO, a painter of Florence, born about 1412, died 1469. His son, PHILIPPINO, also distin. as a painter, 1460-1505.

LIPPI, LORENZO, a famous painter of altar pieces, known also as a burlesque poet, 1606-1664.

LIPPO, a Florentine painter, assassinated 1347.

LIPSIUS, J. G., a Ger. numismatist, died 1820.

LIPSIUS, JUSTUS, a celebrated philologist, critic, and antiquary, and prof. at Leyden and Louvain, born at Isch, near Brussels, 1447, died 1606.

LIRELLI, S., an Italian astronomer, 1751-1811.

LIRIS, LEO DU, an astronomer, 17th century.

LIRON, J., a learned ecclesiastic, 1665-1748.

LIS, or LYS, JOHN VANDER, a Dutch painter, 1570-1629; another of the same name, 1600-1657.

LISCOV, CHR. L., a German poet, died 1760.

LISLE, CLAUDE DE, a French geographer, historian, and genealogist, 1644-1720. His son, LOUIS, a physician and wr. on astronomy, d. 1741.

LISLE, SIR G., a royalist officer, famous for his defence of Colchester, shot by the republicans 1648.

LISLE, J. TROIS DE, a Provençal adventurer and alchemist, b. abt. 1662, d. in the Bastille 1712.

LISLE, W., an English antiquary, died 1637.

LISLE. See DELISLE, DELISLE-DE SALES.

LIST, FREDERIC, a political economist and member of the parliament of Wurtemberg, founder of the Zollverein or customs union, 1789-1846.

LISTER, M., an English naturalist, died 1712.

LISTER, T. H., a miscellaneous writer, 1801-42.

LISTON, JOHN, was born in Norris Street, Haymarket, in 1776, and was educated at Dr. Barrow's, Soho school. In 1795 he became himself second master at the Grammar, or Library school, Castle Street, Leicester Square, under Archdeacon Tennyson, and was all his life long a great reader. From this school he was, however, expelled for acting plays with the big boys, and went into an office as a clerk. The first time he performed in London, was at the Haymarket, on a benefit night, as Raebold, in 'The Iron Chest.' After this, obtaining £40 from a friend for the purpose, he resolved to adopt the stage as a profession, and spent the money in the purchase of theatrical properties. He then acted at Taunton, Exeter, and Newcastle-upon-Tyne. His first comic part was Diggory in 'She Stoops to Conquer,' and he raised the character at once into importance. On the 10th June, 1806, Mr. Liston appeared again at the Haymarket, as a debutant, in Sheepface, in 'The Village Lawyer.' Miss Tyrer (afterwards his wife) made her first appearance there also on the same night, as Agnes in 'The Mountaineers.' His next character was Zekiel Homespun. But it was not until the following October, and at Covent Garden theatre, that he secured extraordinary attention, by the part of Jacob Gawkey, in 'The Chapter of Accidents.' The reputation thus acquired he quite established by his Lord Grizzle in 'Tom Thumb,' in which he had to sing 'the dancing song' three times. His elegant and symmetrical form was exhibited in this feat, and undoubtedly contributed to his remarkable success. His wife also produced a similar sensation in Queen Dolabella.—Notwithstanding his success in these comic and burlesque parts, Mr. Liston thought himself a tragic actor, and 17th May, 1809, attempted Octavian. His Dominie Sampson, indeed, and Adam Brock evinced touches of genuine pathos. In 1823, Mr. Liston had an engagement at Drury Lane of £50 a-week, which he commenced with Tony Lumpkin. His Maworm next year was applauded by George IV. himself, who encored the celebrated sermon; and the public nightly afterwards imitated the royal example. In 1825, he appeared in his famous character of Paul Pry; this was the climax of Mr. Liston's popularity. The furor for the play was immense. Mr. Liston was henceforth to be seen moulded in all conceivable materials—plaster, clay, china, butter; he gave signs to public houses, names to coaches, and portraits to pocket-handkerchiefs. In 1831, Mr. Liston joined Madame Vestris at the Olympic, where he enjoyed an income of £60 a-week, and appeared as Dominique, in a new piece, by Mr. Charles Dance, called 'Talk of the Devil.' At this theatre, Mr. Liston continued until 1837. The last night he performed was at the Lyceum, for the benefit of Mr. James Vining—but he never took a formal farewell of the stage. His death took place on the 22d March, 1846, from apoplexy. The attributes of Mr. Liston's acting were nature, thought, and study; his conduct in private life was exemplary, and he was remarkable for attention to his religious duties. (J.A.)

LISTON, R., a famous surgeon, 1794-1847.

LITHGOW, W., a Scotch traveller, died 1641.

LITHOV, GUST., a Swedish poet, born 1692.

LITTA, POMPEO, Count, an Italian literary antiquarian, died 1852.

LITTLE, W., an English historian, born 1118.

LITTLEBURY, J., an English divine, 17th c.

LITTLETON, ADAM, a divine of the Church of England, celebrated for his skill in the Eastern languages, au. of a Latin dictionary, &c., 1627.

LITTLETON, EDW., a divine and poet, d. 1717.

LITTLETON, or LYTTLETON, THOMAS, a famous authority in matters of law, was a judge in the reign of Edward IV., and author of a treatise on 'Tenures,' which is the text-book of Coke's Commentaries, died 1481. Judge Littleton had three sons—WILLIAM, ancestor of the Lords Littleton of Worcestershire; RICHARD, a lawyer in the reigns of Henry VII. and Henry VIII.; and THOMAS, knighted by Henry VII. for the capture of Lambert Simnel. A JOHN LITTLETON descended from William, was a partizan of the earl of Essex in the reign of Elizabeth, and died in prison 1600. EDWARD LITTLETON, descended from Thomas, was lord-keeper in the reign of Charles I. and created baron of Mounslow in Shropshire, flourished in 1589-1645. Another descendant of Thomas, was a SIR THOMAS LITTLETON, speaker of the H. of Commons in the reign of William I.

LITTRE, ALEXIS, a French anatomist, 1658-1717.

LITTROW, J. J., a German astronomer, died 1818.

LIVERPOOL, CHARLES JENKINSON, earl of Liverpool, a member of parliament and statesman, who occupied various offices from 1761 to 1784, and died at the age of eighty-one, 1808. His son, ROBERT BANKS JENKINSON, earl of Liverpool, born 1775, was the famous statesman who held the premiership from 1812 till 1827. Died 1828.

LIVIA-DRUSILLA, a Roman empress of the Claudian family, who was first married to Tiberius Claudius Nero, and forcibly taken from him by Augustus, who divorced his own wife in order to marry her. Having no children by the emperor, he adopted her sons by her first husband, one of whom, Tiberius, became his successor. Livia died in the eighty-sixth year of her age, 29.

LIVIA-LIVILLA, granddaughter of the emperor Augustus, by her other son, Drusus Germanicus, married her cousin, Drusus, son of Tiberius, and being poisoned her husband in concert with Sejanus died in a dungeon 35.

LIVINEIUS, J., a Flemish divine, died 1599.

LIVINGSTON, EDWARD, an American lawyer and statesman, au. of a new criminal code, d. 1818.

LIVINGSTON, JOHN, minister of the Scotch church at Rotterdam, auth. of 'Letters' 1603-1618.

LIVINGSTON, ROBT., a distinguished American statesman and diplomatist. He was one of the committee who drew up the declaration of independence; in 1780 was secretary for foreign affairs; and after filling the office of chancellor of the state of New York was appointed minister to France in the time of Buonaparte; 1746-1818.

LIVINGSTON, WILLIAM, an American author and statesman, 1723-90. His son, BROCKHOFF, a dist. judge of the state of New York, 1757-1818.

LIVIUS ANDRONICUS. See ANDRONICUS.

LIVY. TITUS LIVIUS PATAVINUS, the only illustrious Roman historian of the Augustan age, was born at Patavium (now Padua), a town of the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom in Italy, B.C. 59, in the consulship of Cæsar and Bibulus. The name, Patavinus, seems to fix the place of his birth; but, according to some authorities, he was born at a village six miles to the south of Patavium. The records of his life, like those of many others of the literary men of antiquity, are meagre and unsatisfactory—the materials necessary to form a connected narrative having been supplied by the imaginations of some of his biographers. After passing the early portion of his life, perhaps in his native town, he appears to have gone to Rome during the reign of Augustus, where his literary talents soon obtained for him the favour and patronage of the emperor. As an admirer of the ancient institutions of his country, Livy attached himself in opinion to the party of Pompeians and heroes; but Augustus, entertaining a mere regard for the historian, did not allow his friendship and patronage to be affected by political opinions, though they seemed to call in question the right by which he ruled the destinies of Rome. Having spent the greater part of his life in the metropolis, he returned in old age to the town of his birth, and there died A.D. 18, in the seventy-seventh year of his age. He left a son and also a daughter, who married L. Magius, a teacher of rhetoric, a man of moderate talents, who owed his subsequent success principally to his connection with the historian. The preceding statement contains all the authentic facts which have descended to us in connection with the personal history of Livy. Many other particulars are related by writers who profess to record the life of the Roman historian; but these are either altogether illusory, or rest upon evidence which will not bear examination. Thus he is said to have commenced his career as a rhetorician, and to have written a work on that science; to have been twice married, and to have left two sons and several daughters; to have been in the habit, like Virgil, Horace, and other wits of the day, of spending much of his time at Naples; and to have first attracted the notice of Augustus by presenting him some dialogues on philosophy. He is also said to have been the tutor of Claudius, afterwards emperor, and to have recommended to his pupil, in early life, to attempt historical composition. Livy has erected for himself an enduring monument in his History of Rome. This great work, which he modestly designated Annales (Annals), contained the history of the Roman state from the earliest period till the death of Drusus B.C. 9, and originally consisted of 142 books. Only 35 of these have descended to us; of the others, with the exception of two, we possess Epitomes, or short summaries, but the books themselves have been entirely lost. The existing books were brought to light at various times; some of them towards the middle of the sixteenth century, and a fragment of the ninety-first book appeared for the first time in 1772. The hope so long entertained by the learned, that the lost books would yet be recovered seems now to have yielded to despair. From internal evidence there appears to be reason for believing that the history was divided by the author into decades, or portions each containing ten books. The first decade, which embraces the history till B.C. 294, is entire; the second is lost; the third, fourth, and the first five books of the fifth, containing the history from B.C. 219 to B.C. 167, also remain to us. Of the other books nothing has been preserved except some inconsiderable fragments. It is impossible to ascertain the time during which the historian was occupied with his great work. Niebuhr fixes the commencement of it in B.C. 9, when he was fifty years old, and believes that he had not fully accomplished his design at the close of his life. In forming an estimate of Livy as an historian, it is necessary to bear in mind the object which he seems to have proposed to himself. As a Roman and a patriot, his grand purpose was to celebrate the glories of his native country, and the disinterested patriotism which raised it to universal supremacy. He adopted the early history as he found it, exhibiting the legends in attractive language, without inquiring into their authenticity. He makes no pretensions to the character of a critical historian, and thus, in some degree, escapes from the charge which may fairly be alleged against him, of not consulting the public records. 'His style may be pronounced almost faultless; and a great proof of its excellence is, that the charms with which it is invested are so little salient, and so equally diffused, that no one feature can be selected for special eulogy, but the whole unite to produce a form of singular beauty and grace. The narrative flows on in a calm, but strong current, clear and sparkling, but deep and unbroken; the diction displays richness without heaviness, and simplicity without tameness. Nor is his art as a painter less wonderful. There is a distinctness in the outline and a warmth of colouring in all his delineations, whether of living men in action, or of things inanimate, which never fail to call up the whole scene, with all its adjuncts, before our eyes.' [G.F.]

[Livy—From an Antique Bust.]

LLORENTE, DON JUAN ANTONIO, a Spanish historian and chancellor of Toledo, 1756-1823.

LLOYD, CHARLES, bishop of Oxford, and for some time a teacher of Sir Robert Peel, 1784-1829.

LLOYD, DAVID, a Welch biographer and historian, reader to the Charter-house in London, and author of a 'Life of General Monk,' 'Memoirs of Persons who Suffered for Loyalty,' &c., 1625-91.

LLOYD, EDWARD, a Welch antiq., 1660-1709.

LLOYD, HENRY, a Welch officer in the service of the king of Prussia and the empress of Russia, author of works on tactics, and of a 'History of the Seven Years' War,' 1729-1783.

LLOYD, NICH., a learned writer, 1634-1680.

LLOYD, ROBERT, an English poet, 1733-1764.

LLOYD, WILLIAM, a dignitary of the Church of England, distinguished for his writings relating to history and divinity, and his share in the political transactions of his time, born in Berkshire 1627, chaplain to Charles II. 1666, bishop of St. Asaph 1680, bishop of Lichfield 1692, bishop of Lichfield 1699, died 1717. Bishop Lloyd was one of the prelates who joined Sancroft in protesting against the toleration act of James II.

LLYWELYN, the name of three Welch princes—the first reigned over South Wales, and fell while defending his country from the Scotch invader, Aulaff, 998-1021; the second, king of North Wales, married to the daughter of John, king of England, died, after reigning forty-six years, in 1240; the third and last sovereign of Wales, fell in battle against Edward I., after a reign of twenty-eight years, 1282.

LLYWELYN, the name of two Welch bards, the earlier of whom lived between 1130 and 1180, the later, a native of Glamorganshire, died 1616.

LLYWELYN, TH., a Welch divine, died 1796.

LOBAU, GEORGE MOUTON, Count De, a general of the French empire, distinguished for his gallantry and his adherence to Napoleon, who called him 'the best colonel that ever commanded a French regiment,' was born 1770, and, being wounded at Waterloo, was sent prisoner to England, where he remained till 1818. Having returned to France, he took part in the revolution of 1830, and was the successor of Lafayette as commander of the national guard. He was made a peer and marshal of France 1831. Died 1839.

LOBB, THEOPHILUS, a medical wr., 1678-1763.

LOBEIRA, VASCO, a Portuguese writer, author of the romance of 'Amadis de Gaul,' died 1403.

LOBEL, M. DE, a Flem. botanist, 1538-1616.

LOBINEAU, G. A., a learned wr., 1666-1727.

LOBKOWIZ, G. C., Prince Von, an Austrian general, 1702-1753. His son, JOSEPH, a famous military officer and ambassador, 1725-1802.

LOBO, GERARD, a Span. poet, d. about 1668.

LOBO, JEROME, a Portug. mission., 1593-1678.

LOBSTEIN, J. F., a Ger. anatom., 1736-1784.

LOCATELLI, L., an Ital. chemist, died 1637.

LOCCENIUS, J., a Swedish hist., 1599-1677.

LOCHNER, J. J., a Ger. numismat., 1600-1669.

LOCHNER, M. F., a Ger. naturalist, 1662-1720.

LOCK, MAT., an Eng. composer, abt. 1635-77.

LOCKART, ALEX., a Scot. lawyer, 1675-1732.

LOCKE, JOHN, born at Wrington, near Bristol, on 29th August, 1632; died at Oates, in Essex, on 28th October, 1704. A name than which there is none higher in English philosophical literature; the name of a Man, surpassed by no one, in that worth which constitutes the dignity of an independent English gentleman.—It is not our intention to offer in this place an analysis of the celebrated 'Essay Concerning the Human Understanding;' suffice it to touch rapidly on those main points which constitute it a landmark—the circumstances in which it arose, and peculiarities that gave it historic significance.

[Birth-place of John Locke.]

Falling, like KANT after him, on a period of one-sidedness or dogmatism—when statements accurate in the main, had, through their imperfection as representatives of the whole truth, been twisted into assertions of error—Locke found the freedom the Human Understanding attacked by the Cartesianians, with the weapon named by them 'Idea. Inquiries he found—fearless and rational—stopped at both its termini: truths clear within its reach were repudiated because they pretended conflict with so-called Innate Ideas, and regions apparently beyond the sphere of faculties, were on the same authority sketched out and described, with the pedantry of a mechanical Surveyor. To determine the length of the line, was therefore Locke's first resolve; nor could it be asserted that his preliminary war with Innate Ideas, is—in the sense in which he looked on the subject—wholly unsuccessful. Rightly interpreted, his theory is this—no authoritative belief can be found in the Mind, which has not its origin in Experience; and the most extensive nearly universal Beliefs existing, are shaped and coloured by the varying experience of the many and nations entertaining them. The thesis, stated, cannot be impugned; neither the value of its assertion at the epoch of Locke: but the philosopher fails in establishing the proposition which he supposed to be his thesis, viz., that there are no Beliefs in the mind of man, which—although suggested by, and in their form dependent on Experience,—cannot yet be explained unless we attribute to the Thinking Faculty, a proper and independent Motiv Force. DES CARTES himself did not think Locke imagined he thought: and, to that illustrious Man the first three chapters of the Essay have therefore no true reference. Following on his partial, because controversial first view, Locke proceeds to unfold in what manner every recognized or defensible notion, belonging to the Human Understanding may grow up in it. An imperfect first view—we have said—for while looking for the error, he misses the truth of the Cartesian—he never even proposed to establish by a preliminary and rigorous analysis, what those cha

Martin Luther.

John Locke.

Michel. Angelo. Buonarroti.

Sir Peter Lely.

istics of our various classes of Ideas are, which every just philosophy must give an account. Missing therefore, not unnaturally, one of their main characteristics; confounding quantity and infinity, with the simple attributes of generality, and immensity,—he proceeds to deduce all the forms and results of the Understanding from our pure Sensations, and the operation of these of what he terms Reflection. Closely criticized, Locke's Reflection amounts to nothing more than the exercise of Memory, Comparison, and the processes known as Association. The exercise of the Mind as a voluntary Agency does not seem to remain; but as Leibnitz soon pointed out, and as subsequent History showed, the descent from this Scheme was easy, towards undisguised Sensationalism of Condillac and the French School of the close of last century. To charge John Locke—as sound and practical a thinker as ever lived—with the extravagances of the hypothetic schemes, were the worst injustice; nevertheless, there is no precaution against the excesses of sensational philosophy, in his mode of presenting the genesis of human thought; it cannot be gainsayed, that the 'Essay' in several important directions, has been the parent of ourselves of as much mischief as could well be placed amidst the realities of the English mind. Truly antagonistic to absolutism in thought or life, yet less repellant of the doctrines of Sir Robert Filmer, than of all theocratic dogmatism, this remarkable work seemed, however, to harmonize with notions of rational liberty; and it became the favorite text-book of our best men during the difficult periods when Locke wrote. Himself practically imbued with the sense of personality and independence in all things, our Philosopher stood by Constitutional Liberty, suffered with it, and shared its triumphs. Menaced by the Court party—as not a court as the sun ever shone on, then in England—he withdrew to Holland, and there he found shelter. During this voluntary exile his name was erased from the roll of the students of Christ Church Oxford, in consequence of a Royal Mandate; and the spirit of persecution went so far as to demand the rendition of our philosopher from the States-General. Several times, however, were dawning on England. The Revolution in 1688, Locke returned in the vessel that brought home our future queen, the Princess of Orange; and henceforward his career was prosperous. His residence in Holland, however, was not without avail to him. Associating with dissentient protestants, he acquired the notion of that cardinal principle, on the truth of which alone, Protestantism can live; and he showed this in his Letters, on Toleration as well as in the just freedom of his thesis.—It is seldom that a personal History so much delights one, as that of John Locke. Scarcely can one discern a stain on the nature or career of the great Englishman, but his moral career, is everywhere in strictest accordance with the principles he laboured to establish. Truly attached to the cause of Toleration, civil or religious, he scrupled not to suffer for either: nor did his opposition to any faction ever drive him from moderation and justice,—disinclined him to vilipend his opponents a right, or to conceal the excesses of the party, whose fortunes he mainly espoused. He accepted Human Liberty as a basis of his philosophy; and practically stood by that. Few writers, before or since, in England, have had a finer sense of the respect owing to the determinations of the personal Conscience.—The student is specially recommended to the admirable life of John Locke by Lord KING. [J.P.N.]

LOCKMAN, J., a miscellaneous wr., 1698-1771.

LOCKYER, N., a nonconf. divine, 1612-1684.

LOCRE-DE-BOISSY, J. W., a German of French descent, distinguished as a writer on commercial law, 1758-1840.

LODGE, EDMUND, clarencieux-king-at-arms, well known for his 'Portraits of Illustrious Personages of Great Britain,' besides which he wrote 'Illustrations of British History,' and other works of great learning and research, 1756-1839.

LODGE, THOMAS, an English poet, died 1625.

LODGE, WILLIAM, an engraver 1649-1689.

LOEFLLING, P., a Swed. botanist, 1729-1756.

LOESEL, J., a German botanist, 1607-1656.

LOFTE, CAPEL, well known as a miscellaneous writer and contributor to magazine literature, was a gentleman of property, who was educated for the law, and became one of the magistrates of Suffolk, born in London 1751, died 1824.

LOFTUS, DUDLEY, an Orient. scholar, 1613-95.

LOGAN, JOHN, a pleasing versifier and poet, was born in the county of Edinburgh in 1748. When a very young man he edited the poems of the deceased Michael Bruce, and involved himself in controversy by printing in the volume pieces which he claimed, probably with justice, as his own. In 1770 he became minister of the parish of South Leith; and his two volumes of Sermons, published after his death, show him to have possessed a singularly fine flow of animated eloquence. He was also one of the most active and valuable of the contributors to the collection of metrical 'Translations and Paraphrases,' used in the public worship of the Church of Scotland. He delivered Lectures on History, a synopsis of which he published, and aspired unsuccessfully to a professorship. A volume of poems, appearing in 1781, was extremely popular; literary avocations engrossed his attention more and more; and he soon came decidedly into collision with the opinion of the public in Scotland as to the proprieties of the clerical profession, by publishing and bringing on the stage his tragedy of 'Runymede.' His spirits sank, and his habits became irregular. He retired from his pastoral charge, spent about two years in London as a reviewer and pamphleteer, and died there in the end of 1788. [W.S.]

LOGAU, FREDERICK, Baron De, a German poet, whose epigrams and other pieces have been edited by Lessing, 1604-1655.

LOGGAN, DAVID, an engr. of Dantzic, d. 1700.

LOHAIA, IB., an Arabian savant, 8th century.

LOIR, NICHOLAS P., a Fr. painter, 1624-1670.

LOISEAU, J. F., a Fr. republican, died 1822.

LOISEAU, J. S., a Fr. jurisconsult, 1536-1617.

LOISEL, A., a French jurisconsult, died 1822.

LOKMAN, an ancient Arabian philosopher and fabulist, surnamed Alhakim, or the Wise. He is supposed to have been contemporary with King David, and even to have lived under his patronage and died in Jerusalem, but his history is involved in great obscurity. The fables which bear his name were first published in 1636, and his name is given to a chapter in the Koran.

LOLI, LAURENT, an Ital. painter, 1612-1691.

LOLLARD, or LOLLHARD, WALTER, burnt for supposed heresy at Cologne in 1322. There is little reason to suppose that he was the namefather of the sect of the Lollards, or Lollhards. The probability is, that the term is an old German one, of the same root as our word lull, in the phrase, lull to sleep; and that it was given to those sects in whose religion psalm-singing in a low tone formed a distinguished part. It was thus applied by popish ecclesiastics to a great variety of religious parties on the continent as a term of reproach, and in England, was appropriated to the followers of Wycliffe. [J.E.]

LOLLI, or LOLLY, ANTONIO, a celebrated violinist, was born at Bergama in 1723. From 1762 to 1773 he was concert-master to the duke of Wurtemberg. He afterwards went to Russia, where he became a great favourite with Catherine II. He died, after a lingering illness, at Naples in 1802. [J.M.]

LOLLIANUS, a Roman emperor, killed 267.

LOLLIUS, MARIUS, a Roman consul, 21 B.C.

LOM, JOSSE VAN, a Dut. physician, 1500-1562.

LOMAZZO, J. P., an Ital. painter, abt. 1538-92.

LOMBARD, C. L., a Fr. surgeon, 1741-1811.

LOMBARD, J. G., a Prus. statesm., 1767-1812.

LOMBARD, J. L., a wr. on tactics, 1723-1794.

LOMBARD, L., a Flemish painter, 1482-1565.

LOMBARD, PETER, best known as the author of a book of 'Sentences' collected from the fathers of the church, whose contradictions he endeavoured to reconcile, was a native of Novara, in Lombardy, and died soon after his election to the archbishopric of Paris, 1160. His work acquired a high degree of celebrity in the middle ages, and gave rise to many glosses and expositions by theologians of all classes, which are now out of date. He was also author of some Scripture commentaries.

LOMBARDI, A., an Ital. sculptor, 1487-1536.

LOMBARDO, J., an Ital. sculptor, b. abt. 1510.

LOMBARDO, PIETRO, a Venetian architect and sculptor, who flourished with his sons, ANTHONY and TULLIO, in the 15th century. The nephew and pupil of the latter, SANTO LOMBARDO, distinguished as an architect, 1504-1560.

LOMBART, P., a French engraver, 1612-1682.

LOMBERT, P., a Fr. translator, died abt. 1710.

LOMEIER, J., a Dutch philologist, 1636-1699.

LOMEIR, J., a Dutch prot. divine, 1636-1699.

LOMENIE, ANTHONY DE, secretary of state, and ambassador of Henry IV. to London, died 1638. His son, HENRY AUGUSTUS LOMENIE, Count De Brienne, minister of state, and author of 'Memoirs,' died 1666. The son of the latter, LOUIS HENRY, Count De Brienne, secretary of state under Louis XIV., died insane, 1655-1698.

LOMENIE - DE - BRIENNE, ATHANASIOS LOUIS MARIE, brother of the cel. finance minister, sec. at war in 1787, perished on the scaffold 1794.

LOMENIE-DE-BRIENNE, STEPHEN CHAS. DE, finance minister of Louis XVI., was born at Paris, 1727, and being educated for the church, was first known as an enemy of the protestants.

In 1763 he became archbishop of Toulouse would seem, from the first, to have aspired to part of a Mazarin, or a Richelieu in the state, without possessing either the ability or the unscrupulousness necessary to it. In 1797, after figuring as a commissioner for the reform of the clergy, coquetting with the philosophy of D'Alembert and the encyclopædists, he became a member of the assembly of notables; and having headed a party by whom the administration of Calonne was overthrown, he succeeded that unfortunate administrator, adopted his plans, and proved himself as incapable of executing them. He succeeded, however, in quietly dismissing the notables, then attempted a bold stroke by banishing the parliament of Paris to Troyes, but within a month after was compelled to recall it, and agree to a compromise. In the spring of 1788, he issued a famous edict for altering the constitution of parliament, and establishing the 'grand bailliage' and the 'plenary court,' to do the work which that body had refused, namely, the registration of the king's edicts; and in the execution of this measure was reduced to the necessity of dismissing the parliament with the aid of military force. For about two months he tried to bring his machinery of government into working order, but the parliaments of the provinces everywhere raised their hydra heads to carry on the battle begun at Paris. About this time he was promoted to the archbishopric of Sens, and received a cardinal's hat from Rome, which he returned in 1791, and gained thereby a little fresh popularity. At the end of his two months' despair, July, 1791, he was compelled to announce the convocation of the estates-general for the month of May following. On the 24th of August he retired from ministry, and was succeeded by Necker, but by this time raked together the elements of the wildest conflagration the world ever saw. He was arrested in February, 1794, and died of apoplexy the same night. [L.]

LOMONOSSOFF, M. WASSILIEWITCH, a famous poet and historian, regarded as the father of Russian literature, 1711-1764.

LONDONDERRY. See CASTLEREAGH.

LONG, EDWARD, a West Indian judge, known as a political wr. and hist. of Jamaica, 1734-1801.

LONG, J., an English traveller, last century.

LONG, ROGER, a divine of the Church of England, eminent as a mathematician and astronomer, 1609-1678.

LONG, ST. JOHN, a native of Limerick, who came known in London about the year 1826 as a medical practitioner, and acquired great celebrity by his specific for consumption and for other diseases generally considered incurable by the medical culty. Not being educated for the profession, was twice put on his trial for the death of patients, and on one of these occasions no less than sixty-three persons of the higher classes appeared in his favour. He accumulated a large fortune and died at the early age of thirty-six, in 1831. Three years previously he published 'Discoveries in the Art of Healing.'

LONG, THOMAS, one of the nonjuring divines, author of several learned works connected with the cause to which he belonged, 1621-1700.

LONGBEARD, W., a famous demagogue of the reign of Richard I., cruelly executed 1196.

LONGPIERRE, HILARY BERNARD DE, a French poet, classical critic, and poet, 1659-1721.
 LONGINUS, CASSIUS, a Greek philosopher and rhetorician, born about A.D. 210, put to death by the emperor at Palmyra in 273 A.D. Longinus seems to have been a prolific writer, but no work of his has reached us, except the Treatise on the Sublime. The authorship of this remarkable treatise has been contested; but there is not much doubt that Longinus ought not to be deprived of the merit generally attached to his name: it is a treatise which places him among the most eminent critics of antiquity. Longinus was the friend and teacher of the heroic Zenobia: he fell with her fortunes; and his fate will go down through all history as a stain on her imperial conqueror. One of the most recent and best editions of his celebrated treatise, is by M. Egger, Paris, 1837. The other fragments attributed to the Greek philosopher, are appended. [J.P.N.]

LONGINUS, FLAV., exarch of Italy, 568-584.
 LONGLAND, or LANGLEAND, JOHN, a learned priest, confessor to Henry VIII., 1473-1547.

LONGLAND, or LANGELEND, ROBERT, a disciple of Wickliffe, regarded as the oldest poet in the English language, author of 'The Visions of Piers Plowman,' a satire upon the Roman clergy, and 'The Plowman's Crede,' written in 1369.

LONGMAN, THOMAS NORTON, many years one of the well-known publishing firm of Messrs. Longman & Co., b. 1770, d. of an accident 1842.

LONGOBARDI, N., a Sicilian Jesuit and missionary, auth. of 'Letters from China,' 1655-1655.

LONGMONTANUS, CHRISTIAN, a Danish astronomer, assistant of Tycho Brahe, and professor of mathematics at Copenhagen, 1562-1647.

LONGUERUE, LOUIS DUFOUR, Abbe De, a Frenchman, reputed the greatest scholar of his age, author of 'Antiquities of the Chaldeans and Egyptians,' 'Historical and Geographical Description of France,' 'The Annals of the Arsacides,' &c., 1652-1733.

LONGUEVAL, JAMES, a French Jesuit, and historian of the Gallican church, 1680-1735.

LONGUEVILLE, the name of a noble French family, the principal of whom are—FRANCIS D'ALEANS, son of the celebrated Dunois, died 1544. His son, of the same name, at whose instigation, in 1505, the county of Longueville was created into a dukedom by Louis XII., died 1512.

His brother, LOUIS, a combatant at the battle of Marston, and at Marignano, died 1516. CLAUDE, killed at the siege of Pavia 1525. LEONARD, at the instance the dukes of Longueville were allowed the title of princes of the blood royal by Charles IX., died 1571. HENRY, who commanded against the Leaguers, and in 1589 won the battle of Ivry, died 1595. His son, of the same name, served under Louis the XIII., and was afterwards imprisoned with Condé and Conti, as partizans of the Fronde, died 1663. The wife of the latter, ANNE GENEVIEVE, sister of the great Condé, distinguished for her part in the wars of the Fronde, died in a religious retirement. The last of the family were two sons of Henry and Anne, the eldest of whom died in a convent, 1694; and the second, C. PARIS, was killed at the Rhine, 1672.

LONGUS, a Gr. romance writer, 4th or 5th c.

LONICERUS, JOHN, a learned German editor, 1569. His son, ADAM, a physician and naturalist, 1528-1586. His grandson, JOHN ADAM, a physician and man of letters, born 1557.

LOON, THEOD. VAN, a Flem. painter, 17th c.

LOOS, CORNELIUS, a D. theologian, died 1595.

LOOS, O. H. DE, a wr. on alchemy, 1725-85.

LOOS, P., one of the encyclopaedists, died 1819.

LOOSJES, ADRIAN, a Dutch novelist, last c.

LOPE-DE-RUEDA, a Sp. dramatist, d. 1564.

LOPE DE VEGA, whose full name was LOPE FELIX DE VEGA CARPIO, was born at Madrid in 1562, and died there in 1635. Lope, a man of adventurous disposition, led a very active life till he had attained middle age. After having been secretary to the duke of Alva, he was obliged to conceal himself for a time in consequence of a duel; he served as a soldier, and narrowly escaped shipwreck in the Armada. On the death of his second wife, he took holy orders; but this step, though it removed him from business, did not slacken his literary activity. He was one of the most prolific of all authors, composing with a rapidity which, while it implied extraordinary talents, made it impossible that his works should possess high merit, either in design or in execution. Besides writing epics and many other kinds of poems, he produced a number of dramas, so great as to be almost incredible. He himself states it at upwards of fifteen hundred; and more than five hundred plays attributed to him are actually in print. They embrace all the varieties of kind which are to be found among the works of his successor Calderon; and they abound both in snatches of wit and poetical fancy, and in ingenuity of dramatic invention. Though Lope was not the founder of the Spanish Drama, he was the first who made its romantic irregularities attractive through force and originality of genius. While Cervantes, who was fifteen years his senior, was neglected and starving, the writings of Lope procured for him overflowing wealth, and a popularity such as hardly ever was gained by any other living poet. [W.S.]

LOPES, F., a Portuguese historian, 14th cent.

LOPEZ, ALONZO, a Spanish critic, 16th cent.

LOPEZ, EDWARD, a Spanish navigator, 1578.

LOPEZ, NARCISO, a general in the Spanish army, commander of the late expedition to Cuba, was born in Venezuela 1799, and was first known in the troubles of 1814, as a liberal. He afterwards enlisted in the royalist army, and at the close of the civil war had attained the rank of colonel, being then only twenty-three years of age. Some years subsequently he was in various official employments at Cuba, and in 1849 commenced his revolutionary attempts in the United States. He was garrotted at Havannah, 1st September, 1851.

LORCH, MELCHIOR, a Ger. paint., 1527-1586.

LOREDANO, LEONARDO, doge of Venice during the trying period of the league of Cambray, founder of the famous Council of Ten, reigned 1503-1521. P. LOREDANO, reigned doge 1567-1570. F. LOREDANO, 1752-1762.

LOREDANO, J. F., a Venetian poet, called 'the Elder,' died 1590. 'The Younger,' of the same name, flourished 1606-1661.

LORENZ, J. M., a Fr. juriconsult, 1723-1801.

LORENZI, B., an Italian poet, 1732-1822.

LORENZI, J. B., an Ital. sculptor, 1528-1594.

LORENZINI, A., an Ital. painter, 1665-1740.

LORENZINI, L., an Ital. mathematician, 1652-1721.

LORENZINI, or LAURENTINI, FRANCESCO MARIA, an Italian priest and Jesuit, 1680-1743.

LORET, J., a French poet, died 1665.

LORGNA, A. M., an Ital. geometr., died 1796.

LORIA, or LAURIA, ROGER DE, a famous admiral, born at Loria in Naples in the middle of the 13th century, died 1305.

LORIOT, A. J., a Fr. mechanician, 1716-1782.

LORME, P. DE, a French architect, died 1577.

LORRAIN, CLAUDE, the painter. See CLAUDE.

LORRAIN, ROBT. LE, a Fr. sculpt., 1666-1743.

LORRAINE, CH., cardinal of. See GUISE.

LORRAINE, C. DE, an ecclesiast. wr., d. 1631.

LORRAINE, the CHEVALIER DE, a descendant of the Guises, dist. as a courtier and favourite of the duc D'Orleans, br. of Louis XIV., d. 1702.

LORRAINE, FRANCIS DE. See GUISE.

LORRIS, W. DE, a French poet, 12th century.

LORRY, PAUL CHARLES, a French juriconsult and canonist, 1719-1766. His brother, ANNE CHARLES, a physician and learned wr., 1726-1783.

LORT, MICHAEL, an Eng. divine, 1725-1790.

LOSANA, M., an Italian naturalist, 1758-1833.

LOT, the son of Haran, and nephew of the patriarch Abraham, with whom he travelled to Egypt, and afterwards settled in Canaan; supposed date about 1900 B.C.

LOTEN, JOHN, a Swiss painter, died 1681.

LOTHAIRE. The sovereigns of this name are two emperors—LOTHAIRE I., son of Louis le Débonnaire, and third successor of Charlemagne, born about 795, associated with his father 817, crowned king of Lombardy 820, emperor 840, abdicated, and died soon afterwards, 855. LOTHAIRE II., born 1075, elected emperor on the demise of Henry V., 1127, convoked the famous diet of Magdeburg 1135, died 1137. Two kings of France—LOTHAIRE I., same as the emperor of that name, vanquished by his brothers, Louis and Charles, at the battle of Fontenai, and forced to abandon his pretensions by the treaty of Verdun, 843. LOTHAIRE II., born 941, succeeded 954, died 986. A king of Lorraine, second son of the emperor Lothaire I., who raised him to that dignity 855, died 869. A king of Italy, son of Hugues of Provence, poisoned by Berenger 950. A king of Kent, brother and suc. of Egbert, 673, kd. in battle 685.

LOTI, CARLO, a painter of Munich, 1632-1698.

LOTICH, PETER, a distinguished apostle of Lutheranism, in the county of Hanau, died 1567. His nephew, of the same name, known in Latin as Lotichius, surnamed Secundus, one of the greatest Latin poets of Germany, 1528-1560. CHRISTIAN, brother of the latter, an elegant scholar and poet, died 1568. JOHN PETER, grandson of Christian, a critic, historian, and Latin poet, died 1669.

LOUDON, JOHN CLAUDIUS, a native of Lanarkshire, educated as a landscape gardener, was born 1783, and died 1843. He is author of many valuable and popular works on gardening, agriculture, and architecture, the principal of which are—'Observations on Laying out Public Squares,' 'On Plantations,' 'On Country Residences,' 'On the Formation of Gardens,' and 'Hothouses,' 'Encyclopædians of Gardening and Agriculture,' 'The Gardener's Magazine,' and 'The Magazine of Natural History,' both of which were the first periodicals devoted exclusively to these subjects, 'Encyclopædia of Plants,' 'Hortus Britannicus,'

'Arboretum Britannicum,' &c. Mr. Loudon first cousin to Dr. Claudius Buchanan.

LOUET, G., a French juriconsult, died 1

LOUIS. The German sovereigns of this are—LOUIS LE DEBONNAIRE I., emperor of West and king of France, son of Charlemagne, his second wife, Hildegard, born 778, named of Aquitaine by his father 781, and succeeded as king and emperor 814, died 840. LOUIS (YOUNG) II., son of Lothaire I., born about king of Italy 844, associated with his father empire 849, emperor 855, died 875. LOUIS (BLIND) III., grandson of Louis II., born succeeded his father in the kingdom of Arles crowned emperor at Rome the year after vanquishing Berenger 900, deposed and blinded by Berenger 903, died 923. LOUIS (THE INFANT) born 893, king of Germany 899, successor of father, Arnulf, as emperor 908, died 912. LOUIS V., son of Louis, duke of Bavaria, and Matilda daughter of the emperor Rodolph I., born 1101, chosen emperor by a part of the electors, while others adhered to Frederick, son of Albert, emperor and duke of Austria, 1314; defeated the latter, who then renounced his pretensions, 1317, died 1347.—Besides these in the line of German emperors, history mentions LOUIS THE GERMAN, a third son of Louis le Débonnaire, who revolted against his father 817, beat Lothaire at Fontenai 841, and had a considerable kingdom beyond the Rhine secured to him by the treaty of Verdun 843; d. 876. His son and successor was LOUIS SAXON, killed in battle with the Normans 880.

LOUIS. The kings of France of this name—LOUIS I., same as the emperor Debonnaire.

LOUIS II., born 846, named king of Aquitaine by his father, Charles the Bald, 867, king of France 877, died 879. LOUIS III., eldest son and successor of the preceding, died 882. LOUIS IV., born 920, reigned 936-954. LOUIS V., the last of the Carolingian kings, born 967, succeeded his father, Lothaire, 986, and was poisoned, it is said, at the instigation of Hugh Capet, by his wife, Blanche, 987. LOUIS VI., son of Philip I., Bertha, born 1078, associated in the government with his father 1100, king 1108, died 1137. LOUIS VII., son of the preceding, born 1120, succeeded his father 1137, engaged in a crusade 1147, divorced his wife, Eleanor of Guienne, who soon afterwards married Henry II. of England, 1149, married Constance of Castile 1154, engaged in a war with England 1167-1176, died 1180. LOUIS V. son of Philip Augustus and Elizabeth of Hainaut, born 1187, succeeded his father 1223, died 1226. LOUIS IX., eldest son of the preceding and Blanche of Castile, famous in French history by the name of Saint Louis, born 1215, succeeded his father under the regency of Blanche 1226, embarked for the Holy Land at the head of an army of 60,000 men 1248, returned to France after the death of his mother 1254, undertook a second crusade, died of the pestilence while besieging Tunis 1270. LOUIS X., son of Philip the Fair and Jeanne of Navarre, born 1289, king of Navarre 1304, king of France 1314, died 1316. LOUIS XI., son of Charles VII. and Marie of Anjou, born 1423, married Margaret of Scotland 1436, became leader of a revolt against his father 1440-1442 and 1455; succeeded to the throne 1461, died 1483. LOUIS son of Charles, duke of Orleans, and Mary of Lorraine, born 1462, succeeded to the throne of France, invaded the Milanese in alliance with the Venetians 1499, divided Naples with Ferdinand of Spain. In 1501, joined the league of Cambray against the French, and in 1509, died 1515. This prince was repudiated in 1473 to Jeanne, daughter of Louis XI., and he repudiated, on his accession, in order to marry Anne of Brittany, the widow of his predecessor, Charles VIII. The latter dying in 1514, he married in the year following, some three months before his death, the Princess Mary, sister of Henry VIII. Louis XIII., son of Henry IV. and Marie de Medici, born 1601, succeeded his father under the regency of the queen-mother 1610, and died of age, and convoked the estates-general for the last time before the French revolution, 1614; he married to Anne of Austria 1615, took the famous oath of St. Julien into his counsel 1624. For the events of his policy of his reign see RICHELIEU. Louis XIV., son of Louis XIII. and of Marie Adelaide of Savoy, born 1638, succeeded his great-grandfather, Louis XIII. under the regency of the duke of Orleans, married to Maria Lezinska, daughter of Stanislaus, nominal king of Poland, 1725, war with Prussia in the interest of the latter 1733, defeated at Dettingen in the war occasioned by the treachery to Maria Theresa 1743, peace of Aix-la-Chapelle 1748, war with England concerning the colonies 1755-1763, died 1774.—See LAW, and L. Y. LOUIS XVI., see article below. Louis XV., son of Louis XVI. and Marie Antoinette, born 1755, supposed to have died in the Temple 1795. Louis XVIII., brother of Louis XVI., born 1755, married to Louisia of Savoy 1771, succeeded to Coblenz when the king was arrested at Versailles 1791, assumed the title of king of France and Navarre 1795, restored on the fall of Napoleon 1814, retired to Ghent during the hundred days, and replaced on the throne after the battle of Waterloo 1815, died 1824.

LOUIS XIV., the most magnificent of the Bourbons, and one of those great spirits by whom nations are moved, and the polity of states completely changed, was the son of Louis XIII. and Anne of Austria, and was born after his mother had lamented her sterility for twenty-three years, September, 1638. He succeeded to the throne under the regency of the queen-mother, guided by Cardinal Mazarin, 1643, but did not commence his personal government till the death of the latter, the year after the treaty of the Pyrenees and his marriage with Maria Theresa, which had been stipulated in the articles. The events of this long reign, so to call it, are briefly related under the name of MAZARIN; in this place, therefore, we shall confine ourselves to a summary of the succeeding reign.—I. The external political events of his reign commenced with the exaction of a proper reparation for his government from the court of Rome, 1665. The next event was a brief war with the English, terminated by the peace of Breda, 1667. In 1666 his father-in-law, Philip IV., being dead, Louis claimed Flanders and Franche-Comté as his, and having won them in two campaigns, the possession of the former was secured to him by the treaty of Aix, 1668. Soon afterwards, a quarrel with Holland, and the terror inspired by his successes, provoked a general alliance against him, headed by the prince of Orange, and Louis himself took the field, with the great Condé and Turenne under his orders, 1672. The war continued till 1678, when it was terminated by the treaty of Nimeguen, which, with its almost immediate results, secured great advantages to the French crown. In 1687 Louis was compelled to defend himself against a still more formidable league, occasioned by his revocation of the edict of Nantes, and a long catalogue of wars was concluded by the peace of Ryswick, 1697. During this period he supported the Stuarts, and was obliged by the treaty just mentioned, to acknowledge the prince of Orange as king of Great Britain, under the title of William III. In 1701 the succession of his grandson to the Spanish crown was disputed by the rest of Europe, and a long succession of wars, in which the military genius of Marlborough developed itself, was terminated by the peace of Utrecht, 1713. Louis, though aged and reduced to stand at bay, still retaining vigour enough to save France from the dismemberment threatened by the allies, and to leave to his successor his most valuable conquests.—II. The internal administration of his government in this long period had been marked by the highest magnificence, and conducted to the most splendid results. The favourite motto of Louis, 'L'État, c'est Moi,' was quite as much the expression of a principle as of personal pride, and it meant the extension and consolidation of the state from its own centre, in place of the distraction of government occasioned by the feudal system. He carried this principle into effect immediately after the death of Mazarin, by dispensing with any future prime minister; and the issue of it (besides its results in his political wars) was to humble the noblesse, and raise the talent of the middle classes to places of trust—as in the person of Colbert. His great fault—political as well as moral—was the revocation of the edict of Nantes, 1685, by which Henry IV. had secured the liberties of his protestant subjects. It was the fruits of his religious bigotry excited by prelates who divided the nation between the obscure disputes of the Jansenists and Molinists, and who persuaded Louis that his glory was interested in the preservation of the ancient religion—the more easily that Jansenism opened the door and prepared the way, as became evident even then, for the philosophy of the Revolution.—III. The domestic history of Louis, for the greater part of his life, is far more open to censure than any part of his public conduct. His succession of mistresses, De La Vallière, Montespan, Fontange, and some less known perhaps, exhibits him in the character of a sensualist, and we can only say that he was not an unrepentant one, for, at least, the last twenty years of his life. To Madame de Maintenon, aided by the occasional eloquence of Bossuet, belongs the credit of reforming him in this particular, and the most sceptical of historians have not been able to show that Madame owed her influence to any sacrifice of honour, or that she was not really married to him in 1684, about a year after the death of his queen, Maria Theresa. Apart from all this, Louis XIV. was distinguished by high qualities of heart and mind, and his self-command and moderation in all that pertains to his sovereign character, cannot be doubted. He most completely realized the idea of a monarchy at a period when the habits of thought, and the manners of a people, naturally fickle, and tired of his long reign, were taking a new direction; and if he loved warlike enterprise too much, as indeed he deplored on his death-bed, he also loved France, and did all in his power to develop the resources of commerce, industry, literature, and art, and to discover the efficient instruments of a wise administration. Died 1715. [E.R.]

LOUIS XVI., king of France, was the second son of the prince dauphin, son of Louis XV., and of Maria Josepha of Saxony, daughter of Frederick Augustus, king of Poland. He was born at Versailles, and named Duc de Berri 1754, became dauphin by the death of his father 1765, and was married to Marie Antoinette of Austria 1770. Amiable, irresolute, and timid, he succeeded to the stained and tottering throne of his grandfather when twenty years of age, 1774, and was crowned at Rheims, amidst the enthusiastic applause of his people, June 11, 1775. Apparently, no sovereign ever ascended the throne under happier auspices, but really no European throne ever stood on the verge of a more terrible abyss; the incapacity and corruption of the governing body being already confronted with the philosophic pride and wild vigour of the governed—just awakening to a sense of the 'rights of man.' He commenced his reign happily by promoting many useful reforms, and calling the most upright men to his ministry—among others, Turgot and Malesherbes, but it was soon evident that the resources of the state were utterly disproportionate to its expenditure, and discoveries were continually made which brought the court and the government into contempt. As usual in such cases, one palliative succeeded another, while the root of the evil remained untouched; and when the distresses of the people were expressed in open disaffection, the ancient machinery of government was found insufficient, either as a means of effectuating the will of the people, or of controlling their blind impulses by the imposition of a more enlightened authority. The issue of this was the convocation of the 'notables,' who met twice, under the ministries of Calonne and Lomenie Brienne, 1787 and 1788, and of the 'estates-general,' which assembled at the beginning of May, 1789. This body declared for a 'constitution' as the first necessity of France, and took a solemn and united oath not to separate until they had made it. The real conflict between the people and the court was commenced by this act; the disposition to insurrection acquired a form of legality, and the passions of those who might be capable of leading the populace were fairly unloosed. Mirabeau, Lafayette, Danton, Camille Desmoulins, Robespierre, and Marat, are among the names of such, and may be consulted in this volume. As a first step, the 'third estate,' or plebeians in the 'estates-general,' refused to acknowledge the clergy and the noblesse as separate bodies, and many of these joining them, they assumed the name of a 'national assembly.' Against this body the guards refused to act, and the people, soon enrolled in clubs and in a national militia, surprised the government by storming the Bastille, July 14, and committing some deplorable excesses. The national assembly, presuming on its actual power under these circumstances to make the constitution, call itself 'the constituent assembly,' and promulgated the 'rights of man' as a basis. To the excitement of these occurrences was added the mad effects of a famine in the succeeding autumn; the worst forms of clubbism commenced, Marats, Carriers, Henriots, and Tinvilliers into note. In June, 1790, the king attempted to fly, and was arrested at Varennes,—the meeting to petition for his deposition being dispersed by musketry on his return. On the 1st of September following he accepted the constitution, and on the 1st of October the first biennial meeting, or legislative assembly, met for the transaction of business. The power of 'veto' having been granted to the king, by this new compact, unhappy enough to use it against every important measure proposed by the parliament. In the month of another year his deposition was again agitated, tumultuous processions took place, the palace was invaded, and the king compelled to wear the red bonnet, or cap of liberty. As time wore on, the republicans became thoroughly organized, in August, 1792, the Marseillaise were quarrelling in Paris, the Tuileries besieged, the Swiss massacred, and the royal family imprisoned in the Temple. The party of Danton now occupied the foreground of events, and prepared to assemble a 'national convention,' and resist the threatened invasion of the emigrants and the Germans under the duke of Brunswick. The first act of this convention, which met towards the end of September, was the pronouncement on the fate of Louis XVI., who was declared guilty of a conspiracy against the safety of the state, by 693 votes out of 729. Louis was worthy of death by a majority of 433 to 288. Danton uttered what the nation felt under these circumstances: 'the kings threaten us; we hurl at their feet, and

[The Temple Prison.]

of battle, the head of a king.' For no crime, Louis was guillotined, in pursuance of a judgment, January 21, 1793, displaying to that moment the same singular equanimity of mind as to say insensibility, that had marked his career. In private character he was a man ceptionable virtue—a good husband, and a good master, but, as a king, deficient in every necessary quality except that of well-meaning. [E.R.]

LOUIS PHILIPPE, late king of the French, is the eldest son of the duke of Orleans, brother Louis XVI., and of Marie, daughter of the duke Penthièvre. He was born at Paris 1773, and 1791 was commander of a troop of dragoons under Kellermann, in which capacity he distinguished himself at Valmy and Jemappes. After the execution of his father, (see ORLEANS), Louis Philippe fled to Switzerland, and commenced those romantic wanderings through Europe and America, in which the public mind has been rendered familiar. In 1800 he settled at Twickenham, near London. In 1807 he visited Naples, and two years later was married to Amelia, second daughter of the king, after which he settled at Palermo. On the restoration of the Bourbons to 1830, he resided in France, and in that eventful year was placed on the throne as constitutional king, solely by the influence of Lafayette, who declared his accession 'the best of republics.' Often his sway beneath him, but he preserved his place, with singular astuteness, till 1848, when the republican party suddenly recovered the victory of which they had been defrauded eighteen years before, Louis Philippe became an exile in England. These events are so recent, and the causes of them also universally known that we think it unnecessary to enter into details. Perhaps the history of the citizen king will read nobler in the light of another age, but for the present we can only regard him as the victim of his own cleverness and his royal ambition. He descended to the grave with more respect than his very misfortunes demanded, on the 26th of August, 1850. [E.R.]

[Tomb of Louis Philippe.]

LOUIS, son of Ferdinand, duke of Parma, born 1773, received the crown of Etruria from Buonaparte in exchange for his duchy in 1801, died 1803.
LOUIS, k. of Spain, reigned eight months, 1724.
LOUIS, king of Hungary, called 'the Great,' born 1326, succeeded 1342, elected king of Poland 1382. The second of the name, born 1371, succeeded his father Ladislas, as king of Hungary and Bohemia 1516, drowned himself, after being defeated by the Turks, 1526.

LOUIS, duke of Savoy, reigned 1451-1465.

LOUIS, duke of Anjou, the first of the name, son of John II., king of France, born 1339, maintained a struggle with Charles of Durazzo for the throne of Naples 1380-1382, died 1384. The second of the name, son and successor of the preceding, born 1377, was crowned king of Naples by Clement VII. 1390, and died, after a long struggle with Ladislas, without conquering his kingdom, 1417. The third of the name, son and successor of the preceding, born 1403, died 1434, after a fruitless struggle for the kingdom of Naples with Alphonso, king of Arragon.

LOUIS OF ARRAGON, succeeded his father, Peter II., as king of Sicily, 1342; died 1355.

LOUIS OF TARENTUM, second husband of his cousin, Joan of Naples, was married to that princess in 1347, driven from the kingdom by Louis I. of Hungary, they were recalled by the Neapolitans in 1352, died 1362.

LOUISA, AUGUSTA WILHELMINA AMELIA, queen of Prussia, born 1776, queen 1793, d. 1810.

LOUISA OF LORRAINE, queen of France, born 1554, married to Henry III. 1575, died 1601.

LOUISA MARIE OF FRANCE, the last of the daughters of Louis XV., 1737-1787.

LOUISA OF SAVOY, duchesse d'Angouleme, daughter of Philip, duke of Savoy, born 1476, married to Louis d'Orleans, count of Angouleme, by whom she became mother of Francis I., 1488. Being appointed regent during the expedition of her son to the Milanese, and during his captivity, 1515 and subsequent years, she governed the kingdom with great wisdom, and was respected by all the princes of Europe; died 1532.

LOUISA-ULRICA, queen of Sweden, sister of Frederick II., king of Prussia, born 1720, married to the prince Gustavus Adolphus 1744, became queen mother 1751, died 1782.

LOUREIRO, J. DE, a Portu. botanist, d. 1796.

LOUTH-ALY-KHAN, seventh regent of Persia, and the last of the Zand dynasty, born 1768, defeated and put to death by Aga-Mohammed 1794.

LOUTHERBOURG, PH. J. DE, a painter of Strasburg, distinguished for his battles and hunting pieces, 1740-1812.

LOUVEL, LOUIS PETER, a saddler by trade, who conceived such an intense hatred for the Bourbons that it became a monomania, and caused him to assassinate the duc de Berri, February 13, 1820. This event led to political consequences of great moment; but Louvel declared to the last that he had no accomplices. He was executed the same year, at the age of 37.

LOUVET, PETER, the name of two French historians, the first of whom flourished 1569-1646; the second 1617-1680.

LOUVET-DE-COUVRAY, JEAN BAPTISTE, a Fr. novelist, and mem. of the conven., 1760-97.

LOUVIERS, CH. JAMES DE, a famous defender of the liberties of the Gallican church, councillor of state to Charles V., king of France, 1376.

LOUVILLE, C. A. D'ALLONVILLE, Marquis De, a French diplomatist, time of Philip V., 1668-1731. His brother, JAMES EUGENE, Chevalier de Louville, author of a number of curious treatises on physical and astronomical subjects, 1671-1732, LOUVOIS. See TELLIER.

LOUYS, E., an ecclesiastical writer, died 1682.

LOVAT, SIMON FRASER, Lord, a Scotch nobleman, and partizan of Charles Stuart, b. 1657, and educated in France among the Jesuits. He entered the English army and obtained a captaincy. He joined the stronger party at the period of the rebellion, but concurred secretly in the enterprizes of 1745. He was found guilty and executed, 1747.

LOVE, CHRISTOPHER, a presbyterian minister, and member of the Assembly of Divines, beheaded for conspiring against the republic, 1618-1651.

LOVE, JAMES, son of Mr. Dance, the architect of the Mansion House, known as an actor, d. 1774.

LOVEIRA, VASCO, a Portug. writer, d. 1325.

LOVELACE, RICHARD, a poet and dramatic writer, son of Sir William Lovelace of Norwich, where he was born 1618. He was distinguished by his fidelity to Charles I., in whose interest he expended his whole fortune, and died in poverty, 1658. His poems were published in 2 vols. 8vo, under the title of 'Lucasta.' His plays are 'The Scholar,' a comedy, and 'The Soldier,' a tragedy.

LOVBOND, EDWARD, an English poet, author of 'The Tears of Old May Day,' and an admirable portraiture of Johnson and Garrick in 'The Mulberry Tree,' died on his estate at Hampton 1775.

LOW, G., a Scotch div. and naturalist, 1746-95.

LOWE, LIEUT. - GENERAL SIR HUDSON, K.C.B., guardian of Napoleon at St. Helena, was the son of an officer in the British army, and was born in Galway while his father's regiment was quartered there, 1769. He was brought up to the military profession, and performed his first important services in Corsica at the period of the French revolution, after which, in 1800-1801, he went to Egypt, and fought at the battle of Alexandria. In 1803 he was despatched on a secret mission to Portugal, and subsequently served against the French in Naples, and, when Murat became king, in several important islands of the Mediterranean; the principal of these operations being his defence of Capri, which, however, he was compelled to evacuate. In 1813 he was sent to northern Germany, and, joining the allied Russian and Prussian armies, served under Blücher during the whole of the campaign, and was with him in every action till the surrender of Paris, when he was despatched to England with the news of Napoleon's abdication, and was knighted by the regent. On the return of Napoleon from Elba, Sir Hudson Lowe was attached to the duke of Wellington's army as quarter-master-general, but left it early in June to take the command of the troops at Genoa, destined to act against Marseilles and Toulon. It was during his occupation of the last mentioned place, on the 1st of August, 1815, that he received orders to return home to take charge of the captive emperor; an office which an angel from heaven, as Montholon confessed, could not have fulfilled to the satisfaction of the French. It is a little curious, however, that the complaints of that sensitive people met with a ready sympathy in England, and some of our foremost writers, as Sir Walter Scott, Sir Archibald Alison, and Lord Campbell have echoed their sentiments. On the other hand, the editor of the recently published papers of Sir Hudson Lowe, professes to have established, from a judicial review of the mass of documents confided to him, that no blame attach either to the British government home, or to the governor of St. Helena, as to the treatment of Napoleon. At least, we have a case stated for the first time as it appears in the eye of an impartial lawyer, and the actual materials to decide upon. We are much mistaken, however, if the legal tribunal can be admitted to be the final one in such a cause. Sir Hudson Lowe died at an advanced age, 1844.

LOWE, PETER, a Scotch surgeon, died 1744.

LOWENDAHL, ULRICH FREDERIC WALDEN, Marshal De, a native of Hamburgh, descended from a natural son of Frederick III., king of Denmark, and distinguished as a commander in the service of Austria, France, Poland, and Prussia. He acquired immense repute by his share in the battle of Fontenoy, and the sieges of Flushing and Maastricht, towns, flourished 1700-1755.

LOWER, RICHARD, an eminent physician and anatomist, author of a tractate on the heat of the motion and heat of the blood, in which he treated of the transfusion of the living fluid from the veins of one animal to those of another is treated of. He died about 1631, died 1691. His relative, SIR LIAM LOWER, was a courtier and dramatist in the reign of Charles I., and died 1662.

LOWICZ, JEANNE, Princess De, wife of the grand duke Constantine of Russia, died 1831.

LOWITZ, GEORGE MAURICE, a German nobleman, born 1722, murdered by the hands of an atchee, at the capture of Dmetriefsk, 1774.

LOW, TOBIAS, a chemist and naturalist, 1757-1825.

LOWRY, WILSON, an engraver, 1762-1825.

LOWTH, ROBERT, D.D., a celebrated divine in the Church of England, was born at Bury St. Edmunds, 27th November, 1710. From Winchester he went to Oxford, and having distinguished himself by his literary attainments, was, in 1738, chosen professor of poetry in that university. In 1744 he was appointed rector of Ovington, Hampshire. Resigning that situation, he spent several years on the continent, and on his return was appointed archdeacon of Winchester and rector of East Woodhay. He was well known as a scholar; but it was not till the appearance of his lectures 'On the Sacred Poetry of the Hebrews' in 1753, that he became known as one of the biblical critics of his age. That work procured him a high reputation both at home and abroad, and it still maintains a distinguished place among the works on the literature of the Scriptures. His labours flowed rapidly upon him, for he became successively bishop of Limerick; and leaving that land he was made prebend of Durham; bishop of St. David's in 1766; and bishop of London in 1777. While he discharged with extraordinary diligence the duties of that important see, he continued with the greatest ardour to prosecute his biblical studies, and as the fruit of his unwearied industry, 'Isaiah, a New Translation, with a Preliminary Dissertation and Notes,' contributed to extend his fame. The beauty and elegance of this translation have been long and universally admitted. Bishop Lowth was the author of several minor works, the chief of which are, 'The Elements of William of Wykeham,' and 'The Shorter Catechism of English Grammar.' He died at Fulham palace in 1787, at the age of seventy-six.

LOWTH, SIM., an English divine, au. of 'Strictures on Dr. Gilbert Burnet's Works,' &c., d. 1720.

LOWTH, WILLIAM, father of Bishop Lowth, subject of a preceding notice, and himself a learned divine, author of numerous practical and theological works, born in London 1661, d. 1732.

LOYER, G., a Dominican missionary, d. 1715.

LOYER, PETER LE, Sieur De La Brosse, a French writer of great learning, author of a curious work on Spectres, and one of still greater singularity, entitled 'Edom, or the Idumæan Colonies Europe and Asia,' 1550-1634.

LOYKO, FELIX, a Polish hist., abt. 1750-1800.

LOYOLA, IGNATIUS, or DON INIGO LOPEZ RECALDE, the founder of the order of Jesuits, the youngest son of Don Bertram, and was born 1491, at the castle of Loyola, in the district of Guipuzcoa in Biscay. He was attached in his youth as a page to the court of Ferdinand and Isabella, and trained up in all the vices and frivolities peculiar to his position. When still a young man he entered the army, and during his campaign of Pampeluna in 1521 against the French, he was severely wounded, and a long and tedious convalescence was the result. The invalid, however, amused himself with the Spanish legends of the saints, and other works of a kindred character. His fancy was seized, and in a fit of mystical devotion he renounced the world, made a formal visit to the shrine of the Virgin at Montserrat, and on the 24th day of March, 1522, laid his arms on the altar, and vowed himself her knight. Arrayed in the garb of a pilgrim he then went to Manresa, and devoted himself to deeds of benevolence, which won him great renown. His next resolution was to proceed to the Holy Land, and after ten months' residence at Manresa, he travelled to Barcelona, a pious, begging, sincere, and resolute ascetic, sailed thence for Rome, received the blessing of Pope Adrian VI., and at length reached Jerusalem in September, 1523. After staying but a brief period he returned by Venice and Genoa to Barcelona, where he began in earnest to study Latin at the age of three-and-thirty. At the end of two years, thus in 1526, he removed to Alcalá in order to make himself master of philosophy. His retreat from Barcelona was hastened by the danger he was in of being cured in exposing and attempting to remedy his flagrant disorders in a convent of nuns. His peculiarities of thought and address made him suspected at Alcalá, and the inquisition charged him with witchcraft, warned, threatened, imprisoned, and finally dismissed him. The indomitable student was not to be crushed, but repaired at once to Salamanca, where he met with a similar treatment. Little did those inquisitors dream of the power that slumbered in the strange and self-imposed recluse. Leaving Spain, which could not appreciate his motives, or divine his character, he came to Paris in February, 1528, where he studied in the lowest classes of the university with unassuming humility, begged for his daily sustenance, and occasionally startled his friends by religious exhortations. Several young men admired his unworldly zeal and drew around him, and of the two who were domiciled with him, one was the famous Francis Xavier, afterwards known as the apostle of the East. Their hearts were on fire for the conversion of the world, and they took solemn vows of chastity, poverty, and entire consecration to the church, in the subterranean-chapel of the Abbey of Montmartre. At length, these companions, ten in number, agreed to leave Paris and meet in Venice in January, 1537. As they resolved to go to Jerusalem, they went to Rome to receive the papal blessing and came back to Venice in order to embark. But a war with the Turks frustrated their intentions, and their enthusiasm was in the meantime expended in various forms of effort. Rome naturally became their head-quarters, and Loyola conceived the idea of founding an order to be devoted to the very work in which he and his fellows were so ardently engaged. The nature and plans of the new institution were sketched, and submitted to the pontiff Paul III., who, under certain limitations, confirmed it on 27th September, 1540; but three years afterwards those limitations were withdrawn. Loyola was president of the order, and remained in Rome in order to direct and stimulate its movements. Thus sprung up the order of the Jesuits—the mightiest by far of the kindred institutions of the Church of Rome, and which has more than once shaken the nations of Europe. The order increased with great rapidity; it had a romantic origin and a definite aim. Loyola founded at Rome an asylum for converted Jews, and a penitentiary for reclaimed females. Julius III. in 1550 confirmed the order, and Loyola remained its general till his death on 31st July, 1556. At his death the society consisted of more than 1,000 persons possessing 100 religious houses, and divided for the prosecution of its labours into twelve provinces, reaching from Spain to India and Brazil. Loyola was beatified by Paul V. in 1609, and canonized by Gregory XV. in 1622. His famous 'Spiritual Exercises' were published at Rome in 1548. Many even in his own church deny that he had enough of learning to write this book, or even enough of ingenuity to construct the rules of the order of Jesus, affirming that he was in both respects the instrument of minds more refined and subtle than his own. His was a self-sacrificing fanaticism. His life was a spiritual knighthood—undaunted in the cause which he had espoused. His labours were soon appreciated by the church, and the society of Jesus became a mighty engine before which popes themselves have trembled. Its secrecy has defied investigation, and its unscrupulous means are only surpassed by the devoted spirit of its combined phalanx of agents and associates. Luther and Loyola represent progress and check, march and counter-march, action and reaction in the same epoch of the ecclesiastical world. [J.E.]

LOYSEAU, C., a Fr. juriconsult. 1566-1627.

LOYSEAU, J. S., a Fr. juriconsult, d. 1822.

LOYSON, C., a French publicist, 1791-1820.

LUBBERT, SIBRAND, a learned Dutch divine, and deputy to the synod of Dort, 1556-1620.

LUBERSAE, ABBE DE, a French antiquarian, 1730-1804. His nephew, J. B. JOSEPH, bishop of Chartres, and dep. to the est.-general, 1740-1822.

LUBIENECKI, THEODORE, a Polish artist, 1653-1720. His brother, CHRISTOPHER, a painter, born 1659.

LUBIENIETZKI, STANISLAUS, in Latin, Lubienecius, a famous Socinian of Poland, and historian of the reformation in that country, 1623-75.

LUB

LUBIN, AUG., a Fr. geographer, 1624-1695.
LUBIN, EILHARD, a Ger. philolog., 1565-1621.
LUCA, G. B. DE, a Neapol. cardinal, d. 1683.
LUCA, IGNATIUS DE, an Aust. geogr., 1746-98.
LUCAE, S. C., a Ger. physician, 1787-1821.

[Lucan—From an Ancient Medal.]

LUCAN, the commonly received name of MARCUS ANNAEUS LUCANUS, was born at Cordova (then Corduba) in Spain, 38, son of a Roman knight, who was youngest brother of the famous Seneca. It was his misfortune to find a rival poet in the emperor Nero, and to receive the prize in a public competition with the sovereign, who then forbade him to recite his verses in public. This circumstance, perhaps, added to the general hatred of his crimes, induced Lucan to join a conspiracy formed against him, and the plot being discovered, he is believed to have accused his own mother, in the hope of pardon. If so, Lucan could only have repented of his weakness, when, notwithstanding, he was condemned to die. He chose to have his veins opened and then bled to death, in the twenty-seventh year of his age, 65. The only portion of his compositions that has descended to the present age, is his 'Pharsalia,' an unfinished description of the civil war between Caesar and Pompey. It has been translated into English by May and Rowe, and is much esteemed for the spirit of freedom and morality which it breathes, in numbers of genuine poetry.

LUCAS, CHARLES, an Irish physician, and member of parliament, distinguished in the opposition to government, 1713-1771.

LUCAS, FRANCIS, a Flem. divine, died 1619.

LUCAS, J. A. H., a Fr. naturalist, 1780-1825.

LUCAS, J. J. S., a Fr. commander, 1764-1829.

LUCAS, MARGARET, duchess of Newcastle, a poetical and miscellaneous writer, abt. 1625-1673.

LUCAS, PAUL, a French traveller and antiquarian, auth. of many descriptive works, 1664-1737.

LUCAS, PETER, a French sculptor, 1691-1752. His two sons—FRANCIS, a sculptor, flourished 1736-1813; JEAN PAUL, a painter, died 1808.

LUCAS, VAN LEYDEN. See JACOBS.

LUCCA, B. LA, an Ital. historian, 1236-1327.

LUCCHESINI, GIOVANNI LORENZO, a Jesuit, and ecclesiastical writer in Lucca, about 1638-1710.

LUCCHESINI, GIOVANNI VINCENZO, a learned wr., sec. of briefs under Clement XII., 1660-1744.

LUCCHESINI, GIROLAMO, Marquis De, a native of Lucca, disting. as a man of letters, and

LUC

Prussian minister under Frederick II., 1752-1782.

His brother, CÆSAR, a philologist, 1755-1832.

LUCENA, J. DE, a Portug. Jesuit, 1550-1610.

LUCHI, M. A., an Italian cardinal and poet, 1744-1802. His uncle, BONAVENTURE, theologian, 1700-1785. His brother, LOUIS, learned ecclesiastic and antiquary, 1703-1788.

LUCIAN, the most brilliant and purest Greek writer of the second century; born at Samos in Assyria, on the banks of the Euphrate, lived between A.D. 120 and 200, under Trajan, Hadrian, and the Antonines. His life was extremely varied: he had followed many professions; and mingled with all classes of men, of all various nations. In his youth a sculptor, we find him soon a lawyer—the profession of his predilection—practising at the bar in Syria and Greece. Next a teacher of rhetoric, settled in Gaul, where he collected a large school, and amassed a considerable fortune. Withdrawing from professional life, he sprung up into the Lucian of History, writing incessantly, but at the same time always travelling; he visited Macedonia, Cappadocia, Paphlagonia, and Bithynia, resting for any long interval only in Athens; and he died in England, administering a lucrative office which he owed to the emperor Commodus. A life so varied would have endowed a mind, even of ordinary quickness, with much practical knowledge of mankind, and given an insight into the actual condition of society: so that with Lucian's exquisite command of Greek, and his unextinguishable taste, he could in nowise have failed to rise into one of the best and most enterprising writers of the time. Nevertheless, if the bestowment on him be nothing more than his excellences like these, we shall ill appreciate the character and influence of one of the most formidable pens ever wielded in Antiquity. In keenness of wit, not very unequal to Aristophanes himself, whose talents for popular but significant burlesque he also inherited—Lucian was gifted besides with that boldness, that sense, and sincerity which is insight, belonging only to the greatest minds; and he brought the whole of these rare advantages to the execution of a task, which none is more arduous, and only one noble—the waging of an unrelenting war with every and colour of charlatanerie in his time. Descending among the details of life, he holds up to ridicule and scorn, although mainly to ridicule, the prevalent follies and vices of society in those centuries—the parasite, the waylayer of legacies, the soldiering but vacant bell, the vender of morality: it seems, and multitudes like them, had, even in early days, appeared. But Lucian reveals more and displays greatest courage, in his contest with the widest spread—the most general form of iniquity. The ancient religions were then tottering; and ancient wisdom had shrunk into a witless sham and formality. The vulgar had lost interest into the spiritual sense of the mythologies, and took the stories of the gods in the stupid way, believing them without evidence, more historical, desecrating nothing of their poetical beauty, but dogmatizing well! To this vulgar superstition a large proportion of the dialogue was addressed; and truly they helped to shatter it! Our author wrote yet more earnestly, and de-highest power, when his turn with the philosophers had come. It is grievous to think of it, apparently so it was, that wisdom and morals were then professed by men who knew no wisdom, understood nothing of morals: the dialectic golden-mouthed Plato had passed into sheerest vanity, and the virtues of the Stoics were to be had at so much per head. Could a Society of such men for its wise men, endure long the Earth? If pen could have shamed it, the pen had been Lucian's. But no such salvation was in store: emptiness having once seized philosophy, as pharisaism on a religion—is neither hope nor help for it under the sun! Perhaps Lucian's best dialogue, in scourge of the philosophers, is 'The Angler.'—A function of this—assumed and unflinchingly carried out, indeed boldness indeed; but, sad for the contemporary reputation of the Scornor of Samosata! Εἰς, ἐπὶβάλλει, προσεπιβάλλει,—no quarter to him by whom quarter was never given! But at this extremity of a long interval of time, and in an age like ours, we may descry the sense, believe in patriotism, and even doubt the 'infidelity' of Lucian. The vices he warred with, are none of ours, so that we can afford to be temperate, and make hope to be impartial. The experience of sixteen centuries having discredited superstition, extinguished insincerity—men may now enjoy the wit, and admire the polish, for surely they cannot be offended by the satire of the Dialogues of Dead. [J.P.N.]

CIAN, ST., a presbyter of Antioch, who suffered martyrdom under Diocletian in 312.

CIFER, the schismatic bp. of Cagliari, the bp. of Sardinia, and a saint of Rome, d. 370.

CILIUS, a Roman satirist, 149–103 B.C.

CINI, A. F., an Italian designer, 17th cent.

CIUS, a Greek writer of the second century.

CIUS, the first of the name, pope and saint of Rome, was elected 252, and the next year suffered martyrdom. The second, succeeded 1144, was killed by a blow from a stone in a popular riot 145. The third outlived several popular commanders, and reigned 1181–1185.

CIUS, J., historian of Dalmatia, died 1684.

CKNER, N., a marshal of France, 1722–94.

LUCRETIA, one of the noblest names in Roman history, was the wife of Collatinus, a near relation of Tarquin the Proud, king of Rome. The story, as related by Livy, is to the effect that Sextus Tarquinius, the king's eldest son, was inflamed with a passion for her, moved by her extraordinary beauty; and becoming a guest at her house during the absence of Collatinus, succeeded in dispossessing her person. Entering her chamber in the night with a drawn sword, and finding himself sorely repulsed, he threatened to slay her, and flung the body of a slave in her bed, to make it appear that he had killed them both in the act of adultery. The dread of being thought so infamous added to Lucretia's yield, but with a resolve that the honour of her husband and her own innocence should be avenged. She summoned her father and her husband from the camp, who came accompanied by their kinsmen, Valerius Publicola and Brutus, and having recounted the events of the night, she suddenly stabbed herself to the heart with a concealed dagger. The bloody poniard was snatched from the wound by Brutus, and the witnesses of this sad tragedy swore by the 'once pure blood' of Lucretia, not to rest till they had expelled the Tarquins from Rome. This event, which occurred B.C. 509, was the signal of Roman freedom, the kingly government being abolished, and a republic established by the conspirators, of whom Junius Brutus became chief. Poets and artists have vied with each other in celebrating the heroism of Lucretia, and her name, like that of Penelope, has furnished the most significant expression for all that is noble and chaste in the female character. [E.R.]

[Lucretius—From an Antique Gem.]

LUCRETIUS, the commonly received name of TITUS LUCRETIVS CARUS, an eminent philosopher and poet, born at Rome about 96 B.C., and said to have died by his own hand in the forty-fourth year of his age, about 52. He is admitted to be one of the greatest of Roman poets for descriptive beauty and elevated sentiment, while his philosophy is subject to the errors inevitable to the state of science at that time. His poem, which is entitled 'De Rerum Natura,' embodies accurately the Epicurean doctrine on the nature of things, and was first published in 1486. It has been translated into English by Creech and Mason Good.

LUCULLUS, LUCIUS LICINIUS, a naval and military commander of Rome, born about B.C. 115, and distinguished in the war with Mithridates from the time of Sylla to B.C. 66, when he was supplanted by Pompey. He lived about twenty years longer, in an elegant retirement on the coast of Campania, and his costly habits have rendered his name a bye-word for all that is luxurious and extravagantly refined in taste. He was at the same time a great master of literature, and his house was enriched with a valuable library and works of art, which were opened to the curious and the learned, among whom was his friend Cicero.

LUDEKE, C. W., a Prussian savant, 1787–1805.

LUDEWIG, J. P. DE, a Ger. jurist, 1668–1743.

LUDICAN, a king of Mercia, 823–825.

LUDIUS, a Roman painter, age of Augustus.

LUDLOW, EDMUND, one of the principal chiefs of the republican party in England during the civil war, born about 1620, distinguished at the battle of Edgehill 1642, successor of Ireton in the government of Ireland 1650, died in exile 1693. Ludlow is the author of curious and valuable 'Memoirs,' published 1698.

LUDOLPH, JOB, a German Orientalist, distinguished for his researches in Ethiopian history and the Ethiopic dialects, 1624-1704. His two nephews—HENRY WILLIAM, distinguished as a Greek and Russian scholar, 1655-1710; and JOB, as a mathematician, 1649-1711. The son of the latter, JEROME LUDOLPH, a physician, 1677-1728.

LUDOLPH, an ascetic writer, about 1300-1370.

LUDOVICUS, or LUDWIG, GODFREY, a philologist and literary savant of Prussia, 1670-1724.

LUDOVICUS, C. GUNTHER, a professor of Leipzig, author of a 'Plan for a History of the Philosophy of Wolf,' and 'of Leibnitz,' 1707-1778.

LUDWIG, C. F., a phys. of Leipzig, 1757-1823.

LUDWIG, C. T., a Germ. botanist, 1709-1773.

LUGO, JOHN DE, a Spanish cardinal and theologian, 1583-1660. His brother, FRANCIS, a Jesuit and theologian, 1580-1652.

LUINI, BERNARDIN, an Ital. painter, 16th ct.

LUKE, the evangelist, said to have been a Jewish proselyte, converted by the preaching of Paul, and a physician by profession, was a native of Antioch, and probably wrote his gospel, as well as the Acts of the Apostles, while a prisoner in Rome A.D. 63. He was a companion of Paul in many of his journeys, and is understood to have been acquainted with the family of Mary, and even to have seen the Saviour in his youth. He died at the age of eighty-four, and was never married.

LULLI, ANTHONY, a Fr. grammarian, d. 1582.

LULLY, JEAN BAPTISTE, born at Florence in 1634, showed such a remarkable taste for music that a corderly, from no other consideration than the hope of his some time becoming eminent in art, undertook to teach him the guitar. While under the care of his kind guitar master he attracted the attention of the Chevalier Guise, a French gentleman, who took him at ten years of age to Paris, to be page to the Mde. de Montpensier, niece of Louis XIV. While in this menial capacity he used to spend his leisure time in practising upon an old violin, and his taste in music having reached the ear of the princess, she immediately procured a master to teach him the violin, and in the course of a few months he was elevated to the rank of a court musician, and afterwards admitted into the king's band, which was styled the 'Les Petits Violons,' of which corps he soon afterwards became the head. From this time Lully's fame as a performer and composer was fully established and recognized. At this time one who could read music at sight was esteemed as a great musician, and not one-half of those then living in France were so far accomplished as to be able to play an accompaniment on the harpsichord or theorbo to the exercises of the scholars. Lully in this respect contributed greatly to the progress of musical science, and in his compositions introduced many of the improvements which have since become inseparable from compositions of the slightest kind. In the year 1686 the king having recovered from a serious indisposition which threatened his life, Lully was required to compose a Te Deum. Accordingly he wrote one, which was as remarkable for its excellence as it was for an unhappy accident which befel the composer during its performance, which he conducted. In the midst of one of the movements of this work, Lully struck his foot with the with which he was beating time. This caused considerable inflammation, and the injury was untractable that his physician advised him to his little toe cut off; and, after a delay of days his foot; and at length the whole limb, this juncture an empiric offered to effect a without amputation. Two thousand pistoles to be his guerdon if he succeeded; but, as have been expected, Lully became one more to the popular faith in quackery. He died 1687, and was interred in the church of the Dilect Augustines, at Paris, where an elegant tomb was erected to his memory. Lully's now chiefly rests on his overtures, a special composition of which he is said to have been inventor. He wrote several operas, motets, other compositions for the church, besides a number of symphonies in three parts for violins. He had two sons, LOUIS and JEAN, also musicians. They in conjunction composed the music to an opera named 'Zephire et Flore,' which was formed at the Academie Royale in 1688. [J.]

LULLY, RAYMOND, a great theologian, philosopher of the middle ages, was of Catalan descent, and was born at Palma, the capital of Majorca, 1235. He commenced life as a courtier and man of pleasure, but was converted about thirty years of age to the religion of Christ, chiefly by the exhortations of a married lady whom he had professed the most ardent devotee. For about ten years, 1265-1275, he lived more in a solitary place, and became the subject of remarkable ecstasies and visions—the end being that his prayers for wisdom to convert the heathen were answered, he says, by a singular illumination of his mind, in which the principles of truth became manifest to him. In this light, with the aid of his investigations in Arabian philosophy, he conceived a new system of dialectic, which he consulted in his 'Ars Generalis Ultima,' published 1480; the 'Ars Brevis,' published 1481, and the 'Arbor Scientiae,' 1482. The first of these (of which the second is an abridged method) proposes a universal art, or science of sciences, the principles of which all others are supposed to be comprehended, and by the aid of which all sciences maintained they could all be demonstrated. 'Arbor Scientiae,' or tree of knowledge, contains a demonstration of the love of God and the neighbour, traced from its root to its fruit. It is possible to enumerate all his works, but the general object is to demonstrate by an infallible method, all the primary truths of religion, including the existence and life of Christ, and to embrace in their scope, the physical and metaphysical sciences; and, as a necessary consequence, the doctrines of the alchemists, who claim Raymond Lully as one of their greatest masters. His practical means to attain the end of his life were large in their scope as his system of logic; and he embodied them in three proposals, which he presented upon the pope and Philip the Fair, making two journeys to effect his purpose. These were—1. That all the existing military orders should be founded into one body. 2. That the works and schools of the philosopher Averroes, should be absolutely suppressed. 3. That monasteries should be all parts of the world, to instruct in strange languages and in the new dialectic, such as could enter into vows for the conversion of infidels. It must be admitted that this was a magnificent political design, and there is nothing in history to compare with it, except the achievements of Loyola. Raymond Lully, disappointed, after most indefatigable efforts to procure the adoption of his system, embarked for Turin, to commence his apostleship single-handed, and there, it is believed, he found the death of a martyr, 1315. His works acquired great celebrity, and were often printed in the 16th century. The best of his logists is the French priest Ant. Perroquet. He ridicules his pretensions, and calls him an ignorant friar, but without exhibiting any apprehension of what he really teaches. [E.R.]

UMAGNE, MARIE DE, religious founder of the order of 'Filles de la Providence,' 1599-1657.

UMSIDEN, A., a Scotch antiquar., 1720-1801.

UMSDEN, M., a Scotch Oriental., 1777-1835.

UNARDI, V., an Italian aeronaut, 1759-1799.

UND, L., a Swedish jurisconsult, 1638-1715.

UNEAU DE BOISJERMAIN, PETER JOS.

URCIS, a miscellaneous writer, author of a 'Commentary on Racine,' a 'Course of History Geography,' &c., 1732-1801.

UNIG, J. C., a German compiler, 1662-1740.

UPSET, TH., an English scholar and translator to Richard Pace, when ambas., 1498-1532.

UPTON, D., an Eng. biographer, 17th cent.

UPTON, W., an English divine, d. abt. 1726.

UPUS, or WOLFIUS, CHRISTIAN, a monk of St. Augustine, known as a canonist and theologian, 1612-1681.

PUS, SERVATUS, a Fr. theologian, 9th cent.

URBE, G. DE, a French antiquarian, d. 1613.

URINGTON, W., an Eng. statesman, d. 1813.

SIGNAN, G. DE, a Fr. crusader, died 1194.

SSAN, MARGARET DE, a French novelist of considerable genius, author of a great number of historical romances, 1682-1758.

UTHER, the great German reformer, was born at Eisleben, 10th November, 1483. As he was born on St. Martin's Eve, and baptized the same day, he received his Christian name of Martin. His father, who was a poor miner, left Eislebenor Mansfeld, when the infant Martin was only six months old. Here the hardy labourer was reared, as to have at length two blast-furnaces of his own, and to be thus enabled by a benevolent Providence, to give his son a good education. After getting such tuition as the place of partial residence could afford, Martin was sent at the age of fourteen to school at Magdeburg, where the poverty forced him, with other boys, to travel through the neighbouring villages and to sing hymns

as means of procuring a supply of victuals. Returning the next year to Isenach, he was pressed by various difficulties, and compelled to a similar mode of relief, till a benevolent family took him under their roof. His father was anxious that his son should study law, and Martin entered the university of Erfurt in 1501. The fashionable scholastic philosophy occupied him here for a series of years, and the whole university admired his genius. During the second year of his studies at Erfurt, being a laborious reader, and in the habit of racking the college library and devouring its volumes, he found a copy of the Latin Bible, a book he had never seen before, and which on his reading it, stirred up strange and rapturous sensations within him. Not long afterwards his severe studies produced an alarming illness, which brought him face to face with death, and created serious and permanent religious impressions, which were so deepened by the death of a very intimate friend and fellow-student by a stroke of lightning, that he at once resolved to become a monk, and leaving all his property behind him, but a Virgil and Plautus, and giving his astonished friends a hearty farewell banquet, he entered the monastery of the hermits of St. Augustine. Here the ambitious scholar soon felt the crushing despotism of those monkish brothers, for he was forced to do the most menial and disgusting offices, and the master of arts was made a servant of all work—sweeper, porter, and beggar, for the lazy drones who buzzed in the convent. Still, he did not neglect his studies, and he strove earnestly all the while to obtain that spiritual peace and sanctity which he had imagined must be easily found in a religious establishment. Alas! he watched, fasted, prayed, read, and did penance on himself in vain. His melancholy could not be relieved by such ghostly mechanism. His was not a mind to be cheated into quiet by monastic routine, or degraded and hushed by morbid asceticism. But the conversations of Staupitz, his vicar-general, at length led the young Augustinian to feel the freedom and peace of the gospel, and he was ordained to the priesthood, and celebrated his first mass, in his twenty-fourth year. By the influence of Staupitz, Luther was in 1508 called by Frederick, elector of Saxony, to be a professor of philosophy in the university of Wittenberg. Here in a short time he taught also biblical theology, and obtained more internal serenity, and a deeper view of the Divine plan of redemption. He began to preach too with that vigour, impetuosity, and eloquence which soon attracted immense crowds. About 1510 he was sent to Rome on ecclesiastical business, and his mind received a terrible shock by what he witnessed of the idleness, profanity, and sensuality of the Romish clergy and laity, and the grief and indignation he experienced during this visit to the city of the pope, caused the veil to fall from his eyes. On returning from the Italian metropolis, he was, in 1512, made doctor of divinity, and he continued to preach boldly, attacking the scholastic philosophy, and basing his arguments more and more on the Holy Scriptures. The court of Rome, to supply its luxuries, and aid in building St. Peter's, had commissioned indulgences to be sold in Germany. The traffic was carried on with the utmost effrontery, and under a regular tariff, and Tetzel was a fit instrument for the nefarious commerce in the souls of men. Some of the people of Wittenberg, who had confessed to Luther, refused to abandon their sins, and pleaded the indulgences which they had bought. The spirit of Luther was fired—the spark was laid to the train which ended in so mighty an explosion. He preached and remonstrated, and on the 31st October, 1517, nailed to the door of the castle church his ninety-five theses, and sent a copy of them to the archbishop of Magdeburg. The consequent discussions with Tetzel at Wittenberg, and his debates upon the same subject at Heidelberg, only increased and deepened the agitation, and added to Luther's popularity. By and bye he was summoned to appear and answer at Augsburg before the papal legate, Cardinal Cajetan. At the several interviews he stood firm and resolved, and the friar Martin returned in triumph to his cell and his lecture-room. The excitement was now so prodigious that the courteous Elector wished him to leave the city—the idea of a capital penalty for him was loudly talked of, and the unquailing Luther at last appealed from the pope to a general council. But Militz, another legate, was appointed, and at a meeting which took place at Altenburg in 1519, Luther was so far cajoled as to write an humble and apologetic letter to Leo. The letter was unheeded—the reformer became more and more alive to the errors of the church—the disputation with Eckius still forced him onwards, and, being too honest to conceal his convictions, he took advantage of the press, and his works found a wondrous and immediate circulation. Rome became seriously alarmed, and Leo at length issued a bull of excommunication, which Luther publicly and contemptuously burnt before an immense assembly at Wittenberg. The German mind was thoroughly roused, and prepared to throw off the yoke of Rome. Luther's separation from Rome was now complete. Leo urged the new emperor, Charles V., to apprehend and punish the turbulent and daring heretic, but by the influence of the elector of Saxony, the reformer's cause was tried at Worms. On his way to Worms, Spalatin, apprehensive for his safety, despatched a messenger to forewarn and dissuade him from continuing his journey, but the magnanimous champion replied, 'Go tell your master, that though there were as many devils in Worms as tiles upon the house-tops, I will enter it.' On the 16th of April he reached this city, attired in his friar's cowl; multitudes met him, and he entered it attended by 2,000 persons. Before his 204 august judges, the emperor and his nobility, his courage did not fail, for clearly and fully did he vindicate his past procedure, and he steadily appealed to the authority of Scripture. The result was, that Charles issued a rescript 'against the evil fiend in human form,' 'the fool,' and 'the blasphemer,' and put him under the ban of the empire. Luther had already left the town, pursuing the road that took him to Mora, that he might see his aged grandmother. He resumed his journey the next day, but as he passed through the depths of the Thuringian forest he was roughly seized by five horsemen, and carried to the castle of Wartburg, and a whole year he lay there in solitude, while his friends mourned his absence or death. But his powerful patrons had in this way provided for his safety. This period of forced retirement was not mis-spent, and though he had to wrestle with morbid and nervous sensations, produced by his confinement and sedentary life, he translated the New Testament into German, which was published in 1522. Leaving his Patmos, and returning to Wittenberg, his undaunted energy carried all before it, the reformation was ushered in, and in 1524 Luther abandoned the monastic dress—the last symbol of his connection with Rome. He crushed his fanatical opponents, who did more injury to his cause than his papal adversaries, gallantly entered the lists with Henry VIII. of England, and fought stoutly with Erasmus of Freedom of the Will. In 1525, he was married to Catherine von Bora, who had left her convent about two years before, and 'his

[Luther's Chamber at Wittenberg]

and lovely Ketha' proved a kind and affectionate wife to him. The labours of Luther were a period incessant, for the care of all the churches was upon him, and many of the states of Germany embraced his doctrines. From 1517 to 1525, every year saw him publish a book or books against some form of papal error. The anabaptists were a sad thorn in his side, and by their wretched excesses brought great scandal upon his work. The translation of the Bible occupied a large portion of his time, for it was the mainstay of the reformation; and commentaries on almost all the books of the Bible proceeded from his unwearied pen. Councils were in those days reckoned a grand office for healing ecclesiastical discord, and were not a few in the life of Luther: Worms, 1521, Nuremberg in 1522-23, when the German princes presented a list of 'a hundred grievances' and another at the same place in the following year, at which the members resolved to work out as possible the decisions of that of Worms. That of Augsburg in 1525, adjourned to Spirach, 1526, at which a general council was demanded. Another diet was convoked to meet in February, 1529, and the imperial and popish party having refused, decreed to suppress the reformation by force. Against this bloody decree the diet solemnly protested, and the reforming band received from this circumstance the appropriate name of Protestants. Luther and Zwingli quarrelled about the nature of the Lord's Supper, and maintained a worse than idle contest, met personally for disputation at Marburg. The diet of Augsburg met in 1530, the confession prepared by Melancthon was submitted to it, and protestantism, in spite of all obstacles, was firmly established among the German nations. Many interruptions and incessant labours, continued at Wittenberg during his remaining years. In his sixty-second year his health began to give way—the strong man was bowed down. After an altercation with the lawyers about destine marriages and certain female fashions of dress, he indignantly left Wittenberg for El the month of January, 1546. The river Issel had swollen, he was five days upon the road. On the 17th of February he complained of oppressive pain in his chest. Momentary relief from it was so obtained; but he was again attacked in the night, and after brief but earnest religious exercises, and thrice repeating the inspired words, 'Into thy hands I commit my spirit—God of truth thou hast redeemed me,' he expired between two and three o'clock in the morning. His disease is supposed to have been angina pectoris, but some say, ulcer in the stomach. On the 19th his body was closed in a leaden coffin and carried into the church where it was removed for burial, and on the 22nd the hearse arrived at Wittenberg, where the whole city stood around the gates in deepest sorrow and lamentation. Luther was buried in the Stoss-kirche, and many a traveller has read the simple inscription that still stands over his tomb. No one will deny that Luther was one of the great men of the world. He had an earnest and honest nature—stranger alike to cowardice and dissimulation. Whatever he did, he did with his might. That he sometimes spoke roughly and wrote harshly, no one knew better than himself.—'I was born,' said he, 'fight with devils and storms, and hence it is that my writings are so boisterous and stormy.' It required a leonine temperament to do the work of Martin Luther. Yet he was a man of a loving and generous heart—playful and happy with his wife and family or friends. He liked hilarity, and his great mind rejoiced to unbend. Intellect and passion were alike powerful within him, for with all his clearness of reason and conscientious decision he was often swayed by impulse. In those moments he uttered or wrote those expressions, which have so often the semblance of inconsistent paradoxes. So much was he formed to lead opinion that he could not easily bear contradiction. His humour was incredible, as his remaining works attest. Luther had great natural capabilities for music, and he had sedulously studied its theory. He wrote very many hymns and set them to music. In 1523 he published his first hymn with music in a single sheet; the next year he wrote seventeen with a similar accompaniment, and in other subsequent years his muse was not idle. Forty-two original tunes were composed by himself and his associates. But amidst all his literary labours, his translation of the Scriptures stands pre-eminent. Fully aware of the difficult and responsible task, he received assistance in every form and from every available quarter. When the Hebrew terms belonging to botany and zoology perplexed him, he consulted the physician Sturciad, and he also obtained useful information from his friend Spalatin, who not only instructed him in natural history, but sent him specimens from the superb collection of which his family belonged to the elector of Saxony. He even employed butchers to dissect animals in his presence, that he might be able to discriminate and render accurately the various sacrificial terms of the Levitical code. But especially did he consult erudite and skilled professors of theology to aid him. They met from time to time, each having prepared himself for the interview by a thorough elaboration of the literary materials belonging to his department of investigation. At those repeated and prolonged consultations, Luther invariably presided, and he had always spread out before him, his own manuscript, the ink of which was scarcely dry, the Hebrew Bible, and the Latin Vulgate. On his one hand sat Melancthon, with the Greek Scriptures before him, and on his other was placed Casper Cruciger, with his notes made from the Chaldee Targums. Bugenhagen, usually called Pomeranus, from the country of his birth, was also by their side, ready with his suggestions from the rabbinical writings and the old Greek versions. These scholars did their work with marvellous precision and fidelity, for they sometimes returned fourteen successive days to the reconsideration of a doubtful clause or word.—In short, Martin Luther was one of the few men whom Providence occasionally endows, prepares, and raises up for gigantic enterprise. He lived to see his work of religious emancipation immovably rooted among the German nations—the work of one man and one age. He sowed the seed in tears, but he saw the harvest gathered with joy. Luther was a man of a compact physical frame, with broad shoulders, a large and massive brow, and a firm set mouth. His works have been often reprinted. The best edition of his correspondence is that of De Wette, Berlin, 1825-28, 5 vols. 8vo. His Table Talk, all of which is not authentic, is one of the foundations of his Memoires by Michelet, Paris, 1837. A good edition of his works was published at Halle, in 24 volumes, 1737-53, and another edition, in 12mo, is in course of publication at Erlangen, 1826-53; 51 volumes have already appeared, and the whole is to occupy 60 volumes. There are many separate lives of the reformer, among which may be enumerated those of Pfizer, Meurer, Jürgen, König, Weydmann, and Wildenhahn. [J.E.]

LUTI, or LUTTI, B., a Ital. artist, 1666-1724.

LUTMA, J., a Dutch engraver, 1609-1685.

LUTTERELL, H., an Irish engraver, b. 1650.

LUXDORF, B. W., a Danish savant, 1716-88.

LUXEMBOURG, FRANCIS HENRY DE MONTMORENCI BOUTEVILLE, Duc De, one of the greatest generals of the age of Louis XIV., was a posthumous son of the count de Bouteville, and a pupil in war of the great Condé. He was constantly opposed to William III., and was successful against him in the battle of Nerwinde 1695, when 20,000 men were left on the field. Born 1628, commander-in-chief in Holland 1672, marshal 1675, died 1695. One of his sons, CHRISTIAN LOUIS, served in the Austrian war of succession, 1675-1746. The nephew of the latter, C. F. FREDERIC, was also a French marshal, 1702-1764. His wife, MADELEINE, widow of the duke de Boufflers, was celebrated at the court of Louis XV., 1707-1787.

LUYKEN, JOHN, a Dutch engraver, 1649-1712. His son and pupil, N. GASPARD, d. before him, 1660.

LUYNES, CHARLES D'ALBERT, Duc De, descended from a noble Florentine family named Alberti, who established themselves in France in 1413, was born at Pont St. Esprit 1578, and was godson of Henry IV. In the reign of Louis XIII. he became prime minister, and at length constable of France; died 1621. His son, LOUIS CHARLES, an ascetic writer, and one of the Port-Royal savants, author of many works published under the name of 'Laval,' flourished 1620-1690.

LUZAN, IGNATIUS, a Spanish poet, 1695-1754.

LUZZATTO, S., a Venetian rabbi, 17th cent.

LYCON, a Greek philosopher, 4th cent. B.C.
LYCOPHRON, a Greek poet, 2d century B.C.

[Lycurgus—From an Ancient Statue]

LYCURGUS, the great legislator of the Lacedæmonians, was the son of Eunomus, king of Sparta. His history commences with the year 898 B.C., when he might have usurped the throne on the death of his brother, but preferring to guard the kingdom for the unborn child of the latter, he devoted himself to the study of legislation. On his nephew becoming of age, Lycurgus travelled into Crete, Egypt, and Asia, and thus prepared himself to give Sparta the laws which have rendered his name immortal. His object was to regulate the manners as well as the government, and to form a warrior nation, in which no private interest should prevail over the public good. It is said that Lycurgus persuaded the Spartans to swear that they would observe these laws till his return from another journey, and that he then departed, and they never heard of him more. One account states that he starved himself to death, but it is more probable that he retired to private life, and died naturally, as Lucian records, at the age of eighty-five. [E.R.]

LYCURGUS, an Athenian orator and political functionary, about 408-325 B.C.

LYDGATE, JOHN, an old English poet, who flourished soon after the time of Chaucer, and is known to have been living in the middle of the 15th century. His history is very obscure, but he was a monk of Bury St. Edmunds, and was ordained a priest 1397. His principal works are 'The Siege of Troy,' 'Story of Thebes,' and 'The Fall of Princes.'

LYDIAT, THOMAS, an English divine, distinguished as a chronologist and mathematician, 1572-1649.

LYDIUS, B. L., a German protestant divine, established at Dort as a refugee in 1603, died 1629. His son, JAMES, a divine and critic, was also a minister at Dort, dates unknown.

LYE, EDWARD, an antiquarian savant, au. of an 'Anglo-Saxon and Gothic Dict.,' &c., 1704-69.

LYELL, CHARLES, father of the well-known geologist, a Scotchman, disting. as a discoverer in botany, and translator of Dante, 1767-1849.

LYFORD, WILLIAM, a wr. of practical divinity, rector of Sherborne, in Dorsetshire, 1598-1653.

LYNAR, ROCH FREDERIC, Count De, a statesman and scholar, author of political works and travels, 1708-1781. His son, C. GOTT, disting. as a publicist and ascetic writer, 1741-1801.

LYNCH, J., an Irish polemic, died about 1741.

LYNDE, SIR HUMPHREY, an English minister, known as a writer in favour of protestantism, 1579-1636.

LYNDSAY, SIR DAVID, one of the most famous of the old Scottish poets, was probably born in or soon after the year 1490. He is usually described as 'of the Mount,' which was his paternal estate in Fifeshire. He received instruction at the university of St. Andrews; and, in 1512, he may have been a little above twenty years of age, when he was placed about the person of the new prince, who afterwards became James V. of Scotland. He first appeared, both as a public servant and as an author, in 1528, when the young king threw off his subjection to the Douglases. In the next year he was appointed Lyon-king-at-arms, and he was employed afterwards on embassies and other charges, both before and after the death of his royal patron. He sided with the Reformers to the extent, at any rate, of desiring and promoting purification of ecclesiastical polity and discipline; but he never figured very prominently in the fierce quarrels of his time, and spent his last years so quietly that it is not known when he died. He can be traced positively till 1558. His poetical works have nothing of high or fine poetic inspiration; but they abound in practical sense and sagacity, show great observation of society and manners, and are written with remarkable force of language, and tremendous strength of sarcasm and satirical invective. The most interesting of them is his 'Satire of the Three Estates,' a huge dramatic piece, hovering between the grotesque moralities, and those more modern plays, in which individual personages were introduced. 'Monarchy, a Dialogue between Experience and Courtier,' is his largest composition, but heavy; and his 'Squire Meldrum' is an indifferent attempt at poetizing the adventures of a contemporary. The most successful of his attempts, besides many passages of his play, are small pieces of satire on the court, on politicians, and on churchmen; and chief of these are his early productions, 'The Dream,' and the 'Complaint of the Papingo.'

LYNDWODE, or LINDWOOD, WILLIAM, ecclesiastical lawyer and statesman, in the reign of Henry VI., and bishop of St. David's, d. 1441.

LYNEDOCH, THOMAS GRAHAM, Lord, a native of Perthshire, who greatly distinguished himself as an officer of the British army during late wars, born 1750, died, governor of Dumfries castle, 1843.

LYON, GEORGE FRANCIS, a famous Arctic traveller, and advent. in the arctic seas, 1795-1811.

LYON, J., an English physician, 1734-1811.

LYONNET, P., a Ger. naturalist, 1707-1781.

LYONNET, R., a medical writer, 17th cent.

LYONS, ISRAEL, son of a Polish Jew, distinguished as an astronomer, mathematician, and botanist, 1739-1775.

LYRA, NICHOLAS DE, in Latin Lyranus, Scripture commentator of Normandy, died 1341.

LYS, the name of several painters.—1. J.

DER LYS, a Dutch genre painter, born at 1600. 2. JOHN LYS, flourished at Olden-1570-1629. 3. DU LYS, of the family of Darc, called Nicoletto by the Italians, died 1732.

SANDER, a Lacedæmonian general, who put an end to the Peloponnesian war by his victory over the Athenians 405 B.C. He established the 'tyrants' at Athens, and was killed in a battle with the Thebans 395.

SCHANDER, or LYSCANDER, JOHN, a Dutch antiquarian, died 1582. His brother, CL.

OSTOPHERSON, an historian, 1557-1623.

SERUS, POLYCARP, a Lutheran divine of many, 1552-1601. JOHN, of the same family, died on polygamy died 1684.

SIAS, a famous orator of Athens, 4th c. B.C.

SIAS, a general of Antiochus Epiphanes, of Syria, vanquished by Judas Maccabæus.

SIMACHUS, one of Alexander's lieutenants, who became master of Thrace on the division of the conquests, and was killed B.C. 282.

SIPPUS, a Greek sculptor, lived B.C. 350.

SIS, a Pythagorean philosopher, B.C. 388.

SISTRATUS, a Greek sculptor, 4th c. B.C.

SONS, DANIEL, an English physician and medical writer, died 1800. His son, SAMUEL, a writer on topography and the Roman antiquities of Great Britain, appointed keeper of the records in the Tower, 1763-1819.

TE, HENRY, an English botanist, 1529-1607.

TITTLETON, GEORGE LORD, an author and statesman, was born in January, 1709, at Hagley, in Worcestershire, the seat of his father, to whose life and baronetcy he was heir. He showed from his life the same qualities which he afterwards displayed,—fluency of diction, and justness of judgment. He never rose above an easy mediocrity either in literature or statesmanship, but his popular amiable manners, his thorough chivalrous liberality of sentiment, and his good moral principles, justly made him an object of affectionate admiration among the men of genius of the age, and he thus occupies a more conspicuous position than his talents alone could have achieved. He is ranked among the converts from infidelity, but his religion did not become fanatical, and it may be questioned if it displaced anything beyond a dissatisfied partial scepticism. He was twice married, and the object of his earlier choice, from the deep affection with which he regarded her when alive, and his grief for her death, made the contrast with her successor, from whom Lyttleton found it necessary to separate, a matter of much sad remark among his contemporaries. Though his father was in office, he joined the young 'Patriots' who drove Walpole from power. He held several secondary offices, and preceded Mr. Legge as Chancellor of the Exchequer. He was created a baron in 1757, and died in 1773. His miscellanies, in prose and verse, are now forgotten, and his laborious but feeble history of Henry II., is only known to historical inquirers. [J.H.B.]

LYTTLETON, CHARLES, younger brother of the preceding, born in 1714, became bishop of Carlisle in 1762, and was distinguished for his antiquarian learning; died 1768. THOMAS LYTTLETON, the son of Lord George, and his successor in the peerage, was a young nobleman of dissipated manners, who possessed, however, much of his father's genius. He is the subject of a well-authenticated ghost story, which relates that he was warned of his death three days before it happened, in 1779, when he was in good health, and only thirty-five years of age. See (for other members of this family) LITTLETON.

M

MAN, JOHN, a doct. of the Sorbonne, 17th c.

MAS, the name of several Dutch painters—

MAS, a pupil of the younger Teniers, 1620-1680.

NICHOLAS, famous for his portraits, 1632-1680.

DIRK, or THEODORE, or THIERNY, great in tapestries and cavalades, 1656-1715.

GOD- was famous for his altar-pieces, 1660-1722.

MAS, J. G. E., a Prussian philos., 1766-1823.

MBIL, P. L., an Italian savant, 1752-1836.

MBILLON, JOHN, a learned monk and history of the Benedictines, celebrated for his knowledge of ecclesiastical antiquities, and his skill as a historical and controversial writer, born in the diocese of Rheims, 1632, died 1707.

MBLY, GABRIEL BONNOT, Abbé De, a brother of Condillac, eminent as a political and misleading writer of great learning, 1709-1785.

MELOUL, J., a French prelate, died 1723.

MOUSE, JAN DE, one of the most celebrated painters of the old Flemish school of Bruges, is the master of any consideration who practised in this country. His family name appears to have been Gossaert, but he signed himself Joan-bodius, that is, of Mabuse, his birth-place.

He was born about 1470; he studied in Italy, and in 1499 visited this country, where he was employed by Henry VII.; there is a picture of this king's family, by him, at Hampton Court: he died at Antwerp in 1532.—Mabuse was a painter of extraordinary ability: his best works are generally brilliantly coloured, well drawn, and finished with extreme delicacy; his masterpiece is also in this country—the adoration of the kings, at Castle Howard, originally painted as an altar-piece for the abbey of Grammont, it afterwards fell into the possession of Prince Charles of Lorraine, from whose collection it was brought into England.—(Van Mander, Leven der Schilders, &c.; Walpole, Anecdotes of Painting, &c.) [R.N.W.]

MACABER, an old German poet, author of the 'Dance of Death,' painted by Holbein.

M'ADAM, or MACADAM, JOHN LOUDON, a magistrate and trustee of roads in Ayrshire, famous for introducing the improved system of road-making which bears his name, born 1756, died, after declining the honour of knighthood, which was conferred on his son, SIR JAMES NICHOL MACADAM, 1836. Mr. Macadam was substantially rewarded for this important national service by a grant of £10,000 from the government. Sir James Nichol Macadam died in 1852.

MACARDELL, J., an Eng. engraver, d. 1765.

MACARIUS, the name of two saints, the first or elder, a native of Alexandria, originally a baker, who became a disciple of St. Anthony, and passed the last sixty years of his life as a hermit, 301-391. The second, a contemporary of the preceding, who was persecuted for his zeal against the Arians, and is said to have had 5,000 monks under his direction, died 395.

MACARIUS, a primate of Russia, died 1563.

MACARTHY, SIR CHARLES, an Irish officer, killed in African warfare by the Ashantees, 1824.

MACARTNEY, GEORGE, earl of, best known for his embassy to China, was a native of Antrim in Ireland, where he was born 1737. He began his career after taking his degree at Dublin in 1759, as tutor to the sons of Lord Holland. In 1764 he went as envoy extraordinary to Russia; in 1769 was appointed secretary to Lord Townshend, lord-lieutenant of Ireland; in 1775, governor of Grenada and Tobago; and in 1792-1795 was engaged in his famous mission with Sir George Staunton as secretary, who has published an account of the embassy: died 1806.

MACAULAY, CATHERINE, a famous historian and political writer of the last century, was the daughter of John Sawbridge, Esq., of Ollantigh in Kent, where she was born 1734. She commenced her literary career soon after marrying Dr. George Macaulay, a physician of London, and acquired great celebrity on account of the republican principles which gave the tone to her works. She was married a second time, in 1778, to a Mr. Graham, and died 1791.

MACAULAY, ELIZABETH WRIGHT, an English actress, who afterwards became famous as a country preacher, 1785-1837.

MACAULAY, ZACHARY, father of the popular historian Thos. B. Macaulay, dist. for his philanthropic co-operation with Wilberforce, 1768-1838.

MACBETH, the hero of Shakspeare's tragedy of that name, was a Scottish chief related to the reigning King Duncan, whom he assassinated in order to usurp his power 1040. He fell in battle by the hand of Macduff, 1057.

MACBRIDE, D., an Irish physician, 1727-1778.

MACCABEUS. See JUDAS.

MACCHIETTI, J., an Italian painter, b. 1541.

MACCORMICK, CH., an Irish student of law, known as an historian and miscel. wr., 1744-1807.

MACCRIE, THOMAS, a Scottish divine, au. of a 'Life of Knox,' and a 'History of the Attempted Reformation in Italy in the 16th Cent.,' 1772-1835.

MACCULLOCH, JOHN, a physician who was born at Guernsey in 1773, and took his diploma at Edinburgh at the early age of eighteen. He was remarkable for the versatility of his powers, was employed by government in a mineralogical and geological survey of Scotland, and by the East India Company as lecturer on chemistry in their establishment at Addiscombe. Died, in consequence of an accident, 1835.

MACCURTIN, H. an Irish lexicograp., 18th ct.

MACDIARMID, J., a Scotch wr., 1779-1808.

MACDIARMID, JOHN, the well-known editor of the Dumfries Courier, died 1852.

MACDONALD, A., a Scotch writer, 1757-90.

MACDONALD, JOHN, only son of Flora Macdonald, who assisted the Pretender to escape in 1746, known as a writer on tactics and the telegraph, &c., 1759-1831.

MACDONALD, STEPHEN JAMES JOSEPH

ALEXANDER, duke of Tarentum, and marshal of France, distinguished in the wars of the French empire, was descended from a Scotch family, took refuge in France in the time of the rebellion, Napoleon spoke of him as the noblest of characters, and regretted much that he had not known better when in active service. Born at 1765, died 1840.

MACDOWALL, SIR A., an East Indian, distinguished in the Madras army, 1762-1818.

MACE, F., a Fr. ecclesiastical wr., 1640.

MACE, J., a French theologian, 1600-1677.

MACE, R., a chronicler in the time of France.

MACE, TH., an English musician, died 1616.

MACEDO, FRANCIS DE, a learned Jesuit, towards a cordelier of Portugal, author of numerous works, born 1596, died in prison 1681.

MACEDO, J. A. DE, a Portug. poet, d. 1811.

MACEDONIUS, the first of the name, appointed patriarch of Constantinople by the Arians, 351; died 360; the second, elected 494, died 516.

MACER, ÆMILIUS, a Latin poet, about 24 B.C.

MACERATA, G. DA, an Ital. painter, b. 1540.

MACFARLANE, HENRY, a native of Scotland, known as a political and miscellaneous writer, was in early life a schoolmaster, parliamentary reporter, and newspaper editor. He is said to have assisted Macpherson in editing the poems of Ossian; he also translated some of Buchanan's pieces; 1734-1804.

MAGILLIVRAY, WILLIAM, M.D., LL.D., distinguished Scottish naturalist, died 1852.

MAGGREGOR, R., an E. Indian officer, d. 1811.

MACHAM, ROBERT, the discoverer of the island of Madeira, was an English gentleman, who, driven out of his course by contrary winds, eloping with his mistress, in the age of Edward III., 1344. The story relates, that the lovers and were buried in the island by their crew, afterwards escaped to the coast of Africa, and came slaves in Morocco. Their adventures, often in Portuguese by Alcaforado, have been translated into French; and the Rev. W. L. B. has made them the subject of one of his poems.

MACHAU, W. DE, a French poet, 1282-1311.

MACHAULT, JOHN DE, a learned French Jesuit, 1561-1629. JOHN BAPTIST DE MACHAULT, another Jesuit writer, 1591-1640. JACQUES MACHAULT, author of 'Missions to the Guay,' &c., 1600-1680.

MACHIAVELLI, NICOLA, whose name is well known by the English abbreviation Machiavelli, was born at Florence in the year 1469. He seems to be known of his education than might be expected from the interest created by his distinguished place among political philosophers. In the age of thirty, he is found deep in the perplexities of Italian politics of the period, having been secretary of the board of 'The Ten.' In whatever light his works may be dealt with critically, there is no doubt that they were founded upon the close practical observation of political movements as well as on a scholarly acquaintanceship with history. But it must also be remembered, that ever deeply he was engaged in Italian conflict and diplomacy, and however the Peninsula, with its multitudinous of republican, monarchical, and despotic states, along with the hierarchy ruling large a portion of it, may have furnished an of the politics of the world, yet, as in other ments of inquiry, the narrowness of the field be considered in estimating the conclusions inquirer. It is true, however, that one of his acuteness would add to his Italperience a consciousness of the machinaof France and the German empire, along the rising Spanish kingdom, to get pos-of Italy. The events of his life would fully told without a narrative of the very ated history of Italy during his active

He had to conduct some extremely critications for the Florentine republic with ridious and rapacious Cæsar Borgia, and ought has perhaps been often repeated, that could there have been more ferocity and condensed within the compass of two human than when Borgia and Machiavelli met same cabinet. The political and critical as about Machiavelli have centred round ay or discourse on the prince, intended not plication, but for the private instruction of ung princes of the Medici family. It has maintained that he wrote to caricature the rles he professes, but this is an unnecessary

It is easy to see that he meant what he and his opinions are not wonderful, consider-school in which he was taught. He wrote her and more extensive works, one on the books of the first decade of Livy's history
-ther, a curious dialogue on the art of war.
d on the 22d of June, 1527. [J.H.B.]

CHIN, J., an English astronomer, 18th ct.

CK, CHARLES, Baron Von, an Austrian and, who rose to distinction during the wars of rench revolution, and was at the head of the of Naples opposed to the French in Italy,
The most remarkable incident in his career, surrender with 28,000 Austrian troops to oparte, for which he was tried by court-ar at Vienna. Born in Franconia 1752; died, ance and disgraced, 1828.

CKAY, AND., a dist. mathemat., died 1809.

CKENZIE, SIR ALEX., was a native of Inverness, and at an early period of his life settled in Canada. After having been eight years in the service of the North-West Fur Company, he was at Fort Chipewyan 3d June, 1789, on an exploring expedition towards the north, in which he traced the great river named after him, and reached the Arctic Ocean in lat. 69°. Some time previously (1771) this great barrier had been first seen at the mouth of the Coppermine River, by Samuel Hearne, an agent of the Hudson's Bay Company. On another expedition, undertaken in October, 1792, Mackenzie was the first to cross the Rocky Mountains and reach the Pacific.
He published an account of his travels, London, 1791, and soon after had the honour of knighthood conferred upon him. [J.B.]

CKENZIE, GEORGE, a physician of Edinburgh, author of a biography of eminent Scotch men, published 1708-1722.

CKENZIE, SIR GEORGE, a Scotch lawyer and miscellaneous writer, whose judicial career in the of the covenanters procured him the appellation of 'the blood-thirsty advocate,' born at Dunfermline 1636, died 1691. His relative, GEORGE CKENZIE, Viscount Tarbat, and first earl of Cromarty, secretary of state in the reign of Queen

Anne, and a writer on prophecy, &c., 1626-1714.

MACKENZIE, HENRY, born in 1745, survived till 1831. Though the writings which made his name popular were of a highly romantic and sentimental cast, his life was one of steady routine.
He was the son of a physician in Edinburgh; and there was obtained for him, very early, an appointment as one of the attorneys in the Scottish Court of Exchequer; a respectable, easy, and well-paid place. He held it till 1804, when the interest of his friends, and the value attached to pamphlets he had written in support of the government, gained for him the very lucrative office of comptroller of taxes for Scotland. His earliest novel, which was also his best, was 'The Man of Feeling,' published in 1771. 'The Man of the World' appeared in 1783, and was succeeded by 'Julia de Roubigné.'
He edited the periodical called 'The Mirror,' in 1779 and 1780; and 'The Lounger' in 1785 and 1786. He furnished to each of these a large number of papers, among which were some pleasing stories; and he wrote also plays, translations from the German, and critical and other essays. [W.S.]

MACKENZIE, J., a medical writer, died 1761.

MACKENZIE, SIR KENNETH DOUGLAS, a British officer, who was in active service from 1781 to 1815, died 1833.

MACKESON, COLONEL, an East Indian officer and political agent of the British government, distinguished during the last twenty years in all the important transactions connected with our policy and military operations in the Punjaub, including the late war with Afghanistan. Died in the prime of life, 1853.

MACKIE, JOHN, a Scotch physician, 1748-1831.

MACKINNON, DANIEL, lieutenant-colonel of the Coldstream Guards, famous for the occupation and defence of Hougumont at Waterloo; born 1791, died, after writing a history of his corps, 1836.

MACKINNON, HENRY, a general in the peninsular war, uncle to the preceding, born 1773, killed at the storming of Ciudad Rodrigo 1812.

MACKINTOSH, SIR JAMES, was born near Inverness, in 1765. From his father he inherited a small estate, the sale of which brought him several thousand pounds; but in the early part of his life he had to seek for maintenance by professional labour. Medicine was his first pursuit, which he studied in Edinburgh, after having gone through the academical course of arts at Aberdeen.
Going to London in 1788, he occupied himself much with literature, wrote for the press, and, in 1791, published the 'Vindiciæ Gallicæ,' a vigorous but over-sanguine reply to the attacks of Burke on the French Revolution. Mackintosh had now turned to legal studies, and delivered with great approbation Lectures on the Law of Nature and Nations. In 1803, he distinguished himself by his defence of Peltier, a French emigrant, charged with a libel on Napoleon. In 1804, after having been knighted, he went to India as Recorder of Bombay. Having entitled himself, by seven years' service, to a retiring allowance of twelve hundred a-year, he returned to England. He sat in the House of Commons from 1813, acting on the Whig side, and making some impressive speeches, especially on reforms in the criminal law; but he was both too philosophical and too indolent to be a great parliamentary orator or debater. His power of conversation was highly celebrated; and he was not less esteemed for his candour and amiability, than for his clearness and comprehensiveness of thinking and the great diversity of his knowledge. His writings, though valuable, scarcely came up to the expectations that were entertained of him. The best of them is his fine 'Dissertation on the Progress of Ethical Philosophy,' contributed to the Encyclopædia Britannica, and since edited separately by Whewell. He wrote likewise a good many articles for the Edinburgh Review, and an able but not animated 'History of England' for Lardner's Cabinet Cyclopædia. His 'History of the Revolution' of 1668, which was to have been his masterpiece, was delayed by his indolence and fastidiousness, and left unfinished at his death in 1832. [W.S.]

MACKLIN, CHARLES, an eminent actor and dramatist, in the opinion of some the first, in order of time, of stage-artists. He was born at Westmeath, in Ireland, 11th May, 1690, and was for some time employed at Trinity College, Dublin, as a badgeman. He came to England in 1711, and attempted the stage, but returned to his old occupation until 1716, when he again became a candidate for histrionic honours, as an actor in the London theatre, Lincoln's-Inn-Fields. He continued on the stage until 1789—Shylock being the part in which he was most distinguished, and to which he first gave the tragic reading which has been ever since retained. He was a man of great determination of character, and stood up for the professional rights of his brother actors, frequently to his own detriment. But his vigorous intellect at last gave way, his understanding being impaired before his death, 11th July, 1797. Considering his great age, 107, this, however, was not remarkable. What his mind had been remains proved by his works, yet popular, 'The Man of the World,' and his 'Love à la Mode,' two comedies of great merit. [J.A.H.]

MACKNIGHT, JAMES, a Scottish divine, author of a 'Harmony of the Gospels,' &c., 1721-1800.

MACLAINE, A., an Irish divine, 1722-1804.

MACLAURIN, COLIN, a very eminent Scottish mathematician, born at Kilmodan, Argyllshire, in February, 1698; died at Edinburgh, 14th June, 1746. Distinguished for mathematical talent at a very early age—having, it is said, discovered many of the propositions of his Geometrie Organica, when only sixteen—he gained, after a competition of ten days, the chair of mathematics at Marischal College, Aberdeen, in his nineteenth year; and in 1725, he was appointed to assist and succeed James Gregory in the same chair at Edinburgh. Maclaurin's separate works are these:—1st, Geometrie Organica, a work on the description of Curves by the intersection of moving straight lines:—2d, A Treatise of Fluxions, in 2 vols. 4to, of which it may be safely said, that it is the best ever produced, with the view of expounding logically the principles of Fluxions. It is prolix, although full of interesting matter: its value now is simply historical:—3d, A Treatise on Algebra; and 4th, The posthumous work—An Account of Sir Isaac Newton's Discoveries,—a model of a popular exposition. Maclaurin wrote many separate memoirs, and he had the honour of dividing the prize of the Academy of Sciences for an essay on the Tides with Daniel Bernoulli, Euler, and Cavalieri. During the residence of this mathematician in Edinburgh, the irruption of the Highland Clans under Prince Charles I. occurred. Maclaurin planned and superintended the works thrown up for the defence of the city, and exerted himself in every possible way in support of the Government. He was obliged to leave Scotland, and took refuge in England for a short time, but he returned with Law and Order. His mathematical ability showed itself also in efforts to organize several public societies in Edinburgh. The names of the few scientific names that ought, in Scotland, to be held more in honour.

MACLAURIN, J., son of the preceding, was called to the bar, and in 1787 became a judge of the title of Lord Dregghorn. He is author of several Elements and Decisions in Remarkable Cases; &c.

MACLEAN, MRS., L. E. L. See LAND.

MACLEOD, JOHN, a Scotch physician, accompanied Lord Amherst's embassy to China, and was author of 'The Voyage of the Alceste,' 1783.

MACLEOD, SIR J., a Brit. general, 1752-1837.

MACLIAU, a duke of Brittany, 560-577.

MACLOU, or MALO, a Welch saint, died 1176.

MACMICHEL, W., an Eng. phy., au. of a Traveller from Moscow to Constantinople, 1784.

MACNALLY, L., an Irish dramatist, 1751-1837.

MACNICOL, REV. DR. DONALD, a Scotch minister, and master of Gaelic literature and antiquities, 1735-1802.

MACNISH, ROBERT, a physician of Glasgow, known as a contributor to magazine literature, under the appellation of 'the Modern Dr. Keenan,' author of 'The Anatomy of Drunkenness,' &c., 1802-1837.

MACPHERSON, JAMES, was born in Perth-shire in 1738, and received an academical education at Aberdeen. At the age of 15, while he was a country schoolmaster, he published an indifferent heroic poem, 'The Highlander's Farewell to his Native Land,' afterwards, having gone southward as a tutor, he excited the interest of the poet Blair, and Adam Ferguson, by exhibiting a purporting to be translations of old Celtic poems. In 1760 he published a few specimens of his translations, entitled 'Fragments of Ancient Poetry, translated from the Gaelic or Erse Language.' After a short excursion which he made to the Highlands, and other metrical relics, there appeared the Selections of the Poems of Ossian, which, ascribed by Macpherson to the bard of Glenelg, have raised so much controversy as to their genuineness; and which, through their strange unevenness and defect, have divided the critics as much in regard to their literary merit as to their genuineness. The epic poem of 'Fingal,' with smaller pieces, was published in 1762; the epic of 'Temora,' in 1763, accompanied by other poems, in 1763. The translator and poet now turned to business, and obtained official appointments in Florida and the West Indies. After this he resumed literary employment, chiefly historical, and was, in pamphlets and papers, an active and efficient partizan of the ministry. His political services procured him the lucrative place of agent for the nabob of Arcot, and he sat in parliament for several years from 1776. He died in 1796, at an estate which he had purchased in his native district of Strathspey.

MACPHERSON, SIR JOHN, an employé of the India Company, whose judicious management of affairs in the time of Hyder Ali and the Maratta war, saved the presidency of Madras from ruin, 1767-1821.

MACQUARIE, governor of New South Wales, 1788-1824.

MACQUART, J. H., a French physician, and editor of the 'Journal des Savants' after Barthez, 1761-1768. His son, L. C. HENRY, a physician and mineralogist, 1745-1808.

MACQUER, PETER JOSEPH, a French chemist of Scotch descent, known as a writer on natural philosophy in the 'Journal des Savants,' 1718-84. His brother, PHILIP, an advocate and hist., 1720-70.

MACQUIN, A. D., a French poet, 1756-1823.

MACRET, C. F. A., a Fr. engraver, 1750-1783.

MACRIANUS, MARCUS FULVIUS, an Egyptian general, proclaimed emperor 260, k. in action 261.

MACRINO D'ALBA, an Ital. paint., 1460-1520.

MACRINUS, M. O., a Roman emp., 217-218.

MACRINUS, SALMONEUS, the literary name of JOHN SALMON, a French poet, 1490-1557. His brother, CHARLES, also a Latin poet, killed in the massacre of St. Bartholomew, 1572.

MACROBIUS, AMBROSIIUS AURELIUS THEODORUS, a Latin grammarian, author of the 'Saturnalia,' &c., 5th century.

MACDALINSKI, A., a Polish general, 1739-1804.

MACDAN, MARTIN, an English divine, who became a highly popular preacher at the Lock Hospital, author of several theological works, and of a minor polygamy in his book entitled 'Thelyphthora,' 1726-1813. His brother, Dr. SPENCER MACDAN, bp. of Bristol and Peterborough, d. 1813.

MACDADDEN, SAMUEL, an Irish clergyman, whose name is held in honourable remembrance as the inventor of premiums for encouraging the useful mechanic arts, from which the society for the encouragement of arts and sciences in London took its rise. Dr. Madden, besides his poems, and a book entitled 'Themistocles, or the Lover of his Country,' published a singular volume of 'Letters and Biographical Memoirs,' relating to events and persons of the twentieth century, nearly the whole of which was bought up and destroyed as soon as it appeared. This disting. benefactor of his country was of French descent; lived 1687-1765.

MACDODOX, ISAAC, successively bishop of St. Asaph and Worcester, au. of a 'Vindication of the Church of England in Answer to Neal,' 1697-1759.

MACDELINE OF FRANCE, queen of Navarre, famous for the defence of her state against the enterprises of Ferdinand, k. of Arragon, 1443-1495.

MACDELENET, G., a Latin poet, 1587-1661.

MACDER, J., a German philologist, 1626-1680.

MACDERNO, C., an Italian architect, 1556-1629.

MACDERNO, S., an Italian sculptor, 1576-1636.

MACDISEN, JAMES, fourth president of the United States, was born in Virginia 1758, and educated for the bar, became a member of the Virginia convention in 1776. In 1784, he opposed the bill for a national system of worship; failed in preparing the constitution, and, in 1788, became a member of the first congress. His career as president dates from the retirement of Mr. Jefferson, 1809 to 1817, and is marked by the death of Great Britain 1812-1814, at the conclusion of which the northern limits of the United States were fixed at Lake Hudson and Lake Superior. Mr. Madison died in 1836. His works have been published in 6 vols. 8vo.

MADOC, or MADOG, a Welch prince, said to have discovered the American continent, and settled a colony there in 1170. A tribe of white Indians, inhabiting the country about the northern branches of the Mississippi, and speaking the Welch language, are supposed to be his descendants. Some account of him will be found in Owen's British Remains, and Powell's History of Wales.

MADOX, THOMAS, a famous master of legal antiquities, author of numerous published works, and of a mass of MSS. in the Brit. Museum, last c.

MADRID, J. F. DE, an American statesman, born 1789, president of Colombia 1816, died 1830.

MÆCENAS, CAIUS CILNIUS, whose name is imperishably associated with the Augustan literature of Rome, was descended from the ancient kings of Etruria, and flourished in the 1st century B.C. He was the companion of Augustus in nearly all his campaigns, and his most trustworthy counsellor in political matters. For the three years 18-15 B.C., he was invested with the government of Italy, and he was always sent to Rome on any emergency, either with the senate or the people, in case he was absent with Augustus. His great glory, however, was the happy influence that he exercised over the emperor as a patron of learning, and his own munificence and taste in the same direction. Virgil, Horace, and Propertius, are best known to us as the guests of his hospitable mansion on the Esquiline hill, but many others enjoyed his protection and friendship. Some poetical fragments of his remain to this day. Died B.C. 8.

MAES, or MAAS. See MAAS.

MÆSTLINAS, MICHAEL, a German astronomer, 1542-1590.

MAFFEI, or MAFFÆUS, the name of several noted Italians:—1. VEGIO, a native of Lodi, distinguished as a scholar and poet, 1407-1459. 2. RAPHAEL, a savant of Tuscany, died 1506. 3. BENARDIN, a learned cardinal and antiquarian, 1513-1553. 4. GIOVANNI PIERO, a learned Jesuit of Bergamo, author of a 'Life of Loyola,' &c., 1535-1603. 5. FRANCESCO, a painter of Vicenza, in the manner of Paolo Veronese, died 1660. 6. JAMES, a painter and musician of Venice, known to be living in 1663. 7. The Marquis ALBERTO, a field-marshal of Bavaria, distinguished against the Turks before Belgrade, author of 'Memoirs,' 1662-1730. 8. FRANCESCO SCIPIONE, brother and companion-in-arms of the latter, but more distinguished as an antiquarian and dramatic author, 1675-1755. To him a statue has been erected in the principal square of Verona, in testimony of the honour that his genius has conferred upon the city.

MAFFIOLI, J. P., a Swiss jurist, 1752-1833.

MAGALHAENS, FERNANDO, to whose boldness, sagacity, and skill, we owe the first circumnavigation of the globe, was born in the province of Alemtejo in Portugal about the year 1470. Having entered the Portuguese navy, and served with distinction in the East, he was so dissatisfied at his merits being overlooked, that on his return home he sought employment (1517) in the service of Spain. These two nations were now engrossing maritime discovery, England having scarcely entered the field; and so numerous and active were the navigators of the respective Services, that the claim of priority was often difficult to settle. An amicable arrangement had hence been come to in 1494, whereby all the new lands west of a meridian passing down the Atlantic, 370 leagues west of the Azores, were to belong to Spain, and those to the east of it to Portugal. The length of a degree had not yet been correctly measured, and consequently the dimensions of the earth were imperfectly known. (See COLUMBUS.) It was thus uncertain how far 180°, measured either way from the upper, or Atlantic, semi-meridian, would reach upon the Asiatic lands: in other words, what part of those lands would be intersected by the lower semi-meridian. Now the Moluccas, or Spice islands, had been lately discovered; and great value was set upon them by both nations. Some held that they should belong to Portugal. Magalhaens maintained the opposite view, that they could most easily be reached by sailing west, and should, therefore, be the property of Spain; and he even offered to conduct a fleet thither by a western route, so fully was his mind occupied with the bold conception of passing round to the south of the American continent into the great ocean, lav- ing its western shores, which in common with Columbus, he regarded as the Indian or Eastern Ocean. To the practicability of such a passage many late discoveries were pointing; there was the analogy of Africa, whose southern cape had been doubled by Diaz in 1486; a council of able navigators, assembled under royal authority in 1507, had recommended the south American shores as the most promising field of discovery, and seem even to have pointed to the accessibility of India by that way: and in 1509 two members of this very council, Pinzon and Solis, had acted so vigorously on the recommendation, as to push discovery to the lat. of 40° south on the Brazilian coast; mutual misunderstandings alone having prevented them from gaining perhaps Cape Horn itself. Besides, the stirring intelligence had recently arrived that Nunez De Balboa had discovered the great southern ocean, the existence of which had been so nearly made out by Columbus himself. Already correct charts were numerous; and doubtless, though here authority is wanting, a comparison of the Brazilian coast, rapidly trending to the south-west, with the tapering form of Africa, would suggest a like speedy termination of the land southwards, although the western coast was entirely unknown. But even with these suggestive circumstances thus known to him, the enterprise of Magalhaens must ever be regarded as one of surprising boldness, and second only to the grand conception of the discoverer of the New World.—Magellan, as he is generally called, was put in command of a fleet of five ships, two of 120 tons, two of 90, and one of 60; and the crews in all amounted to 236 men. He sailed 20th September, 1519, from San Lucar de Barrameda in the south of Spain, and reached a safe harbour in lat. 50° on the American coast, to which he gave the name of Port St. Julian, in the following April. This was the beginning of winter, which lasts with great severity till October, and he determined, therefore, to remain inactive during this period. His hands, however, were soon full enough; discomforts produced by the limited supply of provisions, a rigour of the climate, ripened into loud pressed discontent, and a demand for an immediate return home; and at length broke out in open mutiny, headed by the officers of the ships, and in a great measure indeed confined to them. The ringleader, Luis de Mendoza, one of the Vittoria, having granted a conference, a messenger sent by Magellan, was treacherously stabbed by him, according to the instructions which he had received. Resistance was not made, and next day another captain was executed, and a third put ashore upon the inhospitable coast. Magellan pursued his course in October, and at the end of the month had entered the strait which bears his name. He cleared it on the 28th November, and flushed with the feelings of triumph and success, stood boldly out into the unexplored expanse of the vast Pacific. He had now but three ships; one had been wrecked before entering the strait; the other had parted company in the Gulf of Mexico, and returned home. On the 16th March, Magellan reached the Philippine isles, having discovered in with only two islands, which probably had not been since visited. He enjoyed such a fair weather, and favouring winds, that he gave to the ocean the name which it still bears. He discovered the king of Zebu, one of the islands, was easily induced by a promise of assistance against his enemies to embrace Christianity, and, with a great number of his people, to receive baptism. Magellan soon called upon to fulfil his rash promise, and undertake an expedition against a hostile chief, the king of the island of Mattan. Here he was opposed by the natives. Magellan, after a protracted struggle, fell in the contest. Towards the close of the day, when the Spaniards were giving way, he was felled by a stone; a second broke his thigh bone, and he speedily pierced by many lances. The king immediately forgot his vows, and perished with death all the Spaniards who were on shore. Those who remained on board were too few in number to manage three ships; one accordingly was abandoned, and in the other two, the Trinidad and Vittoria, they pursued their voyage in search of the Moluccas. At these they safely arrived, and were kindly received by the king of Tidore. The Trinidad remained to repair, and afterwards started on her way to reach America by crossing the Pacific; but was driven back, and her crew made prisoners by the Portuguese. The other ship, the Vittoria, under the command of Sebastian del Cano, who had come out in the Concepcion as lieutenant, returned home by the Cape of Good Hope, reaching San Lucar 6th September, 1522, completing the first circumnavigation of the globe. The good ship was drawn ashore, and long served as a monument of this most remarkable voyage. The day on which Sebastian arrived was according to his reckoning, the 5th September, having been lost in consequence of the westward motion of the vessel, that is, the time was reckoned in longer days.—There had not, of course, been a previous opportunity of noticing such a circumstance, and as it does not seem to have occurred to any one that such an effect would be produced, no little difficulty was felt at the time in offering a satisfactory explanation. It is easy to see time was reckoned in longer days than those of San Lucar; and, therefore, there were fewer in given time. If a ship had arrived the same day, being circumnavigated the globe by sailing eastward, her captain would have called it the 7th September; and the reckonings would have differed from one another by two days. [J.B.]

MAGALLON, C., a Fr. diplomatist, 1741-1820.

MAGALLON, F. L., a Fr. comman., 1754-1825.

MAGALOTTI, LORENZO, Count, an Italian naturalist and philosopher, who cultivated poetry in the Belles Lettres under the name of Lindoro; he was a great experimental philosopher, as eminent for his piety and munificence as for his love of literature, 1637-1712.

MAGANZA, the name of three Italian painters: GIOVANNI BAPTISTA, whom the Italians call Magmano, from the title under which he exhibited himself as a poet, 1509-1589. 2. ALESSANDRO, his son, a pupil of Fasolo, 1556-1630. 3. GIOVANNI BAPTISTA, 'the younger,' son of the latter.

MAGATI, C., a writer on surgery, 1579-1647.

MAGEE, WILLIAM, a dignitary of the Irish Church, au. of 'Discourses on the Scriptural Doctrines of the Atonement and Sacrifice,' 1765-1831.

MAGELLAN. See MAGALHAENS.

MAGENS, J., a Danish philologist, died 1783.

MAGEOGHEGAN, JAMES, an Irish ecclesiastical author of an 'Ancient and Modern History of Ireland,' 1702-1764.

MAGGIO, F. M., an Ital. Orientalist, 1612-86.

MAGINI, G. A., an Ital. astrono., 1555-1617.

MAGINN, WILLIAM, was born in 1794, at Dublin, where his father had an academy. He was half through his teens when he completed his academical course at Trinity College, Dublin, where he afterwards received the degree of LL.D. He soon took his father's place as head of the school, which he continued to conduct for several years, embarking, however, in the meantime, in medical writing. From November, 1819, he was a frequent contributor to Blackwood's Magazine, for which he invented and usually sustained the character of Morgan O'Doherty, and wrote some of the most spirited and audacious of the papers that appeared in it. His prose was masterly in prose and in verse he was equally happy in English, and in Latin macaronics. In 1823 he gave up his school and threw himself on the press in London. His union of various scholarly gifts with remarkable talent for popular writing, especially in satire, speedily procured him employment. He was much trusted by Murray the bookseller, and for a while he was joint editor of the Standard newspaper. But he had an unlucky habit of getting into misunderstandings with his employers: he was, indeed, the most capricious and unsteady of writers, as well as one of the most careless and unthrifty of literary men; and his usefulness for society soon degenerated into little sottishness. In 1830, he was the founder, and some years continued to be the cleverest of Fraser's Magazine. But his irregular habits were rapidly increasing, and pecuniary difficulties gathering about him. He sank to engagements with such newspapers as the Standard, and in the beginning of 1842, he was thrown into Fleet prison for debt. He speedily obtained his release by passing through the Insolvent Debtor's Court; but he died of consumption, at Walton-on-the-Thames, in August of the same year. He was then in absolute beggary, from which the munificence of Sir Robert Peel, exercised as soon as he was made aware of the case, came too late to relieve him. He dictated for Blackwood on his death-bed the close of the last of his 'Homeric Hymns,' the most ambitious of his serious efforts in verse. [W.S.]

MAGISTRIS, HYACINTH DE, an Italian Jesuit and missionary, 1605-1668.

MAGISTRIS, SIMON DE, an Italian Jesuit and Orientalist, 1728-1802.

MAGLIABECCHI, ANTONIO, an Italian, originally a poor shop-boy, whose prodigious knowledge of books made him the wonder of his age, and to whom the learned in his time were indebted for much valuable information. His literary remains, however, are of little value. Born at Florence 1633, died 1714.

MAGNAN, D., a French antiquarian, 1731-96.

MAGNANI, C., an Italian painter, about 1580.

MAGNENTIUS, FLAVIUS, a native of Germany, who was born about 303, and from a simple soldier in the Roman army, became emperor 349 or 350, killed by Constans II. 353.

MAGNIERE, L., a French sculptor, 1618-1700.

MAGNOL, P., a French botanist, 1638-1715.

MAGNUS I., king of Sweden, b. 1240, reigned 1279-90. MAGNUS II., b. 1216, reigned 1320-74.

MAGNUS I., succeeded his father as king of Norway 1034, and succeeded Canute II. as king of Denmark 1042, died 1048. MAGNUS II., king of Norway, reigned 1066-1069. MAGNUS III., 1087-1103. MAGNUS IV., 1130-1139. MAGNUS V., reigned a short time only in 1142. MAGNUS VI., 1184. MAGNUS VII., 1262-1280. An English prince, named Magnus, son of Christian III., king of Denmark, was proclaimed king by the Livonians 1570, died 1583.

MAGNUS, duke of Saxony, reigned 1073-1106.

MAGNUS, JOHN, archbishop of Upsala, a famous Swedish historian, and opponent of the reformation, 1488-1544. His brother, OLAVE, also an historian, was named archbishop, but being a catholic, lived at Rome, died 1568.

MAGNUS, JONAS, bishop of Skara, 1583-1651.

MAHMOUD, the first of the name, sultan of the Turks, born 1696, reigned 1730-1750. The second, father of the present sultan, born 1785, was placed on the throne by the janizaries after the murder of his predecessor 1808, sustained a war with Russia, which cost him Bessarabia, and the provinces of Servia, Moldavia, and Wallachia, as settled by the treaty of Bucharest, from 1809 to 1812; the war of Greek independence, which ended in the separation of that country, and the annihilation of the Turkish fleet at the battle of Navarino, 1820-1828; exterminated the janizaries 1826; treaty of Adrianople with the Russians, who were on the point of entering Constantinople, 1829; independence of Egypt under Mehemet Ali, and the new treaty of Unkiar-Skelessi with the Russians, 1832-1833; defeated at Nezib by Ibrahim Pasha, and died the same year, 1839.

MAHMOUDY, sultan of Egypt, 1412-1421.

MAHOMET. Under this name we have to compress within a few lines the history of a man, who, by the mere force of his genius and his convictions, subdued to his religion, his laws, and his sceptre, whole nations; and whose authority, after the lapse of twelve centuries, is acknowledged by nearly two hundred millions of souls. We shall endeavour to perform this task conscientiously, stating only what we really believe to be the significance of the facts, however widely we may differ from writers of acknowledged repute—from a Carlyle, on the one hand, who can see but little difference between Mahommedanism and Christianity; and from Schlegel, on the other, who only discerns in it a 'Dead Theism, which begun and terminated in the most unbounded sensuality.' —MAHOMET, or MOHAMMED, as the Arabians call him, was a child of the Koreish, the tribe which had been intrusted for five generations with the care of the sacred temple of Mecca, containing the black stone, and which claimed a lineal descent from Ishmael. He was born in 570, or according to other accounts, in the spring of 571, and was only two months old when he lost his father, Abdallah. In the sixth year of his age his mother died, and the care of the orphan devolved on his paternal grandfather, at that time chief priest, and he also dying two years afterwards, on his son and successor Abou Taleb, with whom Mahomet, while a youth, was engaged in several commercial adventures, and made many journeys. These excursions afforded the opportunity for developing his military talents and his superior address; and the esteem procured for him by such qualities was greatly heightened by the sincerity of his words and actions, the regularity of his life, and the precision of his judgment. When twenty-five years of age, he married a rich widow named Khadijah, whose commercial affairs he had previously managed, and during the whole of her lifetime, a period of twenty-five years, he is admitted to have been faithful to her. When about forty years of age, say in the year 610, Mahomet began to announce his apostleship to his own family, having previously passed much of his time in a solitary cave near Mecca, exercising himself in prayers, fastings, and pious meditations. At this period, the Arabs roved over their native deserts in a state of barbarian independence, neither the Assyrians, the Persians, the Macedonians, nor the Romans, having been able to bring them under their yoke; and the only common object which united them was the pursuit of gain in some pillaging excursion, or the annual pilgrimage to their idolized black stone. They were equally destitute of fixed principles and laws, licentious in their manners, and gross in their religious sentiments; they possessed, however, the wild virtues of clansmen, they were generous and imaginative, full of rude moral strength, and overflowing with animal energy. For four years Mahomet limited his communications to his own immediate relatives. In the fifth he invited them to a banquet, announced his determination to assume the office of a prophet and lawgiver by command of God, and demanded which of them would be his first minister. His cousin, Ali, accepted this office with enthusiasm—the people of Mecca began to speak of Mahomet as a new prophet—many reviled him as an impostor, others opposed him for political reasons—and the most part demanded miracles of him in proof of his mission. Mahomet answered them by producing his 'Koran,' leaf by leaf, as occasion demanded, and by the emphatic declaration that his mission was to restore truth and virtue by the sword. Reasoned with his objectors, preached to the grims flocking to Mecca, and as years passed away, his fame became widely spread, and proselytes might be numbered in all the tribes of Arabia. In the tenth or eleventh year, 620, Taleb, Mahomet's uncle and protector, died, the enmity of the tribe began to manifest more openly. In the same year he lost his Khadijah. In the twelfth year it became known to him that he could only defend himself by force of arms, there being at Mecca one man of every tribe sworn to take his life. This state of things ended in a civil commotion, from which on the 16th of July, 622, Mahomet fled to Medina, then called Yathreb, a journey for his life, the sands and rocks of the desert some 200 miles. All the Mahommedan nations date their history from this epoch, which is called the year of 'Hegira,' the prophet's triumphant reception at Medina fairly marking the commencement of his conquests. On arriving in this city, he assumed the regal and priestly office which had belonged to his family at Mecca, and his proselytes flocked to him from all parts, he was soon in a position to take the field against the Koreish, though greatly inferior numbers. He gained his first battle on the 14th of March, 624; and in the course of seven years more had become master of all Arabia, and was at the head of an army of 30,000 men who idolized him. The period of his lightning-like progress and victories is a brief period must be passed over, it being important to state by what attractions he united these scattered bands into one phalanx. We read of the 'Sensual Eudaimonism' of his creed opens so free a scope, both in this life and the next; yet, the fact is, compared with previous practices of the Eastern nations, the supposed indulgences of Mahomet are ridiculous. Frequent prayers, ceremonies of purification, alms-giving, the prohibition of wine and games of chance, are marks of an austere system, and though he defined the extent of their indulgences, and gave them within certain religious sanction, the existence of such indulgences is no more chargeable on Mahomet than on Arabian complexion. His religion was not a ritual, but it was consistent and practical, and was laid down like a firm highway across a quagmire of superstition and gnosticism, while the Christian name was profaned, and the reality of nature put to the blush. Mahomet succeeded, not because his theory of religion possesses anything in common with the tenets of Christianity, but because it was well calculated to deliver the Eastern nations from the hybrid superstitions, both of faith and practice, generated between a corrupt Christianity and the old heathen pantheism. It was simply the first initiation of those nations into the design of providence, the Koran was neither an inspiration like the Bible, nor an imposition. Its metaphysics were exactly suited to its practical business—its unknown and unknowable, and his decrees stern as fate. Such a creed could become a symbol of unity among the Eastern nations, the very reason that it reposed in a depth and the subtlety of their intellects, and as a no intelligible form till it reached the passions. It was 'Islam,' to those whose imaginations had defiled ever they had apprehended. We require space more particular, and will therefore only add, Mahomet expired in the arms of his favourite Ayesha, on the 8th of June, 632. The scattered fragments of the Koran were collected two afterwards by his father-in-law, Abubeker, succeeded to his authority, and took the title of prophet. [E.R.]

[The Kaaba at Mecca.]

MAHOMET I., emperor of the Ottoman Turks, reigned 1413-1421, in which period he conquered Servia and Bosnia. MAHOMET II., began to reign 1451, subdued Thrace and Macedonia, and took Constantinople 1453: he died at the siege of Belgrade 1456, conquered Greece 1458, put an end to the empire of the East 1461, gained Lesbos 1462, Wallachia 1463, Caramania and Egropont 1464, defeated the Persians who had invaded Cappadocia 72, subdued Georgia, Circassia, Moldavia, and the isles of the Adriatic, 1475, died 1481. MAHOMET III., born 1568, reigned during the troubled period of 1595-1603. MAHOMET IV., began to reign 1649, deposed after a short reign 1687, died 1691.

MAISON, P. A. O., a Fr. medical wr., 1752-1801. MANDEL, N., a Fr. antiquarian, 1673-1747. MANNO, JULIEN LA, an Italian architect, 1717-47. His brother, BENEDETTO, a sculptor and architect, 1424-1498.

MAN, MICHEL, a Gr. alchemist, 1568-1622.

MANAN, E., a Fr. philosopher, 1601-1676.

MANOF, B. I., a Russian poet, 1725-1778.

MANA, or MAILLAC, JOSEPH ANNE MARIE

MARIAC DE, a celebrated French Jesuit and missionary to China, where he resided forty-five years; he translated the annals of the empire into French 1679-1748.

MAILLARD, J., a chief of the royalist party at Paris during the captivity of King John, and the supposed assassin of Marcel in 1356.

MAILLARD, OLIVIERO, an eccentric preacher of the reign of Louis XI., famous for his daring reproofs of the vices of the court, 1440-1502.

MAILLARD, S., an Austr. general, 1746-1822.

MAILLARD, STANISLAS, generally called Huis-sier or Usher Maillard, was a person of considerable notoriety in the French revolution, who commenced life as the lacquey of a nobleman, and was afterwards a soldier. His first appearance was at the storming of the Bastille 1789, when he crossed the moat on a plank to receive the written terms of the besieged in the midst of the combat. His next feat was to head the insurrection of women, whom he conducted by beat of drum to Versailles, and preserved in some kind of order; preventing them, in fact, from committing many excesses, when Lafayette and the authorities were really powerless. He was an active party in the movements of the Champ de Mars when the national petition was signed for the king's deposition. In September, 1792, he acted as president of the fearful tribunal at the Abbaye prison, and, during the reign of terror, was an agent of the Committee of Public Safety. After the fall of Robespierre he is supposed to have changed his name, and the date of his death is unknown. To a ruthless disposition he added singular presence of mind and fertility of resources among the savage bands, whose excesses he at once shared and moderated. He is one of those warning instances with which the revolution abounds, of a certain talent and courage among the lowest classes of the people, which may easily degenerate to ferocity when not directed by education and religion. [E.R.]

MAILLE, MARSHAL. See MAILLY D'HAUCOURT.

MAILLE, DUCHESS OF, a lady attendant on Marie Antoinette, who escaped the guillotine by two singular delays, followed by the fall of Robespierre, 1794.

MAILLET, BENEDICT DE, a Fr. consul, au. of a singular system of speculative philos., 1656-1738.

MAILLY, CHEVALIER DE, a godson of Louis XIV., famous as a writer of scandal, died 1724.

MAILLY, F. DE, archbp. of Rheims, 1658-1721.

MAILLY, J. B., a French historian, 1744-1796.

MAILLY-D'HAUCOURT, JOSEPH AUGUSTINE DE, camp-marshal of France, and one of the four supreme generals appointed by Louis XVI., with the sanction of the French assembly, to preserve order in 1790. His colleagues were Bouillé, Rochambeau, and Luckner. He perished on the scaffold as a royalist at the age of eighty-six, on the 25th March, 1794. Louise Julie de Nesle, countess de Mailly, and her three sisters, who were all mistresses of Louis XV., belonged to the same family. [E.R.]

MAIMBOURG, LOUIS, a French Jesuit, author of a 'History of Arianism,' 'History of the Iconoclasts,' 'History of the Crusades,' and 'History of Calvinism,' &c., 1610-1686.

MAIMON, S., a Jewish philosopher, 1753-1800. MAIMONIDES, the name by which Rabbi Moses Ben Maimon is generally known, was a Spanish Jew born at Cordova, most probably in 1139. He is regarded by the Jews as the prince of their philosophers and theologians, and his treatise 'Moreh Nebochim,' which illustrates some of the most difficult words and things in the sacred writings, is greatly valued among Christians. When the work was translated it created a violent controversy, and divided the Jews into two parties, between whom the celebrated David Kimchi was appointed arbiter. Maimonides died in Egypt, 1209.

MAINARDI, ANDREW, an Italian painter, whose works date from 1590 to 1613. MAINARDI, LACTANTIUS, a youthful painter known at Rome in the time of Sextus Quintus.

MAINARDI, P. A., an Ital. mission., 1713-1767.

MAINE, L. AUG., Duc Du. See MONTESPAN.

MAINE DE BIRAN, MA. F. P. GOUTHIER, a French philosopher and statesman, whose philosophical works were published in 1841 by M. Cousin, flourished 1766-1824.

MAINO, GIASONE, an Italian jurist, 1435-1519.

MAINS, or MAY, J. H., a Ger. divine, 1653-1719.

MAINTENON, MADAME DE, was the granddaughter of Henry the Fourth's friend Theodore Agrippa D'Aubigné. She was born in 1635, in the prison of Niort in Poitou, where her father, a profligate adventurer, was then confined. Left quite destitute on his death in her tenth year, Mademoiselle D'Aubigné spent her youth in dependence on her rich relatives, one of whom educated her as a Calvinist, while another afterwards persuaded or compelled her to become a Catholic. Her harassing position made her glad to contract a nominal marriage with the famous wit Scarron, a deformed, old, and infirm man. Her beauty, liveliness, and propriety of conduct, gained for her powerful friends among those who frequented her husband's house; and, on being left in poverty on Scarron's death, she was intrusted with the charge of the children born to Louis XIV. by Madame de Montespan. She assumed this office in 1669, and attended her pupils to court as they grew up; and, though the king was at first prejudiced against her as a learned lady, the royal debauchee began by-and-by to be wearied of sensual amours and quarrelling mistresses, and to respect and esteem the prudent and well-informed governess of his children. She played her cards dexterously, and was zealously seconded by the clerical directors of his Majesty. The king married her privately, probably in 1685, when her age was fifty, and his own forty-seven. For the remaining thirty years of his life she was his most confidential adviser, and shared in the obloquy of some of his worst acts, such as the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. She was a virtuous woman, and a devout and bigotted Catholic, ambitious and resolute, but disinterested and charitable. Her published letters give her a creditable place in French literature. She died in 1719, at the nunnery or school of Saint Cyr, which she herself had founded. [W.S.]

MAINVIELLE, P., a member of the Fr. convention, execut. for his atrocities in October, 1793.

MAIRAN, JOHN JAMES DORTOAS DE, a Fr. physici., au. of works in natural philos., 1678-1771.

MAIRET, J., a French dramatist, 1604-1686.

MAISON, N. J., a French marshal, 1770-1840.

MAISTRE, ANTHONY LE, a French advocate and savant of Port-Royal, author of the lives of several catholic saints, &c., 1608-1658.

MAISTRE, COUNT JOSEPH DE; born at Cham-bery, 1st April, 1753; died at his seat in mont, 26th February, 1821. De Maistre, passed through the overthrow of Europe, as his native State the subject of most opposite tunes, had his mind naturally turned to affairs; and, as he was a man of unquested energy and superior genius, and gifted at the time with unusual powers of written expression, we are not surprised to find him one of the distinguished literateurs of that strange but brilliant period: he was the main stay, if not the centre, of a peculiar but influential school. Assured in purpose, with DE BONALD, D'ECKSTEIN, LANCHE, and at first with LA MENNA, Maistre may be held the most powerful and representative of a system, to which the history of the Revolution and Empire, as well as in France still more recent, have given much authority and colourable support: it is the system that societies and the world must be governed by absolute and unquestioned power,—founded, not on the theological tenet that terror is the confessed and principal arm of the Supreme Being. The logical foundations of a system so founded, from wanting in partizans, may be seen best in the Soirees de St. Petersbourg, a work displaying the best advantage De Maistre's remarkable mind and executed, while, at the northern capital, the austerity and dignity of a Stoic, he represented the court of Piedmont—reduced to that poor isle of Sardinia. The Soirees de St. Petersbourg, are volumes, which it is salutary to read. They carry out without hesitation or shrink even to their utmost consequences, doctrines which partially influence a large number even of our reflecting minds: 'Sovereignty and chastity,' he says, 'are the two methods by which God reveals himself to mankind:' he tells us that the hangman is only a delegate of Providence, that the way to Order, is, force and absolutism, and simple: it is very painful to add, that God he worships, or rather the Idea on which he has bestowed apotheosis, is a being under the less dominion of irritation and vengeance, and no relations to that august Spirit, whose rays are imprinted on the abstract forms of our human intelligence, and the Instincts of the human Heart, as well as bodied forth by that Religion in the sentiment of which we live. It were very unjust to attribute these revolting practical dogmas, to personal hardness in De Maistre; neither is the origin wholly, in the disgust and apprehension caused by the excesses and confusion of which he had been a deploring witness. Much more in the present case, they sprung from that intense as to the existence of evil, which in the face of a certain order, takes the place of impotence with evil itself, and inclines them, alike to politics and theology, to cherish what appears the strongest and speediest means—no matter how impracticable—for its eradication. With regard to the first place to secular politics, no other method of authority has the merit of simplicity, but the gist of the question is, where is the efficient authority? De Maistre unhesitatingly replies—THE POPE!—a solution not likely to be accepted in this country. Neither, in the history of History, in which we have seen great things spring up, and suddenly possess themselves er, is the example germane; for in by far the majority of instances—nay, in every instance in which their functions were beneficent—with Caesar, with Cromwell, with Napoleon, these men were powerful not because they wore the diadem, but because they at once led and obeyed: their Genius grasped tendencies and comprehended the necessities of the Age, and so could give utterance to the WILL of the People. We protest, equally, against all such conclusions, in their bearing on the providence of God. The mystery of the existence of evil we cannot fathom; we venture on no Theodiceë: but it is not true that the Almighty Sovereign rules by terror, or that man's salvation can come other than through the depths of his Love.—Like persons of one idea, the writers of whom we speak are dogmatists: to which, they owe no slight portion of their influence and apparent force. But though a cause of momentary success, energy of this kind involves no enduring power: the world is on more than one idea, and as it rolls, makes havoc with the pedantries of Dutch gardening. Two volumes of De Maistre's letters, chiefly from St. Petersburg, have been published since his death. They are worth more than all his philosophy. They are instinct with acuteness, and offer opinions of a keen observer, on the men and events of that great period of history: his relations with Napoleon are especially interesting. They reveal too, the private character of De Maistre; and the rigidity and gloom of the Creed utterly fail to obliterate the soft affections of the man.

[J.F.N.]

MAISTRE, LOUIS ISAAC LE. See SACI.
MAITLAND, SIR FREDERICK LEWIS, rear-admiral, commander of the Bellerophon, sent to the French coast, and prevent the escape of Napoleon after the battle of Waterloo, was born 1777, and greatly distinguished himself in the Egyptian expedition under Sir Ralph Abercromby. Received Napoleon on board the Bellerophon, after refusing all conditions, on the 15th of July, 1818. Died, commander-in-chief in the East Indies, on board his flag-ship, the Wellesley, 1839.
MAITLAND. The noble Scotch family of this name boasts of several celebrated persons:—1. SIR RICHARD MAITLAND, a poet, and keeper of the great seal in the reign of Queen Mary, known as one of the extraordinary lords of Session by the title of Lord Lethington, 1496-1586. 2. SIR WILLIAM MAITLAND, his eldest son, secretary to Queen Mary. 3. JOHN MAITLAND, lord of Thirlstoun, second son of Sir Richard, secretary to James VI., and chancellor of Scotland, known also as a writer of Scottish and Latin poetry, born about 1587, died 1595. 4. JOHN, grandson of the late duke of Lauderdale, a partizan of Charles II., appointed secretary of state and high commissioner of Scotland after the restoration, 1616-1682. James, earl of Lauderdale, eldest son of James, the tenth earl. See LAUDERDALE.
MAITLAND, W., a Scotch antiquary, 1693-1757.
MONTAIGNE, M., a French savant, 1668-1747.
MEROY, PAUL GIDEON JOLY DE, a gallant officer, kn. as a wr. on tactics, 1719-1780.
MIZERES, PH. DE, a Fr. knight, who became chancellor to Peter I., king of Cyprus, 1312-1405.
MO, FRANCESCO, or CICCIO DI, an Italian composer of operas and sacred music, 1740-1773.

MAJOR, or MEIER, G., a German theologian, auth. of commentaries on the evangelists, 1502-74.
MAJOR, ISAAC, a German painter, 1576-1630.
MAJOR, or MAIR, JOHN, a Scottish divine, author of a 'History of Scotland,' &c., 1469-1547.
MAJOR, J. D., a Ger. antiquarian, 1634-1693.
MAJORIAMOS, FLAVIUS JULIUS VALERIUS, a Roman officer, proclaimed emperor at Ravenna 457, compelled to abdicate, and died 461.
MAKAROF, a Russian author, 1775-1804.
MAKKARY, AHMED BEN AL, an Arabian historian of the Mahomedans in Spain, 1585-1631.
MAKO, PAUL, a Hungarian philos., 1723-1793.
MAKOUSI, J., a Polish divine, 1588-1644.
MAKRIZI, an Egyptian historian, 1360-1442.
MALACHI, the last of the prophets, 408 B.C.
MALACHI, ST., archbp. of Armagh, 1094-1148.
MALACHOWSKI, STANISLAUS, a Polish statesman, and fellow patriot of Kosciusko, born 1735, president of the diet 1788-1792, president of the senate after the peace of Tilsit 1807, died 1809. His brother, HYACINTH, a partizan of Russia, disting. in promoting the ruin of Poland 1793.
MALAGRIDA, GABRIEL, an Italian Jesuit and missionary to Brazil, who was accused of conspiring against the king of Portugal, and, finally, condemned by the inquisition as a heretic, and burnt alive in 1761. Malagrida laid claim to visions, and published 'The Life of St. Anne, composed (as the title reads) with the assistance of the Blessed Virgin and her Most Holy Son,' 1689-1761.
MALALA, J., a Greek historian, 6th century.
MALAPERT, C., a learned Jesuit, chiefly dist. by his mathematical writings, 1581-1630.
MALAVAL, F., a French violinist, 1627-1719.
MALAVAL, J., a French surgeon, 1669-1758.
MALCOLM, the first of the name, king of Scotland, succeeded 943, and was killed in an insurrection 958. The second reigned about 1003-1033. The third, called St. Malcolm, son of Duncan who was murdered by Macbeth, recovered his throne 1057, and was killed in battle with the English 1093. The fourth reigned 1153-1165.
MALCOLM, JAMES PELLER, an engraver and antiquarian, born in America, and brought to London in the eighth year of his age, where he died 1815. He is known for his works descriptive of the ancient state of the metropolis, &c.
MALCOLM, SIR JOHN, an East Indian officer and diplomatist, distinguished as the founder of our political relations with the court of Persia, governor of Bombay from 1827 to 1831, author of a 'History of Persia,' 'A Sketch of the Sikhs,' and other works relating to Indian affairs, 1769-1833.
MALDEGHEM, P. DE, a Flem. poet, 1540-1611.
MALDONAT, J., a Spanish Jesuit, 1534-1583.
MALEBRANCHE, NICOLAS, born in Paris, 1638, died 13th October, 1715: author of Meditations, and the Recherche de la Vérité: through the clearness and surpassing beauty of his style, and the originality of his conceptions, deservedly ranking among the foremost littérati of France: one of the most famous, and at the same time among the least sound metaphysicians of that country. Starting from that fundamental mistake, which misled a far greater man—SPINOZA, viz.: the error of Des Cartes regarding the idea of Substance, (article LEIBNITZ), he fell into a scheme quite as fantastic as Spinoza's, although

[J.P.N.]

[J.H.B.]

454

as one of the fossils of literary history. It is worth mentioning, that Gibbon's father had one of Mallet's relatives when the historian was about ten years old; d. 1765. [E.R.]
MALLET, EDMUND, a French divine, and author of the Belles Lettres, translator of Davila's History of the Civil Wars, and a writer in the Encyclopædia, 1713-1755.

MALLET, F., a Swedish mathematician and astronomer, b. of a family of Fr. refugees, 1720-80.

MALLET, J. A., a Swiss astronomer, 1740-90.

MALLET, J. R., a French economist, died 1786.

MALLET, P., a French military engineer, known as the author of a new orthography, born 1630.

MALLET, PAUL HENRY, a famous antiquarian and historian, first professor of history in the native city of Geneva, afterwards professor of the Belles Lettres at Copenhagen, &c., author of the Northern Antiquities, translated by Bishop Hall, and several histories of the northern kingdom, 1730-1807. His son, H. MALLET-PREVOT, a geographer, 1727-1811.

MALLET-DUPAN, J., a native of Geneva, known as a royalist and political writer at the period of the French revolution, when he was part conductor of the 'Mercur de France.' On seeking an asylum in London, he edited an anti-Gallican paper, called the 'Mercur Britannique,' published in 1792 and 1799. He is the author of works also in history and polite literature. He died at the house of his friend, Lally-Tolledal, at Richmond, in 1800.

MALVILLE, CLAUDE DE, a French poet, member of the Academy, 1597-1647.

MALMESBURY, JAMES HARRIS, earl of, son of James Harris, the author of 'Hermes,' known as the servant of the English court from 1767 to the close of the century. He is author of 'Diaries and correspondence,' published in 1844. Born at Salisbury 1746, died 1820.

MALMSBURY, WILLIAM OF, a famous English historian of the 12th century, was born in Somersetshire about 1096, and is known to have been within the year 1143. He held the office of librarian and precentor in the monastery of Malmesbury, of which he had become an inmate. His works are a general history of England from the arrival of the Saxons to 1126, a church history, 'Antiquities of Glastonbury,' &c., which are all highly esteemed as trustworthy chronicles.

MALO, VINCENT, an Ital. painter, 1625-1670.

MALOMBRA, P., a Venet. painter, 1556-1618.

MALONE, EDMUND, the well-known editor of Shakespeare, was the son of an Irish judge, and was born at Dublin, 1741. He was called to the bar in 1767, but possessing an ample fortune gave up the law to literature. He was the coadjutor of Johnson in an edition of Shakspeare, but having quarrelled with him, published an edition of the same in 11 vols. 8vo, 1790. Died 1812.

MALOUET, P. V., a Fr. statesman, 1740-1814.

MAQUIN, P. J., a Fr. chemist, 1701-1778.

MALPIGHI, MARCELLO, an eminent anatomist and physiologist, more especially distinguished for his researches in vegetable physiology, was born at Bologna in 1628. He died in 1694. He studied medicine at Bologna, took his degree there, in 1656 was appointed professor of physic in the University. He afterwards successively filled the chairs of medicine at Pisa and Messina, and ultimately was called to Rome by Pope Innocent XII., and was made his physician and chancellor. Malpighi lived at a time when physiological inquiries were prosecuted earnestly and with success; when nature had begun to be studied instead of books; and when the dreams of the schools were giving place to practical inquiries and observations. He had early in life learned the necessity of making experiment the foundation of true philosophy, and was the first to use the microscope in anatomical observations. While prosecuting his anatomical inquiries connected with the animal kingdom, he was led to pay attention to the anatomy and physiology of vegetables. The structure and physiology of plants had hitherto been but little attended to. On these subjects, however, Malpighi has shown himself an original as well as a profound observer; and his excellent work on the Anatomy of Plants proves him to be possessed of merit of the highest kind. Succeeding botanists have not failed to draw largely upon his rich store of facts and observations, for his illustrations of the anatomy and external configuration of plants were found to be no less faithful than original. Plumier has named a genus of plants after him, Malpighia. [W.B.]

MALTE-BRUN, CONRAD, or MALTE-CONRAD BRUN, one of the most distinguished geographers of modern times, and almost equally famous as a writer in favour of free institutions, was born in Jutland 1775, and died in Paris, a political exile from his country, 1826. Besides his important geographical works, and contributions to the 'Biographie Universelle,' he edited the foreign politics of the 'Journal des Debats,' and acquired some reputation as a poet.

MALTHUS, THOMAS ROBERT, was born at the Rookery near Guildford in 1766. He studied at Jesus College, Cambridge, where he took a master's degree in 1797. He took orders soon afterwards, and held a small living in Surrey. He married in 1805, and was soon afterwards appointed professor of history and political economy in the East India College at Haileybury, an office which he held till his death. Few men have lived a more calm and quiet personal life, and few have created a greater storm of conflicting opinion in the world without. It was in the year 1798 that he first published the views with which his name is ever associated, in his 'Essay on the principle of Population,' as it affects the future improvement of Society.' He improved and matured the work in subsequent editions, and interwove its special opinions with a general view of political economy. Now that the controversial storm has passed away, his doctrines may be dispassionately appreciated. No one doubts his fundamental principle that the amount of the human race must be in a proportion to the amount of food which can be procured for their support. But instead of drawing from this an injunction to mankind to throw their energies into productiveness, and prepare for an increasing population an increased and sufficient provision, the tone of his argument seemed to tend to the necessity of preventing increase, from the dread that it might outdo the production of food. In truth, though a very sagacious writer in general, he omitted the influence of free trade, which puts all the world at the command of an increasing and producing people. Malthus published several pamphlets, and other works of temporary interest. He died on 29th December, 1834. [J.H.B.]

MALTON, THOMAS, an English artist and writer on geometry and perspective, author of 'A Picturesque Tour through London and Westminster,' &c., 1726-1801.

MALUS, STEPHEN LOUIS, a French physician and natural philosopher, celebrated as the discoverer of the polarization of light, 1775-1812.

MALVASIA, C. C., an Ital. art-writer, 1616-93.

MALVEUDA, T., a Span. Hebraist, 1566-1628.

MALVEZZI, VIRGILIO, marquis of, a Spanish statesman, and comment. on Tacitus, 1599-1654.

MAMBRUN, PETER, a learned French Jesuit, known as a Latin poet and critic, 1600-1661.

MAMMEA, JULIA, empress of Rome, and mother of Alexander Severus, murdered 235.

MAN, C. DE, a Dutch painter, 1621-1706.

MAN, JAMES, a learned schoolmaster of Aberdeen, editor of an edition of the works of George Buchanan, and party to a controversy with Ruddiman, another editor of the poet, died 1761.

MANAHAM, a Galilean adventurer, killed 66.

MANAHEM, a famous disciple of the Essenes, who predicted the reign of Herod the Great.

MANAHEN, or MANAHEM, the sixteenth king of Israel, reigned ten years, 11th century B.C.

MANARD, P., an Italian poet, 1714-1800.

MANARDI, G., an Ital. physician, 1462-1536.

MANASSEH, the eldest son of Joseph, and father of one of the tribes, about 1714 B.C.

MANASSEH, a king of Judah, 968-913 B.C.

MANASSEH, the high priest of the Jews, who went over to his father-in-law, Sanballat, and built the rival temple at mount Gerizim, 6th c. B.C.

MANASSEH-BEN-ISRAEL. See MENASSEH.

MANASSES, a Greek writer of the 12th cent.

MANBY, PETER, an Irish catholic wr., d. 1697.

MANCHESTER, EARL OF. See MONTAGU.

MANCO CAPAC, the founder and legislator of the Peruvian empire, supposed to have flourished in the 12th century. Another inca of Peru, named Manco, succeeded his brother, who was put to death by Pizarro 1533, and after some years of warfare was killed by the Spaniards.

MANDAR, JEAN FRANCOIS, a French priest of the Oratory, author of several pleasing poems in Latin and French, and distinguished for his virtues and talents as a pastor, 1732-1803.

MANDAR, MICHEL PHILLIPE, generally called 'Theophilus,' was nephew to the preceding, and is worthy of honourable mention beyond many of the most noted characters of the French Revolution. He was born in 1759, and acquired great influence among the popular societies, by devoting his powerful oratory to the cause of progress. During the massacres of September, 1792, he was vice-president of the section of the Temple, and did all in his power to prevent the effusion of blood. He went to Danton's house on the evening of the 3d, and, nearly all the leading men being assembled there, including Petion, Robespierre, Manuel, Fabre D'Eglantine, and Camille Desmoulins, he urged upon them the immediate creation of a Dictature, and offered to take the risk of the proposal on himself. Jealousy of one another prevented the adoption of this suggestion, and Mandar reproached Robespierre with his hatred of Brisot. In 1793 he was appointed Commis to the executive power. He survived the public, but refused to accept any place under imperial government. The fame of his works and his political independence induced the Emperor Alexander to procure an interview with him in 1814, and observing Mandar's short stature could not avoid expressing his surprise. 'I replied this republican fire-eater, 'Il n'y a si petit que l'étincelle.' (There is nothing but a spark.) He is author of many poetical, historical, and miscellaneous works, and of poems, evincing great genius and strong expression. Died 1823.

MANDER, C. VAN, a poet and paint., 1548.

MANDEVILLE, BERNARD DE, born at in Holland, about 1670, was a physician by profession, who came to England and acquired notoriety by his work entitled 'The Fable of Bees, or Private Vices made Public Ben- This book created quite a sensation by its intendency, and was replied to by several English writers, among others, by Bishop Berkeley, Hutcheson, and William Law. The dates of works published on either side range from 1690 to 1732. Mandeville died 1733.

MANDEVILLE, SIR JOHN DE, was born at St. Albans about the year 1300. His family of considerable note, and his education like the times. He seems to have practised the law as a profession, till in 1827 he left England and entered upon his travels. These, he extended through thirty-four years, and to the country of the East; but the account which has given contains so many inaccuracies, contradictions, and childish absurdities, that it attaches to the whole, and it is now generally held as of no value. His descriptions, however, like those of Marco Polo, had a powerful influence on the mind of Columbus.

MANES. See MANICHAÆUS.

MANESSE, J., a French naturalist, 1743.

MANETHO, an Egyptian historian, who was high priest of Heliopolis, in the reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus, about 304 B.C. Only fragments of his work, as cited by Josephus in his book 'Antiquities,' are now extant. These are collected by Cory, and they consist of an account of the Egyptian empire and of the expulsion of a body of foreigners, who were called Hycsos, or shepherd kings, supposed to be Jews, besides several tables of ancient Egyptian kings.

MANETTI, G., an Italian historian, 1356.

MANETTI, R., an Italian painter, 1571.

MANETTI, X., an Italian naturalist, 1717.

MANFREDI, B., an Italian painter, 1572.

MANFREDI, EUSTACHIO, an Italian astronomer, astronomer, and literary savant, 1664.

His brother, GABRIEL, a mathematician, 1681-1740.

MANFREDI, or MAINFROY, king of Sicily, was a natural son of the Emperor Frederic II, who usurped the kingdom of Sicily, he had been appointed regent in 1255, and killed, fighting against his rival, 1266.

MANGEART, T., a Fr. numismatist, 1695.

MANGENOT, L., an ecclesiast. wr., 1694.

MANGET, J. J., a medical historian, 1652.

MANGHEY, T., an English divine, 1684.

MANGIN, C., a French architect, 1721.

MANGIN, CL., a French politician, 1786.

MANGOU-KHAN, emperor of the Moguls, died 1250, killed in China 1259.

MANICHAËUS, MANES, or MANI, was a Persian of the third century, and educated in the religion of Zoroaster. Some affirm that he derived the germs of his doctrine from a Saracen merchant named Scythianus. His object was to incorporate Zoroastrian dualism with Christianity. The fervour of his fanaticism he gave himself out to be the Paraclete promised in the gospel of John, by which he understood, not the Holy Ghost, as many have erroneously imagined, but a power commissioned to diffuse and perfect Christianity, and free it from the vile corruptions of the genius Ahriman. This dualism, common to the East, was a mystic attempt to account for the origin and perpetuation of moral evil. (See MANICHÆISM). Manes appeared as a religious teacher under Sapor I. As a man of multifarious accomplishment he attracted great attention; but the hostility of the magi forced him to a speedy exile. He wandered into distant countries still pursuing his mission, and in the East his contact with Buddhism gave new shape and tinge to his eclectic views. On his return to Persia with a collection of painted Oriental symbols, Hormisdas received him and his theosophic pictures with welcome, but after his successor Varanes, Manes was apprehended, and according to an Oriental form of punishment, flayed alive, while his skin was stuffed and hung up before the gate of the city. His system spread over various portions of the church, and Angustin was for a season fascinated by its speculations. [J.E.]

MANILIUS, CATIUS, a Roman tribune, B.C. 68. MANILIUS, MARCUS, a Rom. poet, 1st c. B.C. MANLEY-DE-LA-RIVIERE. The authoress of this name was a daughter of Sir Roger Manley, the reputed author of 'The Turkish Spy,' and was born at Guernsey, of which her father was governor. Besides her dramatic writings and romances, one libel she penned in that form, she was employed as a political writer by the ministry of the day and continued the 'Examiner' when it was relinquished by Swift. Died, after a life of intrigue and pleasure, 1724.

MANLIUS. Four illustrious Romans of this name are mentioned:—1. MARCUS MANLIUS CAPELLINUS, a patrician general, who saved the capital when surprised by the Gauls about 390 or 392 B.C. and was thrown from the Tarpeian Rock 370 B.C. 2. LUCIUS MANLIUS IMPERIOSUS, named torquatus, and compelled to abdicate for his despotism, B.C. 363. 3. TITUS MANLIUS TORQUATUS, himself the preceding, famous for his magnanimity and courage, was appointed military tribune B.C. 360 and dictator 352, and again 348, without passing through the inferior dignity of consul. The latter office, however, he filled in 347, 344, and 340, but finally lost his popularity by the rigour of his administration. 4. A second TITUS MANLIUS TORQUATUS, who was appointed consul B.C. 295 and 294, and, in the latter period, closed the temple of Janus after subjugating Sardinia. He refused to accept the consulate in 212, but was censor in 209.

MANN, A. T., a Flem. antiquarian, 1740-1810.

MANNERS, JOHN, marquis of Granby, a British officer, who distinguished himself in Germany and at the battle of Prince Ferdinand of Brunswick, and was afterwards a member of the government, and commander-in-chief of the army, 1721-1770.

MANNERT, C., a Bavar. historian, 1756-1834.

MANNI, D. M., an Ital. antiquar., 1690-1788.

MANNING, O., an Eng. antiquar., 1721-1801.

MANNING, T., a disting. linguist, 1774-1840.

MANNOZZI, G., an Ital. painter, 1590-1636.

MANRIQUE, A., a Span. prelate, 1577-1649.

MANRIQUE, S., a Span. mission., 17th cent.

MANSART, FRANCIS, a celebrated French architect of Italian origin, 1598-1666. His nephew and pupil, JULES HARDOUIN, called MANSART, architect of Versailles, &c., 1645-1708.

MANSFELD, PETER ERNEST, count of, an Austrian statesman and soldier, governor of the Low Countries after the death of the duke of Parma, 1517-1604. His natural son, ERNEST, also count of Mansfeld, and an enemy of the Austrian empire, called the Attila of Christendom, 1585-1626.

MANSFIELD, WILLIAM MURRAY, earl of, was born in Perthshire on the 2d of March, 1705. He was the fourth son of Viscount Stormont, and the vehement jacobitism of his family, some members of it being deeply involved in the rebellion of 1745, not only cast difficulties in the way of his early career, but was often successfully employed in debate by Chatham and his other opponents. He studied at Westminster and Christ's Church, Oxford. He was called to the bar in 1731. He wrote in his youth some poetry justly forgotten, but perhaps common tastes and pursuits may have been the foundation of that intimacy with Pope, which seems to have had a material influence on his prospects. Though no poet, he was essentially a man of genius. He cast entirely away the conventionalities of a Scottish jacobite, and entered the arena of English politics and professional ambition, with a talent and energy which gave him the full advantage of his aristocratic rank and signal personal graces. A new class of business—that of appeals from the Court of Session in Scotland, to the House of Lords, fell largely into his hands; and Pope has noticed him in a line more distinct than poetic, as 'so known, so honoured, in the House of Lords.' He became Solicitor-General in 1743, but it was not until 1754 that he took the next step in promotion as Attorney-General. In 1756, he was made Chief-Justice of the King's Bench. He clung tenaciously to this office, and would not take the risks and responsibilities of the Chancellorship at the demand of public or party spirit. His name has not been popular as a judge, and he has generally been contrasted with Camden as one who inherited the despotic spirit of the Stuart dynasty. The prejudice was confirmed by his courageous conduct in the Wilkes' outrages and furnished a text for the savage attacks of Junius, who spoke of him as a fitting Pretor for Justinian. But, however narrow some of his opinions may have been, others partook of a large liberality, and in the anti-catholic fervour connected with the outbreak known as Lord George Gordon's riots, he showed a humane, generous, and courageous toleration. He was a very great lawyer, not merely in a technical sense, but as one who could direct the practice of the courts towards broad principles of jurisprudence. Many departments in the mercantile law of England and Scotland were created by him, and among others the law of marine insurance was made and systematized by his decisions. He retired from office in 1788, and died in 1793. [J.H.B.]

MANSI, J. D., an Italian savant, 1692-1769.

MANSION, COLARD, a writer and printer, celebrated for introducing the art into Bruges, d. 1484.

MANSTEIN, CHRIS. HERMAN DE, a Russian general, au. of a 'Memoir' on Russia, 1711-1757.

MANT, RICHARD, a famous Irish prelate, was born at Southampton, where his father held a living in the church, 1776, and began his ecclesiastical career as vicar of Coggeshall, in Essex, in 1810. In 1820 he became bishop of Killaloe; in 1823 bishop of Down and Connor; and in 1842 was translated to the see of Dromore. He died in 1848. The works of Dr. Mant consist of a vast number of sermons and tracts, but his celebrity rests on an edition of the Bible, which he prepared in conjunction with Dr. D'Oyley.

MANTEGNA, ANDREA, an eminent painter of Mantua, whose two sons, one of whom was named FRANCESCO, and his father, CARLO, were also artists, and fellow-workers with him, 1430-1505.

MANTICA, F., an Italian cardinal, 1534-1614.

MANTON, T., a nonconformist divine, 1620-77.

MANTOVANO, BATTISTA SPAGNUOLI, an elegant Latin poet, better kn. as Battista, 1448-1516.

MANU, the supposed author of the Mánava Sástra, one of the sacred books of the Hindoos, containing a code of laws, is supposed by Sir William Jones to be the same as Minos in the Grecian mythology. There are fourteen Menus, of whom this one is the seventh. The name belongs to mythology rather than biography.

MANUEL COMMENUS, fourth son of John Commenus, born 1120, succeeded his father as emperor of the East 1143, d. 1180. See COMMENUS.

MANUEL PALEOLOGUS, born 1349, succeeded his father, John Palæologus, as emperor of the East 1391, died 1425.

MANUEL, F., a Portuguese poet, 1734-1819.

MANUEL, JAMES ANTHONY, a famous leader of the opposition in the French chamber after the restoration, was born in Provence 1755, and after serving with distinction in the republican armies raised by the levy en masse, adopted the profession of the bar. He was a member of the chamber convoked by Napoleon during the hundred days, 1815, and with all his eloquence and power resisted the re-establishment of the Bourbons by the allied armies. Returned to the chamber in 1818, his patriotic fervour in the tribune, his high spirit, and his brilliant oratory, marked him out as the champion of French liberty, and kept the party of the ministers in continual terror. His first speech in the session of 1823 was on the iniquity of the Spanish war, in which he reminded the crown that when the French territory was invaded under similar circumstances, the country had defended itself by the adoption of new forms and another energy! This allusion to the destruction of royalty in 1793, exploded the mine which had long been prepared for his expulsion from the chamber, and, on refusing to depart, he was led out into the street by the military. His walk home, followed by the whole of his party, was a popular triumph; and though he returned, with the simplicity and dignity of a Cincinnatus, to his own occupations, he was elected again in 1824. Manuel died three years before the triumph of his cause in the Charles X., 1827.

MANUEL, LOUIS PETER, born 1741, an attorney-general to the commune of Paris in the revolution, and was executed November 14, MANUEL, N., a Swiss fresco painter at tire and dramatic poet, 1484-1530.

MANUTIUS, or MANUZIO, is the name of an Italian family famous in the history of printing for their beautiful editions of learned works, the invention of the Italic or Aldine letter, and have been formed in imitation of the handwriting of Petrarch. ALDO PIO MANUZIO, the founder, flourished at Venice, 1447-1515. PAOLO, his distinguished like his father both as a scholar and printer, 1512-1574. ALDO, the youngest son of Paolo, distinguished like his progenitor and greatly favoured by the pope, Sextus Quintus, who gave him apartments in the Vatican, born at Venice 1547, and died childless 1597.

MANVEL, FRANCIS. See MANUEL.

MANWOOD, SIR ROGER, an English jurist, this name flourished in the reign of Elizabeth I. He is said by Fuller to have written a book of the forest laws. He died 1593. Such a book first published in 1598 by JOHN MANWOOD is supposed to be the son of Sir Roger.

MANYOKI, A. DE, a Hung. painter, 1741-

MANZI, W., an Italian savant, 1784-1821.

MANZOLI, P. A., a Latin poet, 16th cen.

MANZUOLI, T., an Italian painter, 1536-

MAPES, WALTER, an English poet, 12th cen.

MAPLET, JOHN, a learned naturalist, 1611-

MAPLETOFT, J., a medical wr., 1631-1701.

MAPLETOFT, R., a learned divine, 1610-

MAPP, M., a French botanist, 1632-1701.

MARA, ELIZABETH, a fam. singer, 1750-

MARA, W. DE, a Latin poet, 1470-1530.

MARACCI, J., an Italian painter, 1637-1701.

MARACCI, L., an Ital. Orientalist, 1612-

MARAI, H., a French engraver, 1764-1815.

MARAI, M., a French composer, 1656-1715.

MARALDI, J. P., an Italian mathematician, astronomer, and natural philosopher, 1665-1715. His nephew, GIOVANNI DOMENICO, also distinguished as an astronomer, 1709-1788.

MARAN, P., a French theologian, 1683-1741.

MARANA, J. P., an Italian historian, 1641-

MARANGONI, J., an Ital. antiquar., 1673-

MARANTA, B., an Italian botanist, 1611-

MARAT, JEAN PAUL, was born of parents unknown to history, at a place called Baudouville, Neuchâtel, Switzerland, 1746. Before his energies were directed to political ends, he had been ambitious of rising by his talents, travelled a good deal in England, Scotland, and France, and published several works on experimental science and philosophy. Some of these had brought his name into repute, and subjected him to the sarcasms of Voltaire, who took the pains to analyze his philosophical treatise on man—a work in which Marat had endeavored to illustrate the principles and laws of the influence of the body, and those of the body on the soul. The year 1789 found him in the position of veterinary physician to the Count D'Artois, thoroughly disgusted with his failure to rise in society, and with the 'quacks,' as he called the 'of the corps scientifique.' He began his political eer by the composition of his 'Offrande à la patrie,' followed by the issue of his journal 'Le publiciste Parisien,' two months after the promulgation of the 'Rights of Man' by the constituent assembly. The club agitation was just commencing, and Marat joined the cordeliers, formed in October, 1789, the most reputable members of which were Danton, and Camille Desmoulins. His thirst for glory, if it were only in the excess of his hatreds and crimes, provoked him to measures and proposals, which it was physically impossible any of his rivals could surpass in audacity, and gave to his denunciations a kind of heroic magnificence. Such was his proposal 'to hang the 800 deputies on 800 trees of the Tuileries—Mirabeau on the first of them,' for which he was denounced by Malouet. From this period, on the 10th of August, 1792, he was hunted by his accusers from one wretched abode to another—ways contriving to issue his journal, the title of which was presently changed to 'Friend of the People.' On the date just mentioned, the Tuileries was besieged, the royal family imprisoned, the new 'commune,' or municipality, formed of the republicans; Marat also emerged from his seclusion, and filled the prisons with the 'suspect,' who were disposed of by the massacres of September. On the evening of the 3d the famous circular was issued, calling upon the departments to imitate the example of the Parisians; it was signed by Marat, the chief promoter of these horrors, and his colleagues, ten in all, members of the Cité de Surveillance, afterwards the Committee of Public Safety. The convention being elected, Marat became a deputy, and his appearance in the assembly was the signal for Vergniaud and others to denounce his atrocities, and they read from the tribune his demand for 270,000 heads as a means of appeasing the country. The turbulence of such a sitting may easily be imagined. Marat made no attempt to deny the charge. It was his opinion, the result of the most rigid reputation he could make, and he was willing to shed a few drops of guilty blood to save millions of the innocent! After the execution of the king, the battle of Nerwinden was lost by Dumouriez, on 14 March, 1793, and Marat, always gigantic in his conceptions, accused all the generals of the act of treason, and sought to bring them to trial en masse. Meantime his struggle with the Girondins had increased in virulence, and they succeeded at last in summoning their terrible adversary before the revolutionary tribunal. This was one of the instruments set in action by the new party on the 10th of August: Marat went to his trial attended by vast crowds of the people, and his acquittal followed as a matter of course—not only so, but the people carried him to the convention in triumph, elevated on a rude palanquin, and covered with garlands as he proceeded on his way. He now assumed the dictatorship, that he had always advocated, though he still resided in his squalid apartment with the wife of his printer, who had been seduced by him, and who seems really to have loved him. On the 31st of May, 1793, he sounded the alarm bell, and with the aid of his seditious followers arrested the Girondin deputies, whose blood was avenged on the 13th of July following, by the hand of Charlotte Corday. (See BRISSOT, CORDAY.) The death of Marat was only hastened a few days by his assassination, for he was already consumed by a disgusting malady: and it is melancholy to add, that he was almost adored after his decease; his remains being deposited in the Pantheon with national honours, and an altar erected to his memory in the club of the cordeliers: these fanatics also claimed his heart, and preserved it in a golden urn. Our sketch would be essentially incomplete if we did not add that Marat was perfectly sincere, and, in fact, that he made his convictions his sole religion. He sold his bed to bring out the first numbers of his journal, and lived in poverty at a time when he could have amassed wealth by merely selling his silence. Such a life is far more instructive, even as an example of depravity, when facts like this are properly understood. There is such a thing as consistency, and a kind of devilish virtue, in guilt, which is as rare as heroism in well-doing, and history might be ransacked for a more striking instance of it than the brief political career of Marat. [E.R.]

MARATTI, CARLO, an Ital. painter, 1625-1713.

MARBACH, J. R., a Ger. actress, 1805-1837.

MARBECK, JOHN, organist of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, and the first composer of the cathedral service of the Church of England. He was au. also of a Scripture Concordance, for which he narrowly escaped the stake, time of Henry VIII.

MARCA, the name of two Italian painters, the earliest, J. B. LOMBARDELLI DELLA MARCA, flourished 1532-1587. The later, LACTANTIUS DELLA MARCA, born about 1553.

MARCA, PET. DE, a Fr. historian, 1594-1662.

MARCANTONIO, the most renowned of the Italian engravers, was born about 1480, at Bologna, and was the pupil of the celebrated painter and goldsmith Francia; his family name was Raimondi. Some of Marcantonio's earliest efforts were made at Venice, where he copied Albert Dürer's prints of 'The Life of the Virgin,' and of the 'Passion;' for up to this time no Italian engraver was to be compared with Dürer, whose prints became known in Italy after 1500. From Venice Marcantonio went to Rome, where he attracted the notice of Raphael, who largely employed him in the engraving of his designs: it is to his prints after Raphael that Marcantonio owes his present great reputation. There is a very fine collection of them in the British Museum. After the death of Raphael in 1520, Marcantonio was employed by Giulio Romano, and it was for engraving some lascivious designs by this painter that he was imprisoned by Clement VII. After the sack of Rome in 1527 he returned to Bologna, where he is supposed to have died about 1559, that being the last date on any of his prints; but the dates both of his birth and death are quite uncertain. Marcantonio's prints are distinguished for their delicate outlines and execution, and generally fine drawing; some of the original impressions, before the plates came into the hands of Barlachi and Salamanca, have realized enormous prices,—those with the names of these dealers are also valuable, the later are retouches and inferior. The 'Murder of the Innocents,' after Raphael, is perhaps the most celebrated of his plates, more than half of them are anonymous, but many are marked

M. or M.A., and M.A.F., joined as a cipher. Bartsch, in his Peintre Graveur, describes 383 prints by this engraver, but several of them are doubtless by his distinguished pupils, Agostino Veneziano, and Marco da Ravenna. Nagler, in his Künstler Lexicon, describes 395 prints. The original account of Marcantonio, of whom we know so little, is in Vasari's Lives, &c.; nothing biographical concerning this great engraver has been ascertained since Vasari. [R.N.W.]

MARCEAU, FRANCIS SEVERIN DESGRAVIERS, a celebrated republican general, whose military talents were only equalled by his generosity and humanity in the Vendean war; born at Chartres 1769, fell in action with the Austr. 1796.

MARCEL, N., a German painter, 1628-1683.

MARCEL, STEPHEN, the patriotic defender of Paris after the battle of Poitiers 1356, assass. 1358.

MARCEL, Sr., a bishop of Paris, died 440.

MARCEL, W., a Fr. chronologist, 1647-1708.

MARCELLINUS, a Greek chronicler, 6th cent.

MARCELLINUS, a pope and saint of Rome, suffered martyrdom time of Diocletian, 296-304.

MARCELLIS, O., a Dutch painter, 1613-1673.

MARCELLO, BENEDETTO, was born of noble parents at Venice in 1686. His father, Agostino Marcello, was a Venetian senator, and his mother, Paolina, was of the honourable family of Capello. Benedetto, having in early life received a thorough classical education, was committed to the care of his elder brother, Alessandro, who was a student of the mathematical sciences, natural philosophy, and music. Under this brother, the young Benedetto applied himself to music and poetry, and soon made such progress that he was placed under Francesco Gasparini, to receive instructions in the principles of musical science. In 1716 the first son of the emperor Charles VI. was born, and at the celebration of the event, which took place at Vienna, a grand serenata, composed by Marcello, was performed with great applause. After this he composed a mass, which was first performed in the church of Santa Maria della Calcesta, on the occasion of his brother's daughter taking the veil. He composed many other sacred works for the church of Santa Sophia, and was at the pains of instructing the clergy in the manner in which they were to be performed. In 1724, and the three following years, he wrote music for one, two, and three voices, for a paraphrase of the first seventy-five psalms, which are still remarkable for the scientific knowledge shown in their construction. Marcello was for many years a judge in the Council of Forty, and was for some years chamberlain and treasurer to the city of Brescia, where he died in the year 1739. He was buried with great pomp in the church of the fathers Minor Observants of St. Joseph of Brescia. [J.M.]

MARCELLO, N., a Venetian doge, 1473-1474.

MARCELLUS, the first of the name pope of Rome, 308-310; the second, a few weeks only, 1555.

MARCELLUS, the name of several noble Romans:—1. MARCUS CLAUDIUS MARCELLUS, famous for his victories over Hannibal and the Gauls, slain in battle against the former 208 B.C. 2. MARCUS CLAUDIUS MARCELLUS, of the same family, an opponent of Caesar in the senate, consul B.C. 51, assassinated 46. 3. MARCUS CLAUDIUS MARCELLUS, called the younger, son of Caius Marcellus and Octavia, the sister of Augustus. He was adopted by the latter and married daughter, Julia, but died aged eighteen, 23 B.C.

MARCET, ALEX., a physician of Geneva, naturalized in England, and known as an eminent philosopher, 1770-1822.

MARCH, AUSIAS, a Provençal poet, 15th cent.

MARCH, S., a Spanish painter, died 1666.

MARCHAND, L., a Fr. composer, 1669-1739.

MARCHAND, P., a Fr. bibliopole, 1671-1739.

MARCHAND, S., a Fr. navigator, 1750-1800.

MARCIANUS, emperor of the East, 391-395.

MARCILIUS, T., a German critic, 1548-1600.

MARCILLA, W. DA, a Fr. painter, 1476-1520.

MARCION, was born at Sinope in Pontus the middle of the second century. His father, according to some reports, not, however, well authenticated, was a bishop of the church in place. His belief in Oriental and dualistic encrusted with other and similar speculations was deemed by him compatible with Christianity, and he attempted to form a homogeneous theology out of both materials, assumed as articles of his creed, the eternal matter—the existence of a benign and holy God—and of a Demiurgus little less than Omnipotent, but dark and malignant, and his appropriate sphere in an attempted division of matter, for he created man, was the God of the Jewish race, and was to be overcome by the Messiah. Jesus, according to Marcion, had not, and could not have a humanity, for all matter is essentially sinful. His notions are the crude effects of an earnest mind to resolve inscrutable mysteries by the use of figments not only incomprehensible, but inconsistent and baseless. Marcion received as sacred only the writings of the apostle Paul, and he had a gospel which appears to have been an interpolated copy of that of Luke. To this was joined an austere and vigorous asceticism, which victory over appetite was to be secured.

MARCK, J. DE, a Ger. protestant, 1655-1720.

MARCUZZI, S., an Ital. ecclesiastic, 1725-1780.

MARDONIUS, a general in the army of Xerxes, and son-in-law of Darius, k. at Platea B.C. 480.

MARE, NICHOLAS DE LA, a French commissioner of police, distinguished as a writer on police economy 1639-1723.

MARE, PH. DE LA, a Fr. historian, 1615-1680.

MARE, P. B. LA, a Fr. diplomatist, 1753-1820.

MARECHAL, B., an eccles. savant, 1705-1780.

MARECHAL, G., a Fr. surgeon, 1658-1720.

MARECHAL, P. S., a Fr. writer, 1750-1820.

MARELIUS, NILS, a Swed. geogr., 1706-1780.

MARET, HUGH BERNARD. See BASSA.

MARETS, ROLAND DES, a Fr. critic, 1594-1660.

MARETS, SAMUEL DES, a learned French testant, famous for his controversies with the Roman Catholics, 1591-1663.

MARGARET. The queens and princesses of Great Britain of this name are—1. ST. MARGARET, queen of Scotland, sister of Edgar Atheling, married to Malcolm 1070, died 1093. 2. MARGARET OF YORK, sister of Edward IV., married to duke of Burgundy. 3. MARGARET OF ANJOU, daughter of René, titular king of Sicily, Naples, and Jerusalem, born 1425, married to Henry

3, died, after a life of extraordinary vicissitude consequent on the wars of York and Lancaster, 12. 4. MARGARET OF SCOTLAND, daughter of James I., born 1425, died, after an unhappy marriage with Louis XI. of France, 1444. 5. MARGARET TUDOR, eldest daughter of Henry VII., Elizabeth of York, and sister to Henry VIII., born at Westminster 1489. This princess betrothed in her infancy to James IV. of Scotland, then of adult age, and married to him in 1506 she gave birth to a son, afterwards James V., and became regent of Scotland on the death of her husband at the battle of Hadden, 1513. In 1514 she married Archibald, 6th of Angus, of the family of Douglas. This match surrounded her with strife and trouble for the rest of her days, the first outburst of which was on the arrival of the duke of Albany, supported by the French king in 1515, soon after which Margaret took refuge in England. She died in 1537. Her life has been recently published by Mrs Strickland.

MARGARET. The saints of this name are the patron of Scotland, and a virgin martyr of Antioch, known as the patroness of Cremona, 3d century.

MARGARET. The queens and princesses of France are—1. MARGARET, daughter of Raymond Berengar, count of Provence, born 1219, married Louis IX. 1234, died, after acquiring a famous name by the defence of Damietta, 1285. 2. MARGARET OF BURGUNDY, married to Louis X., king of France, 1305, strangled for adultery 1315. 3. MARGARET OF VALOIS, sister of Francis I., born 1522, married in 1559 to the duke of Alençon, and died 1572, two years after the death of her first husband, to the king of Navarre, by whom she had Jeanne D'Albret, mother of Henry IV., died 1530. 4. MARGARET OF FRANCE, daughter of Henry II., born 1552, married to the prince of Bearne, afterwards Henry IV., 1572, divorced for her licentiousness 1599, died 1615. 5. MARGARET OF FRANCE, duchess of Savoy, daughter of Francis I., born 1523, married to Emmanuel Philibert 1559, died 1574.

MARGARET, queen of Norway, Denmark, and Sweden, who is often called 'the Semiramis of the North,' was the daughter of Waldemar III., king of Denmark, and was born at Copenhagen, 1353. In 1363 she was married to Haco, king of Norway, youngest son of Magnus Ericson, in whose person the governments of Sweden, Norway, and Scania, had been invested many years before. The marriage of Haco with Margaret took place under circumstances of great political difficulty, and it occasioned the banishment of twenty-four of the most powerful of the Swedish barons, by whom Haco and his son were afterwards deposed, and Art of Mecklenburgh placed on the throne. While the country was suffering from the oppression of this foreign government, Margaret lost, in 1380, her father, Waldemar; in 1380, her husband, Haco; and in 1387 her son, Olave—events which rendered her queen regnant in Norway, regent in Denmark, and in a situation to receive overtures from the Swedes. With a spirit and ambition natural to her, Margaret at once furnished her adherents with troops, and supplies of war, and the victory of Skillingen, won by the high marshal of Sweden, L. Kiellson, Sept. 21, 1389, threw open the door to her. The union of the three kingdoms was concluded by the treaty of Calmar, where the spiritual and temporal barons assembled for that purpose, on the 20th of July, 1397; Eric of Pomerania, the grand-nephew of Margaret, being elected her successor as the future sovereign of Sweden. She died in the port of Flensburg, on board a vessel in which she had embarked for Denmark, Oct. 28, 1412. Her memory has been execrated in Sweden, where the union was never popular, in about the same measure that her political virtues have been extolled in Denmark. The words of Geijer, the great Swedish historian, are sufficiently remarkable to be quoted on this point:—'The fate of the throne and the country was decided by the holders of power, from the casual motives of temporary interests, and by such was the famous union of the three northern kingdoms produced—a mere incident, which bears some resemblance to a design; but of a consciousness of what such a union was, or of what it might become, no glimpse is to be perceived, either among its founders or in any other quarter.' [E.R.]

MARGARET OF AUSTRIA, daughter of the emperor Maximilian I., born 1480, married successively to the Infant of Spain 1491-1497, and to Philibert, duke of Savoy, 1501-1506, became ruler of the Netherlands 1506, died 1531.

MARGARET OF CONSTANTINOPLE, daughter of Baldwin IX., became countess of Flanders and Hainault 1221, died 1279.

MARGARET OF PARMA, a natural daughter of Charles V., married successively to Alexander de Medicis and Octavian Farnese. The latter event took place in 1540. From 1559 to 1568 she was ruler of the Low Countries, and was succeeded by Alva. She then retired into Italy, and d. 1586.

MARGARET OF RICHMOND. See BEAUFORT. MARGARITONE, an Ital. painter, 1212-1289. MARGERET, a Fr. adventurer, 16th century. MARGGRAFF, A. S., a Ger. chemist, 1709-82. MARGGRAFF, G., a Ger. naturalist, 1610-44. MARGON, W. DE, a French author, died 1760. MARGUERIE, J. J. DE, a French officer and mathematician, 1742-1779.

MARGUERIT, J., a Spanish historian, cardinal, and chancellor of Arragon, died 1484. His grandson, JOSEPH DE MARGUERIT DE BIVRE, a general in the service of Louis XIII., died 1654.

MARGUERITE, JOSEPH MARIE SOLAR DE LA, a statesman, soldier, and historian, noted for the defence of Turin against the French in 1706.

MARGUNIO, M., an Ital. scholar, 1530-1602.

MARIA, F. DI, an Italian painter, 1623-1690.

MARIA, H., a painter of Bologna, 17th cent.

MARIA, JOHN, an Italian architect, 1458-1534.

His br., JAMES, a famous painter, dates unknown.

MARIA. See MARIE, MARY.

MARIA. The queens of Spain of this name are—MARIA DE MOLINA, queen of Castile and Leon, married to Sancho IV. 1282, regent of Castile 1295 and 1312, died 1322. MARIA LOUISA, daughter of the duke of Orleans, brother of Louis XIV., and of Henrietta of England, married to Charles II., king of Spain, 1662-1689. MARIA LOUISA, daughter of Victor Amadeus II., duke of Savoy, and wife of Philip V., 1688-1714. MARIA LOUISA, wife of Charles IV., and mother of Ferdinand VII., 1754-1819.

MARIA, empress of Germany, called MARIE

Ror, first wife of the emperor Sigismund, and daughter of Louis I., king of Hungary, born 1370, began to reign 1382, died 1395.

MARIA CAROLINE, queen of Naples. See CAROLINE.

MARIA FRANCES ELIZABETH, queen of Portugal, born 1734, became mistress of the kingdom at the death of her husband, Peter III., 1786, suffered by mental aberration 1790, died 1816.

MARIA LOUISA, second wife of Napoleon Buonaparte, daughter of Francis I., emperor of Austria, and Maria Theresa of Naples, was born 1791. In 1810 she was married to the emperor; in 1811 she presented him with an heir, who was hailed king of Rome; on his fall, in 1814, she deserted him for the company of her chamberlain, Count Neipperg, and became duchess of Parma and Placentia; died 1847.

MARIA THERESA, born in 1717, was the eldest daughter of Charles VI. of Austria, who died in 1740. The succession of Maria Theresa to the hereditary dominion of the House of Hapsburg had been guaranteed by the principal states of Europe; but, on her father's death, she found herself assailed by the kings of Prussia, France, Spain, and Sardinia, and the electors of Bavaria and Saxony. Each of these princes laid claim to some part of the Austrian territory; and Maria Theresa, at the age of 23, was called on to make head against the armies of all her neighbours, except the Turkish sultan, who alone acted towards her with fairness and good faith. Maria Theresa had been married in 1736, to Francis of Louvain, grand duke of Tuscany, but he was a prince of little intellect or energy; and it was to the spirit of Maria Theresa herself, and the loyalty of her Hungarian subjects, that Austria owed its rescue from destruction. When driven from her capital by her enemies, Maria Theresa repaired to Presburg, and summoned the Hungarian Diet. She appeared in the midst of the martial assembly with her infant son in her arms. She addressed them earnestly and eloquently in Latin, (a language long currently used in Hungary); and when she came to the words, 'The kingdom of Hungary, our persons, our children, our crown, are at stake,—forsaken by all, we seek shelter only in the fidelity, the arms, the hereditary valour of the renowned Hungarian nobility,' the Hungarian nobles and all present, with one unanimous burst of chivalrous loyalty, drew their swords, and shouted, 'Let us die for our King Maria Theresa,' [Moriamur pro rege nostro Mariâ Theresâ.] This was no transient demonstration of zeal. The whole military force of Hungary was soon in the field: the current of invasion was checked, and by degrees the foes of Maria Theresa made peace with her, and ceased to reckon on their shares in the dismemberment of Austria. She was obliged to cede Silesia to Frederick of Prussia; but with this exception she was left in full possession of her dominions, when the war of the Austrian succession was closed by the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle in 1758.—The loss of Silesia was a deep mortification to Maria Theresa, and the hope of recovering that province made her take an active part in the seven years' war against Frederick of Prussia. That contest, however, closed in 1763, leaving Prussia in possession of Silesia, and with no gain on either side to Maria Theresa or Frederick.

Maria Theresa's husband had been elected emperor of Germany in 1745, and on his death in 1765, son Joseph was chosen to succeed him. But Maria Theresa retained in her own hands, throughout life, the administration of her vast dominions, which were generally governed by her in a just and enlightened spirit. Her private character was irreproachable, and the morals and manners of the court formed a bright exception to the general profligacy by which the courts of nearly all the sovereigns of the age were disgraced. She was sincerely pious, and Botta, the Italian historian, passes on her the high eulogy, that 'during a years' reign she always showed a love of justice and truth.'—Her share in the first partition of Poland is the great stain on the character of Maria Theresa. But she came unwillingly into this measure, which was urged on her by the sovereigns of Prussia and Russia, and by her son the emperor Joseph. She is said to have left a written record that she consented to this measure of deference to the opinions of others, and that she foreboded evil consequences to Europe from an act of injustice to one of its states. Maria Theresa died in 1780. [E.]

MARIAMNE, an unfortunate Jewish princess, grand-daughter of Aristobulus, and of Hyrcanus, the high priest, and wife of Herod the Great. Her history is related by Josephus in his Antiquities, commencing at book xv., from which it appears that Herod was excessively fond of her. She was condemned to death, by the machinations of Salome, her husband's sister, on a false charge of adultery, B.C. 28. She met her fate with an air of greatness and intrepidity worthy of her noble ancestry, and was bitterly lamented by the king after her death. Another MARIAMNE, wife of Herod, was the daughter of Simon, the high priest, and mother of Herod Philip, who married Herodias.

MARIANA, JUAN, a Span. histor., 1557-1610.

MARIANI, C., an Italian painter, 1665-1690.

MARIANUS SCOTUS, born in Scotland, known as the author of a Chronicle from the beginning of the Christian era to 1083, which continued by Dodechinus to 1200. He was of an ecclesiastical profession, and died at Mayence.

MARIBAS CATHINA, the most ancient queen of Armenia, 2d century B.C.

MARIE. The queens of France of this name are—1. MARIE DE BRABANT, married to Philip VI., died 1321. 2. MARIE D'ANGLETERRE, daughter of Henry VII., who became the wife of Louis XII. 1214, died 1534.—See GENEVIEVE. 3. MARIE STUART.—See MARY. 4. MARIE DE MEDICIS.—See article next page. 5. MARIE THERESE, daughter of Philip IV., king of Spain, married to Louis XIV. 1660, died 1744. 6. MARIE LECZINSKA, daughter of Stanislas, king of Poland, born 1703, married to Louis XV. 1733, died 1768. 7. MARIE ANTOINETTE.—See following article. 8. MARIE LOUISE, wife of Napoleon. See MARIA LOUISA.

MARIE-ANTOINETTE, the unhappy queen of France, Louis XVI., was the daughter of Francis I., emperor Maria Theresa of Austria, and was married to Louis XVI. at Vienna, 1755. Though only fifteen years of age when she married the Dauphin, she was accomplished in the French, Italian, and Latin languages, besides her native German; and was also a but in music and drawing. The goodness of her heart, her noble carriage, and the sweet expression of her countenance, easily won the hearts of a people to whom enthusiasm is as natural as the air they breathe. Marie-Antoinette, becoming queen in 1773, was applauded to the skies whenever she appeared in public, and often had to stand on the steps of her carriage to show herself to the people. Her popularity was greatly augmented when she became the mother of a family, and especially when, in 1775, she presented the nation with an heir to the throne. Soon, however, the expensive luxury of the court, the exhaustion of the public finances, the distresses of the people, had prepared the way for scenes far different from these popular ovations, and the first shock was given to her popularity by a transaction involving both money and character. It had become known to the countess de la Follie, that the queen's jeweller had offered her a diamond necklace, which she declined on account of its enormous price, no less than 1,800,000 livres. To obtain possession of this treasure, the countess persuaded she was authorized to negotiate for the queen, and not only concluded the bargain, but invited the cardinal de Rohan a party to it, who was persuaded that Marie-Antoinette had given him a private meeting in the park of Versailles. The fraud was not discovered till the first payment was demanded, and though the countess, in May, 1786, was condemned to be whipped and branded for her infamous conduct, the queen never recovered the good opinion of her subjects; add to which, there was certain levity in her conduct which continually exposed her to scandal, though no one now doubts that she was guilty of the crimes laid to her charge. When the Revolution broke out in 1789, she became an object of the popular suspicion and hatred, chiefly on account of her Austrian connections; but, in a great degree, also, by reason of her high spirit and superior capability of resistance and action when compared with her husband, Louis XVI. It would be inconsistent with our plan, to describe the incidents which marked the progress of this hatred on the one side, and of her defiant defiance on the other. Marie-Antoinette was imprisoned in the Temple after the triumph of the republic, on the 10th of August, 1792; and there is reason to believe that the willingness of the royal family to submit themselves to their jailors, was owing to the persuasion that they had secured the assistance of Danton, and that they were really employing the means provided for their safety. The fanaticism of the populace, excited by Marat and his yrrmidons, and the coalition formed against France by the neighbouring powers, rendered such a promise, if it existed, of no effect. The king was executed on the 21st of January, 1793, and the 'Citizen Capet,' as Marie was called in the indictment, was tried by the revolutionary tribunal in the following October. She was only thirty-seven years of age, but her hair had turned white during her imprisonment, and her only articles of dress had become damp and ragged in the cell she occupied. Her eyesight was injured, and her beauty marred by age and long suffering. Her trial was only a mockery, but one of heartless brutality, and it is impossible to read without a feeling of disgust and indignation. Her hours of suffering developed the best traits of her character:

and Marie-Antoinette, on her way to the scaffold, commands the respect which might be challenged for her in vain, as the adviser of the feeble king, whose counsels she swayed, often but too fatally, yet always courageously. She was guillotined Oct. 16, 1793. [E.R.]

[The Conciergerie—the Prison of Marie Antoinette.]

MARIE DE MEDICIS, queen of France, was the daughter of Francis II., grand duke of Tuscany, and of Joan, archduchess of Austria. She was born at Florence in 1573. In 1600 she was married to Henry IV., and the year following gave birth to a son, who became Louis XIII., and whose deplorable weakness was the principal cause of her misfortunes. The amours of her husband rendered her life a most wretched one, and being of violent temper, she would frequently have struck him, had not the great Sully interposed between them. Her anxieties as a wife, and the absolute temper of Henry, prevented her from taking any part in state affairs during his lifetime, and when, towards 1610, he contemplated taking the field against the house of Austria, and proposed making her regent in his absence, she manifested the greatest repugnance to the subject, always saying that it foreboded some great misfortune. In the year just mentioned, Marie agreed to the regency, on condition of being formally crowned; a ceremony which the king had always deferred; and this being done, the latter was stabbed on the day following, by Ravaillac, when preparing for the queen's entry into Paris (article NAVARRE). The queen regent had lately acted under the advice of Concini, an Italian favourite, whom she presently created a marshal of France, and honoured with the marquise of d'Ancre; and she also retained among her advisers the duke d'Epemon, who was suspected of being privy to the assassination. Her apathy in regard to the investigation of this deed of blood, has stained her memory with the suspicion of being implicated in it, but there is really no other ground for supporting such a charge, and the hatred of the French would seem to have magnified all her faults. From 1610 to 1614 the court was a focus of intrigue and anarchy, which the queen had too little statesmanship, and too much of passion to rule; and parties were arraying themselves for the struggle which all foresaw in the estates-general. That body assembled in October, of the last mentioned year, and now the afterwards famous Richelieu placed himself at the head of the clergy, and began to feel his way to power. The boy king, this year, was declared of age, and the factious nobles, who surrounded him, filled his ears with rumours of Italian treachery, the issue of which was, that the queen relied entirely on Concini, who raised troops for her defence, and created a natural jealousy of Italian domination in France. Thus strengthened, in 1616, Marie de Medicis imprisoned Condé, the most turbulent and daring of her enemies, in the Bastille, and hurled defiance at the nobles in full assembly. In 1617, Concini was assassinated, and soon afterwards the queen was compelled to retire to Blois, where the wily Richelieu joined her as a pretended friend, and, in 1620, effected an accommodation which enabled her to return to court. The cardinal found the queen a good trump card in the game he was playing for absolute power, and even when she became aware of his treachery, her hot Italian blood was no match for his cool sagacity. Eleven years of struggle ended in the triumph of Richelieu, and, in 1631, the poor queen became, first a prisoner at Compiègne, and then a wanderer in foreign lands. The close of her life is the saddest part of her story. Abandoned by all her family, and her own son on the proudest throne of Europe, the widow of Henry of Navarre died in want of the commonest necessities. She breathed her last in a poor apartment at Cologne, the furniture of which she had disposed of for the means of supporting life, in 1642. To the faults of her Italian character, she joined the refined taste of her house for arts and letters, and France is indebted to her for the Luxembourg palace. Her excess of passion over judgment, and the anarchy around her make a sad contrast with the wisely regulated and prosperous ambition of great sovereigns. In her best moments Marie de Medicis was only the mistress of a faction. [E.R.]

MARIE, J. F., a French savant, 1738-1801.

MARIESCHI, an Italian painter, 1697-1744.

MARIETTE, JEAN, a French designer and engraver, 1654-1742. His son, PETER JEAN, an engraver and archaeologist, 1694-1774.

MARIGNANO, GIAN GIACOMO MEDICHINO, Marchese Di, a cele. Ital. commander, 1497-1555.

MARILLAC, C. DE, a French diplomatist, 1510-1560. His nephew, MICHEL, keeper of the seals, and a partizan of Marie de Medicis, 1563-1632. LOUIS, a marshal of France, brother and fellow-conspirator with the latter, b. 1572, executed 1632.

MARILLIER, CL. P., a Fr. engraver, 1740-1808.

MARIN, J. C., a French sculptor, 1773-1812.

MARIN, M. A., a French ascetic, 1697-1767.

MARINA, a beautiful and accomplished Mexican, who became the mistress of Cortes, and rendered the Spaniards great service, 16th century.

MARINALI, H., an Ital. sculptor, 1643-1720.

MARINARI, H., an Ital. painter, 1627-1715.

MARINAS, H., a Spanish painter, 1620-1680.

MARINELLI, L., a Venet. poetess, 1571-1653.

MARINEO, L., a Sicilian historian, born 1460.

MARINI, B., an Italian painter, 17th century.

MARINI, F. L. CLAUDE, called MARIN, editor of the 'Gazette de France,' 1721-1809.

MARINI, G., an Ital. antiquarian, 1742-1815.

MARINI, J. A., an Italian novelist, died

MARINI, JOHN BAPTIST, a famous poet

Naples, known as 'the Cavalier Marin,' 1569-

MARINI, MARC, an Ital. Hebraist, 1541-

MARINI, P. PH., an Ital. missionary, 17th

MARINO, SAINT, a native of Dalmatia, was originally employed as a stone-mason of bridge of Rimini; but, becoming a hermit, was said to be wrought at his tomb; and accommodation necessary for the pilgrims who sorted there, gave rise to the city and the nature republic of San Marino; 4th century.

MARINONI, J. J., an Italian mathematician, architect, and astronomer, 1676-1755.

MARINUS, a centurion, procl. emperor, 2d

MARINUS, a Platonic philosopher, 5th cen.

MARINUS, J., a Flemish engraver, 1627-

MARIOTTE, E., a Fr. experi. philos., 1622-

MARITI, J., an Italian traveller, died 179

MARIUS, CAIUS, one of the greatest soldiers and dictators of the Roman republic, was born in humble circumstances, probably at Ariminum, about 157 B.C. Having entered army he became known to Scipio Africanus, acquired so much repute that he was elected consul B.C. 119 or 120, prætor 116, and governed Spain 115. In 109 he joined Metellus as one of his lieutenants in the Jugurthine war, and years afterwards supplanted him in the command of the army. He brought the war to a close in 106, when Jugurtha, the king of Numidia, treacherously delivered into his hands by his Boecchus. Marius remained in Africa a year longer, and was then recalled to take the field against the Cimbri and Teutones, at that time menacing the Roman empire. These barbarians numbered 300,000 men in arms, and had defeated the consul Manilius, and the proconsul Cæpio, at a battle in which the Romans of 80,000 soldiers, and 40,000 followers. Marius had been appointed consul in 107, when the conduct of the Jugurthine war was intrusted to him, and in sight of this new danger he was not only re-elected, but continued in the consulship four successive years, though contrary to law, B.C. 104-100. In 102 he defeated the combined forces of the Ambrones and Teutones near Aix; and in 101, having joined his forces with those of Catulus, he obtained an overwhelming decisive victory over the Cimbri, in the neighbourhood of Vercellæ. He was now hailed as the 'Third Founder of Rome,' and rewarded with a fifth consulate,—followed by a sixth, which, it is said, was gained by corrupt practices, as the session of power had become too sweet to be laid down. Perhaps another and more potent reason also influenced him. Marius was the avowed chief of the plebeians—the natural successor of the Gracchi, who had shed their blood for the rights of Roman citizens might be extended to the rest of Italy. In B.C. 90 this social war broke out afresh, provoked by the murder of Drusus, renewed the proposal, and Marius and Sylla became the respective chiefs of the plebeians and patricians. The latter, flushed with his recent success against the army of Mithridates, refused to yield the command to Marius, but marched at his party in the capital, and disputed the street by street. Marius was defeated, and lodged in prison, where a Cimbrian soldier was behead him, but let the sword fall from his hand meeting the stern glance of the captive, who demanded of him how he dared to kill Caius Marius! The magistrates of Minturnæ, where this occurred, pressed by the strange circumstance, favoured the sight of Marius, and he sought refuge in Africa, whence, in 87 B.C., he was recalled by Cinna, that time consul, to take arms against his old adversary. The combined forces of Marius, Cnaeus, Sertorius, and Carbo, soon entered Rome, and the bloody proscriptions which have coloured the name of Marius to infamy now took place, exceeding all that was previously recorded in Roman history. Caius Marius now served as consul for the seventh time, with his new ally, in the same year, B.C. 86, on hearing that Sylla was approaching, he endeavoured to drown care in wine, and is supposed to have killed himself through excess. His character marks him out as the type of the class for whom he acted as the armed chief in the social war, as that of Sylla places him in the foremost rank of the patricians. They were equally relentless and guilty of blood. [E.R.]

MARIUS, CAIUS, the younger, son of the preceding by adoption, served in the army of his father, and became consul with Carbo, 82 B.C. He was defeated by Sylla, and caused himself to be killed by one of his officers.

MARIUS, LEONARD, a Dutch divine, d. 1628.

MARIUS, MARCUS AURELIUS, a Gaulonite emperor of Rome, who was originally a smith and common soldier, assassinated 267.

MARIUS, SIM., a Ger. astronomer, 1570-1624.

MARIVAUX, PET. CARLET DE CHAMBLAIN, a Fr. dramatic writer and novelist, 1688-1763.

MARIVETZ, S. C. DE, a French physician, and an interior navigation, b. 1728, executed 1794.

MARKE, one of the four evangelists, and companion of Saint Peter, said to have founded the church of Alexandria, put to death 68.

MARKE, a pope and saint of Rome, 336.

MARKE, a heretic of the Eastern church, 2d cen.

MARKEHAM, GERVASE, a soldier and scholar in the reign of James I. and Charles I., author of several works on husbandry and horsemanship, 'God and Antipater,' a tragedy, 'The Poem of Puns,' and other fugitive works, died 1650.

MARKELAND, A., a divine and poet, 1645-1720.

MARKELAND, JEREMIAH, a classical scholar and critic, son of the vicar of Childwall, in Lancashire, born 1693, died, after a life of learned retirement, 1776.

MARLBOROUGH. JOHN CHURCHILL, afterwards duke of Marlborough, the greatest general in England produced before the duke of Wellington, and one of the greatest of modern Europe, was born at Ashton, in Devonshire, on July 5, 1650. His father was a gallant cavalier, who had drawn the sword in behalf of Charles I.; by his father's side he inherited, by collateral descent, the blood which had flowed in the veins of Sir Francis Drake. In early youth, when at school in Devonshire, he evinced a decided turn for warlike pursuits, and was often found studying Vegetius on military affairs. At sixteen he received a commission in the Guards, chiefly owing to the influence of his sister, Sarah, who was the favourite of the duke of York, brother to Charles II. She transferred the military genius of the family to her offspring, for her son, by the duke, who entered into the French service, afterwards became duke of Berwick, and by his great abilities, in command of the French armies in the Peninsula, counterbalanced the victories of his uncle, the duke of Marlborough, when in command of the armies of the allies in the wars of the succession. Thus the same English family furnished, at the same time, the deadliest enemy and the acknowledged saviour of the French monarchy.—During his early life in the Guards, young Churchill, who was uncommonly handsome in person, as well as fascinating in manners, was involved in the usual dissipation of the court of Charles II.; and even inspired a passion in the breast of one of the royal mistresses, the countess of Castlemaine, who presented him, as a token of her regard, with £5,000, which formed the commencement of his fortune. Soon after he was sent to the coast of Africa, and made his first essay in arms in warfare with the Moors; and on his return from thence, he was despatched with the English auxiliary force in 1672 to co-operate with the French army in Flanders, in their campaigns against the Dutch. He there distinguished himself so much, that he was publicly thanked by Louis XIV. at the head of his army; and Marshal Turenne, who commanded it, prophesied that 'the handsome Englishman,' as he was termed, 'would one day make a great general.' He made four campaigns under Turenne; and it was there, as he ever after admitted, that he first learned the art of war. Thus, by another of the strange revolutions of fortune in this extraordinary man, it was under a French marshal that he was taught the art which, matured by his genius, all but brought the French monarchy to destruction.—When the war in Flanders was over he returned to London, furnished with the strongest possible recommendation from Louis XIV. and Turenne to the king of England. In consequence of this support, and the increasing suavity and fascination of his manner, he rapidly rose in the Guards, and ere long was promoted to the command of a regiment in them; while there his charms of manner and personal beauty won the heart of Sarah Jennings, one of the maids of honour to the Princess Anne, who afterwards became queen, whom he married in 1678, and who exercised an important influence on his life and fortunes.—Beautiful, high spirited, and ambitious, with great talents as well for conversation as intrigue, she was unhappily, at the same time, arrogant, overbearing, and irascible; so that it was hard to say whether she aided her husband's fortunes in after life most by her influence at court, or marred them by the supercilious demeanour which involved her in continual quarrels, and at length entirely alienated the affections of his sovereign.—Though a courtier, and indebted for his first rise to the favour of the duke of York, who continued his kindness to him when he became king on the demise of Charles II. in 1685, Churchill was a staunch protestant, and saw as clearly as any one the inevitable result of the headlong course which James II. pursued soon after his accession to the throne, in order to re-establish the Romish faith in his dominions. He did his utmost to dissuade him from the insane attempt, but in vain. The result was, that when the nation was driven to desperation, and forced to invite William prince of Orange over in 1688 to change the sovereign on the throne, Churchill felt himself constrained to espouse the side opposite to that of the reigning sovereign. He did this in a way which forms the only, but is, in truth, an indelible blot on his memory. He did not resign his appointment under the sovereign whom he felt himself constrained to desert, and then appear in arms against him; he retained his commission of the regiment of Guards, and exerted his influence to induce them to pass over to the enemy; he did what Marshal Ney afterwards did to Louis XVIII., and honour can plead no apology for either.—After the dethronement of James II., Churchill, who of course was immediately taken into favour with William III. who succeeded him, was employed in the south of Ireland in command of the royal forces, and there he rendered good service to the cause he espoused, by the reduction of Cork, Bandon, Kinsale, and other strongholds in the south of Ireland. He soon found, however, that it is an easier thing to dispossess a sovereign than render his successor acceptable to the nation. He was disgusted with the preference shown to the Dutch troops, and the insensibility of William to the real national concerns of England. These feelings were too warm to be concealed, and the result was that he fell into a correspondence with some of the Jacobites abroad, which led to his being arrested in 1691 on a charge of high treason, and deprived of his honours and employments. He was soon after liberated, as no evidence was found sufficient to authorise his detention, far less bring him to trial; but he laboured for long under the suspicion of the court, and it was not till 1698 that he was restored to his rank as a privy councillor, and appointed to the important situation of preceptor to the duke of Gloucester, the heir apparent to the monarchy. 'Make him like yourself,' said William III., in conferring on him the appointment, 'and you will leave me nothing further to desire.'—The death of the king of Spain, who, being childless, had bequeathed his immense dominions to the duke of Anjou, grandson of Louis XIV., having involved Europe in a general war, Churchill, who by this time had been created earl of Marlborough, was called to act on a greater theatre, on which he acquired immortal renown. Even before the death of William III., he had been appointed to the important situation of plenipotentiary at the Hague, where the negotiations were carried on; and when the decease of that monarch led to the accession of his early and steady friend, the Princess Anne, to the throne, he was appointed commander-in-chief of the allied armies. War having been declared in May, 1702, he repaired to the camp near Nimeguen, where the allied army, 60,000 strong, was retiring before the superior armies of Louis XIV. The arrival of Marlborough, however, soon altered the state of affairs. Pointing to the dense French battalions, he said, 'These men will soon be our prisoners;' and he was as good as his word. He instantly took the initiative, threw the enemy into retreat, and followed up his successes by the capture of four of their most important strongholds before the campaign was over, in the very teeth of their superior forces. Such was the vigour of his measures, and the skill with which they were taken, that he succeeded in capturing the strong fortresses of Rusomonde, Liege, and Maest in a few months; the last of which being situated on the river Meuse, which is navigable up gave him the entire command of that river, the inestimable advantage of a water communication into the very heart of Flanders.—The campaign of 1703 was not equally prolific of events; chiefly from the 'Dutch deputies' were invested with a negative on all measures the English general, absolutely refusing their sent, now that the danger was removed from doors, to any measures which seemed in the hazardous. One incident, however, of great importance with reference to future events did take place. The French had with vast labour constructed a set of lines, covering the approach to Brussels from the side of Maestricht, from whence it was threatened by Lord Marlborough. He conquered by a sudden nocturnal attack, however, in fact these celebrated lines, and this brought him to the field of Waterloo, in the exact reverse position that occupied by Napoleon and Wellington a hundred and eleven years afterwards. The French thrown back on the forest of Soignies, had backs to Brussels and their faces towards the allies stood on the ground occupied by Blücher and Napoleon, and threatened the French from the wood of Ohain. The fairest opportunity of finishing the war at a blow was prevented. Marlborough had got between the French at Paris, and defeat to them was ruin. He earnestly besought the Dutch deputies to take advantage of it, but they would not. Such was his vexation at this crossing, that next day he said, 'To-day I am ten years older than I was yesterday.'—The actions of the English hero were amply gratified the following year. Louis XIV. had determined to stand on the defensive in Flanders, and made great effort in Germany with a view to intimidate Austria, and from it to conclude a separate peace. His efforts were well nigh attended with success. Supported by Bavaria, with whom they were in close alliance, the French armies, 80,000 strong, poured down the valley of the Danube.—Munich was passed, Vienna threatened, the cabinet of Vienna menaced with an Hungarian insurrection in rear, was in an agony of apprehension. But the hour of deliverance was at hand. Putting himself at the head of 30,000 of his troops, Marlborough, who had previously secured solid footing on the Rhine by the reduction of the strong and important city of Bonn, crossed over to Germany, stormed the intrenched camp at Blenheim with the loss to the enemy of 12,000 men and defeated them at BLENHEIM with the loss of 15,000 prisoners, 80 guns, and 100 standards. Marshal Tallard, the French general, and his chief officers were made prisoners. Before the French recrossed the Rhine, the French were weaker than 40,000 men. Germany was delivered, Austria and France threatened, by a single victory. The annals of Napoleon have no more decisive triumph to exhibit; and the result was, that the French armies, refluxed on all sides, were driven back and reduced to the defence of their territory. The campaign of 1705 was not productive of any memorable events, from the Dutch deputies interposing and preventing all the daring measures projected by the English general. But he re-triumphant career in 1706. Assailing the French army, 60,000 strong, at RAMILLIES, he fully defeated them, after a hard struggle, with a loss of 15,000 men in killed, wounded, and prisoners. The effect of this great victory was the immediate capture of Brussels and liberation of the Austrian Flanders. Antwerp, Oudenarde, Ghent, Bruges, and many of its chief towns declared for the allies; others, such as Menin, Ath, Tournai, and Ostend, were reduced after bloody sieges by force of arms. Before the campaign ended, the whole of Austrian Flanders, bristling with strong fortresses, was recovered; the Dutch obtained the barrier for which they had so passionately longed; and the French armies, which had so recently threatened Vienna, were everywhere thrown back on their own frontier.—Early in the following year, the allied arms sustained a serious reverse, by the surprise of Ghent and Bruges, which was effected by Prince Vendome, the French marshal, who was at the head of 100,000 men. But if the treachery of these towns had induced disaster, the vigour of Marlborough soon restored the allies. Suddenly wheeling round, when in the act of retreat towards Brussels, he attacked and totally defeated the French at OUDENARDE, with the loss of 9,000 prisoners and 11,000 killed and wounded. Boldly then resuming the offensive he carried his victorious arms into France, besieged and took Lille, though garrisoned by Marshal Boufflers with 15,000 men of the best troops in France; in the face of Vendome, at the head of 100,000 men, relieved Brussels, which had been threatened in the interim, and concluded his triumphant career by the recovery of Ghent and Bruges, the former garrisoned by 1,800 men. The annals of war can afford no parallel of the skill and resolution of that immortal campaign, which, to the end of the world, will be the subject of study and admiration of military men. The last of Marlborough's great victories was that of MALPLAQUET in 1709, which was by far the most bloody and hard fought, and was only gained after prodigies of valour had been performed on both sides. The resources of France had been brought forth, and 80,000 brave men, intrenched to the teeth, stood to receive the assault of an equal number of the allies, under Marlborough and his noble rival, Prince Eugene. But nothing could withstand the skill of their attacks, and the heroic courage they had inspired into their troops. The whole French army was at length carried, though at a cost of 20,000 men to the victors, and the important fortress of Mons, commanding the high road to Paris, was the reward of the victory.—This was the last of the great victories of Marlborough; for thenceforward he ceased to be a free agent. The Tory party at home, who were jealous of his fame and enhanced his power, never ceased their efforts to effect his downfall; and at length, through the agency of Anne, Duchess of Shomberg, a dependant and niece of the duchess of Marlborough, who supplanted her mistress and became a factor in the royal favour, they effected it. Marlborough's proposed measures were all examined by a hostile cabinet, and the requisite supplies refused him. Still he worked on with patriotic ardour, and in a noble spirit, against all his difficulties, by an unparalleled exertion of military skill he passed the French lines; besieged and took Bethune, Aisne, and other places of strength on the French frontier, and he was making preparations for the siege of Arras, the last stronghold on the road to Paris, when he was, by domestic faction, interrupted in the career of victory, by being deprived of the command of the army, and even threatened with a parliamentary impeachment for alleged and wholly fabricated malversations when in command. The consequences were soon apparent. The allies deprived of his military arm, and of the aid of the English contingents, were defeated at Denain, and the disgraceful treaty of Utrecht was concluded, which left the crown of Spain in possession of the house of Bourbon, and deprived the nation of the whole fruits of Marlborough's victories. A more deplorable instance of the triumph of faction over patriotism, of envy over generosity, of jealousy over heroism, is not recorded in history.—Before this disgraceful coalition against him took effect, Marlborough had obtained princely rewards from the nation. He was made a duke after the battle of Blenheim, and a sum voted to build the palace of the same name on the demesne of Woodstock, which had been bestowed on him by Queen Anne. After his fall, the usual annual grants from the treasury were stopped by the malignity of the Tory ministry, and the magnificent pile was only finished by £60,000 which had been advanced from the private fortune of the duke. Marlborough remained in privacy, but firm in his principles, till the accession of the Hanoverian family in 1713, when he was made commander-in-chief; and by his admirable measures, contributed much to the almost bloodless suppression of the rebellion in Scotland in 1715. This was his last public service. He was soon after struck with a stroke of palsy, from which he only recovered to drag on a precarious and enfeebled existence, which was terminated in serenity and hope, on 6th August, 1722, in the seventy-second year of his age.—Napoleon had the very highest opinion of Marlborough, whom he always spoke of as one of the first captains of any age or country. His career was indeed astonishing, and may well have excited the admiration of his immortal successor. He never besieged a town he did not take, and he never fought a battle he did not gain. Never superior, generally inferior to his opponents; at the head of a multifarious army of six nations, he communicated an united spirit to the whole mass, and rendered them invincible. Had he not been thwarted at home—he would have taken Paris, and terminated, in his next campaign, the rivalry of four centuries. Humane, beneficent, and generous; in private life he dignified his warlike virtues by the graces and charities of peace. Factions assailed him violently during his life, as it in general does all who rise to extraordinary power and influence; but history has revised its verdict, and pronounced him, but for the desertion of James II., as perfect a character as the frailty of humanity will permit.

[Palace of Blenheim]

[A.A.]

MARLIANI, B., an Ital. antiquarian, b. 1650.

MARLORAT, AUGUSTINE, a French protestant divine, executed by order of Montmorency, 1506-62.

MARLOT, D. W., a French savant, 1596-1667.

MARLOWE, CHRISTOPHER, was by far the most distinguished, and may indeed be said to have been the only man of great and original genius, among the English dramatists who immediately preceded Shakspeare. As to the events of his short life, we know hardly anything beyond the fact that it was as irregular and unhappy as that of most play-writers of his time. The date of his birth is not certain; but he was perhaps about thirty years old in 1596, when he was killed at Deptford in a discreditable brawl. Several of the plays which pass under his name were probably not his. But we are at least safe in attributing to him three of the most striking dramas in our language: the energetic and harrowing 'Jew of Malta,' 'Edward II.,' a worthy precursor of Shakspeare's dramatic histories; and the magnificently imaginative and finely thoughtful tragedy of 'Faustus.' Marlowe's versified translations, or rather paraphrases, from Ovid, Lucan, and the pseudo-Museus, are likewise very beautiful, both in imagery, in diction, and for their rhythmical sweetness.

[W.S.]

MARMION, S., an Eng. dramatist, died 1639.

MARMONT, AUGUSTUS FREDERICK LOUIS VIEPE DE, duc de Ragusa, the last survivor of Napoleon's marshals, was born of noble parents 1774, and commenced his military services in the army of the monarchy. He attracted the attention of Napoleon by his excellence as an artillery officer, and greatly distinguished himself at the battle of Marengo. He fought in all the campaigns from 1805 to 1807, and was created marshal of France after the battle of Wagram. He shared the fate of all Napoleon's generals opposed to Wellington in Spain, his crowning defeat being at Salamanca. He surrendered Paris to the allies in 1814, and afterwards became a steady adherent of the Bourbons. After the revolution of 1830 he was struck from the list of the army. Died at Venice 1852.

MARMONTEL, JEAN, was born of poor parents, at Bort, in the Limousin, in 1723. Educated chiefly in Jesuit schools, and at first intending to enter the order, he was able, when no more than eighteen years old, to teach philosophy at Toulouse, with such success as enabled him to contribute to the support of his father and mother. In 1745, having come into correspondence with Voltaire, and abandoned the idea of being a priest, he sought his fortune in Paris. He distinguished himself by poems and plays, which are long forgotten; and he enjoyed reputation as a critic, contributing to the 'Encyclopédie' articles, which he collected under the title 'Elements of Literature.' His best work, however, were those easy and graceful sketches of manners, which he was pleased to call 'Tales.' The morality of the most serious is equivocal; that of others is positively no longer novels, 'Bélisaire' and 'Les Incas,' a literary point of view, much inferior to his stories. Several appointments which he successively received, made his circumstances easy at the outbreak of the Revolution. He died in the hospital of Evreux on the last day of 1799.

MARNE, J. B. DE, a Fr. historian, 1699.

MARNE, LOUIS ANTHONY DE, a French poet, author of 'Histoire Sacrée,' 1673-1717.

MARNIX, PHILIP DE, baron of Saint-Gond, a famous Calvinist and enemy of the Inquisition, the defender of Antwerp in 1584. Alexander Farnese, au. of 'Controversial History,' a translation of the Psalms into Dutch verse, 'The Beehive of the Romish Church,' &c., 1538.

MAROLI, D., an Italian painter, 1612.

MAROLLES, M. DE, a Fr. translator, 1612.

MAROT, FRANCIS, a Fr. painter, 1667.

MAROT, JEAN, secretary and poet of Francis I., flourished 1463-1523. CLEMENT, son, valet of Francis I., distinguished for his full poetry, 1495-1544.

MAROT, JEAN, a French architect and ornamental writer, 1630-1695. His son, DANIEL, refugee in England, and architect to the king of Orange, born 1660.

MAROUTHA, a Syrian prelate and wr.

MARozIA, a patrician lady of Rome, of great beauty and intriguing disposition, aided by great wealth, gave her immense influence to the close of the 9th century. She was successively to Alberic, marquis of Cambray, who was killed 925; to Guy, or Guido, duke of Spoleto, who died 929; and to Hugh of Provence, whom she and her last husband had made king of Italy, in 932. She placed four popes on the throne—Sergius III., one of her lovers, by whom she had a son, in 904; Anastasius III. in 911; and her son, John XI., then in his first year, in 931. Marozia had a sister, Theodora, and a mother of the same name, one of whom was mistress of the pope John X. Both the daughters were partakers in her licentiousness and influence, as they were in her beauty and address. She was the virtual sovereign of Italy, and may be called the pope or queen as the reader pleases. (See POPE.) About 928-9, her soldiers entered the palace of the Lateran, slew the brother of John X., and took the pope prisoner, who died afterwards. After her third marriage, she struck one of her sons, who stormed the city, and guard with a party of young Romans, drove the offender from the city, and finally imprisoned his mother in a monastery, or perhaps in the St. Angelo, where she ended her days.

MARPURG, F. W., a Ger. musician, 1681.

MARQUET, F. M., a Fr. botanist, 1681.

MARQUETTE, J., a Fr. missionary, d. 1681.

MARQUEZ, S., a Spanish painter, died 1681.

MARQUIS, A. L., a Fr. botanist, 1777-1828.
 MARRACCI, HIPPOLYTE, a learned Italian biographer, author of 'Bibliotheca Mariana,' 16-1675. His brother, LUIGI, a famous Arabian scholar and editor, 1612-1700.
 MARRE, J. DE., a Dut. dramatist, 1696-1763.
 MARRIER, M., a Fr. ecclesiastic, 1572-1644.
 MARRON, P. H., president of the reformed church of Paris, and a partizan of the Girondins, shot at Leyden of French refugees, 1754, d. 1832.
 MARRYAT, FREDERICK, the son of a West India merchant, was born in 1792, and died in 1833. Entering the navy in his fourteenth year, he served with distinction during the war, and afterwards in the Burmese campaign; and he became a benefactor to the naval profession by the invention of his well-known Code of Signals. He rose to be a post-captain and C.B. In the latter half of his life he was active as an author and as a magazine editor. His 'Diary in America' was the occasion of much acrimonious discussion. Of his naval stories, whose dashing liveliness and manly vigour made them so popular, the earliest was 'Frank Mildmay;' and among the rest it is enough to name 'Peter Simple' and 'Mr. Midshipman Easy.' [W.S.]
 MARRYAT, JOSEPH, son of Dr. Thomas Marryat, a merchant and M.P., known as a speaker on East Indian affairs, and on insurance, banking and similar topics, 1757-1824.
 MARS, A. J., a French jurisconsult, 1777-1824.
 MARS, MDLLE., a Fr. comedian, 1779-1847.
 MARSAIS, CÉSAR CHESNEAU DU. See DU MARSAIS.
 MARSAND, A., a Venetian savant, 1765-1842.
 MARSAY, a French mystic writer, author of a work entitled 'Le Temoignage d'un Enfant de la Vierge,' publ. anonymously in 9 vols. 12mo, 18th c.
 MARSDEN, WILLIAM, an eminent Oriental scholar, son of a merchant of Dublin, born 1754, appointed in 1795 secretary to the admiralty, died 1836. He is author of a grammar and dictionary of Malay language; of a description of Eastern coins under the title of 'Numismata Orientalia;' of an essay on the East Insular Languages; a translation of the 'Travels of Marco Polo,' &c. In 1818 he voluntarily relinquished his retiring pension of £1,500 per annum, and, in 1834, presented the Oriental coins to the British Museum, and his MSS. to King's College.
 MARSH, RIGHT REV. HERBERT, D.D., successively bishop of Llandaff and Peterborough, and as the translator of Michaelis, and author of 'Systematic Theology,' was born 1758. He finished his education in Germany, and while resident there admitted some valuable information to the British Government, for which he was rewarded with a pension; died 1838.
 MARSH, NARCISSUS, successively bishop of Exeter and Ferns, Cashel, Dublin, and Armagh, author of 'Institutiones Logicae,' 1638-1703.
 MARSHAL, A., a Scotch anatomist, 1742-1813.
 MARSHAL, W., a nonconformist divine, author of 'The Gospel Mystery of Sanctification,' a work recommended by Hervey; died 1690.
 MARSHALL, NATHANIEL, a learned minister of the Church of England, author of an edition of the 'Psalms,' &c., last century.
 MARSHALL, S., a presbyterian divine, d. 1655.

MARSHALL, THOMAS, a learned divine of the Church of England, known as a Saxon and Oriental scholar, 1621-1685.
 MARSHALL, W., an agricult. wr., 1745-1818.
 MARSHAM, SIR JOHN, a learned writer on Egyptian history and antiquities, known in the 17th century as a royalist and M.P., 1602-1685.
 MARSHMAN, JAS., a baptist missionary, who became a proficient in the Eastern languages, and translated a part of the Scriptures into Chinese. He produced also an English version of the works of Confucius, and a 'Dissertation on the Characters and Sounds of the Chinese Language,' 1799-1837.
 MARSTON, JOHN, a dramatic writer and satirist of the age of Elizabeth and James I. The dates are uncertain, but he can be traced to 1633.
 MARSY, BALTHAZAR and GASPARD, brothers, natives of Cambray, both excellent sculptors; the former lived 1624-1674, the latter 1628-1681.
 MARSY, C. S. DE., a French author, 1740-1815.
 MARSY, F. MA. DE., a Fr. historian, 1714-1763.
 MARSYLI, LUIGI FERDINANDO, count of, a learned geographer and naturalist, distinguished in the service of Austria 1658-1730.
 MARTEL, F., a writer on surgery in 1601.
 MARTEL, S. A., a Fr. architect, 1569-1641.
 MARTELLI, LUDOVICO and VICENZO, Italian brothers and poets, the former 1499-1527; the latter died 1556.
 MARTELLO, P. J., an Ital. dram., 1665-1727.
 MARTELLY, R., a French actor, 1751-1817.
 MARTENE, E., a learned ecclesiast., 1654-1739.
 MARTENS, F., a German traveller, 17th cent.
 MARTENS, or MERTENS, THIERRY, surnamed 'the Aldus of the Low Countries,' divides the honour with some others of introducing printing into the Netherlands. He is celebrated for his fine editions of the Greek authors, and was highly esteemed by the learned men of his age; among others, Erasmus, who lodged with him, 1450-1534.
 MARTENS, WILLIAM FREDERIC VON, a native of Hamburg, dist. as a diplomat., 1756-1821.
 MARTHA. See SAINTE-MARTHE.
 MARTHA, SISTER, a benevolent female of Besançon, whose real name was ANNE BIGET, and whose virtues and humanity place her among the most distinguished women of our epoch, was born in 1748, and was in early life the inmate of a convent. She devoted herself from her youth upwards, to the relief of the poor and afflicted; and though she was nearly seventy years of age, in the campaign of 1814, she made almost incredible efforts to relieve the wounded. Every mark of honour was shown her by the allied sovereigns, and she had previously been presented with a medal by her country, inscribed 'Homage to Virtue.' She died in 1824.
 MARTI, EMMANUEL, a Span. poet, 1663-1737.
 MARTIALIS, MARCUS VALERIUS, a well-known Latin epigrammatist, generally called MARTIAL, born about 40, at the present Arragon in Spain. His poems, which consist of some 1,500 pieces, are interesting for their allusions to the persons and manners of the times, but abound with indelicacies. In the Delphin edition of 1680, these were omitted from the body of the work, and published all together at the end. Martial went to Rome when about twenty years of age, and obtained the favour of Domitian. Died 104.

MARTIANAY, J., a Fr. ecclesiastic, 1647-1717.
 MARTIANO, P., an Ital. physician, 1567-1622.
 MARTIGNAC, JEAN BAPTISTE SILVERE ALGAY, Vicomte De, minister of Charles X., author of an essay upon the Spanish revolution and the intervention of 1823, 1776-1832.

MARTIGNAC, STEPHEN ALGAY DE, a French scholar, born at Brives la Gaillarde 1620 or 1628, died 1698, author of 'Memoirs of Gaston,' &c.

MARTILLIERE, COUNT DE LA, a dist. French artillery officer, made a peer in 1814, died 1819.

MARTIN, the name of several SAINTS:—1. A bishop of Tours, born in Pannonia, now Hungary, 316, died 397. He is considered the apostle of the Gauls. 2. An archbishop of Braga, in Portugal, an Hungarian by birth, known as an ecclesiastical writer, and a great preacher in Galicia, died 580. 3. MARTIN-DE-VERTON, or MARTINUS VERTAVENSIS, founder and abbot of the monastery of Verton, born of noble parentage at Nantes 527, died 601. 4. The first pope of the name.

MARTIN, the first of the name, pope and saint of Rome, whose memory is also honoured in the Greek church, reigned 649-655. The second, called also Martinus I., in whose time Photius was condemned, 882-884. The third, called by some Martinus II., 942-946. The fourth, in whose time the Sicilian vespers date, who supported Charles of Sicily against Peter of Arragon, and excommunicated Michael Palæologus, 1281-1285. The fifth, who put an end to the schism of the West, presided at the council of Constance, and laid his ban on the partizans of John Huss, 1418-1431.

MARTIN, a king of Sicily, died 1409.

MARTIN, —, a French botanist, born 1729.

MARTIN, AIME, a French scholar and miscellaneous writer, the pupil and friend of Bernard St. Pierre, whose widow he married. Born at Lyons 1786, died 1847.

MARTIN, ANDREW, a Fr. Cartesian, 1621-95.

MARTIN, BENJAMIN, a famous optician and mathematical writer, who was originally a plough-boy in Surrey, and, contriving to educate himself, gave lectures on experimental philosophy, and carried on the business of an optician and globe maker in London, 1704-1782.

MARTIN, BERNARD, a Fr. classic, 1574-1639.

MARTIN, BERNARD, a Fr. chemist, b. 1629.

MARTIN, C., an East India officer, 1732-1800.

MARTIN, DAVID, a Fr. protestant, 1639-1721.

MARTIN, DAVID, a Scotch artist, died 1797.

MARTIN, DOM CL., a Fr. ecclesiast., 1619-96.

MARTIN, E., a French jurisconsult, 1714-93.

MARTIN, F., a French navigator in 1601.

MARTIN, F., a French governor of Pondicherry, last century.

MARTIN, G., a Fr. bibliographer, 1679-1761.

MARTIN, G., a French theologian, last century.

MARTIN, J., a French savant, 1684-1751.

MARTIN, J., a Fr. medical writer, 17th cent.

MARTIN, J. B., a French painter, 1659-1735.

MARTIN, J. B., a French singer, 1767-1837.

MARTIN, M. J. D., a Fr. author, 1756-1797.

MARTIN, PETER, a Fr. admiral, 1752-1820.

MARTIN, R., a Spanish monk, died 1286.

MARTIN, R., a Fr. mathematician, died 1811.

MARTIN, SARAH, distinguished by her philanthropical efforts for the reform of criminals, and the education of the poor, was born in the neighbourhood of Yarmouth, 1791, and supported self by dressmaking. She began her career requesting permission to read the Scriptures to prisoners, and became at last a great moral prison reformer. She died in 1843. A volume of poems, written by her, has since been published.

MARTIN, THOMAS, an antiquarian, born at Thetford, of which place he wrote a history, died 1771.

MARTIN, THOMAS, a Roman Catholic lawyer, one of the six commissioners appointed to conduct the process against Cranmer, died 1711.

MARTIN, THOMAS IGNATIUS, a French labourer, remarkable for his visions concerning the XVIII., to whom he communicated on the subject in 1816. Died suddenly, 1834.

MARTIN, V., an Italian composer, 1754-1801.

MARTIN, W., an Eng. naturalist, 1767-1801.

MARTINE, GEORGE, a Scotch physician of medical and philosophical works, 1702-1771.

MARTINEZ, G., a Spanish painter, 16th cent.

MARTINEZ, H., a Mexican mathematician, 17th cent.

MARTINEZ, J. L., a Span. painter, 1612-1681.

MARTINEZ, S., a Spanish painter, 1602-1681.

MARTINEZ, T., a Spanish painter, died 17th cent.

MARTINEZ, PASQUALIS, the founder of a theosophical sect of Martinists, and presumed to be a Portuguese Jew. He commenced his mission in the masonic lodges of France, 1754, and died at St. Domingo, 1779. Saint-Martin, confounded with him, was his disciple.

SAINT MARTIN.

MARTINI, F. H. W., a Ger. naturalist, 1723-1791.

MARTINI, G. H., a Sax. numismat., 17th cent.

MARTINI, GIUSEPPE SAN, an admirable composer and hantboy player, was born at Milan, came to England in 1723, and even at the time of the works of Handel, Corelli, and Geminiani all the fashion, the compositions of Martini gained a remarkable degree of popularity. He was appointed director of the chamber music to Frederick prince of Wales, in which situation he continued about the year 1740, when he died.

MARTINI, J. P. E., a Rhen. music., 1741-1801.

MARTINI, M., a Ger. theologian, 1572-1641.

MARTINI, M., a Chinese missionary, 16th cent.

MARTINI, PADRE GIAMBATTISTA, an eminent musician and composer, was born at Bologna 1706. He was much celebrated as a teacher of his life. His chief compositions were for the service of the church. His fame, however, principally rests on his works on the theory and practice of music. He died of dropsy in the chest 1784.

MARTINI, S., an Italian painter, 1280-1341.

MARTINIERE, ANTHONY AUGUSTIN ZEN DE LA, a French writer and compiler, secretary to the king of Naples, and au. of a 'Geographical, Historical, and Critical Dictionary,' 1662-1731.

MARTINOZ, H., a Fr. clockmaker, 16th cent.

MARTOS, IVAN PETROVITCH, a famous Russian sculptor, counsellor of state, and director of the Academy at St. Petersburg, 1755-1835.

MARTYN, HENRY, a celebrated missionary, born at Truro, in Cornwall, 18th February, 1791. His father, though a miner, was a very sensible person—distinguished by his piety and intelligence. Henry was educated at the grammar school ne town, and surpassed all his school-fellows in classical acquirements. At the age of fourteen he became a candidate for a scholarship in Corpus Christi College, Oxford, but failed. Having refused to continue a year longer at school, he afterwards became a student in St. John's College, Cambridge, to which he was led, chiefly to enjoy the society of an intimate and valued friend, whose character and conversation produced a conversion in the views of Martyn in regard to religion. But his conversion, so far from interfering with his preparations at the university, tended to increase his ardour in literary pursuits, leading him to regard time as a talent, for the improvement of which he was accountable. Stimulated to diligence by this high motive, he became an indefatigable student, and his industry was rewarded by the highest academical honours, being awarded to him, for he was declared 'Senior Wrangler' in Jan., 1801, before he had completed his twentieth year. He now engaged in superintending the studies of some pupils, while, at the same time, he was assiduously preparing for the election in May, 1802, when he was chosen Fellow of St. John's, and almost immediately after carried off the highest prize for Latin prose composition which the University had to bestow. Unsuspected, however, by the splendour of these academical successes, Mr. Martyn desired strongly to run in a totally different direction, and he resolved on dedicating his life and energies to the service of God in the missionary cause. He opened a communication with the Church Missionary Society. This part of his plan, however, having been abandoned, in consequence of some family business, which made his sister dependent on him for support, his friends applied, and at length succeeded in obtaining for him a chaplaincy in the East India Company's service. Shortly after his arrival in Calcutta, where he was to wait for his appointment, he was overtaken by fever, which nearly terminated his life; but the long interval of leisure afforded him, before he was completely convalescent, was industriously improved in acquiring a knowledge of Hindostanee, and making himself acquainted with the state and feelings of the English residents in India. After a lapse of five months, he received his appointment to Dinapore, and his duty there required him to read prayers to the soldiery at the barracks—his only service he was allowed to perform—for there was no accommodation for their sitting, a service was dispensed with. But not content with this abridgement of his work, he extended his labours by commencing to preach to the natives in the vernacular language of India, and to this, at the same time, a novel service, a great crowd—chiefly of the poor—was repaired. This service he continued, at the same time superintending five schools which he had founded at Dinapore, visiting hospitals, and affording religious instruction to all who came to him. In addition to these public labours, he was privately engaged in revising the sheets of the Hindostanee version of the New Testament which he had executed, superintending the Persian translation which had been committed to the care of Sabot, and prosecuting the study of Arabic, in which language he had already meditated another translation. In the spring of 1809 he removed to Cawnpore, where he laboured under many disadvantages, being without a church, and having to preach in the open air, exposed to the violence of the heat. Towards the end of that year, he began his ministrations to the heathen. 'A crowd of mendicants, whom, to prevent perpetual interruptions, he had appointed to meet on a stated day for the distribution of alms, frequently assembled before his house in immense numbers, presenting an affecting spectacle of extreme wretchedness. To this congregation he determined to preach the Word of Life. The following Sunday he preached again to the beggars, in number about five hundred, and on the last day of the year he again addressed them to the amount of nearly six hundred. Afterwards Martyn, having become proficient in the knowledge and use of the Persian, resolved to extend his missionary labours to Persia. He accordingly established himself at Shiraz, with the immediate view of revising his Persian and Arabic translations of the New Testament with the aid of some learned natives. In that place he remained ten months, improving the time that was not occupied on his version in religious discussions with the Moolahs and Soofis. In crowded assemblies of those literary Persians, he appeared the single unassisted advocate of the Christian faith, and yet by his zeal, tempered by judgment, he excited great stir and interest in religious inquiries. In that place besides the complete version of his New Testament, he completed, also, a Persian translation of the Psalms, 'a sweet employment,' as he says, 'which caused six weary moons that waxed and waned since its commencement to pass unnoticed.' He had contemplated the presentation of his New Testament translation to the Shah in person, and for this purpose he went to Tabriz, where the king was sojourning in his summer camp. But the British Ambassador being absent, an introduction could not be obtained, and for want of that indispensable formality, admission was denied. At Tabriz he was seized with malignant fever, on the abatement of which, it was judged essential for the preservation of his life, that he should immediately remove beyond the enervating influences of an Eastern climate. By hurried movements he endeavoured to reach Constantinople; but at Tocat his sickness assumed an alarming appearance, and in that place, on the 16th October, 1812, this pious, devoted, and learned man fell asleep in Jesus, having earned a reputation which placed him in the foremost ranks of modern missionaries. [R.J.]

MARTYN, JOHN, F.R.S., professor of botany at Cambridge, author of a 'History of Rare Plants,' 'The Grub Street Journal,' an edition of 'Virgil's Georgics,' &c., 1699-1768.

MARTYN, THOMAS, F.R.S., son of the preceding, dist. as a botanical and antiquarian, 1736-1825.

MARTYR, PETER, one of the early protestant reformers, was born in 1500 at Florence. At first an Augustine monk, and even priest of a convent, he was so shaken in his religious views by studying the writings of Luther and Zwingli, that he abandoned Romanism, and was obliged for this honest change of opinion to seek personal safety in exile. On the invitation of Edward VI. he came over to England, and occupied a chair of divinity at Oxford. In the reign of Mary he quitted England, and took up his abode in Zurich, where he died in 1562. He has written a number of theological treatises, among which his 'Loci Communes,' and some of his Commentaries, are best known at the present day. As a proof of the bigotry of the age it may be added, that the remains of his wife, who had died and been buried at Oxford, were dug up in the reign of Mary, and ignominiously thrust beneath a dunghill. [J.E.]

MARUCELLI, G. S., an Ital. paint., 1586-1646.

MARVELL, ANDREW, a statesman and poet, was born at Hull on the 15th of November, 1620. Little is known of his education and early history, and in after life he was more distinguished by his firmness and honest adherence to constitutional principle, than either by his genius as a poet or his eminence as a statesman. He began his parliamentary career in 1660, as representative of his native town. He was deeply imbued with the spirit of the long parliament, and brought its constitutional principles, and wonderful aptness for the transaction of collective business, into the parliaments of the restoration, in a great measure consisting of men of a totally different stamp. He was the first great practical advocate of the important principle that the constituency should know the conduct of its representative, and that although he need not be a delegate merely to do what they require, yet he must be so far responsible that he is to be removed when he ceases to represent their sentiments. He wrote a series of letters to his constituents, describing the proceedings of parliament, and accounting for his own conduct; and the electors on their part adhered to him with zealous steadiness. There is a well-known anecdote of his declining a bribe from the lord treasurer because he had enough for a frugal dinner. Some of his pamphlets on the affairs of the day are valuable for their clearness and correctness; but his poetry is seldom read. The only office ever held by him was that of secretary of an embassy to the northern powers. He died on the 16th of August, 1678. [J.H.B.]

House of Marvell, Highgate, London.]

MARX, JACOB, a Germ. physician, 1745-1789.

MARY, queen regnant of England, daughter of Henry VIII. and Catherine of Arragon, was born at the commencement of 1516, and succeeded her brother, Edward VI., in 1553. Her adherence to the Church of Rome gave occasion to the proclamation of her cousin, Lady Jane Grey, who was shortly afterwards beheaded, and the party who had elevated her to the throne completely sub. In 1554, Mary was married to Philip of Spain. Devoting herself to the restoration of the Roman Catholic religion, nearly 300 persons suffered the stake as heretics in the short space of the four years. Happily for the nation, she died after the loss of Calais, November 17, 1558, was succeeded by her half-sister, Elizabeth I.

MARY, companion of William III. throne of England, was the eldest daughter of James II. by Ann Hyde, daughter of the lord chancellor Clarendon. She was born 1662, married William, prince of Orange, in 1677, and came to the throne in the interest of the protestant religion after the Revolution of 1688. She died the thirty-third year of her age, 1694.

MARY BEATRIX OF ESTE, queen consort of James II., was married to him in 1673. She gave birth to a son in 1688, who was acknowledged by James III., by Louis XIV. Died 1708.

MARY OF LORRAINE, queen consort of France, and mother of Mary Stuart, was the daughter of Claude, duke of Guise. She was married to Louis II. of Orleans in 1534, and to James VI. of Scotland, in 1538. In 1542 she was a widow, and became regent for her infant daughter. Died 1560.

MARY, queen of Scotland, was born in 1542. The day of her birth, like the important events of her history, has been the subject of controversy, but it takes no wider range than between the 8th and the 12th of December. Her father, James V., who died on the 13th, just after her birth, ere he expired. The time of her birth was a gloomy and critical one for royalty in Scotland, but the frail infant survived contests and calumnies, in which one strong enough to take part, they might have been sacrificed. While she was yet in infancy, it was part of the policy of Henry VIII. to unite the kingdoms by marrying her to his son Edward. He set about the accomplishment of this scheme with a characteristic haste, which roused the spirits of the Scots against it. The young queen's mother, Mary of Lorraine, strengthened that alliance with the French, which political events had created in Scotland. The Scottish statesmen settled the difficult question of England by sending the child to France, in the sixth year. Her education was essentially French, and it affords a general view of some of the moral difficulties connected with her career, to collect from the sad history the principles which she must have imbibed. She was early affianced to the Dauphin, and as he became King Francis II. in 1559, then was queen of France and Scotland. On the ground of Elizabeth's illegitimacy, the French party claimed for Mary the sovereignty of England as a descendant of the sister of Henry VII. The union of the French and Scottish crowns, by her person, made the claim formidable. The death of Francis, however, after reigning for only six months, broke the main element of strength of her pretensions. She was now only Queen of Scotland, a country poor and turbulent. With bitter regret the brilliant court of France, in 1562, she was received with a rude joy, and calculated to reconcile her to the change from the sordid and dreary chambers of Holyrood.

in were important national affairs in a condition to gratify her, for in the previous year protestantism having been established, her religion had been suppressed, and its profession rendered a crime. She had many contests with Knox and 'the lords of the congregation,' in which earnestness, zeal, rugged determination on the one side, were balanced by feminine wit and the overawing influence of royal rank on the other. It was on the 29th of May, 1565, that she celebrated her unhappy marriage with her worthless connection, Henry, Lord Darnley. The next great event in her strange career, was the murder in her presence of her humble and David Rizzio, the musician, her husband being one of the assassins. It was on the 10th of February, 1567, that Darnley himself was murdered, and the house in which he lived blown up by the deed was accomplished. Many volumes have been written, and many are evidently in preparation on the question of Mary's accession to the throne, and it would be useless to attempt its discussion within such limits as the present. On the 1st of May, in the same year, occurred Mary's marriage to Bothwell the chief assassin, a fact, round which the main circumstances adduced by her opponents cluster. On the 17th of June, she was confined to a retirement, which was virtually an imprisonment, in Lochleven Castle. She escaped on May, 1568, and, defeated on the field of Langside, sought refuge in England. She was received as a prisoner by the jealous queen to whose throne she had asserted pretensions, and lived nineteen years a captive. If Elizabeth is to be vindicated for her harshness by the recurrence of efforts to assert Mary's right to the English throne, yet it is certain that the English queen threw out invitations, which tending towards secret assassinations, admit of no vindication. After a trial on the treason law of England, she was beheaded at Fotheringay Castle on the 8th of February, 1587.

[J.H.B.]

[Tomb of Mary in Westminster Abbey.]

MASACCIO, the name by which TOMMASO MASACCIO is commonly known, Masaccio being a nickname the short for Tommasaccio, slovenly Thomas, was born at San Giovanni in the Valdarno, in 1402. His earliest performances were in the Brancacci chapel, in the church del Carmine, at Florence, where he assisted his master Masolino da Panicale at a very early age, and after Masolino's death, continued the series left incomplete by him. The frescoes of Masaccio in this chapel, which contains also his most celebrated works, were executed apparently at two distinct periods, before 1430 and after 1434, when the Medici returned to Florence, and during this interval Masaccio may have visited Rome. He was admitted into the company of St. Luke in 1423, and the earlier or more conventional works may have been executed about 1425, comprising—'The Expulsion from Paradise,' 'The Tribute Money,' and perhaps 'Peter Baptizing;' the others probably ten years later, supposing they were not all completed before 1430, which is quite possible. These works show the state of painting as compared with that of sculpture, exemplified in the gates by Lorenzo Ghiberti, executed at the same time, 1425 being the mean date of the two gates. Masaccio was not behind Ghiberti, but may have owed much to his example, as also to the example of Donatello and Brunelleschi, with the last of whom he studied perspective.—The association of so many men of remarkable ability is perhaps the chief cause of the great advance evident in all the arts in the early part of the 15th century; their intercourse developed criticism, the soul of art. Vasari gives us a good example: when Donatello exhibited his Crucifixion (now in the church of Santa Croce), Brunelleschi remarked that he had attempted the impersonation of the Son of God, while he had made only a vulgar peasant.—The works of the Brancacci chapel mark the era of the second epoch of Italian painting, and as the whole, or at least the greater portion, of these frescoes were till lately assumed to be the work of Masaccio, his reputation was second only to that of Raphael for developing the progress of art; but modern criticism appears to have rectified a common misunderstanding of the text of Vasari, certainly through Vasari's want of precision.—The chapel was commenced by Masolino da Panicale, continued by Masaccio, and completed by Filippino Lippi, the son of Masaccio's pupil, Fra Filippo Lippi; and it appears that Vasari's original account in the first edition of his Lives was correct, (the statement was left out in the second,) that besides other portions—'Paul Visiting Peter in Prison,' and 'Peter and Paul before the Proconsul,' the two most lauded compositions of the whole chapel, were the work of Filippino, and executed about forty years after the death of Masaccio. The chief argument is founded on the fact of there being several portraits of men in these frescoes which can only have been executed at the later period; still, the authenticity of these very portraits seems to rest solely upon the fact of their being published as such by Vasari, and until their authenticity is thoroughly established, the subject is not indisputably settled.—It is a very difficult and interesting question, very important if true, and we owe its revival to a German and a Dane, Rumohr and Gaye; but the editors of the new Florentine Vasari (1848) have taken up the argument on the same side with great intelligence: still the main point to be decided is the authenticity of the portraits.—

The Brancacci chapel now contains fifteen distinct subjects, eight of which only are attributed by Gave to Masaccio. The completion of the chapel by Filippino raises another question, the date of Masaccio's death. Vasari and Baldinucci state that he died in 1443, not without suspicion of poison; at the same time it was currently reported, and it is repeated by Vasari and others, that Masaccio died in his 26th year. This, as we know for certain that he was born 1402, would place his death in 1428, before the death of Masolino, whom he succeeded, and it interferes with other statements, though it is well reconcilable with the incomplete state of the frescoes of the chapel at his death, which is generally admitted to have been sudden and early: supposing he died in 1443, as Vasari and Baldinucci state, the incompleteness of the chapel is not so well accounted for. Rumohr gives an extract from the cathedral accounts of Florence, which seems to show that Masaccio was living in 1446.—The works of Masaccio are of a high order as regards general technical qualities, well drawn, of a fine general character, and dramatic in composition; and his figures are conspicuous for a simple and grand treatment of drapery, similar in character to those of the now familiar cartoons of Raphael. The difference between these celebrated cartoons and the fresco of Peter and Paul before the Proconsul, by Filippino, is not so much in style, as the great name of Raphael and the intervening forty years would lead one to suppose; but this chapel was notoriously the principal school of Raphael, and nearly every other great painter at the commencement of the sixteenth century. But of course such glory as accrues to Filippino from his restored position is detracted from the reputation of Masaccio. The celebrated figure of Paul in the cartoon of Paul Preaching, is taken from the figure of Paul in the fresco Visiting Peter in Prison, in this chapel, by Filippino, as is now generally assumed; Rosini, however, in his History of Italian Painting, adheres to the old traditions.—(Vasari, Vite, &c., ed Flor. 1846, Seqq; Rumohr, Italianische Forschungen; Gaye, Carteggio Inedito d' Artisti; Rosini, Storia della Pittura Italiana, Pisa, 1848.) [R.N.W.]

MASANIELLO, the commonly received name of TOMASO ANIELLO, a fisherman of Naples, who headed the populace in their revolt against the Spanish viceroy, 1647, when only twenty-five years of age. His career lasted but nine days, in which time he had 150,000 men under his orders, and was elevated to sovereign authority. He was murdered by four assassins, armed with arquebuses, and as the resistance he commenced never ceased till the Spanish yoke was broken, he has since been venerated as the liberator of his country.

MASCAGNI, D., an Ital. painter, 1579-1636.

MASCAGNI, P., an Ital. anatomist, 1752-1815.

MASCARDI, JOSEPH, an Italian juriconsult, born in the republic of Genoa, died 1630. AUGUSTIN, his nephew, an historian and professor of rhetoric, 1591-1640.

MASCH, A. T., a Ger. theologian, 1724-1807.

MASCLEF, F., a Fr. Orientalist, 1668-1728.

MASCOU, J. J., a Germ. historian, 1689-1762.

MASCRIER, J. B. DE, a Fr. eccles., 1697-1760.

MASDEN, DON J. F., a Sp. histo., 1740-1817.

MASENIUS, or MASEN, JAMES, a German

Jesuit, known as a Latin poet, theologian, critic, 1606-1681.

MASERES, FRANCIS, Baron, an eminent mathematician, grandson of a French refugee in London, 1781, died 1824.

MASETTI, A., an Italian engineer, 1757-

MASHAM, ABIGAIL, a cousin of Sarah, d. of Marlborough, and fav. of Queen Anne, d.

MASHAM, LADY DAMARIS, daughter of Ralph Cudworth, and wife of Sir Francis Masham, father-in-law of the preceding, remarkable skill in arithmetic, geography, chronology, philosophy, and divinity, author of moral and religious discourses, 1658-1708.

MASINISSA, an African prince, died B.C.

MASIUS, or MAES, A., a Belgian Orientalist and theological writer, 1527-1573.

MASKELYNE, NEVIL, LL.D., born in London, 1732; died February, 1811, aged seventy-nine: a very eminent British astronomer and mathematician: he filled the important office of Astronomer Royal with the highest credit forty-six years. To Maskelyne are owing important improvements in practical astronomy, especially in its application to Navigation: his exertions brought into general use the method of lunar distances. Maskelyne was unfortunately obstructed by cloudy weather, in his attempt to observe the transit of Venus over the sun's disk, 6th June, 1761, for which purpose he had gone to St. Helena. We owe him, however, the plan and successful carrying out of the effort to determine the mean density of the Earth, by observing deflection of the plummet at the same time mass Schehallion. There have been but few British practical astronomers who are on a par to rank with Maskelyne. [J.]

MASON, CHARLES, assistant astronomer at Greenwich Observatory, d. in Pennsylvania 1791.

MASON, F., a learned divine, about 1566-

MASON, JOHN, a nonconformist minister, at Dunmow, in Essex, 1706, died 1763, known as a moralist and miscellaneous writer by works, entitled 'Self Knowledge,' which has frequently republished, 'Practical Discourses on Christian Morals,' 'Essay on Elocution,' 'On the Power of Numbers, and the Principles of Harmony in Poetical Compositions,' 'Essays on the Power and Harmony of Prosodic Numbers. A Life of the author, by his relative, John M. Good, was prefixed to an edition of the 'Self Knowledge,' published in 1811.

MASON, SIR JOHN, a famous statesman in the reigns of Henry VIII., Edward VI., Mary, and Elizabeth, died 1566.

MASON, WILLIAM, was born in 1725, and educated at Cambridge. Entering the church as a father's profession, he held several preferments and was a canon of York long before his death, which occurred in 1797. He is now remembered chiefly for having been the editor and biographer of the poet Gray. In his life-time, however, he was not only esteemed for his accomplishments, especially in music and painting, but likewise for his no small degree as a poet. His 'English Garden,' amidst much dulness, contains some pleasing bits of scenery; and he showed courage, not unsupported by power of language and passion, in the attempt he made to natu-

Greek chorus in the modern drama. His first 'Elfrida,' is inferior to his second, 'Caracas,' on which his contemporary fame mainly rested. [W.S.]

ASOTTI, D., an Ital. lithotomist, 1698-1779.

ASQUE DE FER. See SAINT MARS.

ASSA, N., a Venetian medical wr., d. 1563.

ASSANELLO. See MASANELLO.

ASSARD, J., a French engraver, 1740-1822.

ASSARI, L., an Italian painter, 1569-1633.

ASSARIA, A., an Italian physician, 1510-98.

ASSE, J. B., a French painter, 1687-1767.

ASSENSA, ANDRE MASSENA was born of noble parentage at Nice in 1758. He entered the French army as a common soldier, and rose to the rank of Rivioli, prince of Esslingen, and marshal of France. He highly distinguished himself in the Italian campaigns of Napoleon; and in 1799 he was commander-in-chief in Switzerland. He saved France by the victory of Zurich, which he gained over the Austrians and Russians in the autumn of the year. In 1800 he defended Genoa with remarkable obstinacy and skill against the Austrians, but was ultimately starved into capitulation. In 1805 Massena commanded in Italy, and defeated the archduke Charles at Caldiero. In 1809 he distinguished himself greatly at the battle of Essling (near Aspern) in Germany, and by his firmness saved the French imperial army from utter destruction. In 1810 Napoleon sent Massena with a powerful force to conquer Portugal, and 'to drive the English and their Sepoy general into the sea. But the genius and firmness of Wellington proved too much for the 'Spoiled child of Victory,' and Massena was called in the French armies. The steep Torres Vedras were a barrier that the French marshal dared not assail, and he retired into Portugal in 1811, showing consummate military skill in the conduct of his retreat, and equal ability in his treatment of the unhappy country which was the scene of the war. Massena was in command at Toulon at the time of Napoleon's first abdication in 1814. He promptly acknowledged Louis XVIII.; but joined Napoleon in the next year on his return from Elba. He commanded the national guard of Paris during the hundred days. Marshal Massena died in 1817. [E.S.C.]

MASSIEU, J. B., a French prelate, 1743-1818.

MASSIEU, W., a Fr. archæologist, 1665-1722.

MASSILLON, JEAN BAPTISTE, the most celebrated pulpit orator of France, was the son of a private public, and born in 1663, at Hières, in Provence. When only nineteen, he entered into the congregation of the Oratory, and immediately attracted notice by the elegance of his manner and the liberal style of his elocution. The first public proofs of his eloquence were made at Vienne, where he performed the duties of Theological Tutor, and on a grand occasion on which his powers of oratory were strongly enlisted, was on the death of Jean de Villars, archbishop of that place. The eloquence of his funeral oration called forth universal admiration, and his fame being widely extended, he was invited to one of the principal churches in Paris. Although several preachers of eminence were already stationed in that capital, Massillon determined to reach the summit of fame by entering into a new path by himself, and he accomplished his design; for his pulpit addresses were in so novel a style, and so irresistibly attractive, so plain and level to every understanding, yet so replete with pathos, and so distinguished for profound and accurate knowledge of human nature, his language was so copious, and his mastery over the passions so consummate, that he was acknowledged, with universal consent, to surpass all his contemporaries. Having frequent opportunities of preaching before the Court, he on one occasion had the finest compliment paid him that a preacher ever received. 'Father,' said the Monarch, 'when I hear other preachers, I go away much pleased with them, but when I hear you, I go away much displeased with myself.' One sermon, described by Voltaire in the Encyclopédie, produced an extraordinary impression. The subject was 'The small number of the elect,' and so overpowering was the picture he drew of the scenes of the last judgment, 'that the hearers involuntarily started from their seats, and such a general murmur of surprise and acclamation arose as disconcerted the preacher himself.' But the effect was in consequence greatly increased, and the excitement of the audience was carried to the highest pitch of intensity. The celebrated actor Barron, having gone to hear him, shortly after his settlement in Paris, waited on him in the vestry, and told him to continue as he had begun; and, at another time, said to a brother actor, who accompanied him, 'my friend, that is the true orator, we are mere players.' Massillon was raised to the see of Clermont, in 1717—a promotion for which he was indebted to the Regent, who, after attending a course of sermons, was impressed with the highest ideas of the preacher's merits. The publication of his famous sermons, entitled, 'Petit-carême,' two years after, procured him an honour of a different kind, the highest literary honour that is known in France, that of being elected a member of the Academy. Massillon now resided wholly and in complete retirement, devoting himself to the duties of his diocese, and being held in high and universal estimation, not only for the splendour of his eloquence and the greatness of his talents, but for his moral and religious worth; he was a lively companion, a faithful friend, a kind and condescending master, and full of benevolence and charity to the poor. His death took place at Clermont, in Sept., 1742, when he had nearly completed his seventy-fifth year. His published discourses occupy 14 volumes. [R.J.]

MASSINGER, PHILIP, was born in 1584, at Salisbury, or perhaps at Wilton, the seat of the earl of Pembroke, in whose household his father held some office. He was sent to Oxford in his eighteenth year, probably with a view to his entering the church. He left the university without taking a degree, and, for reasons which are not known, was thrown on the world penniless and unpatronised: his best editor, Gifford, infers from passages in his works that he had become a Catholic. In 1606 he came to London; and he was always afterwards a play-writer, conferring on our language some of its dramatic masterpieces, but bearing even more than his share in the poverty which was suffered by almost all the dramatists of that brilliant and singular era. The particulars of his history are very obscure. We know, however, that he wrote jointly with others, especially Fletcher, Middleton, and Rowley. A melancholy letter, written about 1613 to Henslowe the theatrical manager, shows him to have been then in great pecuniary distress; he himself, in a dedication, dated 1632, thankfully acknowledges that the bounty of one or two men of rank had kept him alive; and the obscurity of his sad career, at its close, is proved by the register of St. Saviours' in Southwark, which, in 1640, notes the burial of 'Philip Massinger, a stranger.' The famous collection of manuscript plays, which the cook of the herald Warburton used for covering pies, contained twelve attributed to Massinger. Gifford names thirty-seven plays as being his in whole or in part, and prints eighteen of these. Some critics insist on placing Massinger next after Shakspeare; and it is at least indisputable that he is one of the very best of the Old English dramatists. He wants comic humour, but has prodigious vigour, more, indeed, than almost any of his contemporaries, in the conception and delineation of character; his representations of society abound in traits of keen observation, and boldly independent thinking; his situations and incidents are devised with great originality and force; and his serious passages, though often wanting in natural pathos, have a lofty melancholy both of imagery and feeling, and a peculiar grace and melody of expression. He is known to play-goers by 'A New Way to Pay Old Debts;' his 'Maid of Honour' also has been restored to the stage; and Rowe's 'Fair Penitent' is a plagiarism from his 'Fatal Dowry.' Among his other works may be named especially the gloomy tragedy of 'The Unnatural Combat,' and 'The City Madam,' an extraordinarily spirited picture of actual life, idealized into a semi-comic strain of poetry. [W.S.]

MASSINGHERD, SIR OSWALD, of Lincolnshire, distinguished as a knight of St. John of Jerusalem, last prior of that order in Ireland, and last Turcopoler of Malta, born 1490; installed prior at the instance of Cardinal Pole in the reign of Queen Mary, 1550.

MASSON, A., a French ecclesiastic, 1620-1700.

MASSON, A., a French painter, 1636-1702.

MASSON, C. F. P., a Fr. author, 1762-1807.

MASSON, FRANCIS, a Fr. sculptor, 1745-1807.

MASSON, FRANCIS, a Scot. botan., 1741-1805.

MASSON, INNOCENT C., a general of the Carthusian order of monks and learned wr., 1628-1703.

MASSON, JEAN, a French protestant, who took refuge in England on the revocation of the edict of Nantes, became tutor in the family of Bishop Burnet, and wrote some theological and critical works, flourished about 1680-1750. His brother, SAMUEL, part conductor with Jean of a 'Critical Journal,' and pastor of the English church at Dort; dates unknown.

MASSON, JEAN PAPIRE, a French historian and geographical writer, author of 'Annals of France,' &c., 1554-1611. His brother, JEAN, historian of Jeanne Darc, died 1630.

MASSUET, the name of two learned Benedictines, the earliest of whom, RENE, was author of the 'Annals' of his order, 'Lives of the Saints,' and an edition of 'Irenæus,' 1666-1716. The later, named PETER, became a protestant, and wrote several poor histories, 1699-1734.

MASTERS, R., an antiquarian writer, 1713-98.

MASTERS, THOMAS, a scholar and poetical writer, who is said to have assisted Lord He of Cherbury in his life of Henry VIII., died 1611.

MASUCCI, A., an Italian painter, 1691-1711.

MASUCCIO, a famous architect and sculptor of Naples, flourished 1230-1305.

MATANI, A., an Ital. mathematician, 1730-1795.

MATHER, RICHARD, a native of Lancaster who took orders at Oxford, but was suspended for nonconformity in 1633, and afterwards settled in New England. Died there 1669. SAMUEL, eldest son, born in Lancashire 1626, accompanied his father to America 1635, but returning to England in 1650, was actively employed as a minister in various parts of the three kingdoms, and died 1671. INCREASE, youngest son of Richard, in New England 1635, took his degree of B.A. at Harvard college 1656, and joined his brother in Ireland 1657. He was afterwards known as a deputy to the English government in the cause of colonial freedom, and takes rank in literature as a religious essayist and historian, died 1723. MATHEW-MATHER, D.D., son of the preceding, and most eminent of the family, was born at Boston 1663, died 1728. His works are very numerous, but the principal of them are 'An Ecclesiastical History of New England,' 'The Christian Philosophy,' 'Psalterium Americanum,' and 'The Vindication of the Invisible World,' which is an account of the trials of witches, with observations on operation of spirits in association with men.

MATHIAS. See MATTHIAS.

MATHIAS, an emperor of Germany, 1557-1600.

MATHIAS, C., a German savant, 1584-1644.

MATHIAS-CORVINUS, one of the greatest kings of Hungary, was son of John Hunyadi, born in Transylvania 1443, succeeded Ladislaus 1458, crowned in 1464, after he had advanced nearly to the walls of Vienna, and compelled the emperor to recognize him, became king of Bosnia 1469, conquered Austria 1485, died 1490.

MATHIAS, THOMAS JAMES, a writer in the department of polite literature and criticism, became a fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge 1776, and died at Naples 1835. Besides 'Pursuits of Literature,' and other publications in English, he is the author of several works in Italian, which he wrote with great facility.

MATHILDA, MATHILDE. See MATILDA.

MATHON-DE-LA-COUR, JAMES, a French mathematician and experimental philosopher, 1712-1790. His son, CHARLES JOSEPH, a scholar and miscellan. wr., b. 1738, exec. at Lyons 1792.

MATIGNON, JAMES GOYON DE, a marshal of France, distinguished at the battles of Jemappes, Rochebeille, and Montcontour. He was one of the first to recognize Henry of Navarre after the death of Henry III., and officiated as constable at his coronation, 1525-1597.

MATILDA. The queens and princesses of the name are—1. SAINT MATILDA, wife of Henry Fowler, and queen of Germany, died 968. MATILDA, countess of Tuscany, born 1046, succeeded her father, Boniface III., 1054, and was successively Godfrey Le Bossa, son of the duke of Lorraine, and Guelph, son of the duke of Bavaria, died 1115. This princess is remarkable in history for her devotion to the papacy, which she endeavoured to support against the emperor, who was at that time with vast possessions, and thereby laid the foundation of long-continued wars between the pope and the emperor.

emperors. 3. MATILDA, wife of William the Conqueror, daughter of Baldwin V., count of Flanders, and of Adela, princess of France, married the duke of Normandy 1054, crowned queen of England 1068, died 1083. She had eleven children, the best known of whom are—Robert, William Rufus, and Henry Beaufort. 4. SAINT MATILDA, daughter of Malcolm king of Scotland, and queen consort of Henry I. of England, to whom she was married in 1100, died 1118. 5. MATILDA, or MAUD, daughter of the latter, born 1100, was married to Henry V., emperor of Germany, 1111, Henry dying in 1125, she was united 10 years afterwards to Geoffrey Plantagenet, king of Anjou, and in 1135 succeeded to the throne of England by the death of her father. She was crowned, after vanquishing her rival Stephen, 1141, but afterwards suffered a reverse, and took refuge in France, where she died 1167. After the death of Stephen, her son by Geoffrey Plantagenet, succeeded as Henry II. 6. MATILDA, countess of Angouleme and la Marche, married 1179-1233. 7. MATILDA CAROLINE, daughter of Frederick Louis, prince of Wales, granddaughter of the princess Sophia of Zell, and daughter of George III., born 1751, married to Christian VII., and became queen of Denmark in the year of his succession 1766, divorced upon a charge of adultery with Count Struensée, 1772, and, after much suffering, in the twenty-fourth year of her age, 1775. MATSKO, J. M., a Hungarian astron., 1721-96. MATSYS, or MESSIS, QUINTIN, a Flemish painter, known as 'the blacksmith of Antwerp,' having been originally a blacksmith or farrier, was born in 1460. He is the subject of an interesting story which relates that he fell in love with the daughter of an artist, whose hand was only to be obtained by a master of the same profession; and 1529. He had a son, named JOHN, who painted in the same style. MATTATHIAS. See MACCAREUS. MATTEI, L., an Italian poet, 1622-1705. MATTEIS, P. DE, a pain. of Naples, 1662-1728. MATTHÆI, C. F., a Pruss. savant, 1744-1811. MATTHÆUS, A., a Dutch jurist., 1635-1710. MATTHESON, J., a Dutch music., 1681-1764. MATTHEW, the writer of the gospel so called, was a publican or collector of the taxes imposed on the Romans, who became one of the twelve apostles. He wrote his gospel from 30 to 40 years after Christ, some writers say in the Hebrew or Syriac. The probability is, that one was written in Hebrew, A.D. 37 or 38, and another in Greek for the Gentiles 61. Tradition states that he died in Ethiopia. He is sometimes called Levi. MATTHEW, the first of the name, duke of Lorraine, and a companion-in-arms of Frederick Barbarossa, reigned 1139-1176. The second, duke, 1220-1251. MATTHEW, TOBIAS, successively bishop of Durham, and archbishop of York, distinguished for learning and virtues, was born in Bristol 1546, died 1628. His son, of the same name, was a courtier, accomplished as an artist and man of letters, executed the part of a Jesuit spy, 1578-1655. MATTHEW OF WESTMINSTER, one of the most reliable, and most scrupulously accurate fathers of English history, was a Benedictine monk of the Abbey of Westminster, and lived at an uncertain period in the 14th century. His history modelled on the style of Matthew Paris, extended to 1307, and was continued seventy years later by another hand.

MATHEWS, CHARLES, an English comedian, with powers of mimicry never excelled, was born in 1776. His talents were various, and he had the rare capacity of creating characters out of slender materials given by the writers of his entertainments, which he denominated 'Mathews at Home.' To these monologues the comedian resorted, in the first instance, to occupy the intervals that occurred between his stage-engagements; but they proved so successful as to command ultimately his undivided attention. He died in 1837. [J.A.H.]

MATTHEWS, T., an English admiral, d. 1751.

MATTHIAS, supposed to have been one of the seventy disciples, and the one chosen by lot to fill the place of Judas as an apostle, is said to have preached in Cappadocia, and to have died there. His history is uncertain.

MATTHIAS, the name of several high priests of the Jews, commencement of the Christian era.

MATTHIEU, P., a French histor., 1563-1621.

MATTHISSON, FREDERIC VON, a lyric poet of Saxony, author of the 'Adelaide,' the music to which was composed by Beethoven, 1761-1831.

MATTIOLI, L., an Italian painter, 1662-1741.

MATTIOLI, P. A., an Ital. naturalist, 1500-77.

MATTOCKS, ISABELLA, an actress, 1746-1826.

MATURIN, CHARLES ROBERT, descended from a French family, who fled their country on the revocation of the edict of Nantes, was born in Dublin, 1782. He was educated for the church, in which he became a curate, and wrote some discourses directed against the errors of Rome. He acquired somewhat more celebrity, however, as a novelist and writer for the stage, and is said to have been an eloquent preacher, died 1825.

MATURIN, HENRY, an Irish clergyman, author of several tragedies and novels, 1772-1842.

MATURINO, an Italian painter, died 1527.

MATY, MATTHEW, a Dutch physician, settled in England, known as a miscellaneous writer and librarian to the British Museum, born about 1718, died 1776. His son, PAUL HENRY, one of the librarians of the British Museum, and secretary to the Royal Society, 1745-1787.

MAUBURNE, J., a Flem. ascetic, 1460-1502.

MAUCROIX, F. DE, a Fr. transla., 1619-1708.

MAUDUIT, A. R., a Fr. mathema., 1731-1815.

MAUDUIT, ISRAEL, son of a dissenting minister, known as a political wr., London, 1708-87.

MAUDUIT, M., a Fr. theologian, 1644-1709.

MAUGARD, A., a French author, 1739-1817.

MAULEON, A. DE, a Fr. historian, died 1653.

MAUNDRELL, H., a cel. traveller, date 1697.

MAUNOIR, P. J., a French theolog., 1606-83.

MAUPEOU, RENE CHARLES DE, born in Paris 1688, became vice-chancellor in 1763, d. 1775.

MAUPEOU, RENE NICOLAS CHARLES AUGUSTIN DE, son of the preceding, was born 1714, and became chancellor of France 1768. His character was that of a low and corrupt intriguer, and he preserved his influence with Louis XV., by paying the most servile court to the king's mistress, Dubarry. In 1771 he banished the parliament of Paris, and substituted a royal council for it, called in derision 'the Maupeou parliament.' He was exiled to his own estates on the recall of the parliament by Louis XVI., 1774, and died peaceably in 1792. His last act was a gift of 800,000 francs to the nation. [E.R.]

MAUPERCHE, H., a French painter, 1606-86.

MAUPERTIUS, P. L. MOREAU DE, one of the most celebrated mathematicians and astronomers of France, 1698-1759.

MAUR, St., a French Benedictine of the 6th century, whose name was adopted by a congregation of religious persons in the period between 1618 and 1627. This order soon acquired authority over more than a hundred religious houses, and is famous for the number of learned men it has produced.

MAURAND, PETER, a leader of the Albigenses in the 13th century, born 1199.

MAUREPAS, JEAN FREDERIC PHILIPPEAUX, Count De, a French statesman, born 1701, flourished at the court of Louis XIV., from 1715 to 1749, when he was banished by the intrigues of Madame de Pompadour. He was recalled to the ministry by Louis XVI., in 1774, and it was by his advice that the French government aided the Americans in their war of independence; d. 1781.

MAURICE, elector of Saxony, celebrated as the founder of German protestantism, born 1521; killed in battle 1553.

MAURICE, A., a Swiss minister, 17th century.

MAURICE, F. W., a Swiss agricult., 1750-1826.

MAURICE OF NASSAU, prince of Orange, one of the founders of the Dutch republic, was the son of William I., prince of Orange, and was about eighteen years of age when the latter was assassinated in 1584. It is explained in the article WILLIAM how the revolt of the Netherlands against Spain was occasioned by the resolve of Philip to domineer over the protestant freedom of the country by the introduction of the inquisition. It is sufficient to add here, that the death of the stadtholder was followed by the re-annexation of the southern provinces to the Spanish crown, while the northern raised Maurice to the stadtholdership, and refused the treacherous peace that was offered to them by the duke of Parma. From his accession to power in 1584 till 1609, Maurice continued the war of independence, the commanders opposed to him being Count Mansfeldt, the duke of Parma, the archduke Albert, or, strictly speaking, Albert's wife, Isabella, ('the only man in her family'), and last of all Spinola. After the capture of Ostend on the one side, and the strong fortress of Sluys on the other, and repeated proofs that, in the persons of Maurice and Spinola, two of the greatest masters of war were opposed to each other, Spain offered to treat with the united provinces on the basis of their independence, and in 1609 a truce of twelve years was agreed upon. In this interval the Dutch republic made immense progress, but all the fruits of liberty were distasteful to Maurice, whose tendencies were to absolute authority, supported by his religious zeal for the strictest form of Calvinism. Accordingly, in the Arminian controversy it suited his purpose to favour Gomarus, and in 1618, the synod of Dort being convened, which determined in favour of 'Predestination,' he arrested the chiefs of the opposite party, and sent Barneveldt, the p statesman, to the block, while Ledenberg was the rack by stabbing himself, and the h Grotius was consigned to perpetual imprisonment. The remainder of Maurice's life was such Neophyte of blood deserved. The two a Barneveldt stirred up popular commotions venge the death of their aged father, and fol him to the scaffold in 1623. In 1621, a truce with Spain had expired, and Spinola the war with such superior strength, that he pelled Maurice, weakened by intestine divi to act on the defensive. He now sunk und mortifications, and died at the Hague, while was invested by the enemy, in 1625, leaving conduct of the war to his brother and suc Frederick, whom he advised with his last l to recall the Arminians.

MAURICE, THOMAS, an Oriental scholar historian, was descended from a respectable family, and was born at Hertford, 1753. He a minister of the Church of England, and tant-librarian at the British Museum, whe died 1824. His principal works relate to history and antiquities of Hindostan.

MAURISIO, G., an Italian chronicler, 13th

MAURUS, H., an Ital. ecclesiastic, 1632-

MAURUS, T., a Roman poet, 1st century

MAURY, JEAN SIFFREIN, a French car political orator and litterateur, was born of family in 1746, and was distinguished for hi quence as a preacher and eulogist before the lution. In 1789 he was sent to the es general as deputy for the clergy of Peronne took part with the noblesse and the G church against Mirabeau. In 1791 he reti Rome, and in 1794 was made a cardinal. In he returned to Paris, and having tendered his mission to Napoleon, became, four years wards, archbishop of Paris. He again a safety in Rome on the fall of the emperor in and died there 1817.

MAUSSAC, P. J. DE, a French hel and classical critic, 1590-1650.

MAUVILON, ELEAZAR, an Italian hist secretary to Frederick Augustus, king of Po 1712-1779. His son, JAMES, an historical and friend of Mirabeau, 1743-1794.

MAVOR, WILLIAM FORDYCE, a S clergyman of the Church of England, auth many works, the subjects of which are add to the education of youth, 1758-1838.

MAWE, JOSEPH, a master of the scienc mineralogy and conchology, author of a 'Tr on Diamonds and Precious Stones,' 'Familia sons on Mineralogy and Geology,' 'The Lin System of Conchology,' &c., b. abt. 1755, d.

MAXENTIUS, MARCUS AURELIUS VA IUS, one of six contemporary emperors of l reigned 306-312.

MAXIMIANUS, GALERIUS VALERIUS shepherd of Dacia, who became emperor o East, 305-311.

MAXIMIANUS, MARCUS AURELIUS VA IUS HERCULIUS, a Roman soldier, who be colleague of Diocletian in the empire 286. endeavoured to murder his rival Constanti whom he had given his daughter Faustina i riage, and being frustrated by the fidelity o er, strangled himself 310. He was the father of contemporary of Maxentius.

MAX

MAXIMILIAN, a saint, martyred 295.

MAXIMILIAN I., emperor of Germany, son of emperor Frederic III., and of Eleonora of Palat was born 1459. He first became an independent prince by his marriage with Mary of Hungary, the daughter of Charles Le Téméraire who was killed 1477. This match involved him in war with Louis XI., king of France, in which he was successful, though he was defeated at a later period by the Milanese. In 1486 Maximilian elected king of the Romans, in 1493 emperor. Died in 1516, and was succeeded by his grandson Charles V. MAXIMILIAN II., son of Ferdinand I., was born at Vienna 1527, elected king of the Romans 1562, and succeeded his father as king of Hungary and Bohemia, and emperor of Germany 1564. Died 1576.

MAXIMILIAN, a duke of Milan, 16th cent.

MAXIMILIAN, the name of three sovereign princes of Bavaria. 1. EMMANUEL MAXIMILIAN, duke and elector, known to history from 1685 to his death in 1726. 2. LEOPOLD MAXIMILIAN, duke and elector, succeeded 1746, died 1777. 3. MAXIMILIAN JOSEPH, king of Bavaria, born 1756, crowned 1799, married his daughter to Louis Beauharnais, son of Josephine, and had his daughter raised to a kingdom 1806, joined the league against France 1813. Died 1825.

MAXIMINUS, CAIUS JULIUS VERUS, a herdsman of Thrace, born of Gothic parents, who became emperor of Rome 235, killed by his troops 238.

MAXIMINUS, CAIUS GALERIUS VALERIUS, a Thracian peasant, known by the name of DAIA, or DAZ, who was named Caesar by the influence of his uncle Galerius 305, and proclaimed emperor when five others had already assumed the purple. He poisoned himself after his death by Licinius 313.

MAXIMUS, CLODIUS PAPIENUS, a Roman general, proclaimed emperor by the senate along with Decimus Caelius Balbinus, in opposition to Maximinus, 237, killed along with Balbinus 238.

MAXIMUS, MAGNUS, a Roman soldier, proclaimed emperor in Britain, and afterwards acknowledged in Gaul and all the West 383, k. 388.

MAXIMUS, PETRONIUS, a noble Roman who became emperor under peculiar and tragical circumstances in 455, after he had been three times Roman præfect of Italy, and twice consul. In the year mentioned, Valentinian III. having committed an outrage upon the wife of Maximus, was assassinated at his instigation, and the latter appointed his successor by the unanimous voice of the Roman people. In less than three months afterwards he was murdered in the streets for attempting to fly on the appearance of the fleet of Gaiseric, king of the Vandals. [E.R.]

MAXIMUS, ST., the first of the name, an abbot of Lombard, and bishop of Turin, 5th century. The second, a theological writer, died 662.

MAXIMUS THE CYNIC, a pagan theurgist, confidant of the emperor Julian, 4th century.

MAXIMUS THE GREEK, an ecclesiastical saint, martyred at Moscow 16th century.

MAXIMUS OF TURIN, a bp. of that see, 5th c.

MAXIMUS OF TYRE, a Phœnician philosopher, who flourished at Athens in the 2d century.

MAXWELL, SIR M., a naval comman., d. 1831.

MAZ

MAXWELL, ROBERT, Lord, one of the lords of the regency for James V. of Scotland, d. 1546.

MAXWELL, W. H., a lively English novelist, author of 'Wild Sports of the West,' &c., d. 1851.

MAY, LOUIS DU, a French historian, 17th ct.

MAY, THOMAS, a republican poet and historian of the parliament of England, 1594-1650.

MAYENNE, CHARLES OF LORRAINE, duke of, son of Francis, duke of Guise, a famous French commander in the interest of the catholics, 1554-1611. His son, HENRY, chamberlain of France, and governor of Guienne, born 1578, killed at the siege of Montauban, 1621.

MAYER, ANDREW, a Germ. astron., 1716-82.

MAYER, C., a Jesuit and astronomer, 1719-83.

MAYER, J. C. A., a Prussian anat., 1747-1801.

MAYER, J. F., a German theolog., 1650-1712.

MAYER, TOBIAS, a German astron., 1723-62.

MAYET, S., a German writer, 1751-1825.

MAYNARD, F., a French poet, 1582-1646.

MAYNARD, SIR JOHN, a lawyer and member of parliament, one of the managers of the trials of the earl of Strafford and Archbishop Laud, 1602-90.

MAYNE, JASPER, an eminent clergyman, who amused himself as a wit and playwright, d. 1672.

MAYNE, JOHN, a Scotch poet, died 1836.

MAYNO, J. B., a Spanish artist, 1594-1654.

MAYNWARING, ARTHUR, a political and miscellaneous writer, time of William III., 1668-1712.

MAYO, HERBERT, M.D., an English physiologist, died 1852.

MAYOR, THOMAS, a Spanish friar, 17th cent.

MAYOW, JOHN, a physician and physiological writer, author of works on respiration and the muscular motion of animal bodies, 1645-1679.

MAYR, G., a German Hebraist, 1565-1623.

MAYR, J. DE, a German adventurer, 1716-59.

MAYRE, J., a Jesuit and poet, 1628-1694.

MAZARIN, JULIUS, an ecclesiastic and statesman, was born at Piscina, in the Abruzzi, in the year 1602. He was educated for the church, and in 1641 received a cardinal's hat. His name is conspicuous in the history of Europe as prime minister of France in the middle of the seventeenth century. But he merely occupied a place created by the powerful genius of Richelieu, who in crushing the aristocracy, left to whoever should be prime minister of France during the minority of Louis XIV., one of the most important positions in Europe. Mazarin had to support the crown and the cause of Anne of Austria, during the miserable war of the Fronde, and he was at one juncture obliged to flee for personal safety. Had he been even as able a man as his predecessor, it could not have been expected that he should govern as a native Frenchman could, and perhaps nothing better proves how effectively Richelieu had subdued the discordant elements in France, than that an Italian should be able to govern the country. Mazarin died on the 9th of March, 1661. [J.H.B.]

MAZDAK, a Persian communist, who commenced his agitation about 501, and was put to death after making a convert of the king Khobad.

MAZEAS, J. M., a Fr. mathematic., 1716-1801.

MAZELINE, P., a French sculptor, 1632-1708.

MAZEPPA, JOHN, the famous hetman of the Cossacks, whose name has been rendered familiar as one of Byron's heroes, was a native of the palatinat of Podolia, and for some time a page at the court of John Casimir. Being discovered in an intrigue with the wife of a Polish gentleman, the latter bound him on the back of one of the wild horses of the Ukraine, which carried him to the country of the Cossacks, with whom he remained, and in 1687 became their chief commander. He was a favourite of Peter the Great, who gave him the title of prince, but growing tired of the Russian yoke, Mazeppa allied himself with Charles XII. of Sweden, and advised him to fight the disastrous battle of Pultowa. After his defeat he retired to Wallachia, and thence to Bender, where he d. 1709.

MAZET, ANDREW, a Fr. physician, 1793-1821.

MAZO-MARTINEZ, J. B. DEL, paint. to Philip IV. of Spain, and pupil of Velasquez, died 1687.

MAZOIS, F., a French architect, 1783-1827.

MAZURE, F. A. J., a Fr. histor., 1776-1828.

MAZZA, ANDREW, an Ital. savant, 1724-1797.

MAZZA, ANGELO, an Italian poet, 1741-1817.

MAZZHINGI, JOSEPH, Count, an eminent opera composer, descended from a family of Tuscany, but born of an English mother in England, 1765, died at Bath 1844.

MAZZOCCHI, A. S., an It. antiq., 1684-1771.

MAZZUCHELLI, THE COUNT GIAMMARIA, an Italian librarian, known as a literary biographer and writer on antiquity, 1707-1765.

MAZZUCHELLI, THE ABBE P., a philologist and antiquarian of Milan, flourished 1762-1829.

MAZZUCHELLI, THE CHEVALIER PIER FRANCESCO, called Il Morazzone, an Italian painter in the style of Tintoretto, 1571-1626.

MAZZUOLI, FRANCESCO, a celebrated Italian painter, called PARMIZIANO, or the Parmesian, from his native city, 1503-1540. His cousin and scholar, GIROLAMO, died about 1590.

MAZZUOLI, J., a painter of Ferrara, d. 1589.

MEAD, RICHARD, physician to George II., known as a professional writer, 1673-1754.

MEADOWCOURT, RICHARD, a divine and critic, author of Notes on Milton, 1697-1769.

MEARA. See O'MEARA.

MEARES, J., an English navigator in 1788-89.

MECHAIN, PIERRE FRANCIS ANDRE, a dist. French astronomer and mathematician, 1774-1805.

MEDARD, St., a Fr. prelate, flour. 457-545.

MEDE, JOSEPH, a English divine, 1586-1638.

MEDER, P. J., a Russian mineralog., 1763-1826.

MEDICI. The illustrious Florentine family of this name begins with SALVESTRO, who enjoyed the rank of gonfalonier from 1378 to his banishment in 1381. JOHN, his son and successor, distinguished for his commercial enterprise, and for promoting the interests of the republic, flourished 1360-1428. COSMO, one of the sons of the latter, born in 1389, and known as 'the father of his country,' acquired immense wealth and influence, and laid the foundation of his reputation by the munificent patronage of letters, and the conjunction of consummate statesmanship with his commercial enterprise. Many of the first Tuscan families combined against him, but he overcame all rivalry, and was for thirty-four years the sole arbitrator of the republic, and the adviser of the sovereign houses of Italy; died 1464. PETER I., his son and successor, was born 1414, and became the victim of a revolt in 1469. LORENZO THE MAGNIFICENT, son and successor of Peter, was born 1448, and governed the state in conjunction with his brother Julian, till the latter was sinated by the Pazzi in 1478. Escaping this massacre he sustained a war with Ferdinand of Naples, with whom he signed a definitive treaty in 1480. He then devoted himself to the execution of plans for the advancement of the arts, revived the Academy of Pisa, another at Florence, collected a vast library, and founded a gallery of art, the taste of Michelangelo was formed under his patronage. He died universally beloved and mourned, in the zenith of his renown 1492. His life has been written by ROSCOE. He had three sons, JOHN, who became pope, (see LEO X.), and PETER. The latter, PETER II., succeeded his father, and was deprived of his estates when France invaded Italy in 1494. He finished his career in the service of France, and was killed at the battle of Ravenna in 1504, leaving two sons, Lorenzo and Cosmo. LIAN II., brother and successor of Peter, died in favour of Lorenzo 1513, and became duke of Florence by his marriage with the aunt of Peter. He died 1516. LORENZO II., eldest son of LIAN II., came to power by the abdication of his father, and governed under the influence of Leo X., who invested him with the duchy of Urbino. He died 1519, leaving an only daughter. (See MEDICIS). After some reverses we find the republic re-established in the sovereignty of Florence, the influence of Charles V., with the title of King of Naples, was the cause of its ruin. The first was ALEXANDER, proclaimed duke of Florence, but stabbed by his relative Lorenzino, after poisoning his cousin Hippolytus 1537. LORENZINO, brother of Alexander, was assassinated at the order of Cosmo I., 1548. (See CATHERINE DE' MEDICI). COSMO I., called 'The Great,' was born 1519. He was raised to power by the influence of Charles V., and abdicated in favour of his son 1564. In 1569 he became duke of Tuscany, and died 1574. COSMO II., son and successor of Cosmo I., flourished 1541-1587. FERDINAND I., brother and successor of the latter, was also cardinal and grand duke of Tuscany, 1551-1609. COSMO II., son and successor of Ferdinand, 1590-1621. FERDINAND II., son and successor of Cosmo II., flourished 1602-1623. JOHN GASTON, son and successor of FERDINAND II., was the last of the Medici who governed Tuscany, being compelled to abdicate in favour of Francis II., duke of Lorraine, in 1621. He flourished 1671-1713. His daughter, ANNE, wife of John William, Elector of Brandenburg, was the last of the family. She was born 1650. MEDICI, THE CHEVALIER DON LUIGI, a statesman of Naples, was born 1754, and became director of the police. From this office he made his way to the ministry, and in 1806 he followed Joseph Buonaparte, followed the fortunes of the Bourbons. The arrest of Murat, the king of Naples, and the struggles with the Austrians were among the circumstances in which he came a distinguished actor. In 1818 he was a fugitive at Rome, but was in power again in 1824, and assisted in delivering the kingdom from the Austrian occupation. Died 1830.

MEDICUS, F. C., a Bavar. botanist, 1736-1808.
 MEDINA, G. B., a Flemish painter, 1660-1711.
 MEDINA, J. DE, a Span. ecclesiastic, d. 1556.
 MEDINA, SIR J., a portrait painter, 1659-1711.
 MEDINA, M. DE, a Spanish friar, 16th cent.
 MEDINA, P. DE, a Span. mathematic., 16th ct.
 MEDINA, S. J. P. DE, a Span. poet, 17th cent.
 MEDINA-SIDONIA, GASPARD ALONZO PEZ DE GUZMAN, duke of, governor of Andalusia in the reign of Philip IV., noted for his attempt to render himself independent in 1640. For others of the family, see GUZMAN.
 MEDYN, ABON, an Arabian savant, died 1193.
 MEEL, J., a Flemish painter, 1599-1644.
 MEEN, H., a divine and class. scholar, 1745-1817.
 MEEREN, or MEER, JOHN VAN DE, called 'the Old,' a Dutch painter of sea-pieces, landscapes, and battles, 1627-1691. Another painter of the same names, called 'the Younger,' and famous for his pastoral scenes, 1665-1698.
 MEGASTHENES, a Gr. historian, 3d cent. B.C.
 MEGERLIN, D. F., a Ger. theologian, d. 1778.
 MEISER, J., a Germ. philologist, 1555-1616.
 MEHEGAN, WILLIAM ALEXANDER DE, descended from an Irish family who went into France in the reign of James II., distinguished as an elegant miscellaneous writer, 1721-1766.
 MEHEMET ALI, born in 1765 at Cavalla, in the part of European Turkey which was formerly Macedonia. He entered the Turkish army, and served in Egypt against the French. He rose by degrees in military rank and political importance in that country; and at length in 1806 he assumed the post of pacha of Egypt from the Turkish government. He finally broke the power of the Mamelukes; and by treacherously inviting them to a festival as friends, he obtained an opportunity, of which he mercilessly availed himself, to massacre the last of these formidable cavaliers in 1811. He carried on by his sons several campaigns in behalf of the sultan against the Wahabite rebels in Arabia; and he afterwards sent troops under his son, Ibrahim Pacha, to the Crimea, who gave important aid to the Turks in the Greek war of independence. In 1830 he obtained from the sultan the government of the island of Candia; and he next endeavoured to make himself master of Syria, which Sultan Mahomed refused him. He sent a large army to that important province, and he was thereupon declared independent by the Porte, and the Turkish armies were sent against him. Mehemet Ali's troops had been formerly trained by European officers, and they were the sultan's in every encounter. Peace was made between the powerful viceroy of Egypt and the humiliated sovereign in 1833, by the intervention of the chief states of Europe. Hostilities broke out again between them in 1839; and, as the Egyptian forces were uniformly victorious over the Turkish. The armed interposition of the English, and the capture of Acre and other fortresses on the Syrian coast by our fleet, under the guidance of Admiral Napier, compelled Mehemet Ali to come to terms again with the Porte. He was obliged to give up Syria; but he retained the pashalic of Egypt was secured to him and his children.—Mehemet Ali was free from religious bigotry; he was an earnest admirer of European civilization, and he strove to introduce it among his Egyptian subjects. He showed a rare degree of high-mindedness and generosity in 1840, by allowing the English mails and travellers to and from India, to pass unmolested as usual through his dominions, at the very time our fleet were blockading his capital, Alexandria, and were destroying his fortresses and garrisons in Syria. Mehemet Ali died in 1848. [E.S.C.]

MEHEMET-EFFENDI, a Turkish statesman, known as plenipotentiary of the Sublime Porte at the treaty of Passarowitz 1718, and ambassador to France 1720. He was exiled after the deposition of Achmet III., 1730. His son, SAID, ambassador to France in 1742, introduced the printing press, which he established at Scutari.

MEHUL, S. H., a Fr. composer, 1763-1817.

MEHUS, L., an Italian philologist, died 1791.

MEIBOM, or MEIBOMIUS, the name of several learned Germans:—1. JOHN HENRY, a publicist and annalist, 1555-1625. 2. His son, of the same names, a physician and professional writer, 1590-1655. 3. HENRY, son of the latter, a physician and historian, 1638-1700. 4. MARK, a relative of the preceding, an antiquar. and Hebraist, 1630-1711.

MEIER, J., a Prussian philologist, 1661-1732.

MEIGRET, L., a Fr. grammarian, born 1510.

MEINER, J. W., a Bavar. philologist, 1723-89.

MEINERS, C., a Germ. historian, 1747-1810.

MEINTEL, J. G., a Ger. theologian, 1695-1775.

MEISSNER, B., a German divine, 1587-1626.

MEISSNER, A. T., a Ger. novelist, 1753-1807.

MELA, POMONIUS, a Roman geographer, 1st c.

MELANCHTHON, PHILIP, was born at Bretheim, in the lower Palatinate, in 1497. His father was an armourer, and his original German name was Schwartzerd, which, in imitation of Reuchlin and other learned men, he Grecized into Melanchthon, or as he used, especially in his latter days, to spell it, Melanthon. Both names denote 'black earth.' After having studied at Pfortzheim for two years, Philip removed to Heidelberg, where he became bachelor of arts; and on being refused a mastership, on account of his youth, he repaired to Tübingen, where he became a lecturer. In 1518 he received the high encomium of Erasmus, and, at the instigation of Luther and Reuchlin, he was the same year invited by Frederick, elector of Saxony, to fill the chair of Greek in the recently founded University of Wittemberg. At this seat of learning he was at once under the mighty spirit and influence of his intrepid colleague Luther. His agency in the great Reformation has been overshadowed by that of Luther, but he was ever active and industrious in his own humble and unostentatious mode. In 1519 he accompanied Luther to Leipzig, in order to dispute with Eckius, and in 1521 he published his famous Loci Communes, a treatise which in his own lifetime went through sixty editions. In 1520 he married the daughter of one of the burgomasters of Wittemberg, and by her had two sons and two daughters. During the progress of the Reformation he visited many cities, and was active in patronising seminaries of learning. Nor was his pen idle in the cause; and though his compositions had not the overwhelming torrent of Luther's rhetoric, yet their quiet, elegant, and self-possessed tone were not the less useful in aiding the emancipation and progress of Germany. He was as earnest as Luther to free theology from scholastic subtleties. There is no doubt that many of the plans carried out by the Reformers were the result of Melanchthon's wise suggestions. His Greek scholarship was also of continued and inestimable advantage to Luther in his work of translating the Bible. His own commentaries also show how his erudition qualified him to be a lucid, accurate, and elegant expositor. In 1530 Melanchthon was appointed to draw up the general Confession which was presented to the emperor at Augsburg, and he also wrote the Apology for it. He was invited to dispute with the Sorbonne in 1535, but refused this invitation, as well as a similar and subsequent one from England. After Luther's death, Melanchthon was often sadly perplexed and harassed. The famous measure of the Interim did not find him disinclined to look upon it with a kindly eye. Men of bolder character rallied him on his irresoluteness, and pointed to his failures at Worms, Ratisbon, and Bonn. His orthodoxy was suspected, and he was blamed for the approximation of his views on the Lord's Supper to those of the Swiss Reformers. These rough and unceremonious assaults often plunged him into grief. Melanchthon died at Wittenberg, 19th April, 1568, aged sixty-three. The amiability, gentleness, and benignant purity of Melanchthon; his zeal, learning, and ingenuity, have placed him next to Luther as an agent in the work of the Reformation. He sometimes fretted at Luther's overbearing vehemence, but he venerated its grounds; and Luther, though he might doubt the propriety of Philip's procedure in some cases, and stigmatize it as mere expediency, was won by his gentle demeanour and unquestioned sincerity. These qualities, like the 'still small voice,' often commended the new doctrine where the whirlwind and thunder had only produced terror and revulsion. Melanchthon wrote on many topics besides theology, such as commentaries on various Greek and Latin classics, and some historical and philosophical treatises. His works were published at Wittenberg in 4 vols. folio, in 1562 and subsequent years, and were reprinted several times. There had been a previous edition printed at Basel in 1541. A new one has been in course of preparation and published for many years under the editorial care of Br. neider and Bindseil. The general title is C. Reformatorium, and eighteen quarto volumes already appeared.

[House of Melanchthon.]

MELANDERHIELM, DANIEL, a Swedish metrician and astronomer, 1726-1810.

MELANTHUS, a Greek painter, 4th cent. MELBOURNE, WILLIAM LAMB, Viscount Melbourne, the Whig statesman whose name and career are familiar to the present generation, was born in 1779, and commenced his political life in parliament in 1805. The same year he married Lady Caroline Ponsonby, known to literature as Lady Caroline Lamb, whose tastes were genial with his own, and who shared with him the classical studies in which they were proficient. In 1827 he became secretary of the Irish government, and the next year, succeeding his father's title, entered the House of Lords. In 1830 he joined the administration of Earl Grey as home secretary, and in March, 1834, succeeded him as premier. From the autumn of the same year to the spring of 1835, he was planted by the duke of Wellington and Sir Robert Peel, but at the latter period returned to parliament and retained the premiership, with the exception of a brief retirement in 1839, till the close of his public life in 1841. Great difference of opinion prevailed as to the statesmanship of Lord Melbourne, but he held office during that most turbulent period when the Reform Bill was in agitation; it required no mean talents, however well supported by party, to compete with such a statesman as Sir Robert Peel during subsequent years. He was an accomplished gentleman, an agreeable companion, and a finished speaker. Died 1848. [See WILKINSON.]

MELCHTHAL, ARNOLD OF. See WINCKELMANN.

MELDOLA, DR. RAPHAEL, principal of the Jewish rabbis in England, celebrated as a theologian and philosopher, died 1828.

MELEAGER, a Gr. epigrammatist, 1st cent. B.C. MELEAGER, one of the generals of Alexander the Great, who obtained Lydia on the division of the empire, slain by order of Perdiccas, B.C. 323.

MELÉNDEZ-VALDEZ, JEAN ANTONIO, one of the most celeb. lyric poets of Spain, 1754-1801.

MELETIUS, an Egyptian prelate, 4th cent.

MELETIUS, a Greek geographer, 1661-1717.

MELFORT, DUKE DE. See DRUMMOND.

MELI, GIOVANNI, a Sicilian poet, 1740-1817.

MELISSINO, a Russian officer, 1730-1801.

MELISSUS, an Eleatic philosopher, 5th cent. B.C.

MELISSUS, PAUL, a German poet, 1539-1604.

MELITO, ST., a bishop of Sardina, 2d cent. A.D.

MELITUS, a Greek orator and poet, who was one of the principal accusers of Socrates.

MELIUS, SPURIUS, a Rom. knight, k. B.C. 46.

MELLAN, C., a French designer, 1598-1666.

MELLO, P. DE, a Portug. statesman, 1760-1817.

MELLON, HARRIET, a country actress, who was introduced on the London stage by Richard Brinsley Sheridan, and became celebrated by her marriage in 1814 with Thomas Coutts, Esq., a wealthy banker, and in 1827 with the duke of Albany. She died in 1837, leaving the bulk of her immense property to the granddaughter of her band, and youngest daughter of Sir Francis Reddett, now known as Miss Burdett Coutts.

MELMOTH, WILLIAM, a learned benchet ofcoln's Inn, chiefly remembered as the author of religious work entitled 'The Great Importance of Religious Life,' 1666-1743. His son, of the same name, a classical transl. and poet, 1710-99.

MELOZZO, F., an Italian painter, 15th cent.

MELVIL, SIR JAMES, a Scottish statesman and historian, attached to the person of Mary Stuart, au. of 'Memoirs,' pub. in 1683, 1530-1606.

MELVILLE, ANDREW, was the youngest of sons of Richard Melville of Baldovy, near Montrose, and was born on the 1st August, 1545.

When only two years old he lost his father, who was killed at the battle of Pinkie, but his eldest brother took an affectionate charge of him. Placed first at the grammar school of Montrose, where he made great progress, especially in Latin, he entered St. Mary's College, St. Andrews, in 1559, in the fourteenth year. Having finished the usual course of study, he left the university in 1564, with a distinguished reputation, departed to the continent, attended for two years the university of Padua, and was then appointed a regent in the college of St. Marceon, when he was only twenty-one years of age. Leaving the place after a siege, he fled to Switzerland in a state of great fatigue and destitution, and on arriving at Geneva, obtained the chair of humanity in its academy. On his return to Scotland in July, 1574, he was immediately chosen principal of Glasgow college by the General Assembly. His zeal, assiduity, and his high position, were of vast profit to the Glasgow seminary. In 1580, he was translated to the principality of St. Mary's College, St. Andrews, where his labours were very abundant in the form of academic training and discipline. His attention was also, and chiefly, devoted to ecclesiastical affairs, and he heartily and vigorously supported his convictions. On the subject of civil government his views were strictly presbyterian, and the establishment of this form of ecclesiastical administration in Scotland was mainly owing to his exertions and influence. Being moderator of the General Assembly, which met at St. Andrews in 1582, he proceeded with an act of defiance in defiance of a royal message to desist.

Meeting at the next meeting of Assembly, he entered severely against the tyrannous measures of the act, and against those who had brought into the country the 'bludie gullie' of absolute power. The fearless charge led to a citation before the General Assembly for high treason, and though the charge was not proved, he was sentenced to imprisonment. Apprehensive that his life was really in danger, he set out for London, and did not return to the north till the faction of Arran had been crushed. At length he took his former place in St. Andrews, and continued in hearty warfare for the liberties of the church. For his share in the deposition of Adamson, the king dismissed him from the principality, and charged him to confine himself to the Water of Tay. The suspension, however, was only brief. On the arrival of James VI. from Denmark, Melville pronounced, towards published, a Latin poem of high commendation 'Stephaniskion.' In 1590 Melville was elected rector of the university. In 1594 he was again moderator of the General Assembly. There was evidently after this time a strong desire on the part of the king to make the kirk a mere tool of political power, or to restore episcopacy. Melville strenuously resisted every such attempt, whether made in an open or clandestine form. A tumult in Edinburgh was taken advantage of, its ministers were severely dealt with, and by and by Melville was prohibited from attending church courts, and soon after confined within the precincts of his college. After King James's accession to the throne of England, Melville was summoned to London, with several of his brethren, and severely catechised and reprimanded by the royal pedant. Melville enraged the king by some verses he happened to write on the furniture of the royal altar, was found guilty of scandalum magnatum, finally imprisoned in the Tower, and deprived of his principality. At length, after four years' confinement, he was liberated, principally at the request of the duke of Bouillon, who wished him to occupy a chair in the university of Sedan. Melville arrived there in 1611, entered on his work with zeal, boldly refuted the Arminianism of one of his colleagues, and in his seventy-fourth year wrote a beautiful Epithalamium on occasion of the marriage of a daughter of the ducal house. Episcopal government had now been restored in Scotland; but the old man was still such an object of terror that he was not recalled from exile. In 1620 his health, which had been seriously impaired during his incarceration in the Tower, failed him, and he died at Sedan in 1622, at the age of seventy-seven. Melville's Latin poems, such as his 'Carmen Mosis,' and those mentioned already in this article, are classical productions of a high order. He was a scholar and divine also of no common attainments. He was active, cheerful, bold, candid and devout, and his impetuosity often arose to sublimity, when he appeared in excited vindication of his church and country. Dr. McCrene concludes his two interesting volumes of Melville's life with the declaration:—'I know of no individual, after her Reformer, from whom Scotland has received greater benefits, and to whom she owes a deeper debt of gratitude and respect, than Andrew Melville.' [J.E.]

MELVILLE, HENRY DUNDAS, Lord Viscount, son of Robert Dundas, Lord Arniston, was born in 1740, and joined the administration of Mr. Pitt when he obtained the reins of government, after the death of the marquis of Rockingham. Lord Melville followed the fortunes of his leader, in or out of office, as home secretary, secretary of war, and first lord of the admiralty. He was impeached for neglect of duty in the latter capacity at the instance of Mr. Whitbread in 1805, but acquitted of the charges by his peers. He retired from office, however, and died in privacy 1811.

MELVILLE, R., a Scotch officer, 1723-1809.

MEMMI, S., an Italian painter, 1285-1345.

MEMMO, MARCO-ANT., a Ven. doge, 1612-15.

MEMMO, TRIBUNO, a Venetian doge, 979-991.

MEMNON, a king of Ethiopia, age of Troy.

MEMNON, a Persian general, died 333 B.C.

MEMNON, a Greek historian, 1st or 2d cent.

MENA, J. DE, a Spanish poet, 1412-1456.

MENA, P. DE, a Spanish sculptor, 1620-1693.

MENA, P. G. DE, a Spanish painter, 1600-74.

MENAGE, GILLES, a French ecclesiastic, celebrated for his learning and bel-esprit, and called by Bayle 'The Varron of the 17th century,' was born at Angers, 1618, and died at Paris 1692. He was the protégé of Cardinal de Retz, and the companion of the finest spirits of his age. He is the author of classical and philosophical works, poems, &c.

MENAGE, MAT., a Fr. ecclesiastic, 1388-1446.

MENANDER, a celebrated Athenian poet, author of a great number of dramatic works, of which only a few fragments remain extant, 342-299 B.C.

MENARD, CL., a French historian, 1580-1652.

MENARD, F., a Fr. canonical wr., 1570-1623.

MENARD, LEON, a Fr. antiquary, 1706-1767.

MENARD, N. H., a Fr. ecclesiastic, 1585-1644.

MENASSEH, BEN ISRAEL, a learned rabbin of Spain, author of 'The Conciliator,' in which many apparent contradictions in the Sacred Scriptures are harmonised, 1604-1659.

MENDELSSOHN, DR. FELIX BARTHOLDY, was born at Hamburg, on the 3d of February, 1809. His father, who was an eminent merchant, is reported to have said that he was nothing more than the son of one great man and father of another. And this was in a great measure true. The grandfather of the musician was Moses Mendelssohn, who passed the greater part of his early life in making copies of the Bible. The poor copyist, by means of his talent, his indomitable perseverance, and his incredible energy, soon became one of the most illustrious philosophers in Germany. His works, which were devoured with eagerness, soon procured him a large fortune, which, bequeathed to his family, insured them all the luxuries of life, but did not corrupt their native goodness. Before young Felix, the subject of this memoir, was six years old, he gave extraordinary indications of a genius for music. He astonished all Berlin by his precocious intellect, his docility, his obedience, and his eagerness for the acquisition of knowledge of all kinds, but more especially of that art in which he afterwards made himself so consummate a master. At eight years old he became a pupil of Berger on the piano, and of Zelter for composition and harmony. Even at this early age, he read at first sight the most difficult works of Handel, Sebastian Bach, Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven. He afterwards studied the piano under Klein, Hummel, and Moschelles. And he subsequently studied counterpoint under Cherubini, who augured the greatest things of his pupil. Before he was nine years old, his performance on the piano-forte was so astonishing that his friends advised him to play in public; and, in consequence, he made his debut at Berlin in 1819, where his success was most triumphant. At ten years of age he knew all the great works of the masters named above; and at twelve he improvised upon a given theme in a style so masterly, that old Goethe, the poet, shed tears and embraced the young artist. In 1824 he first published his compositions, which were four quartetts and a sonata. In 1827, his opera, Die Hochzeit de Camacho, was performed at Berlin, from which period, up to the day of his death, he produced all sorts of compositions with the most wonderful rapidity, and all perfect in their kind, from the 'Songs without Words,' to duets, songs, piano-forte works, and up to the Oratorio. But all this while Mendelssohn did not devote his time exclusively to the study of music. He was well acquainted with natural philosophy, was an able draughtsman and a proficient in almost all modern languages. With English he was intimately acquainted, like all well-informed Germans, he was passionately fond of the works of Shakspeare. And this notion and profound knowledge of the great were reflected in the supplemental music which he composed for the 'Midsummer Night's Dream,' which it is not too much to say that it respects worthy to be wedded to the poetry which inspired it. This work was performed in London, in 1830, when Mendelssohn conducted the orchestra. It caused an immense sensation. In 1833, Mendelssohn was appointed music-director at Dusseldorf, which place he held five years, when he resigned and accepted the director of the Gewandhouse concerts at Leipzig. At the musical festival at Dusseldorf, on the 1st of May, 1836, his grand Oratorio, St. Paul, was first produced, which marked a new era in the history of music. In 1835 he was in London, when he, at the Philharmonic Society, conducted the performance of his Symphony in A major. During one of his visits to Britain, he made a tour to the West Highlands of Scotland, and he immortalized his impressions of those wild and romantic islands, lochs, and mountains, by his overture 'The Isles of Fingal.' His last and greatest work, 'Elijah,' was first produced in this country, and been performed at the Birmingham Musical Festival, in August, 1846. It was subsequently performed at Exeter Hall, London, in April, 1847, afterwards at Gloucester Musical Festival, the same year. While in England, he had the honour of an invitation to visit the queen, on which occasion he received the most marked tokens of the esteem in which he was held by her Majesty and her royal Consort. It was at the suggestion of the queen, who furnished him with the theme, that Mendelssohn composed his British Overture. Soon after this he went to Scotland, to repose from the fatigues of study, while there he heard of the death of a dear and loved sister, which event preyed hard upon him, and was the beginning of those ailments which finally brought him to an early grave. He languished in grief in Switzerland, he wrote his first act of an opera, 'Lorelei,' which, with other posthumous works, has been published since his demise. During this period he was advised by his medical attendants to abstain from all labour. He had been afflicted with two strokes of paralysis, and his physician feared that he would prove fatal, but he could not pause. He was with him a law of his being. Mendelssohn could not live and be idle, and there is no doubt that the labour he imposed upon himself had a large share in the cause of his death. Moschelles published in the Morning Post, Thursday, November 12, the following interesting account of the last moments of Mendelssohn, which will appropriately close this brief notice of the life of one of the greatest and most original musicians that ever lived:—'Mendelssohn felt the first approach of the malady which ultimately terminated his life on the 28th of October (1847). It was an attack of an apoplexy. From that day until the 28th he ed moments of ease and relapses. During this period he felt sufficiently well to take several carriage airings. On the 28th, when in full convalescence, a second attack occurred, but this was of short duration. He promptly recovered his senses, and his strength returned. Notwithstanding this, he felt severe attacks of headache, and could not sleep for three or four days. During the nights of the 2d and 3d of November his sleep returned, and he slept seven hours consecutively. Upon his waking on the morning of the 3d, he felt quite well, and his family had sanguine hopes of his recovery. He remained thus during the forenoon; but at two o'clock he had a relapse, and a third attack supervened more violent and more prolonged than any of the former ones. He recovered consciousness but slowly, after bleeding, application of leeches, and vigorous friction. He was attended by Dr. Clarus and Dr. Hammer of Leipzig. Messengers had been sent for Dr. Schönbein of Berlin, whose arrival was waited for with intense anxiety, but he did not come. The night passed in alternations of agitation and tranquillity. Mendelssohn recognized all persons present, but spoke little. On the morning of the 4th his state caused the most violent inquietude. The directors of the 'Gewandhaus' decided on putting off the concert which was to have taken place that evening. At the second hour the sufferer became insensible, and gave no other signs of life than a strong and equal respiration. All the efforts of the medical men to restore sight and hearing were useless. From six o'clock blisters and violent frictions were resorted to, but without success. In the meantime his features changed with frightful rapidity. At the eighth hour his respiration became feebler—it was evident that his end was near. At last, at nine o'clock on the 4th, a lengthened sigh announced that Mendelssohn had rendered up his soul to his Ruler. Near his bed were his wife, his brother, the two doctors, Mr. Schleinitz, Mr. David, and myself. All Leipzig is in mourning.' On the afternoon of the 7th of November, 1847, his funeral ceremonies were performed with great pomp in the St. Paul's church at Leipzig, preparatory to the removal of his remains to their last resting-place at Berlin. The works of Mendelssohn, which were published previous to his death, were one opera, Incantations, two symphonies, three quartets, three quintettes, two sonatas, a concerto for the piano-forte, a psalm, 'Non nobis,' an 'Ave Maria' for four voices, six books of songs without words, two phantasies, three chorales, and numerous varied themes, songs, duets, capriccios, &c., for piano-forte, and his two imperishable oratorios, 'St. Paul' and 'Elijah.' Among his MSS., many of which have been published since his death, were an overture and symphony, several chorales, the 'Walpurgis Night,' cantatas, an operatta, 'The Good Stranger,' some sacred pieces, and music added to 'Antigone,' and the 'Edipus Colonus.' Mendelssohn left behind him a wife and five children. His loss was mourned wherever music was studied, and wherever his works were known. And every hour since his death his greatness has become more and more appreciated, and his works bid fair to become what they ought to be, the most prized and popular of all the classical works of the great masters. [J.M.]

MENDELSSOHN, MOSES, a Jewish philosopher and moralist, who holds high rank among the literati of Germany, and has been dignified with the title of the Jewish Socrates, 1729-1786.

MENDEZ, MOSES, an English poet, died 1758.

MENDEZ-PINTO, FERDINAND, a Portuguese, who sailed for the Indies in 1537, and being taken by the Moors did not return to his country until 1558. The relation of his adventures is as curious and extravagant as that of the Englishman, Mandeville.

MENDOZA, ANTONIO HURTADO DE, a Portuguese poet, statesman, and member of the inquisition, died 1631. ANDREO, a member of the same family, distinguished as a general, 1579-1606.

MENDOZA, B. DE, a Span. historian, 16th c.

MENDOZA, DIEGO HURTADO DE, a Spanish diplomatist, historian, and man of letters, 1503-75.

MENDOZA, INIGO LOPEZ DE, first Marquis de Santillana, a dist. poet of Castile, 1398-1458.

MENDOZA, J. G., a Spanish divine, auth. of a Hist. of China, where he was ambassador in 1584.

MENDOZA, P. G. DE, cardinal of Sp., 1428-95.

MENEDEMAS, an eclectic philos., 4th cen. B.C.

MENELAUS, a geometr. of Alexandria, 1st c.

MENENIUS-AGRIPPA, See AGRIPPA.

MENGOLI, P., an Ital. geometrician, 1625-86.

MENGOTTI, F., an Italian engineer, last cent.

MENGOZZI, B., an Ital. composer, 1758-1800.

MENGES, ANTONY RAPHAEL, an eminent Bohemian painter, born at Aussig 1728, became painter to the king 1746, professor 1754, painter to the king of Spain 1761, and principal of the Academy of St. Luke in Florence 1769. Besides works of art, consisting both of easel pictures and frescoes, he is author of valuable treatises on subjects connected with the principles of painting, and the characters of the great masters. He was an intimate friend of Winckelmann. Died 1779.

MENG-TSEU, a Chinese philosopher, 4th c. B.C.

MENINSKI, FR. MESGNIEN, an Oriental scholar, in the service of the Polish and Austrian governments, 1623-1698.

MENIPPUS, a Phœnician cynic, 4th cent. B.C.

MENIUS, F., a learned Swede, died 1659.

MENJOT, ANT., a Fr. physician, 1615-1696.

MENLOES, D., a Swed. nat. philos., 17th cent.

MENNANDER, C. F., a Swed. prelate, last c.

MENNES, or MENNIS, SIR JOHN, a military and naval commander, and member of the government after the restoration, kn. as a poet, 1598-1671.

MENNO, called SIMONIS, or SIMONSON, from his parentage, a famous anabaptist, founder of the Mennonites, in the Low Countries, 1496-1561.

MENOCHIVS, or MENOCHIO, JAMES, an Italian jurisconsult, 1531-1607. His son, JOHN STEPHEN, a learned Jesuit, author of a Scripture Commentary, &c., 1576-1655.

MENODORUS, an Athenian sculptor, 1st cent.

MENOU, JAMES FRANCIS, Baron De, a French general and deputy of the noblesse to the states-general, 1750-1810.

MENSCHIKOFF, ALEXANDER, the son of a Russian peasant, who rose to be a distinguished general and statesman, 1674-1729.

MENTEL, JOHN, the oldest printer of Strasburg, originally a writer and illuminator of MSS., for whom the invention of printing was claimed by his descendant, JAMES MENTEL, flourished 1410-1478. The latter, a learned physician, 1597-1671.

MEN

MENTZEL, C., a German botanist, 1622-1701.
 MENZ, FRED., a Ger. antiquarian, 1680-1749.
 MENZEL, FRED. WILLIAM, a traitor to the court of Saxony, where he acted as cabinet secretary, 1726-1796.
 MENZINI, B., an Italian poet, 1646-1704.
 MENZOCEHI, F., an Ital. painter, 16th cent.
 MERANO, F., a Genoese painter, 1620-1657.
 MERAT, L. G., a French botanist, 1712-1790.
 MERCATI, J. B., an Ital. engraver, 17th cent.
 MERCATI, M., an Ital. naturalist, 1541-1593.
 MERCATOR, GERARD, a native of Flanders, distinguished as a mathematician and geographer, especially for the method of laying down charts and maps which goes by his name. This plan, useful in navigation, represents the surface of the earth projected on a plane, so that all the meridians and parallels are straight lines, 1512-1594.
 MERCATOR, MARIUS, a friend of St. Augustine, known as a controversial writer, 5th century.
 MERCATOR, N., a Ger. mathema., died 1687.
 MERCIER, BARTHOLOMEW, known in France as the abbé de St. Leger, a miscel. writ., 1734-99.
 MERCIER, C., an ascetic writer, died 1680.
 MERCIER, C. F. X., a French wr., 1763-1800.
 MERCIER, JOHN, a French Hebraist and commentator, died 1572. His son, JOSIAS, a learned critic, died 1626.
 MERCIER, L. S., a Fr. politician, 1740-1814.
 MERCIER, N., a French grammarian, d. 1657.
 MERCIER, OF LA VENDEE, a royalist chief, and camp marshal under the duke d'Artois, 1778-1800.
 MERCOEUR, ELIZA, a Fr. poetess, 1809-1835.
 MERDDIN, a Welch poet, 6th century.
 MERGEY, J. DE, a Fr. commander, 1536-1615.
 MERIAN, the name of a family of artists who flourished in Basle, 17th and 18th centuries. MATTHEW, an engraver, 1593-1651. His son, of the same name, also an engraver, 1621-1687. MARIA SIBYLLA, sister of the latter, a painter and naturalist, celebrated for her work on flowers and insects, 1647-1717. This accomplished lady was married to Andrew Graaf, a painter and architect of Nuremberg, by whom she had two daughters, both skilled in drawing, and one of them in the Hebrew language. Another member of the family, JOHN MATTHEW MERIAN, was distinguished as a painter, and died 1716.
 MERIAN, J. B., a German philos., 1723-1807.
 MERIGHI, R., an Italian poet, 1658-1737.
 MERLE, M. DE, a Fr. commander, 1548-1589.
 MERLIN, AMBROSE, who has the reputation of an enchanter in the romance of Chivalry, was a British writer, who flourished towards the latter end of the 5th century. He is said to have lived in the court of King Arthur. The work attributed to him is a book of prophecies, which have been illustrated and compared with the English annals by T. Heywood, 1641.
 MERLIN, JAMES, a French priest, died 1541.
 MERLIN, JOHN JOSEPH, an ingenious foreigner, who long resided in London, and invented several pieces of curious mechanism; among these was an automaton conjuror, the principal object in his exhibition at Clerkenwell, which he entitled 'Merlin's Cave.' Died 1803.
 MERLIN, P. A., a Fr. jurisconsult, 1754-1838.
 MERLIN-OF-THIONVILLE, A. C., a member of the Fr. assembly and convention, 1762-1833.

MES

MERMET, C., a French poet, 1550-1602.
 MERMET, L. F. E., a Fr. author, 1763-MERODACH, a king of Babylon, 8th cent.
 MEROVEUS, a king of the Franks, 448-MERRET, CHRISTOPHER, a native of Gloustershire, known in London as a physician and naturalist, 1614-1695.
 MERRICK, JAMES, a clergyman of the C of England, chiefly known as a poet, and by Bishop Lowth 'one of the best of the most eminent of scholars,' 1720-1769.
 MERRY, ROBERT, a poet and dramatist, 17-MERSCH, VAN DER, a Flemish officer in service of France, who became leader of the riots of Brabant in 1789. He afterwards in the interest of the Austrians, and died 17-MERSENNE, or MERSENNUS, MARIN, a French ecclesiastic, celebrated as a mathematician and philosopher, 1588-1648.
 MERULA, G., an Italian savant, 1424-14-
 MERULA, P., a Dutch historian, 1558-1-MERY, F., a French ecclesiastic, died 172-MERY, J., a French anatomist, 1645-172-
 MERY, L., a controversial writer, 1727-1-MERZ, JAMES, a Swiss painter, 1783-18-
 MERZ, PH. P., a German theologian, b. 1-
 MESCHINOT, J., a French poet, 1430-1-
 MESMER, FREDERICK ANTHONY, the great promoter of animal magnetism, was a man physician, born at Mersburg in Suabia. His name belongs to that select class of 'Ctans,' so called, who have the misfortune to pronounce principles which they do not really understand themselves, but which are yet founded, and who get abused beyond measure, they point out more than they can either explain or support to the satisfaction of science. The career of Mesmer is soon related. In 1773- attention as a physician was called to the curative movements by which a young lady in Oesterline was periodically affected, and in he published the theory, first suggested by case, in a treatise entitled 'De Planetarum Inf.' A slight verbal inaccuracy in the statement of theory may easily make it appear, at first view, extravagant, but fairly stated it is this:—The venly bodies, but especially the sun and moon upon all the elastic elements; thus, as is known, they cause and direct the flux and of the sea and the atmosphere. The whole verse, however, is pervaded by an element subtler than the air, which penetrates all bodies to which the nervous systems of all animals naturally respond as the eye to light, and by a periodical sway of which, the body is necessarily affected. Mesmer seems to have considered a subtle medium to be one and the same with magnetic element, and consequently to be capable of concentration, transmission, and direction according to the established laws of the magnet. He soon found in practice that he could magnetize animal bodies as well as inert matter, by employing the same agencies. At this time one F. Hell was professor of astronomy at Vienna. Mesmer employed his workmen, and procured consulted the astronomer himself, to procure most suitable magnets for his experiments. Whatever their respective shares may have been in the matter, they were shortly at issue before the Hell claiming the discovery as his own. This Mesmer to take higher ground, declaring that magnets were not at all necessary to the cures, but that they resulted from an action that was proper to animal bodies themselves. Disengaged from his adversary by this step in advance, he discovered memorialised the Academy of Sciences at Paris, the Royal Society of London, and the Academy of Berlin: the two former did not condescend to reply, and the latter in their answer treated him as a visionary. About this time, in 1777, it was alleged that he had performed a cure almost amounting to the miraculous, upon a young lady, the demoiselle Paradis, who was suffering from a morbidly serene and convulsive movements of the face—the case, however, has been disputed, it being known that the lady was quite blind in 1777; the probability is, that the effects were not produced, but were not permanent. Disregarded by the learned bodies to whom he had addressed himself, and treated as a juggling impostor by his professional brethren, Mesmer removed from Vienna to Paris in 1778, and soon acquired a prodigious popularity by his marvellous cures, and received large sums of money subscribed by his adherents. It must be supposed that his determination was to rise by his discovery, and to establish himself in a position which he might be able to maintain as the master of a school devoted to the new art, and to effect this he allowed it to be understood that there was an esoteric doctrine of animal magnetism, with which even his most ardent disciples, Bergasse and Deslon, were not acquainted. In the same spirit, and partly, we may add, to produce a crisis favourable to his operation upon a great number of persons together, Mesmer established the baquet, a kind of magnetic battery, around which his patients assembled, and when the crisis took place, (manifested in a great variety of startling effects), the magnetician appeared, to moderate and direct the action in each case. The scenes at these reunions drew the attention of the French government to Mesmer's proceedings, and in 1784 a commission of savants was appointed, with instructions to examine the means employed by Mesmer and the results obtained. The members of this commission consisted of four physicians, one of whom was Dr. Guillotin, and five members of the Académie: Franklin, Leroi, Bailly, De Bory, and Lavoisier. The result of their inquiry was announced in a report drawn up by Bailly, and is well known to have been unfavourable not only to the truth of animal magnetism, but to its morality. Though Mesmer and his disciples endeavoured to keep their ground, and succeeded in establishing many sects of magnetizers, and though, soon afterwards, clairvoyance became popular, and was introduced as a new degree in freemasonry, the disciples found it necessary to quit France, and coming to England, resided here some time under a false name. Mesmer passed the remainder of his life in comparative obscurity, and died in his native place 1815, doubtless much happier in his private life, though that his doctrine had been accepted by the learned, and had found such advocates as Bergasse and Puysegur, than in coquetting with the vulgar, and aggrandizing his name with a false popularity. In regard to his supposed secret, and his refusal of any intelligible explanation of his process, we may repeat here what he himself urges in his 'Mémoire sur la Découverte du Magnétisme Animal,' namely, that no reasoning can clear up the difficulties of such a subject, but only experience. There is also another consideration. Public opinion in the time of Mesmer was influenced widely and deeply by the philosophy of the encyclopedists, and any explanation that involved the recognition of spiritual laws would be received as empirical. At the present day the acknowledged head of curative Mesmerism in this country, prefers total ignorance on the part of his operators, and to treat animal magnetism as a material force only. That it is force operating between substance and substance there can be no question, but then, is matter anything more than one form or condition of substance? If not, how are healings by prayer, and when the operator is far distant from his patient, to be accounted for? The truth is, neither Mesmer himself, nor any of his disciples down to the present hour, have been able to demonstrate the principles of the art, so as to include all its phenomena, because they cease to follow nature, and bow down before those false idols of the mind, against which they have been warned by Bacon, as soon as another condition of being is indicated. The Saviour himself generally healed by the touch, yet always from the spirit of love, and if the former is found successful when the latter is not recognized, and if these touchings can be traced to their connection with material forces, it is only a proof that the material world is clothed over the spiritual, and that magnetism, gravitation, or any other term by which we designate force, is nothing but the manifested law of the Supreme Will, acting through the least things and the greatest, with or without a thankful recognition, in this condition of being, which we choose to call material. Certain we are, that this whole subject is treated most unphilosophically, both by its friends and enemies, and that we must in this, as in all other cases, court and encourage nature to discover herself if we would have her secret.—The system of Mesmer was published in German at Berlin by the famous Nicolai, under the title of 'Mesmerismus, &c.,' 1815. [E.R.]

MESSALA, a Roman general and orator, who commanded a legion under Brutus and Cassius at Philippi, died about the year 11, aged seventy-two.

MESSALINA, STATILIA, a Roman lady, who had for her fifth husband the emperor Nero, who had murdered her fourth husband, Atticus Vistimus. After the death of the emperor in the year 68, she devoted herself to literary pursuits.

MESSALINA, VALERIA, daughter of Valerius Messalinus Barbatas, was a Roman lady, who became the wife of Claudius, and shared with him the imperial throne. Her licentious conduct is unparalleled in history, for she not only made her husband's palace the scene of her debaucheries, but often quitted it at night, and acted as a common prostitute. When summoned by the enraged emperor, after some fresh extravagance in the year 48, she attempted to kill herself, but wanted courage, and her enemy Narcissus, who dreaded the result of the interview, caused her to be despatched by a soldier.

MESSENIUS, JOHN, a Swedish savant, author of 'Scandia Illustrata,' 1584-1637. His son, ARNOLD, historian of the Swedish nobility, ex. 1648.

MESSIER, CH., a Fr. astronomer, 1730-1817.

MESSIS, QUENTIN, a Flem. painter, 1450-1529.

MESTON, W., a Scottish poet, 1688-1745.

METASTASIO, PIETRO, the son of a pastry-cook named Trapassi, was born at Rome in 1698. When he was no more than ten years old, his talent for extemporaneous versification attracted the notice of the accomplished lawyer, Gravina, who adopted and educated him, and, with a whim savouring of the taste of the Italian academies, made him exchange his family name for its Hellenic synonyme Metastasio. The youth became celebrated as an improvisatore before completing his eighteenth year. Soon afterwards he inherited from his benefactor a considerable fortune; but he spent it in no long time, chiefly through kindly but careless benevolence. He now began to write for the stage, gained in this field great fame but little profit at Naples and Rome, and, in 1729, was appointed Imperial Laureate at Vienna. His duties consisted in writing the Italian text for operas; and this continued to be his occupation for the remainder of his life, except during the closing of the theatre at Vienna on the breaking out of the first war between Austria and Prussia in 1741. He died at Vienna in 1782. The 'libretto' of the operas, usually quite worthless, and treated merely as an adjunct to the music, became, in the hands of Metastasio, genuinely and beautifully poetical. The lyrical turn of his genius fitted him admirably for giving expression in words to the sentiment of the airs interspersed through the recitative of the dialogue; and many of the songs in his operas, with some separate compositions of the sort (such as 'La Partenza'), are exquisite for the delicacy and fanciful charm both of their feeling and of their diction. He gave similar excellences, in a wonderful degree, to the conception and design of his dramas, and to many passages of the dialogue. His works have a monotonous sweetness, an utter want of characterization, and a great deficiency in reality and practical interest. But the best of them, such as 'L'Olimpiade,' breathe a romantic air which is very delightful. [W.S.]

METCALFE, CHARLES THEOPHILUS, Lord, an East Indian officer and diplomatist, who was appointed governor of Jamaica after the emancipation of the negroes, and subsequently governor of Canada, 1785-1846.

METELLI, AGUSTINO, an Ital. artist, 1607-60.

METELLUS, the name of several illustrious Romans:—1. CAIUS CÆCILIUS, the conqueror of Macedonia and proconsul of Spain, known from 148 to 141 B.C. 2. QUINTUS CÆCILIUS, his son, conqueror of Jugurtha in Numidia, exiled B.C. 100 by the influence of Marius and Saturninus. 3. QUINTUS CÆCILIUS, son of the latter, and a partizan of Sylla against Marius, distinguished in the Spanish war, died B.C. 63. 4. QUINTUS CÆCILIUS, son of the last named, distinguished in the war against Cæsar, killed himself after the defeat of Thapsus, B.C. 46.

METELLUS, H., a Latin poet, 1080-1157.

METEREN, E. VAN, a Flem. hist., 1516-1612.

METHODIUS, the name of three personages in ecclesiastical history:—1. SAINT METHODIUS, author of a poem written against Porphyry; some theological treatises, only fragments of remain; supposed to have died a martyr about 312. He was successively bishop of Olbia and Tyre. 2. METHODIUS, surnamed 'the fessor,' patriarch of Constantinople in 842, as a partizan of the image-worshippers, died. 3. A METHODIUS, who is remembered also as his brother, CYRILLUS, as the first preacher of Christianity among the Slavonians, 9th c.

METIUS, ADRIAN, a Dutch mathematician, son of an engineer, of the same names, 1571. His brother, JAMES, said to have invented copees, died 1636.

METKERKE, A., a Flem. scholar, 1528-38.

METOCHITA, T., a Gr. historian, died 1395.

METON, an Athenian astronomer, 5th c. B.C.

METTRIE, J. OFFRAY DE LA, a pupil of Bacone, kn. as a physician and philosopher, 1709-47.

METZGER, J. D., a Fr. physician, 1739-99.

METZU, GABRIEL, a Dutch painter, 1615-68.

MEUNG, J. DE, a French poet, 1260-1310.

MEUNIER, H. H. J., a Fr. general, 1758-1807.

MEUNIER, J. A., a French writer, 1707-80.

MEURISSE, M., a Fr. theologian, died 1700.

MEURSIUS, JOHN, a famous Dutch philologist, and historian, professor of Greek at Leyden, 1579-1639. His son, JOHN, an architect, 1613-1653.

MEUSCHEN, J. G., a German theologian and philologist, 1680-1743. His son, FREDERICK CHRISTIAN, a writer on conchology, born 1715.

MEUTEW, ANTHONY FRANCIS VAN, a Flemish painter, cele. for his battle-pieces, 1615-68.

MEXIA, PEDRO, a Span. historian, died 1600.

MEYER, CONRAD, a Swiss painter, 1695-1760.

MEYER, FELIX, a Swiss painter, 1653-1700.

MEYER, J., a Flemish historian, 1491-1550.

MEYER, JER., a German painter, 1735-1800.

MEYER, J. D., a Dutch jurist, 1780-1830.

MEYER, PHILIPPE, was born at Strasbourg in the year 1737. At an early age he went to college to study for the protestant ministry, but the love of music interfered greatly with his theological studies. At twenty years of age he accidentally became possessed of an old harp, and having made some proficiency upon this instrument, he forthwith devoted himself exclusively to the study of music. Some time after he studied the science of music under Mützel, a pupil of the great Bach, and here Meyer's style was said to have been formed. He soon after this came to Paris, and thence to London, where he remained for several years. Having returned to France, he was induced to compose for the opera, and his style procured for him the sobriquet of the 'little Gluck.' Several circumstances tended soon after to render Meyer unpopular; he returned to London about the year 1784, where he gave up all pretensions as a performer, and lived upon his reputation as a composer. He died in 1819, leaving two sons musicians and composers, viz., PHILIPPE, and Frederick Charles.

MEYER, THEODORE, a painter and engraver of Zurich, 1572-1658. His son, RODOLPH, an engraver, died 1638. His second son, CONRAD, a painter and engraver, 1618-1689.

MEYNIER, C., a French painter, 1768-1810.

MEYNIER, H., a French historian, 16th c.

MEYRAUX, P. S., a Swiss naturalist, d. 1832.
MEYRICK, SIR S. R., a lawyer of the ecclesiastical court, author of a 'Critical Inquiry into Ancient Armour,' on which subject he is considered an authority, 1783-1848.

MEYSENS, JOHN, a Flemish painter, born 12. His son, CORNELIUS, an engraver, b. 1646.

MEYTENS, M. DE, an Austr. pain., 1695-1779.

MEZERAU, FRANCIS Eudes DE, one of the celebrated of French historians, who flourished the time of Richelieu and Colbert, was born in 1600, and commenced his career as a political writer.

was some time attached to the army as comarsary, but more lately received a pension from court as a man of letters, which he lost 'for stating what he thought to be the truth,' d. 1683.

MEZERAY, J., a French actress, 1772-1823.

MEZIRIAC, CLAUDE GASPARD BACHET DE, an archaeologist and mathematician, 1581-1638.

MICAH, the name of two Jewish prophets, the first of whom fl. in the 9th cent. B.C.; the latter, author of the book of that name, in the 8th c. B.C.

MICHAEL I., emperor of the East, successor of Nicephorus, 811, abdicated on occasion of a military sedition, in favour of Leo the Armenian, 813, d. 846. MICHAEL II., succeeded Leo the Armenian, 820, died 829. MICHAEL III., succeeded in the third year of his age, 842, under the guardianship of his mother, Theodora. In 859 he was persecuted by his uncle, Bardas, to assume the power himself, and his mother shortly after died of grief in a convent. In 866 he put Bardas to death, and made Basil, the Macedonian, his associate in the empire, who killed him, 867. MICHAEL IV., was raised to the throne by Zoe, after she had poisoned her husband, Romanus Argyrus, 1034; died 1041.

MICHAEL V., nephew of the preceding, occupied the throne a few months after his death, and was deposed by Zoe and Theodora, 1042. MICHAEL VI. succeeded Theodora 1056, and was dethroned by his officers, who elevated Isaac Comnenus to imperial dignity, 1057. MICHAEL VII., son of Constantine Ducas and Eudoxia, succeeded his father 1067; and, being dethroned by Nicephorus Botaniates in 1078, retired to a monastery, and became archbishop of Ephesus. MICHAEL (Palæologus) VIII., became regent for John Lascaris, and emperor in 1261, after deposing and blinding out the eyes of his protégé; died, after a troubled reign, 1282.

MICHAEL, patriarch of Constantinople, 1043-57.

MICHAEL, voivode of Wallachia, 1595.

MICHAEL, king of the Bulgarians, 1245-1258.

MICHAEL, the first of the name, grand duke of Russia, reigned 1175. The second, grand duke of Russia, killed by the Tartars 1245. The third (or second), grand duke of Russia, succeeded 1304, and died by the Tartars 1317. The fourth, grand duke of Russia, of the house of Romanoff, called MICHAEL FEODORWITCH, born 1598, elected 1613, d. 1645. He was succeeded by his son, Alexis.

MICHAEL, king of Poland, elected 1669, d. 1678.

MICHAEL ANGELO DA CARAVAGGIO.

MICHAEL ANGELO DELLA BATTAGLIE, the proper name was M. A. Cerquozzi, a Roman painter, 1600-1660.

MICHAELIS, J. B., a German poet, 1746-72.

MICHAELIS, JOHN DAVID, a famous Orientalist and biblical critic, was born at Halle, 1717, where his father, Christian Benedict Michaelis, was professor of divinity and the Oriental languages. He entered the university in 1733, and was admitted master of philosophy, and became assistant lecturer under his father in 1739. In 1746, he was appointed extraordinary professor of philosophy in the university of Göttingen, having previously visited England, and officiated as preacher at the German chapel, St. James's palace. During the remainder of his life he was associated with the principal learned societies of Europe, and was raised, in 1786, to the rank of Aulic Counsellor in Hanover, besides being employed in many affairs of moment requiring the exercise of his statesmanship. His religious opinions were unsettled, but the strictest integrity formed the basis of his conduct. Died 1791.

MICHAELIS, JOHN HENRY, great uncle of the preceding, born 1668, was a teacher of the Oriental languages at the university of Halle, and in 1699 became professor of Greek in the same institution; in 1707 keeper of the university library; and in 1732 senior of the faculty of divinity, and inspector of the theological seminary. Died 1738.

MICHAUD, C. I. F., a Fr. general, 1753-1835.

MICHAUD, J., a French historian, 1767-1839.

MICHAULT, J. B., a Fr. philologist, 1707-70.

MICHAULT, P., a French poet, died 1467.

MICHAUX, ANDRE, a French traveller, and writer on the botany of foreign parts, born at Versailles 1746, died at Madagascar 1802. His son, FRANCIS ANDRE, a writer on the forest trees of North America, &c., 1746-1802.

MICHEL, C. L. S., a Fr. statesman, 1754-1814.

MICHEL, J., a Gascon poet, died about 1700.

MICHELANGELO BUONARROTI, was born at Castel Caprese in the diocese of Arezzo in Tuscany, 6th March, 1475. He was apprenticed for three years to Domenico Ghirlandajo on 1st April, 1488.—His earlier studies were made in the so-called academy of Lorenzo de Medici, a garden containing sculptures near the church of St. Mark, and he was early patronised by that prince, after whose death in 1492, Michelangelo removed to Bologna; he returned to Florence in 1494, and now attained, by a statue of the 'Sleeping Cupid,' a great reputation. This statue was sold as an antique at Rome, which led Michelangelo to try his fortunes there, and he then executed his celebrated Pietà, now in St. Peter's.—He returned to Florence at the commencement of the sixteenth century, and further distinguished himself by his colossal David, now on the Piazza Granduca, and appeared for the first time in the character of a painter; being commissioned by the Gonfaloniere Soderini to paint one end of the Council Hall, the other end being awarded to Leonardo Da Vinci. Though Michelangelo made his cartoon known as the world-celebrated 'Cartoon of Pisa,' he never commenced the painting; the cartoon was exhibited in 1506, and created a great sensation among the artists of Florence; it became, says Benvenuto Cellini, 'The School of the World.'—Michelangelo had visited Rome a second time during its progress by the invitation of Julius II., and at Bologna in 1507 he made the famous colossal statue of that pontiff, which was afterwards converted into a cannon and used against the pope by talist and biblical critic, was born at Halle, 1717, where his father, Christian Benedict Michaelis, was professor of divinity and the Oriental languages. He entered the university in 1733, and was admitted master of philosophy, and became assistant lecturer under his father in 1739. In 1746, he was appointed extraordinary professor of philosophy in the university of Göttingen, having previously visited England, and officiated as preacher at the German chapel, St. James's palace. During the remainder of his life he was associated with the principal learned societies of Europe, and was raised, in 1786, to the rank of Aulic Counsellor in Hanover, besides being employed in many affairs of moment requiring the exercise of his statesmanship. His religious opinions were unsettled, but the strictest integrity formed the basis of his conduct. Died 1791.

MICHAELIS, JOHN HENRY, great uncle of the preceding, born 1668, was a teacher of the Oriental languages at the university of Halle, and in 1699 became professor of Greek in the same institution; in 1707 keeper of the university library; and in 1732 senior of the faculty of divinity, and inspector of the theological seminary. Died 1738.

MICHAUD, C. I. F., a Fr. general, 1753-1835.

MICHAUD, J., a French historian, 1767-1839.

MICHAULT, J. B., a Fr. philologist, 1707-70.

MICHAULT, P., a French poet, died 1467.

MICHAUX, ANDRE, a French traveller, and writer on the botany of foreign parts, born at Versailles 1746, died at Madagascar 1802. His son, FRANCIS ANDRE, a writer on the forest trees of North America, &c., 1746-1802.

MICHEL, C. L. S., a Fr. statesman, 1754-1814.

MICHEL, J., a Gascon poet, died about 1700.

MICHELANGELO BUONARROTI, was born at Castel Caprese in the diocese of Arezzo in Tuscany, 6th March, 1475. He was apprenticed for three years to Domenico Ghirlandajo on 1st April, 1488.—His earlier studies were made in the so-called academy of Lorenzo de Medici, a garden containing sculptures near the church of St. Mark, and he was early patronised by that prince, after whose death in 1492, Michelangelo removed to Bologna; he returned to Florence in 1494, and now attained, by a statue of the 'Sleeping Cupid,' a great reputation. This statue was sold as an antique at Rome, which led Michelangelo to try his fortunes there, and he then executed his celebrated Pietà, now in St. Peter's.—He returned to Florence at the commencement of the sixteenth century, and further distinguished himself by his colossal David, now on the Piazza Granduca, and appeared for the first time in the character of a painter; being commissioned by the Gonfaloniere Soderini to paint one end of the Council Hall, the other end being awarded to Leonardo Da Vinci. Though Michelangelo made his cartoon known as the world-celebrated 'Cartoon of Pisa,' he never commenced the painting; the cartoon was exhibited in 1506, and created a great sensation among the artists of Florence; it became, says Benvenuto Cellini, 'The School of the World.'—Michelangelo had visited Rome a second time during its progress by the invitation of Julius II., and at Bologna in 1507 he made the famous colossal statue of that pontiff, which was afterwards converted into a cannon and used against the pope by the Bolognese. In 1508 commences the great career of Michelangelo as a painter; he then visited Rome for the third time, and was commissioned by Julius II. to paint the ceiling of the Sistine chapel; Raphael was ordered at the same time to decorate the Stanze, or dwelling rooms of the Vatican palace. The ceiling was finished on All-Saints' Day, 1st November, 1512, the actual painting of the frescoes having occupied only twenty months, the cartoons occupying the greater portion of the interval. These frescoes represent—the creation of the world, and of man; his fall; and the early history of the world with reference to man's final redemption and salvation; they are the grandest productions of modern art, greatly superior to the 'Last Judgment' executed on the altar wall upwards of twenty years afterwards.—Michelangelo was occupied also during the progress of this ceiling with the monument of Julius, which was, however, finally suspended by the death of the pope in 1513; what was done of the monument was arranged and put up in the church of San Pietro in Montorio; the celebrated statue of Moses was one of the sculptures for the intended mausoleum. Michelangelo was now for twenty years kept from the carrying out of his great design of the history of man in the Sistine chapel. Leo X. occupied him for nine years in selecting marble in the quarries of Pietra Santa for the facade of the church of San Lorenzo at Florence, and he was employed in the Medici chapel of the same church during the pontificate of Adrian VI., and part of that of Clement VII., but finally in the tenth year of this pope, 1533, he was ordered to go on with the frescoes of the Sistine, and he completed the 'Last Judgment' in 1541, in the pontificate of Paul III.—His last works in painting were the frescoes of the Capella Paolina, executed for Paul III., finished in 1549; he is said never to have painted in oil-colours.—This extraordinary man had appeared in a third character when seventy years of age, he was then, 1546, appointed to succeed Antonio da San Gallo as architect of St. Peter's, and he continued architect during five pontificates, carrying the building out to the base of the cupola. (See BRAMANTE.) This great artist was also a poet: he was never married.—Michelangelo died 17th February, 1564, having very nearly completed his eighty-ninth year; his body was carried to Florence and deposited in a vault in the church of Santa Croce.—There is little space in a limited work of this character to enter upon any details of the extraordinary works of Michelangelo, spreading as they do, over four provinces of the fine arts; most opinions concerning him are uniform in their expressions of praise: his name was the last word pronounced by Sir Joshua Reynolds in the Royal Academy, and even his great rival, Raphael, is said to have exclaimed that he thanked God he was born in the days of Michelangelo. His most extraordinary achievement is doubtless the ceiling of the Sistine chapel; the Prophets and Sibyls of this great work are, for sublimity and grandeur, indisputably the triumphs of modern art. The element of his style, whether in painting or in sculpture, is an abstract impersonation of dignity, which sentiment prevails under whatever emotion the subject may be represented. A similar uniformity of style in design, is of such constancy as to amount to manner; this mannerism of form is the chief defect of the works of this great artist; but one over-muscular standard of form is evident for man, or child, of every age and of every degree. (Condivi, Vita di Michelangelo, &c.; Vasari, &c., ed. Flor. 1846 Seqq; Duppa, Life of Michelangelo, &c.; Taylor, Michelangelo Considered as a Philosophic Poet, &c.; Wornum, Epochs of Art Characterized.) [R.]

MICHELET, S., a French poet, 1787-1855. MICHELLI, the name of three Venetian doctors—the first, VITAL MICHELLI, successor of Faledro, 1096, died 1102. The second, D. MICHELLI, reigned 1116-1130. The third, VITAL MICHELLI, succeeded in 1156, killed in a sedition 1171.

MICHELLI, JAMES BARTHOLOMEW, a mathematician and mathematician, 1692-1766.

MICHELLI, P. A., an Ital. naturalist. 1679-1740.

MICHELOZZI, MICHELAZZO, a Florentine sculptor and architect, pupil of Donatello, 1402-1470.

MICHIEL, J. L., an Italian savant, 1754-1825.

MICHOVITS, M., a Polish annalist, d. 1815.

MICHU, B., a Fr. painter on glass, died 1710.

MICHU, L., an opera performer, 1754-1800.

MICIPSA, a king of Numidia, 148-118 B.C.

MICKLE, WILLIAM JULIUS, a Scottish scholar, employed as corrector of the London Press at Oxford, translator of the Lays of Camens, and author of some of the 'Old Lads,' published by Evans, the bookseller. Born Dumfries 1734, died 1788.

MICRELIUS, J., a Lutheran divine, 1597-1670.

MIDDLETON, CONYERS, well known as a polemical writer and critic, was the son of William Middleton, a Yorkshire clergyman, and was born at York 1683. In 1717 he was created a doctor of divinity by the mandamus of George I., on his going to Cambridge, and his refusal to pay the fees demanded by Bentley, the regius professor of divinity, involved him in a lawsuit, and, finally, in an action for libel brought against him by that gentleman. The enmity thus established between them issued in a literary and critical controversy, which was interrupted by Middleton's going to Italy 1724, for the benefit of his health. In 1729, a controversy with Dr. Mead, concerning the edition of the medical men of ancient Rome, published his 'Letter from Rome,' showing a similarity between the Roman Catholic religion and the pagan rituals of antiquity. This work acquired a great popularity, but it laid its author open to the suspicion of being at heart an unbeliever, and, two years later, his animadversions on Waterland, who had written against Tindal, excited such a feeling against him that he had nearly been deprived of his degrees. The line of argument adopted by Middleton, who professed to show a better method of dealing with the freethinker, will speak for itself; and it is stated thus succinctly in Taylor's 'Retrospect,'—'He shows the history the inadequacy of the simple religious reason to the necessities of the multitude, that, in every civilized community, there has always been a traditional system of faith and worship adapted to them, distinct from the speculation of philosophical minds; that where such a system was already established, though mixed ch superstition and folly, it would be wrong to tempt its overthrow, without being prepared to do something better fitted for the purpose in its place; that Socrates, and the wisest of the heathen, always acted on this principle; and that, consequently, it must, à fortiori, be much more absurd and mischievous to endeavour to substitute the false inferences of reason for a belief in Christianity, which is the best of all traditional religions, the best contrived to promote peace and the good of society, and acknowledged by deists themselves to be the nearest of all others to their perfect law of reason and nature.' Such a book of course excited Middleton to a fresh controversy, in the course of which, 1731, he was appointed to the professorship of mineralogy, then recently founded by Woodward. In 1734 he abandoned this unequal appointment for that of librarian to the University. In 1735 he wrote, controversially as usual, concerning the origin of printing in England. In 1741 he published his greatest work, the 'History of Cicero,' in 2 vols. 4to, which was the signal for a scholastic controversy on the authenticity of certain documents adopted by him. In 1749, having thrown out an 'Introductory Discourse' on the same subject two years previously, he gave to the astonished quidnuncs of the period his 'Free Inquiry into the Miraculous Powers which are supposed to have subsisted in the Christian Church from the earliest ages.' For the replies to this work, Dodwell and Church obtained the degree of D.D. from the University of Oxford. Middleton, however, published his 'Vindication,' and, the year following, made an attack on Mr. Sherlock, endeavouring to show that there is no uniform chain of prophecy pointing to the Saviour. With such views as we have indicated, this singular divine could yet accept the living of Haslemere, in Surrey, which he held at his death in 1750. The only excuse we could imagine for such a career as Middleton's, must be found in the unsettled state of the Church of England at the commencement of last century—in all the circumstances, to speak briefly, by which we should account for the rise of Wesleyanism, and the various movements of dissent and free inquiry, which marked the period. [E.R.]

MIDDLETON, ERASMUS, a methodist scholar of Oxford, author of a 'Dictionary of Arts and Sciences,' last century.

MIDDLETON, SIR HUGH, a citizen and goldsmith of London, celebrated for bringing a supply of water to the metropolis, was son of Richard Middleton, Esq., governor of Denbigh castle. The date of his birth, and the early events of his life, are unknown, with the exception of the fact that he had been engaged in mining adventures in Wales. This costly enterprise for supplying London with the fresh streams of Hertfordshire, dates from 1608 to Michaelmas-day 1613, when the water was admitted into the reservoir at Pentonville at a cost of nearly half-a-million sterling. Middleton was subsequently reduced to the necessity of occupying himself as an engineer. He was created a baronet in 1622, and died 1631.

MIDDLETON, R., a learned theologian, d. 1304.

MIDDLETON, T., a dramatic writer, d. 1627.

MIDDLETON, THOMAS FANSHAW, the first English bishop of Calcutta, was born at Redleston, in Derbyshire, where his father was rector, in 1769, and consecrated at Lambeth in 1814. He departed for the East the same year, and in 1820 founded a college at Calcutta for the education of clergymen and missionaries devoted to our Eastern possessions. His principal work is an erudite dissertation on the Greek article, which has given rise to some controversy. Died 1822.

MIDDLETON, W., a Welch poet, 16th century.

MIEL, EDMUND F. A. L., a Fr. au., 1775-1842.

MIEL, JAN, a Flemish painter, 1599-1664.

MIERIS, FRANCIS, a Dutch painter, pupil of Gerard Dow, 1635-1681. His son, JOHN, a painter, 1660-1690. His younger son, WILLIAM, equally celebrated as a landscape and history painter, 1662-1747. FRANCIS, son of the latter, principally known as an historian, 1689-1763.

MIFFLIN, T., gov. of Pennsylvania, 1744-1809.

MIGNARD, NICHOLAS, of Avignon, a French painter and engraver, born at Troyes 1608, died 1668. His brother, PETER, 'the Roman,' an eminent painter, 1610-1695. PETER, son of Nicholas, an architect, 1640-1725.

MIGNAULT, C., a Fr. jurisconsult, 1536-1606.

MIGNON, ABRAHAM, a celebrated flower painter of Frankfort, teacher of Maria Sibylla Merian, and of his two daughters, who distinguished themselves in the same line of art, 1639-1679.

MIGNOT, C. F., usually called MARIE, a beautiful peasant of Dauphiné, who in 1672 became the wife of John Casimir, king of Poland, d. 1711.

MIGNOT, J., a Fr. architect, end of 14th cent.

MIGNOT, S., a doctor of the Sorbonne, dist. as an archæologist and canonist, 1698-1771.

MIGNOT, VINCENT, the nephew of Voltaire, author of an Ottoman History, 1730-1790.

MILBERT, J. G., a Fr. naturalist, 1766-1840.

MILBOURNE, LUKE, a Church of England minister, known as a poet and critical wr., d. 1720.

MILDENHALL, J., a diplomatist of the age of Elizabeth, celeb. for his treaty of alliance with Persia, concluded in defiance of the Jesuits in 1606.

MILDMAY, SIR WALTER, a statesman of the age of Henry VIII. and Elizabeth, disting. as the founder of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, d. 1589.

MILE, FRANCIS, a Flemish painter, 1644-1680.

MILHOUSE, ROBERT, a poetical writer in the humble occupation of a weaver, author of 'Sherwood Forest,' 'Vicissitude,' 'The Destinies of Man,' died 1839.

MILIZIA, F., an Italian architect, 1725-1798.

MILL, JAMES, born in Kincardineshire on 6th April, 1773; died at Kensington 23d June, 1836: one of the three or four remarkable minds which, in the generation just past, have vindicated the title of Scotland to a place of high glory in the annals of Inquiry and Thought. Mr. Mill was originally designed for the Scottish Church; but reflection inclined him to abandon a purpose of Life, which, however honourable, was not suited to his peculiar intellectual tendencies: and after some intermediate passages, he settled in London as a literary man in 1800, where he resided ever afterwards, and gained his very distinguished name. The work by which Mill earliest rose into notice is the History of British India, one that through the profundity of its general views, and its liberal spirit, will remain a classic among our English Histories. It is not, in merely literary characteristics, on a level with the remarkable productions of Hume or Kant; nor did Mill aim at the peculiar excitements of those writers. But he aimed at the discovery of pure Logical Truth, as earnestly as children. He had a stronger feeling of Justice, and less regard for the morbid of Authority; nor when 1829 session called them forth, was his power to penetrate character and turn out strong points, ever exhausted. How admirably and modestly he follows Cuvier,—the man, to whose judicious, unscrupulous, and, but successful ways I owe our British empire in India owes its first solidity; and we rarely find among descriptive writers, a clearer presentation of mind and brilliant views in war, than Mill in his first volume, has given of the operations before Seringapatam. It must be recorded to the high honour of the East India Company, that on the publication of this great History, they secured the services of its Author, and always retained them. Four governments—certainly not the English one—have been politic enough, to witness so large an appreciation of ability, it coupled with obvious merits. From the commencement of his public life to its close, Mill was an English Radical of the broadest stamp; he was the friend and associate of Jeremy Bentham,—he may be termed our apostle, the theorist and philosopher of the Bentham school; and in all he wrote—especially in his memorable systematic treatises in the Supplement to the Encyclopædia Britannica, there is proof in every line of the presence of a lofty intellect that could seek Truth for its own sake, and dare to speak it. The subjects of these essays are Government, Education, Jurisprudence, Law of Nations, Liberty of the Press, Colonies, and Prison Discipline. Published afterwards in a separate form, they have had an extensive circulation, and have produced great influence in current political and social speculation. They win an abiding ally in analysis and retrospection, belonging only to first-rate minds; and their tone and bearings are what might be called ultra-liberal. They are of the same class as the Author's celebrated article in the Edinb. Rev.—Mill's greatest work, in the estimation of many of his admirers is the Analysis of the Phenomenon of the Human Mind; an effort at once original and bold, to give extension to the analytic system of Hartley,—resolving every feeling and idea belonging to the human mind, into simple sensations, and the products of these, as manufactured by the principle of 'Association.' It is impossible to miss the evidence of Power in every step of this remarkable analysis; although in the view of the writer of this notice, the speculation is based on an imperfect psychology—an imperfect review of the actual characteristics of the beliefs and ideas of which the Analyst takes account. One important failure, however, of the opponents of Mill, must be noticed. Although an anchor truer, or supposes he can truer, many of our moral feelings—confidence, benevolence, &c.—as simple elements, it does not follow that he discovers either the existence of such feelings, or their high import in practical life. The question at issue, is not a practical, but a theoretical one; and its real bearing is this—Are certain feelings and ideas part of the Mind's primal constitution, and evolved by its own inherent Forces; or is the External Universe constituted, that Mind cannot come into contact with it—supposing Mind a tabula rasa—with these feelings and ideas arising in it, passively, and comparing views with its perceptions? Mr. Mill's work was unanimous—the Edinb. Review, Blackburn's, a universal criticism in a Quarterly Review, by Sir James, concerning the Edinb. Philosophical. There is little doubt, that the name of Mackintosh must be added to the long list of writers who to high aspirations, have not joined the industry and honesty required to enable them; nor did he resist as he might, temptation constituted by a high popular reputation, apart from adequate remuneration, to seek know, when he did not know. Mill's editor of Edinb. could brook neither presence nor absence, of a review that appeared longest in his eyes, was Timothy in any form, to Timothy; and it suffice to say that through the media to which his Critic had joined him, the popular White Freeman, had escaped without serious damage. Mill's indignation could not fail to be especially aroused by superficial, but vitriol supercilious remarks of the Dissertation on his Science—the Edinb. although unpopular Reviews.—This hostile powerful Writer also contributed to the Edinb. Political Economy. To an intellect as discerning Ricardo's he joined a more rigid Logic, as in Elements are accordingly our best and most easily read Manual of the scheme of Thought, that important department of Social speculation prevailing among the Edinb. in his age, it cannot be denied for Mill, that the bases and moves were always the most enlarged; into fabric he built on these, was ever conscious of strong. As to strength and reach in Speculative Intellect, his native Country has only one but that can be placed beside Mill's.—It came now to admit, that Mr. Mill left a Son, whose power in Philosophy is even higher than his own, the author of the System of Logic, and the Principles of Political Economy has already effected a name which must last in the history of Edinb. Thought; and if that scheme of Psychology, it seems so congenial to British Edinb. can be aided by any intellect, certainly it will be aided by his. His sympathies are wider than a Father's, and he has the same independent love of truth. To a command of our native tongue which none save the purest Thinkers acquire, he joins the Wisdom of the Philanthropist, and the Sagacity of the Statesman.

MILL, JAMES, a learned divine of the Church of England, author of an edition of the Greek Testament, 1645-1707.

MILLAR, JAMES, a Scottish physician and chemist, editor of the fourth edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica, to which he contributed many articles in chemistry and natural philosophy. This industrious writer was also a minister of the Scotch Church. Born at Ayr 1762, died 1827.

MILLAR, JAMES, a native of Lanarkshire, educated at Glasgow. In early life he was in the family of Lord Kames, through whose influence he obtained the professorship of law at the university of Glasgow, which he held for thirty years; he is the author of The Origin and Distinction of Ranks, &c., 1736-1791.

MILLE, A. S., a French historian, born 1750.
 MILLER, EDWARD, a doctor of music, chiefly noted as composer of the Psalms, which he arranged for every Sunday throughout the year, and in his works on musical theory. He is author also of a History of Doncaster; died 1807.

MILLER, JAMES, a dramatic writer and artist, author of several political tracts, written against the tragedy of 'Mahomet,' &c., 1748-49.

MILLER, JOSEPH, a clever and witty comedian, whose name has acquired a wide reputation as actor of a jest-book, pronounced to have been taken by Mortier. Born 1684, buried in the church-yard of St. Clements, in the Strand, 1736.

MILLER, J. M., a German novelist, 1750-1844.

MILLER, LADY, author of 'Letters' from Italy, &c., 1791.

MILLER, PHILIP, a celebrated writer on horticulture, author of 'The Gardener's Dictionary,' 'The Gardener's Calendar,' 'Introduction to Botany,' &c., 1691-1771.

MILLER, SIR T., a Scotch lawyer, 1717-1769.

MILLES, JEREMIAH, a divine and antiquary, publisher of an edition of the poems of Chaucer, & the pretended antiquity of which he was a great advocate, 1714-1764. His uncle, THOMAS MILLES, a learned jurist, author of a life of his son the Rev. Isaac Milles, rector of High Church, Hampshire; died 1741.

MILLEVOYE, C. H., a French poet, 1782-1846.

MILLIEU, A., a French Jesuit, 1655-1644.

MILLEN, ALBIN LOUIS, an eminent architect and naturalist, one of the founders of the new Linnean Society, and keeper of the archives in the Royal Library at Paris, author of various works, 1759-1815.

MILLINGEN, JAMES, a connoisseur in art, and great antiquarian and medallist, died 1845.

MILLON, C., a French historian, 1754-1839.

MILLOT, CH. F. XATIER, a French ecclesiastic and professor of history at Parma, 1725-1811.

MILLOT, J. H., a French surgeon, 1738-1811.

MILLS, CHARLES, son of a physician of Greenwich, author of several middle age histories, 1788-1825.

MILLY, COENY, a French chemist, 1728-1784.

MILMAN, SIR FRANCIS, physician, to George IV., author of some professional works, 1746-1821.

MILNE, COLIN, a divine of the Church of Scotland, born at Aberdeen, distinguished as a writer, died 1815.

MILNE, FORTNA, a famous writer on annuities & assurances, more than thirty years attorney to the Assurance Company, 1773-1831.

MILNER, JOHN, a Roman Catholic divine, noted for his researches in ecclesiastical history, antiquaries, and for his zeal and arduousness in dogmatic controversy, was born in London 1752, commenced his career as a priest at the cathedral of Winchester, 1773. In 1803 he was appointed vicar apostolic of the midland district, & the title of bishop of Cuthbert, and in 1808, was raised to the Irish hierarchy. He died in A. D. Milner's works are a 'Dissertation on the Modern Style of Altering Cathedrals,' 'Ecclesiastical and Ecclesiastical, and Survey of the Churches of Winchester,' 'Treatise on the Ecclesiastical Architecture of England during the Middle Ages,' and some others.

MILNER, JOHN, one of the nonjuring divines of the Church of England, author of several learned works, 1622-1702.

MILNIE, JOSEPH, best known for his 'History of the Church of Christ,' was born at Leeds, 1744, and became vicar of Trinity Church at Hull, where a monument is erected to his memory; died 1797. His brother, ISAAC, b. 1751, became a dignitary of the church, and is author of many papers in the Philosophical Transactions. He also edited the fourth volume of his brother's history; d. 1820.

MILN, a famous Greek athlete, 6th cent. B.C.

MILN, a Roman athlete, 47-48 A.C.

MILONOFF, M. W., a Russian poet, 1792-1821.

MILORADOWITZ, NICHOLAS, Count, a Russian general, distinguished in the wars against Napoleon, 1770-1829.

[Miltiades—From an Ancient Bust.]

MILTIADES, the famous Athenian commander at the battle of Marathon, was grandson in nephew to a Grecian leader of the same name, who established a colony of Athenians in the Chersonesus of Thrace. His father was Cimon, and his elder brother Stesagoras, whom Miltiades succeeded as governor of the Chersonesus, and is then said to have made a conquest of Lemnos, in the interest of Athens; but this part of his history is doubtful. Soon after the expedition of Darius against the Scythians, Miltiades convinced his society by returning to Asia, having advised the Greek colonists to break down the bridge of the Danube, as a means of harassing the Persians, and of course merited their resentment. His military talents, in fact, were now needed to meet those formidable invaders at home, an army of 500,000 men, led by Darius and Artabazanes, being soon afterwards set in motion for the conquest of all Greece. Miltiades instructed the Athenians, and mastered all the men capable of bearing arms. The Spartans were not prepared to take the field, and their only allies were the inhabitants of the little town of Platea. When these forces were drawn forth they amounted to no more than 10,000 men, commanded by ten generals, and this was the army that evaded the shock of battle on the plain of Marathon. They were arrayed ten deep, and presented a front of 1,000 men to the enemy, who made a fierce attack on their centre, which gave way, and immediately the two wings closed in, and this with such quickness and impetuosity, that they may be said to have crushed the unwieldy host between them. More than 6,000 Persians were left dead on the field, with a loss to the Grecians of less than 200 men, the rest were scattered or escaped in their ships, and Athens had obtained a victory, which not only liberated Greece, but raised the city to great importance. Immediately after the victory of Marathon, Miltiades was sent in command of an expedition to the Ægean sea, to reclaim the island conquests of the Persians, and was wounded while laying siege to Paros. The approach of the Persian fleet and other sufficient reasons caused him to raise the siege and return home, when he was condemned to pay a fine of fifty talents, and imprisoned in default. Miltiades died in confinement, as much hurt by the ingratitude of his countrymen as by the wounds, under which he sunk, only a year after his great victory, B.C. 489. The first historian of these events was Herodotus, who wrote about seventy years after the battle of Marathon, and derived his materials from the heroic poem of Chœrilus.

[E.R.]

MILTIADES, a pope and saint of Rome, 311-314.

MILTON, JOHN, was born in London on the 9th of December, 1608. His father, a man of good family in Oxfordshire, had been educated at the university, and disinherited for embracing protestantism; on which he became a scrivener, and acquired a competent fortune.—Milton's education was begun under a private tutor of puritanical opinions, and continued from his fifteenth year at St. Paul's School. He has himself related that his love of letters was deeply rooted before he was twelve years old, and was sedulously indulged in spite of headaches and weak eyes: he studied languages, both ancient and modern, delighted especially in poetical reading, and cultivated the musical taste which he inherited from his father. In 1623 he wrote his translations of the 114th and 136th Psalms. In February 1625, when he was a little above sixteen, he was admitted a pensioner at Christ's College, Cambridge. In the same year was written his ode 'On the Death of a Fair Infant'; and in his nineteenth year he produced the verses 'At a Vacation Exercise in College.' In the interval were composed several of those elegies, and other poems, which have gained for him the reputation of being one of the best among modern writers of Latin verse. But there is evidence yet more brilliant of the poetic ripeness of his youth. The 'Ode on the Nativity,' one of the noblest of all his works, and perhaps the finest lyric in the English language, was composed about December 1629, when the poet was twenty-one years old.—The particulars of his life at the university are imperfectly known. The tradition of his having been whipped is ill-voiced and improbable; but the fact would not have been irreconcilable with the ideas of academical discipline which were then prevalent. He does appear to have at first excited the displeasure of the authorities, probably for too free expression of opinions, and certainly for no serious moral offence; but he took his degrees of bachelor and master in the regular course, and was pressed by the fellows of his college to remain at Cambridge. He could not resolve to comply with the wish of his parents that he should enter the church; and he declined also the profession of the law, for which, indeed, he had always a great contempt.—In 1632, leaving the university he went to the house of his father, who had chased an estate at Horton in Buckinghamshire. In this retreat he lived from his twenty-first year to his twenty-ninth; a period which was only very important in the development of mind, but very fertile in the fruits of his genius. He read the Greek and Roman classics, bestowed particular attention on the historians; and, in his study of Spenser and Shakspeare, and his contemporaries, had probably begun in boyhood there is, in his own poems of this stage, much to prove that he now became exactly as well as naturally familiar with Italian poetry. Not after his retirement to the country, must have produced the verses which he contributed to the masque of 'Arcades;' his exquisite masque of 'Comus,' one of the masterpieces of English poetry, acted in Ludlow Castle at Michaelmas 1634; in 1638 was printed the monody of 'Lycidas,' a refined embodiment of classical fancies in the Italian style, and the 'L'Allegro and 'Il Penseroso,' likewise, the most beautiful of all descriptive poems, had their birth almost certainly in those few years of 'a calm and pleasing solitariness, fed with cheerful and confident thoughts.' Milton, in short, had already achieved immortal fame. The mantle of the Elizabethan poets had fallen on him: and, though his brilliant career had now been arrested, he would have been illustrious as the last survivor, and one of the most highly gifted, of that energetic and fruitful generation. Nor is it uninteresting to note how the dramatic turn, which had been taken by poetry in the part of Elizabeth's reign, still affected one whose greatness was to reach its climax in works modelled in another form, and breathing ideas of another cast. The most poetical kind of the old drama was adopted and ennobled by him in the earlier part of his sustained efforts; there is extant, in his hand-writing, a memorandum of a hundred stories from Scriptural and British history, which presented themselves to him as fit themes for tragedies, and the treatment of which, in several instances, he lays down in outline; and the same paper contains a plan, the most elaborate of any for working up, into a tragedy or mystery, the incidents which, in the end, took an epic shape in 'Paradise Lost.'—In 1638, Milton's father furnished him with the means of visiting the continent, where he remained fifteen months. He first spent a few days in Paris, and there made the acquaintance of Grotius. He then passed two months in Florence, finding his way readily into literary society, to which, indeed, he recommended him by the remarkable skill with which he composed Italian verses; and at Arcetri, near that beautiful city, he waited on the illustrious Galileo. Several months more were spent in Rome; and, both there and in Tuscany, his classical predilections, and his sense of beauty in form, were richly nourished by the ruins and the scenery, the Greek sculptures, the masterpieces of Italian painting. In 1640, verses, addressed to Manso, the patron of Thomas he hints at a design of celebrating, in an epic poem, the life of King Arthur, the mythical hero of early British history, Naples, where Milton became acquainted with an accomplished person, was the farthest point of his travels. He had intended to visit Sicily and Gr

John Milton.

Sir Thomas More.

John Churchill Duke of Marlborough.

James Graham Marquis of Montrose.

the news reached him of the outbreak of disturbances in England; and his zeal on public questions, (which had shown itself in Rome by somewhat rash talk on matters of religion,) made him immediately resolve to retrace his steps. Returning to Rome, and crossing the Apennines to Bagna and Ferrara, he passed along Lombardy to Venice to Milan, and thence crossed the Alps to Geneva, where he remained a considerable time. Milton reached England about August, 1639, and to up his residence in London. The next twenty years were the times of the Civil War, the Commonwealth, and the Protectorate. During this stormy and severe period the poet's lyre was mute. Political questions his views passed rapidly into republicanism: and his ecclesiastical opinions, adverse to episcopacy from his youth, were matured by conflict around him, till he attached himself to the Independents. Always deeply impressed with the importance of the great controversies of his time, and naturally far from being disinclined to polemics, he threw himself promptly and fearlessly into the vortex of the struggle. For a short time after his return from the Continent, he occupied himself quietly in teaching his nephews John and Edward Phillips, and other boys whom he received into his house. Very soon, however, he began that career as a controversialist, which, though it has exposed him to much obloquy from those who dissent from his opinions, has enrolled his name among the noblest and most eloquent of the writers of Old English prose. His polemical writings are keen and sometimes abusive; but they are singularly able. His first work of this sort was a treatise 'Of Reformation,' published in 1641 to aid the attack then made on the bishops. He next engaged in the famous controversy, in which the writers on the puritanical side wrote under theagrammatic name of Smectymnuiis: to it he contributed four successive treatises, measuring with bishops Hall and Usher. It is interesting to see the poet, in the heat of this fiery contest, looking back with regret on the time when he had lived 'in the still and quiet air of delights,' and avowing his design of still exercising in his own proper sphere, some work worthy of mortality, some work nourished by observation and reading, and by 'devout prayer to that Eternity, who can enrich with all utterance and knowledge.'—At Whitsuntide in 1643, being in his thirty-fifth year, Milton married Mary the daughter of an Oxfordshire gentleman, a party of the cavaliers. The courtship seems to have been short; and we know little as to the circumstances, which, a few weeks after the marriage, led his wife to visit her father's house, and to refuse to receive her husband who was vehemently indignant, publicly owned her, and proceeded to justify the step by a first of four Treatises, in which he maintains the lawfulness of divorce for disobedience and other short of matrimonial unfaithfulness. The publication of these works was decidedly the most popular as well as the most objectionable step in Milton's controversial career. Before the last appeared, he gave forth, in 1644, his treatise 'Of Education,' expressing views which, though far from Utopianism, are very elevated, and are written in a strain of finely ornate eloquence. The year gave to the public the grandest of his prose works, an appeal, against all parties, in behalf of the freedom of the press. It was entitled 'Areopagitica: a Speech for the Liberty of Unlicensed Printing: to the Parliament of England.' Soon after this his wife, contriving to obtain an interview with him by surprise, and entreating his pardon, a reconciliation ensued: she lived with him without further separation; and his three daughters were hers. Her parents, also, being dispossessed of their house by the parliamentarians, were sheltered by Milton; and his interest with the ruling party was actively exerted to procure for his father-in-law a favourable composition with the commissioners of the sequestrated estates. It is worth notice, also, that the poet's brother, afterwards a catholic and judge under James II., was one of the sequestrated royalists. In 1645 Milton superintended a collected edition of his poems, Latin and English, some of which indeed, Lycidas being one, had not till now been acknowledged.—Before this publication, Milton's sight had begun to fail. His left eye was almost blind in 1644, or very soon after. His strong feelings, however, made him, instead of sparing himself, enlarge his field of battle: he passed from ecclesiastical to political questions. In February 1649, a few weeks after the death of Charles I., he published a treatise, defending his deposition and execution, and entitled 'The Tenure of Kings and Magistrates.' In March he accepted an appointment as 'Secretary for Foreign Tongues' to the Council of State. The extant order-book of the Council, and many letters also preserved, give evidence of his activity and usefulness in his office. By the desire of the Council, too, though without receiving any payment beyond his salary, he composed his 'Eikonoclastes,' an answer to the 'Eikon Basilike,' which had been published as a work of the unfortunate king. This was followed by two books, written in Latin, being designed for circulation abroad: the 'Defence of the People of England;' and the 'Second Defence.'—In 1652, before the latter of these works was composed, he had become totally blind: and soon afterwards another Latin secretary was appointed to act along with him; Andrew Marvel holding that place for a while. About this time his first wife died in childbed; and the same fate befell his second wife, Catherine Woodcock, within a year of her marriage, which took place in 1656. It was to her memory that he dedicated his fine sonnet. His blindness, though it made him inapt for regular official business, left him able to perform important public duties. In 1655 he drew up the Protector's Manifesto in justification of the war with Spain: and several controversial treatises came from his pen in the last years of the Protectorate. To his literary employments he now returned with redoubled ardour. Some progress was probably made with his History of England, of which four books had been written before his appointment to the secretaryship: he collected large materials (which were used by the Cambridge scholars in 1693,) for a Latin Dictionary, in amendment of the Thesaurus of Stephens: and there is good reason for believing that, during this period of honoured repose, he proceeded a considerable way in the composition of his great epic.—The Restoration of 1660 consigned Milton, for the last fourteen years of his life, to an obscurity which, wearing no terrors for his firm soul, gave him full leisure to execute the mighty poetical task he had undertaken. At first he thought it necessary to conceal himself: his friends are said to have made a mock funeral for him: and a proclamation was actually issued for the apprehension of him and Goodwin the theologian. But, though the most offensive of his books were burned by the hangman, he was included in the act of indemnity; and it is even asserted that his former office was offered to him, but of course refused. He had in the end inherited but little from his father, had failed in getting payment of the portion of his first wife, had lost money lent, and had had his house accidentally burnt. Accordingly, his circumstances were now indifferent, yet not very low for a man so moderate in his habits. He published, in 1661, a Latin grammar in English. In 1664 he married his third wife, Elizabeth Minshul, of a good Cheshire family.—In 1665, being in his fifty-seventh year, he completed 'Paradise Lost;' and it was published in 1667. It was sold for five pounds to a bookseller, who engaged to pay a like sum for each fifteen hundred copies that should be sold from each of three editions of two thousand each. In two years the first of these additional payments was due and made; a second edition was published in 1674, and a third in 1678. This was a large sale for a serious poem in an age like that of the Restoration; and, though it could not meet with applause from the fashionable debauchees of the court, the hearty and respectful admiration of Dryden was not the only tribute that was immediately paid, by competent judges, to the extraordinary merit of the only great epic in the English language. The poet next published his 'History of England,' down to the Norman Conquest; and in 1671 appeared the 'Paradise Regained,' to which was subjoined 'Samson Agonistes.' His second epic was written with great quickness, perhaps altogether during a retirement of several months which he made to Chalfont in Buckinghamshire, on the breaking out of the plague in London in 1665. John Milton, one of the greatest of poets, and the very greatest of all poets who have consecrated their genius to the service of Christianity, had now, amidst evil men and evil days, discharged the debt which, many years before, he had proudly said that he held himself to owe to posterity. He had enriched the world of poetry with a host of the noblest images and sentiments, and in his sacred epic had given to English diction and rhythm new and original developments.—His literary labours closed with a Treatise on Logic, very ably written in Latin; a new treatise in controversial theology, 'Of True Religion,' directed against popery; and a Latin collection, published in 1674, of his private letters and academical exercises. To the latest years of his life may have belonged the completion of his Latin treatise 'Of Christian Doctrine,' which, left unpublished till it was disinterred from the State Paper Office in 1823, showed him to have become decidedly an Arian.—In July, 1674, having long been distressed by gout, and thinking himself near death, he gave his brother directions as to the disposal of his property. These throw some light on his domestic position. The facts exhibit traces of those infirmities of temper with which the great poet is conditionally charged. The current account, which represents his daughters as having been trained to read and write for him, appears to be true as to Deborah, the youngest; and all of them lived uncomfortably with him and his third wife, and had left his house some years before his death. He was chiefly served in his studies and in his position by Elwood the Quaker, by other men who were attracted by his genius, and by whom he hired. He now intimated his intention (which his widow unsuccessfully attempted to establish as a completed will) of bequeathing his property to his wife, leaving to his daughters only, besides what he 'had done for them,' a pension on their mother's family for her portion still unpaid. He spoke of them as his 'unkind children,' and said they had been 'very ungrateful to him.' He died, so easily that the moment was perceived, on Sunday the 8th of November, 1674, and was buried beside his father, in the church of St. Giles in Cripplegate. [V.]

MIMAUT, J. F., a Fr. historian, 1775-1834.

MIMNERMUS, a Greek poet, 6th century B.C.

MINA, DON FRANCISCO ESPOZ Y, a Spanish general and statesman, born in Navarre 1781, of the guerillas when Spain was invaded by the French 1809, defender of the constitution in 1812 and again in 1820. He became an exile on several occasions, but returned on the death of Ferdinand VII. and took an active part against Carlos, 1834, d. 1840.

MIND, GODFREY, a Swiss painter, 1768-1844.

MINGARELLI, F., an Ital. theolog., 1724-1804.

MINIANA, J. E., an Ital. historian, 1671-1744.

MINOT, G. R., an Amer. historian, 1756-1834.

MINOT, LAURENCE, an Eng. poet, 14th century.

MINTO, GILBERT ELLIOT, Lord, born 1754, commenced his political career in the House of Commons 1794, and was governor-general of India 1807-1812; died 1814.

MINUCCIO, M., an Ital. prelate, 1551-1614.

MINUTIUS-FELIX, MARCUS, a Roman orator, author of the 'Octavius,' a Latin dialogue written in defence of Christianity, and for which he is attributed to Arnobius, 3d century.

MIOLLIS, A. F., a French general, 1759-1834.

MIONNET, T. E., a Fr. numismat., 1770-1834.

MIRABAUD, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French writer, first known as a translator of Tasso and Virgil, and afterwards for his free inquiries into the quieties of religion, was born at Paris 1765, became teacher in the family of the duchesse d'Orléans, and died 1760. The 'System of Nature,' published under his name, was written by the Marquis de Holbach, with the assistance of Diderot.

MIRABEAU, BONIFACE RIQUETTI, Viscount of Mirmont, known as 'Barrel-Mirabeau,' was brother of the great tribune, and appeared in the assembly as his adversary, being deputy from the noblesse of Limousin. He was born in 1754, having emigrated to Germany in 1790, he returned two years afterwards, commander of a regiment, which he had raised for the service of the king, and with which he joined the army of Condé.

MIRABEAU, VICTOR RIQUETTI, Marquis of Mirmont, father of the preceding, was born in Provence 1754, and died 1789. He was a great political orator, and was called 'the friend of men,' from the title of one of his works. His principles of Du Quesnay, and he suffered an imprisonment for them in the Bastille.

MIRABEAU, HONORE GABRIEL RIQUETTI, Cite De, one of the greatest orators of France, and the first leader of the revolution, was son of Vor Riquetti Marquis de Mirabeau, and was born at Bignon, near Nemours, 1749. Though his family was established in Provence, it was of Italian origin, and Mirabeau derived from his ancestry all the genius and passion which mark the race. At the age of seventeen, his father endeavored to curb his spirit and reform his manners, by two years' imprisonment in the Isle of Rhé, assigned to the fortress there, under the authority of a Lettre de Cachet. On being liberated he joined a regiment of dragoons, and after serving a year in Corsica, returned to Provence involved in pecuniary difficulties, as a means of extrication from which, he married the heiress of the Marignani family. This lady was already engaged to another, and the attempt to gain her hand was beset with difficulties, all which were overcome by the daring spirit and intriguing policy of Mirabeau, who used the most cruel means to accomplish his purpose. His extravagance, and his old debts still pressed upon him, and his life was so scandalous, that he became the terror of the peasantry around him, and is said to have treated his wife with great brutality. An opportunity being afforded to the Marquis Mirabeau, he contrived in 1774 to place his wife once more under arrest, first in the castle of Vincennes, situated on a rock in the gulf of Marseilles, and afterwards in a fortress of the Jura mountains. In the first named place Mirabeau seduced the lady, whom it contained, the sutler's wife, and in the latter carried off Sophia de Ruffey, wife of the Marquis de Monnier, the only being he ever really loved, and whose loss embittered all his after life, if it did not fire his genius, and render him the greatest man known to history. The lovers took refuge in Holland, where Mirabeau commenced writing for the booksellers as a means of subsistence, and while thus engaged they were both seized by a stratagem, Madame de Monnier being shut up in a convent, and Mirabeau conducted to in the castle of Vincennes, where he remained three years and seven months. Previous to his arrest he had been condemned by the parliament of Dijon, par contumace, and beheaded in effigy; and all his endeavours to obtain a trial during this long imprisonment were in vain; as were his efforts, pleading with surprising eloquence in his own cause, to recover his wife by law, who procured a divorce from him. The works which he had written up to this period were chiefly licentious productions, but he used the interval of his freedom in 1776 to publish an 'Essay on Despotism,' the fruit of which he had so bitterly tasted. Between the recovery of his liberty and the convocation of the 'Estates-General' in 1789, Mirabeau occupied himself as a political and historical writer, and becoming known to Calonne the finance minister, went to Berlin on some secret mission. His ambition, at the commencement of the national troubles, was to be returned to the estates-general as a deputy for the noblesse; but being rejected by his own order, he threw himself into the arms of the popular party, and was the first in the assembly to defy the royal authority. The occasion was the famous sitting of June 23d, 1789, when the deputies were charged to separate by the king, to the end that each of the three orders might meet in its own separate place on the morrow. The noblesse and the majority of the clergy departed after the king and his retinue, but the commons still lingered in uncertainty, and Mirabeau began to address them on the mission with which they were intrusted by the nation. He was interrupted by the marquis de Brézé, master of the ceremonies, who reminded them of the king's orders. The orator, flushed with anger, turned upon him with the glare of a lion—'Go, tell your master that we are here by the will of the people, and no power but the force of bayonets shall send us hence!' The commons rallied to his voice as to the call of a trumpet, and instantly decreed the inviolability of the people's representatives, and being joined by some of the noblesse and the clergy, formed themselves into the national assembly, of which body, in January 1791, Mirabeau became president, only two months before his death. We have not space to follow his career in the assembly, and the great questions decided by the magic of his eloquence. His characteristic was irresistible power, not only expressed in the deep bass of his voice, but represented in his defiant looks, his large head, his massy black hair, which he shook from his brow like the mane of a lion when he ascended the tribune, and his tall thick-set frame. 'His gestures were commands; his movements coups d'état,' 'his sonorous phrases became the proverbs of the revolution.' He compared himself to Marius, 'less great for having exterminated the Cimbri than for having prostrated the Roman aristocracy.' The most graphic writers of every shade of opinion have exhausted their skill in words to reproduce him as the people's tribune, 'In fiery rough figure, with black Samson-locks under the slouch-hat, he steps along there,' writes Carlyle in The Procession, 'roughest lion's whelp ever littered of that rough breed!' After the first burst of passion as the orator, Mirabeau devised rationally, and intended honestly as the statesman. In less than two years from the commencement of his political career, it was terminated by his death, and it cannot be doubted that he foresaw clearly, and was prepared to resist strenuously, the evil designs of those who involved France in such calamities afterwards. It is difficult to believe that a man could be devoid both of shame and virtue in private life, and at the same time act sincerely as a politician, and yet it is highly probable that such was the case with Mirabeau. A man of wild ungovernable passions, he had only just discovered the arena in which he could devote them to one sufficient end, and therein lies the whole secret. Like Danton, he took money from the court to support his extravagances, and still pursued his own purposes. When cut off by a sudden illness, 2d April, 1791, he was in all likelihood preparing to dissolve the national assembly, and to undertake the guidance of the nation as minister. He was honoured with a magnificent public funeral, and his remains deposited in the pantheon, from which, two years afterwards, they were removed and replaced by those of Marat. [E.R.]

[Castle of Vincennes.]

MIRAMION, M. BONNEAU DE, a French lady, celebrated as founder of a house of refuge for prostitutes, and of the Miramionites, or restored order of the daughters of Saint Genevieve, 1629-1696.

MIRANDA, DON FRANCISCO, one of the earliest patriots of South America, was born about the middle of last century, and commenced his career as a soldier in the Spanish army. In 1783 he visited the United States and the principal countries of Europe, with a view to the independence of his country, and, in 1790, joined the French army under Dumouriez. Sharing in the unpopularity of that general, he was tried at the revolutionary tribunal and acquitted, but was banished by the directory, and at a later period by Buonaparte. From 1806 to 1810 he was engaged, with varied success, in the struggles of his countrymen for freedom. He was at length captured by the Spaniards, and died in prison at Cadiz, where he had been confined four years, 1816.

MIRANDA, E. DE, a Spanish painter, last cen.

MIRANDOLA, the name of a distinguished family in Italy, was first borne by FRANCESCO PICO DELLA MIRANDOLA, a chief of the Ghibellines, and prince of Modena, 1312-1321. The next, and most illustrious of the family, mentioned by biographers, was GIOVANNI PICO DELLA MIRANDOLA, one of the greatest lights of his age (next article). After him are mentioned,—GIOVANNI FRANCESCO, his nephew, a great theological and philosophical writer, massacred, with his son, by Galeotto, 1533. GALEOTTO, the nephew and murderer of the preceding, succeeded to the principality, and died 1551. LOUIS, son and successor of the latter, died 1574. MARIE, the last of the dukes of Mirandola, was born 1688, and despoiled of his estates by the emperor Joseph I., in the Spanish war of succession. He retired with his family, who established themselves in France.

MIRANDOLA, JOHN PICO DELLA, was born in 1463. The precocious prince of Mirandola and Concordia showed great accomplishments in his youth, and challenged disputation on abstruse subjects in many of the most famous universities. He had few matches in that age as a finished scholar and acute philosopher, a subtle debater and a polished gentleman, nay, he was deep in theology, and devout in his life. But his sun went down at mid-day, and he died at the age of thirty-two at Florence in 1494. His fond pursuit was an endeavour to harmonize the philosophy of Aristotle and Plato. His works published at Basel, folio, 1601, and consist of letters, a treatise on the Lord's Prayer, the dominion of Christ, the 15th Psalm, and a Prayer for a Holy Life, &c.

MIREVELT, M. J., a Dutch painter, 1568-

MIRTCHOND, M., a Persian hist., 1433-1

MISSON, MAXIMILIAN, a Fr. writer, d.

MITAN, J., an engraver of London, 1770-

MITCHELL, ANDREW, a Scotch admiral, 1757, captured the Dutch fleet 1799, died 18

MITCHELL, SIR ANDREW, English ambador to Berlin, time of Frederick II., died 177

MITCHELL, SIR DAVID, a naval comm and ambassador, time of William III., died 1

MITCHELL, J., a Scottish dramat., 1684-

MITCHELL, THOS., a classical translator contributor to the 'Quarterly Review,' 1783-

MITELLI, A., an Italian painter, 1591-10

MITFORD, GEORGE, a country gentleman magistrate, father of Miss Mitford, the well-known novelist, 1760-1842.

MITFORD, JOHN, a miscellaneous wr., d.

MITFORD, JOHN FREEMAN, Baron Rede, an eminent chancery lawyer, member of parliament, and speaker of the House of Commons, 1801, subsequently lord chancellor of Ireland one of the privy council, died 1830.

MITFORD, WILLIAM, professor of history in the Royal Academy, was born in London and educated for the law, but entered parliament and obtained a commission in the Hampshire militia. His principal works are a 'History of Greece,' an 'Essay on the Harmony of Language,' 'Observations on the History of Christianity,' some military treatises. Died 1827.

MITHRIDATES, the first of the name, of Pontus, reigned 402-363 B.C. The second, 336-302 B.C. The third, 302-265 B.C. The fourth, 266-222 B.C. The fifth, son and successor of the preceding, chiefly known by his war with inhabitants of Sinope, ended his reign about B.C. The sixth, who was the first of the kind, Pontus to form an alliance with the Romans, ascended the throne about 157, and was assassinated B.C. 124. The seventh, or the eighth according to some accounts in which our fifth is omitted, is the subject of the following notice.

MITHRIDATES, surnamed 'the Great,' of Pontus, and greatest enemy of the Romans, was son of Mithridates V., whom he succeeded at the age of eleven, B.C. 123. Soon attaining his majority, he commenced his career of intrigue and conquest by attacking the Colchian empire of the Bosphorus, and, by the year 90, had openly broken with the Romans, the object of whose power he had often before crossed in mind. To explain how, in a few years, he became so formidable to the rulers of the world, we ought to mention that the rapacity and corruption of Roman proconsuls had excited a spirit of rebellion and revolt in nearly all their provinces. It was, in fact, the declining age of the patrician republic when a social war was created by the struggle of the privileged classes to withhold the rights of the very name of Roman citizens from the masses of their subjects. Spartacus in Italy, Sertorius the head of all Spain in revolt, and the nan arius and Sylla sufficiently characterize the nature of those critical times. Mithridates found the people of the East ripe for change, and he was aided as their deliverer by whole populations wherever his standard appeared. In the first flush of his success, the inhabitants of Asia Minor rose against the Roman citizens dwelling among them, and it is estimated at the lowest computation that 200,000 persons, of all ages and of both sexes, were put to death, whether by order of Mithridates, or by a spontaneous act of vengeance, can never be determined. Quick and indefatigable in his movements, Mithridates was soon master of nearly all Asia Minor, besides Greece taken by Archelaus, his lieutenant; and so surprising was his talent for the acquisition of languages, that he was able to converse with the natives of twenty-two different nations subject to him. The fortunes of Rome at this crisis, B.C. 87, were intrusted to Sylla, who led his army through Greece; and, by the capture of Athens and the victories of Chæronea and Oenonea, restored the Roman power in that country. For four years Mithridates disputed possession of Asia, but was at last compelled to succumb, by the loss of more than 200,000 men, and to confine himself to his hereditary dominions,—not, however, without more fighting during the execution of the treaty, which is sometimes regarded as a long war between him and the Romans. After the death of Sylla, which occurred in B.C. 78, Mithridates levied another army, numbering about 150,000 men, with a determination to expel the Romans from Asia. With this force he awaited opportunity, and when the kingdom of Bithynia was reduced to a Roman province, which happened on the death of Nicomedes, he invaded the country, and, having beaten the army of Cotta, laid siege to Cyzicum. Obligated to retreat by Lucullus, he was appointed consul B.C. 74, he was followed by the victorious Romans into his own states, driven to seek a refuge in Armenia, then ruled by Tigranes, who refused to deliver him up. Here, aided by the facility of a Buonaparte, Mithridates raised a third great army, and, in B.C. 67, completely defeated the Romans under Triarius, the lieutenant of Lucullus, who had been recalled; and following up his success, rapidly recovered the greater part of his dominions. The Romans, whose power was at this time trembling in the balance, were induced to invest Pompey with absolute power in the East, and by him, in B.C. 76, the forces of Mithridates were completely routed in a night at the near the Euphrates. Far from giving up a struggle which had lasted nearly forty years, this extraordinary man, after remaining some time in confinement, suddenly appeared at the head of a new army, with the vast design of marching into Italy, where he had reason to hope his forces would be joined by the Gauls. This gigantic enterprise produced a revolt amongst his troops, headed by a son, Pharnaces, whom they proclaimed king; and Mithridates, after a single attempt to cut it at the head of his guards, endeavoured to commit suicide by poison and afterwards to stab himself; and his attempts failing, caused one of his Gaulish lieutenants to put an end to his existence. Thus terminated, in B.C. 64, the most formidable enemy Rome had ever encountered, and, in many respects, one of the most remarkable men of those ages. He was honoured with a magnificent funeral by Pompey, and Rome breathed again on hearing of his unexpected and unhappy end. In regard to the charges of cruelty brought against him, it ought to be remembered, as pointed out by a recent historian of the Roman emperors, that the materials for the history of Mithridates are furnished by his enemies, the chief source of them being the memoirs of Sylla. [E.R.]

MITHRIDATES, the first of the name, king of Parthia, surnamed 'the Great,' succeeded B.C. 164, died, after conquering Media, Persia, Babylonia, and Mesopotamia, 139. The second, reigned 126-86 B.C. The third, 61-53 B.C.

MITTIE, J. S., a Polish physician, 1727-1795.

MITZLER, LAURENCE CHARLES DE KOLOF, a German composer, settled at Warsaw, 1711-1778.

MIZAULD, A., a Fr. astrologer, 1520-1578.

MOAWIAH, first Ommiade caliph, 661-680.

MOAWIAH II., third Ommiade caliph, 683-704.

MOCHI, F., an Italian sculptor, 1580-1646.

MODEER, A., a Swed. naturalist, 1738-1799.

MODIUS, F., a Flemish critic, 1546-1597.

MOEHLER, JOHN ADAM, professor of Romish theology at Tübingen, and author of many learned works in theology and church history, 1796-1836.

MOEHSEN, JOHN CH. WILLIAM, a learned physician of Germany, author of works on the history of medicine, 1722-1795.

MOELLENDORF, RICH'D. JOACHIM HENRY, Count De, commander of the Prussian army during the dismemberment of Poland, and the successor of Brunswick on the Rhine, 1724-1816.

MOESER, J., a German author, 1720-1794.

MOESTLIN, M., a Lutheran divine, died 1650.

MOET, J. P., a French author, 1721-1806.

MOFFAN, N. DE, a Fr. historian, 16th cent.

MOHLER. See MOEHLER.

MOHNIKE, T. C. F., a Ger. savant, 1781-1841.

MOHSIN, FANI, a Persian poet, died 1670.

MOINE, P. C. LE, a French savant, 1723-1780.

MOIRA, F. RAWDON, earl of, a general and statesman of the period of Fox and Pitt, distinguished in the American war, and more lately in La Vendée, born 1754, died governor-general of the East Indies, 1829.

MOIR, DAVID MACBETH, born in 1798, at Musselburgh, in the county of Edinburgh, settled as a medical practitioner in his native town, and till his death practised his profession there with eminent ability and success. He became known in literature by poetical contributions to Blackwood's Magazine, which, beginning about 1817, were soon marked by the writer's signature of 'Delta,' and continued to be furnished very frequently during the remainder of his life. Some of these were collected in two separate volumes: 'The Legend of Genevieve, with other Tales and Poems,' published in 1825; and 'Domestic Verses,' (several of which are very beautiful,) in 1843. Destitute of strong invention and original imagination, the poetry of Delta is yet extremely pleasing, through its refinement of sentiment, its frequent flow of sweetly natural pathos, and its grace and delicacy both of diction and of imagery. He was still more successful in a very different walk, that of familiar comic portraiture in prose. His compositions of this kind, contributed to Blackwood at intervals during several years from 1824, were collected and published separately, as 'The Life of Mansie Wanch.' This autobiography of a country tailor, though clearly suggested by Galt's Scottish daggerreotypes, has great humour and originality of its own. Dr. Moir was likewise the author of 'Outlines of the Ancient History of Medicine,' and of a volume of Critical Remarks on Recent English Poetry, which had been delivered as lectures not long before his death. He died in July, 1851, regretted as one whose amiability and uprightness were quite worthy of his fine taste and various accomplishments. [W.S.]

MOIVRE. See DE MOIVRE.

MOJON, J., an Italian chemist, 1776-1837.

MOLA, P. F., an Italian painter, 1609-1665.

MOLAI, JAMES DE, last grand master of the Templars, was born of a noble family in Burgundy, and entered the order about the year 1265. He was elected grand master, though absent from the East, on the death of William de Beaujeu, and was present at the recovery of Jerusalem by the Christians in 1299. After fresh reverses suffered in Palestine, Molai found himself in Cyprus, and was mustering his forces for renewing the conflict, when a summons from the pope obliged him to return to France in 1305. The avowed object of his recall was to take measures for uniting the Templar and Knights Hospitalers in one body. The want of union among the different military orders having occasioned much scandal and provoked many hazards in Jerusalem. Our knowledge of the facts is very obscure, but it is certain that the great wealth of the Templars had excited the avarice of Philip the Fair, and this, conjoined with political and religious reasons, produced an understanding between him and the pontiff for their destruction. On the 30th of October, 1307, all the Templars throughout France were arrested by surprise, and their property seized, while the inquisitors proceeded to examine them by torture and parole evidence on various charges of heresy, immorality, and unnatural crimes. As usual in such cases, many confessions were made to escape the agony of the rack, many died under the infliction, many recanted afterwards, and were burnt alive at the stake, and nearly all who suffered, exhibited the devotion and constancy of martyrs. James de Molai, and others of the order, appealed to the judgment of the pope, who held an oecumenical council on the subject in 1311, and in May, 1312, published a bull abolishing the order. The grand master, after a long imprisonment, was cruelly burnt alive by a slow fire, on the 18th of March, 1314, at Paris. An apology for the Templars was published by Father Lejeune, Paris, 1789, and a history of their condemnation, written by Pierre Dupuy, appeared at Brussels, probably a reprint, 1751. This illustrious order took its name from the temple of Solomon, and inherited the traditions and spiritual symbols connected with its foundation—the same, perhaps, that are faintly recognized in freemasonry. While it cannot be doubted that many such wandering knights were of licentious lives, and that their esoteric doctrines were inconsistent with the papal dominion, it is absurd to suppose that the crimes committed by individuals were the laws of their order. They were just a more chivalrous kind of Illuminati than those of the last century, possessed higher traditions, a more earnest purpose, and great temptation to their destruction, in wealth.

MOLARD, F. E., a Fr. engineer, 1774-1811.

MOLE, EDWARD, a French magistrate, t. Henry IV., 1558-1614. His son, MATTHEW, cellor during the war of the Fronde, 1684-1691.

MOLE, F. R., a French comedian, 1734-1801.

MOLE, JOHN, an English algebraist, d. 1681.

MOLESWORTH, ROBERT, Viscount, ambassador to Copenhagen in the reign of William III., author of an 'Account of Denmark,' 1656-1691.

MOLEVILLE, A. F. B. See BERTRAND.

MOLIERE is the name which JEAN BAPTISTE

POQUELIN assumed on becoming a player, which he is celebrated as the best comic writer of France. He was born in 1622, in Paris, where his father was a 'tapissier,' or upholsterer, holding an appointment in the royal household. He designed for his father's trade, was poorly educated, till he was fourteen years old; after which, he was inspired by his grandfather with a love for reading and for plays, he obtained from his parents, with difficulty, the means of studying at the Collège de Clermont; and there, by making other acquaintances that gained patronage for him, he attracted the notice and approval of the philosopher Gassendi. In his nineteenth year, having been appointed to fill his father's place as 'valet-de-chambre tapissier' to the king, he began to attend at court: his taste for the theatre was now confirmed by the fashion which had been set by Cardinal Richelieu; and he put himself under the head of a few young persons who, playing first as amateurs, soon became actors by profession.—From about 1645, Molière's history was amidst the wars of the Fronde: but he appears to have wandered in the provinces with his friends, and to have composed slight pieces for the stage, till 1653, when his first regular comedy, 'L'Écouteur,' was played at Lyons with great success. In 1654, next year, he produced 'Le Dépit Amoureux,' and, bent on his favourite pursuits, resolved to become the secretary of his old school-fellow, the Prince de Conti. In 1658, Molière, at the company, finding their way to Paris, received the patronage of the court: he was by this time an excellent actor; and he immediately showed that he possessed both a power of observation and an original invention, and a skill in dramatic composition, much exceeding anything that had appeared in his two earlier pieces. His clever satirical literary and accomplished ladies, called 'Les cieuses Ridicules,' was followed by his humorous farce, 'Le Cocu Imaginaire;' 'L'École des Maris' and 'Les Fâcheux,' made him still more famous as a witty and correct painter of life and manners, and the series of his plays continued to increase till 1673, when it was ended with his 'Le Malade Imaginaire.' Some of his comedies, such as that last named, 'Le Médecin Malin,' 'Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme,' and 'Le Dandin,' are chargeable, notwithstanding their liveliness, with degenerating into broad farce. Several of his comedies, though they do not support his fame at the extravagant height to which his countrymen raise it, are yet fully competent to justify his rank as at once one of the brilliant and skilful of all comic dramatists, and very best of those that have written comedies the formal French model. Such praise belongs especially to 'L'Ecole des Femmes' (1662), in which is his famous character of Agnes; 'Le Misanthrope' (1666), of which Wycherly's 'Plain Dealer' is an imitation, with improvement in manner and degradation in morality; 'Le Tartuffe' (1667), so deservedly celebrated for its powerful picture of hypocrisy in the person of the hero; 'Les Femmes Savantes' (1672), in which needless pretensions are ridiculed with great effect of humour.—In 1662, being forty years old, he married an actress of seventeen, whose light-minded poetry embittered his comfort. He is described as having been a thoughtful, generous, and good-natured man, and more popular with his players than managers are wont to be. He prided himself on his skill in playing low comedy, as much at home as on the fame he won as a dramatic poet. He all but died on the stage. In acting Molière on one of the earliest appearances of his last comedy, he was seized with convulsions, and soon suffocated by blood from the chest. His body was refused admission to consecrated ground, and he was allowed to be buried in a private funeral. [W.S.]

[Tomb of Molière.]

MOLIERE, F. DE, a French novelist, d. 1628.
MOLIERES, JOSEPH PRIVAT DE, a French physician, known as a philosophical and mathematical writer, 1677-1742.
MOLIN, or DUMOULIN, JAMES, a French physician, understood to be the original of the character of Le Sage, 1666-1755.
MOLINA, A. DE, a Span. philolog., 1496-1584.
MOLINA, J. L., a Mexican natural., 1740-1829.
MOLINA, L., a Spanish Jesuit, author of a 'Reason Free Will', which divided the theologians into two parties, called Jansenists and Molinists, 1535-1601.
MOLINERI, J. A., an Ital. painter, 1577-1640.
MOLINET, J., a French poet, died 1507.
MOLINIER, W., a French troubadour, 14th c.
MOLINOS, MICHAEL, was born in the neighbourhood of Saragossa in 1627, but was chiefly reared in Rome. In 1670 he published in Spanish his famous book, 'The Spiritual Guide,' which was translated into Italian, and published at Rome in 1675. The object of the treatise was to teach the pious mind must possess quietude in order to its spiritual progress, that for this purpose it must be abstracted from visible objects, that thus drawn within himself, it becomes susceptible of heavenly influence, and that the special functions of intellect and will are merged wholly in God. This species of mysticism was named Quietism. As it was in antagonism with the emphasis laid by the Church of Rome on external ceremonies, it brought down upon its author the hostility of the Jesuits and the higher powers. Molinos was thrown into prison in 1685, and though he recanted his errors, yet was he in 1687 condemned to perpetual imprisonment, and he died unreleased in 1696. This system was espoused in France by Madame Guyon, and the good and great Fenelon, bishop of Cambray. [J.E.]

MOLLER, DANIEL WILLIAM, a learned Hungarian 1642-1712.

MOLLER, H., a Lutheran divine, 1530-1589.

MOLLER, J., a German philologist, 1661-1725.

MOLLERUS, J. H., a Dutch statesman, minister of war in 1814, 1753-1830.

MOLNAR, A., a Hungarian philologist, b. 1574.

MOLLOY, CHARLES, a political and dramatic writer, educated for the law, b. in Dublin; d. 1767.

MOLYN, PETER DE, called 'the Elder,' a Dutch landscape painter and etcher, born about 1600. His son of the same name, called 'Cavaliere Tempestu,' and 'Pietro de Mulceribus,' famous for his storm pieces, 1637-1701.

MOLYNEUX, WILLIAM, an Irish mathematician and astronomer, author of a treatise on 'Dioptrics,' &c., 1656-1698. His son, SAMUEL, an astronomer and optician, was born 1689. SIR THOMAS, brother of the latter, a physician and philosophical writer, died 1733.

MOLYNEUX, SIR WM., a brave officer, distinguished at the battle of Flodden, reign of Henry VIII.

MOLZA, FRANCESCO MARIA, a licentious Italian, distinguished for his versatile skill in poetry, 1489-1544. His grand-daughter, TARDUQUINA, remarkable for her extensive learning and poetical talents, 1542-1617.

MONACI, L. DE, a Venetian annalist, d. 1429.

MONALDESCHI, MARQUIS DE, a nobleman attendant on Christina, queen of Sweden, whom she caused to be assassinated at Fontainebleau, 1657.

MONARDES, N., a Spanish naturalist, d. 1578.

MONBEILLARD. See MONTBEILLARD.

MONBODDO, LORD. See BURNETT.

MONCE, F. DE LA, a painter of Munich, d. 1753.

MONCEY, R. ADRIAN JEANNOT, Duke de Conegliano, a French marshal, distinguished in the wars of Napoleon, and governor of the 'Invalides' when the ashes of the emperor were brought from St. Helena, 1754-1842.

MONCIEL, T. DE, a Fr. statesman, 1790-1831.

MONCONYS, B. DE, a wr. of travels, 1611-65.

MONCRIF, FRANCIS AUGUSTIN PARADIS DE, a French poet and libérateur, 1687-1770.

MONET, PHILIBERT, a Fr. savant, 1566-1643.

MONETI, F., an Italian satirist, 1635-1712.

MONGAULT, N. H., a Fr. writer, 1674-1746.

MONGE, GASPARD, born at Beaune in 1746; died at Paris, 28th July, 1818: one of the very greatest of those illustrious scientific men who graced and exalted the Republic, the Consulate, and the Empire. Educated as a military engineer at the college at Mezières, he was transferred to the school of the Louvre in 1780, and thus was on the spot, prepared to sustain his part in those subsequent stupendous events which stunned Europe. It must not be supposed that in the Revolution Monge figured as a politician; neither at any period of his life did he evince sympathy with the mere struggles of Party; but among the foremost, he came, with all the energy of genius, in aid of the Convention, when France first stood at bay, and then single-handed beat back the Coalition and shivered their Empires. That was indeed a time! The super-human gallantry of the nation, and the prodigious force with which it rose in defiant vindication of its existence and rights, so strike one with amazement, and even at this late day so stir the blood, that, for the moment, one inclines to forget its crimes. It must be recollected, that not only was the enemy on the frontier, but the supply was stopped of all those substances, even to the raw material, which had to be wrought into weapons of defence; the means of procuring iron, steel, saltpetre, gunpowder, and many articles of prime necessity 'were,' says Biot, 'created during the reign of Terror.' The superintendence, or in terms more appropriate, the creation of the Engineering, fell in large part to Monge; and it was out of his herculean exertions to man the fortresses and instruct the new army, that those world-famous schools—the Ecoles Normale and Polytechnique—at that time sprung up. Nor were the ties ever severed that bound him to the fortunes of France. Side by side with their young Buonaparte during the ever-memorable campaigns of Italy, he afterwards formed one of the expedition to Egypt, whose records his pen has so largely enriched; and he kept the warm friendship of the Emperor, to the close of Napoleon's own career. It will be remembered as one of the earliest and meanest acts of the Restoration—that purging of the Institute, which got rid, by expulsion, of several associates to whom it then owed great part of its splendour: surely it is brighter honour to MONGE that he shared the fate of CARNOT, than if he had preferred to repent and be rewarded with L'aplace!—Monge's achievements, however, were not merely those of Action. He contributed in many ways to improve analysis, and made important steps in the application of analysis to Geometry: but that which makes his name imperishable, is a stroke of pure genius, constituting an epoch in the Science it advanced. While yet a young officer in the engineers, the happy thought occurred to Monge, that by a new and peculiar method of projection, every solid figure might be represented on plane canvas, so accurately that the relations of its various points might be determined by rule and compass. Applying his idea in the first place to the solid works of fortification, &c., he soon discerned that he held in his hand the principles of a Geometry altogether new, and of exhaustless capacity; and that remarkable method was elaborated accordingly, which is now known as 'Descriptive Geometry.' A new Geometry, by every right,—the Method of Monge has already conferred the highest benefits on all departments of practical science; and it has opened to pure Geometry long courses of investigation, to which analysis alone had previously the key. No work yet exists exposing the foundation and nature of Descriptive Geometry as well as Monge's own: through its perspicuity, its taste, its prehensiveness, it ranks as a classic in mathematics. It is said that the oral expositions of a remarkable person were as fascinating as his. His pupils considered him the ideal of a sophic teacher; and a few who still survive continue to speak of his lessons as among their delightful recollections. [J.]

MONGELLAZ, MADAME, a French author of 'The Influence of Women upon men,' 1798-1830.

MONGEZ, JOHN ANDREW, a French physicist and naturalist, 1751-1788. His brother, ANTOINE, author of several historical works, 1747-1830.

MONGITORE, A., a Fr. antiquar., 1663.

MONK. GEORGE MONK, general and commonwealth, and duke of Albemarle after restoration, was born in Devonshire in 1608, devoted himself early to a military life, and acquired some experience in the wars on the continent, when the civil war broke out in England between Charles and his parliament. Monk first served on the king's side; but he was prisoner in 1645, and after lying two years in prison, he consented to take a commission in the parliamentary army. He commanded first his new masters in Ireland, where he distinguished himself greatly. He afterwards acted as lieutenant-general under Cromwell in Scotland, he aided much in gaining the victory of Dunbar. Cromwell left him with 5,000 men to complete the subjugation of Scotland, a work which he effectually performed. He was next employed as admiral of the commonwealth's fleet, and shared in the perils and the glories of the separate struggle with the Dutch navy, which Blake so successfully conducted. He was soon back to command in Scotland; and for years he kept that kingdom in helpless subjection to Cromwell, and in unprecedented order and tranquillity. On the first protector's death, he proclaimed Richard Cromwell as Oliver's successor; but he soon discovered the weakness of the new ruler, and determined to follow that policy which he would both connect himself with the strongest party, and also lay that under the most possible obligation to him. He temporized for some months; listening to the advances of all sides, and saying little in return.—He removed his army from Scotland to London, and continued to dupe the parliamentarians and royalists the very last. He had made up his mind that the royalist cause was the strongest, and he continued negotiations with the Stuart princes, by which he secured high rewards for himself as the price of conducting their restoration. In February 1660, Monk threw off the mask altogether, he demanded the dissolution of the remnant of the long parliament, and ordered a free one to be convened. He introduced a messenger from the king to the new parliament; and on the 3d of May, he received Charles II. on the beach at Dover. He was rewarded by the dukedom of Albemarle, large grants of offices and money. He was at sea again in 1666, against his old enemies the Dutch, and maintained his reputation for courage and conduct. He died in 1670. Monk had strong nerves, strong common sense, a cold but an accommodating conscience, a careful to unchanging countenance, and an imperturbable temper. He showed considerable skill in civil government as well as in military affairs. He had fewness enough to see what was best for the nation's interest; and, if it also promoted his own, he had ability and vigour enough to bring it to pass. He was never unsettled by enthusiasm in detaching his ends, and he was never checked by scruple in choosing his means. [E.S.C.]

MONK, MARY, a poetical writer, died 1715.

MONK, NICHOLAS, brother of the famous duke of Albemarle, became bishop of Hereford, d. 1661.

MONMOUTH, JAMES, duke of, whose attempt to place the crown of England on his head was an interesting and bloody chapter in our history, was a natural son of Charles II., by Lucy Walters, and was born at Rotterdam, in 1619.

He was brought up in France as a catholic, and when the restoration of Charles, was treated with every mark of affection by him, and acquired immense popularity by the possession of qualities which are always dear to the people—generosity, courage, united to a handsome person and noble manners. It was reported that the king had been privately married to Lucy Walters, and the popular dislike of the duke of York, afterwards James II., gave occasion to hopes that her might succeed to the crown—hopes which were ripening into plots under the guidance of such men as Shaftesbury—when the king was presented upon by his brother to declare in council that the duke of Monmouth had no claims to the monarchy. In 1679, Monmouth was intrusted with a command in Scotland, and defeated the Jacobites at the battle of Bothwell Bridge, in June, but was soon afterwards sent beyond the sea at the instigation of his uncle. A few months afterwards he returned without leave, and became the centre of the popular movements provoked by the arbitrary conduct of Charles, and the dread of the succession in the person of the duke of York—the same struggle in which the duke of Lord William Russel, and Algernon Sidney were sacrificed. The result to Monmouth was his exile in Holland, where he resided with the Whig refugees until the accession of James II. presented him with the long desired opportunity of vindicating the issue with his sword. It is one of the problems of history how far the prince of Orange favoured this enterprise. The duke landed in the neighbourhood of Lyme, in June, 1685, with only 80 followers, and within twenty-four hours was at the head of 1,500 men, while the royal troops were mustering to oppose him, and the command of Churchill, afterwards the famous duke of Marlborough, and hundreds of others were arrested for alleged complicity. The action took place which terminated this enterprise, Monmouth was proclaimed king at Winton, and had mustered nearly 6,000 men, all liars and rustics—none of the Whig aristocracy or the regular army joining him, as he had been led to hope. The hostile forces met at Sedgemoor, in Somersetshire, and more than a thousand of the undisciplined followers of Monmouth were killed before they yielded the field. The duke was captured in a miserable condition, near Ringwood, in the New Forest, and was executed on Tower Hill, on the 15th of July.

The executioner was John Ketch, who had also beheaded Russel. Monmouth was the idol of the people, who refused for a long time to believe that he was really executed; and it is curious to speculate on what might have been the issue of his enterprise had he deferred it a year or two longer, when the undisguised tyranny of James, and the hopes of the catholics were prostrated by the glorious revolution of 1688. [E.R.]

MONNET, A. G., a French chemist, 1734-1817.

MONNET, J., a French writer, died 1785.

MONNIER, L. G., a Fr. engraver, 1733-1804.

MONNIER, P. LE, a Fr. philoso., 1575-1657.

MONNIER, SOPHIE DE RUFFY, Marquise De, a French lady of great personal and mental accomplishments, who became the mistress of Mirabeau, and committed suicide after the death of one of her subsequent lovers, 1789.

MONNOT, A., a French anatomist, 1765-1820.

MONNOT, P. T., a Fr. sculptor, 1658-1733.

MONNOYE, B. DE LA, a Fr. poet, 1641-1727.

MONOD, H., a Swiss statesman, 1753-1833.

MONOD, P., a Jesuit of Savoy, 1586-1644.

MONOYER, F. B., a Flemish painter, 1635-99.

MONPON, H., a French composer, 1804-1841.

MONRO, ALEXANDER, the famous professor of anatomy, and one of the first founders of the reputation borne by the medical school of Edinburgh, was born in London, 1697, and finished his studies at Paris, under the eye of Boerhaave. He was appointed professor at Edinburgh, where he had first studied, in 1719; and published his first work, 'The Anatomy of the Bones,' 1726. He contributed many papers on anatomical, physiological, and practical subjects to the transactions of a society which he originated in Edinburgh, and of which he was secretary; these were afterwards published in eight volumes. Died 1767.

MONRO, ALEXANDER, eldest son of the preceding. See MUNRO, ALEXANDER.

MONRO, DONALD, second son of Alexander, author of a 'Treatise on Medical and Pharmaceutical Chemistry,' 1731-1802.

MONRO, JOHN, a wr. on insanity, 1715-1791.

MONROE, JAMES, fifth president of the United States of America, elected 1817 and 1821, d. 1831.

MONS, J. H. VON, a Belg. chemist, 1765-1842.

MONSIAU, N. A., a Fr. painter, 1754-1837.

MONSYING, P. A., a Fr. composer, 1729-1817.

MONSON, SIR WILLIAM, a writer on naval tactics, disting. against the Dutch, 1669-1643.

MONSTIER, A. DU, a Fr. historian, d. 1662.

MONSTRELET, ENGUERRAND DE, a provost of Cambrai, author of annals, 1390-1453.

MONTAGU, the name of a noble family, descended from one of the Norman barons who accompanied William the Conqueror to England. The most noted in English history are—EDWARD, who contributed to the overthrow of the duke of Somerset, in the reign of Edward VI., died 1556. EDWARD, earl of Sandwich, a general, admiral, and statesman, who served the commonwealth in company with Blake, and became a royalist of the restoration, born 1625, killed in combat with the Dutch 1672. CHARLES, earl of Halifax, a statesman of the reign of William III., 1661-1715. JOHN, fourth earl of Sandwich, a diplomatist and statesman, author of a voyage round the Mediterranean, 1718-1792. GEORGE, an admiral, 1750-1829. And besides these, three celebrated names in the literary history of England mentioned below.

MONTAGU, ELIZABETH, formerly Miss Robinson, and wife of Edward Montagu, Esq., grandson of the first earl of Sandwich, a lady of great literary ability, author of an 'Essay on the Writings and Genius of Shakspeare,' 1720-1800.

MONTAGU, G., a naturalist, died 1815.

MONTAGU, LADY MARY WORTLEY, whose family name was Pierrepont, was the daughter of the earl (afterwards duke) of Kingston. She was born in 1690, received a solid and somewhat masculine education, and when she was twenty years old translated, from the Latin, not the Greek, the Encheiridion of Epictetus. Marrying, in 1712, Mr. Edward Wortley Montagu, she became, through her beauty and wit, at once a chief ornament of fashionable society, and a flattered friend of Addison, Pope, and other men of letters. In 1716 she went abroad with her husband, then appointed ambassador to Constantinople. Her residence of two years in the East produced her celebrated 'Letters,' pieces abounding both in liveliness and in observation, and altogether reckoned deservedly among the very best things of their kind. On her return home she was able, not without much opposition, to introduce in England the practice of inoculation for small-pox, to which, seeing it in Turkey, she had submitted her own son. She wrote verses freely for many years, and continued to keep up her intimacy with literary men; but she quarrelled with Pope, and was pilloried by him in some of his bitterest verses. She spent several years on the continent, chiefly residing near Venice; and, coming again to England, died in 1762. Her daughter married George III.'s favourite minister, the earl of Bute. [W.S.]

MONTAGU, EDWARD WORTLEY, son of the preceding, and au. of 'Reflections on the Rise and Fall of the Ancient Republics.' He exhibited traits of a most abandoned character from his school-boy days to the last hour of his life, 1713-1776.

MONTAIGNE, MICHEL, SEIGNEUR DE, was born in 1533, in the French province of Perigord, on the small estate from which his noble and ancient family took their name. The course of his boyish education was very eccentric: among other peculiarities of it, he was taught Latin by speaking it in childhood, to the exclusion of French, which he learned afterwards as a foreign tongue. When we remember that Montaigne was a Gascon by birth and breeding, this fact may account for the comparative purity of his style. He was sent to the college of Guienne at Bourdeaux, at a very early age, before George Buchanan had ceased to be a teacher there. Being a younger son, he studied law, and was for some years a counsellor in the parliament of Bourdeaux: but, succeeding early to his father's moderate property, he was for the remainder of his life a country gentleman. He resided almost constantly at his own chateau, making, however, tours in France, visiting Paris, (where he had an honorary post in the royal household,) and journeying through Italy for his health in his later years. Living in the troubled time of the League, he was, though attached to the royal party, disgusted by many things done on both sides; and, obstinately remaining inactive, and distrusted by both factions, he was once driven from his house, and had his estate ravaged. About 1572, when he was horror at the massacre of St. Bartholomew began to record the fruits of his desultory ramblings and musings. His 'Essays' first appeared in 1588, but were repeatedly altered, and very much enlarged, till they reached their complete shape in 1604. They show much of historical and other knowledge, with a great amount of shrewd and original rambling thought. They are made more amusing and interesting by the garrulousness with which the writer keeps himself content before us; parading, without reserve, all the traits of his character, his generous goodness, his love of ease, his triumphant vanity, his singular and touching combination of feeling with sceptical doubts, on points of religion as well as of philosophy. He died in the sixtieth year of his age. His observations embracing the whole circle of human life, have been a rich storehouse of ideas for succeeding authors; and, not long ago, the autograph of Shakspeare was found on a copy of the English translation of the 'Essays.'

[Tomb of Montaigne.]

MONTALBANI, COUNT J. B., an Italian in the Venetian service, author of a work on the manners of the Turks, 1596-1646. His son, M. ANTONIO, a naturalist, 1630-1695. Onofrio, brother of Count Montalbani, a naturalist philosopher, 1601-1671.

MONTALDI, P. J., an Ital. Hebraist, 1730-

MONTALEMBERT, ADRIAN DE, a military engineer distinguished as a general in the years' war, and at the period of the revolution the adviser of Carnot, 1714-1800.

MONTALEMBERT, MARK RENE ANNE DE, Count De, a French general and diplomat who became an exile at the period of the restoration and served in the English army till 1831.

MONTALTO, the name of two doges of Venice.—1. LEO, reigned 1383-1384. 2. ANTONIO, elected 1393, deposed and re-elected 1394, deposed again 1411.

MONTANO, or DA MONTI, JOHN B., an Italian physician, and translator of some Latin classics, 1488-1551.

MONTANO, J. B., an Ital. architect, d. 1600.

MONTANO, R. G., a Span. protestant, d. 1600.

MONTANUS, the founder of a famous sect in the second century, lived in the village of Montanus, on the confines of Phrygia. As No. 1. remarks, 'the Phrygian temperament' is a form of nature-worship, filled with magic and ecstasies for which the province was already famous. A special supernatural element of Christianity struck with amazement such a people—its miracles, prophecies, and early gifts of knowledge and prophetic rhapsody. The object of Montanus was to subordinate everything else in the church to those superhuman and brilliant endowments, and to cast in the shade its ordinary teaching and government. Thus he maintained that he was the promised Paraclete—not the Divine Spirit, indeed, but the predicted enlivener, purifier, and Comforter. He threw himself into states of transport, raved with fluent sublimity. A new church was founded at Pepuza, their New Jerusalem, and raptures, tongues, and nervous spasms, were a daily spectacle. The followers of Montanus, among whom were two ladies, caught the infection, and the contagious mesmerism quickly spread. It was thought that the apostolic age was revived, and that the phenomena of Pentecost were to be subsided in augmented and interminable splendour. A transcendental code of morality was proclaimed, and in which fasts, penances, and asceticism, held a prominent place. Tertullian was seduced by the delusion, and became the most zealous and eloquent advocate of the system. Manicism, in the essence of it, has not been confined to Phrygia, for it has been often witnessed in Europe, and has even crossed the Atlantic. [J.E.]

MONTANUS, BEN. ARIAS, a Spanish Orientalist and antiquarian, 1527-1598.

MONTAUSIER, CHARLES DE SAINTE MAURE, Baron De, a French statesman, distinguished for his virtuous conduct during the civil wars of the 17th c., 1610-1690.

MONTBEILLARD, PHILIBERT GUENEAU, a French naturalist, and assistant of Buffon in the composition of his great work, 1720-1785.

MONTBELIARD, LEOP. EBERHART, Prince of Saxe, an officer in the service of Austria, 1670-1725.

MONTBRUN, C. DUPAY, Seigneur De, a prominent commander disting. at Jarnac and Montignac, in the civil wars of France, 1530-1574.

MONTCALM DE ST. VERAN, LOUIS JOSEPH, Baron De, a French commander, killed at the battle of Quebec, 1712-1759.

MONTCHAL, C. DE, a Fr. prelate, 1589-1651.

MONTCHRESTIEN, ANTHONY, a French playwright, and writer on political economy, d. 1621.

MONTBELLLO, DUC DE. See LANNES.

MONTECORVINO, J. DE, a French miner, and as a missionary to Tartary, 1247-1330.

MONTUCULLI, RAIMONDO, Count Di, an Italian general and writer on tactics, 1608-1681.

MONTUCULLI, SEBASTIANO DI, a gentleman of Ferrara, put to death on the allegation of having caused the death of the son of Francis I., and said to have been poisoned in 1536.

MONTGRE, A. F. JENIN DE, a French physician and wr. on animal magnetism, 1779-1808.

MONTMAYOR, G. DE, a Sp. poet, 1520-62.

MONTMAYLO, J. S., an Italian poet, 1515-1580.

MONTMAYLO, NICHOLAS, histor. of Tortona, 1618.

MONTNAULT, C. P., a Fr. writer, died 1749.

MONTNERCHI, J., an Ital. antiquarian, 17th c.

MONTNEREAU, P. DE, a Fr. architect, d. 1266.

MONTNEREUL, or MONTEREUIL, BERNARD

DIN DE, a French Jesuit, known as an ecclesiastical historian, &c., 1596-1646.

MONTESPAN, FRANCES ATHENAIS, Marchioness De, one of the mistresses of Louis XIV., was born 1641, married to the marquis de Montespan in 1663, and supplanted the duchess de la Valliere in the affections of the king, 1668. She maintained her influence over Louis several years, and had three children by him, but was compelled to give way on his marriage with Madame de Maintenon. Died 1717.

[Birth-place of Montesquieu.]

MONTESQUIEU, CARL DE SECONDAT, Baron De, was born on the 18th January, 1689, at the castle of La Brède, near Bourdeaux, whence he held another title of nobility. He was a very hard student in his youth. He seems at first to have devoted himself to physical science, but he turned his more mature attention to law, the hereditary profession of his family. In the year 1717 he succeeded both to the family estate and to the perpetual presidency of the parliament of Bourdeaux. While he occupied that high judicial office he laboriously performed its functions. His conscience would not permit him to sacrifice the public business to his literary and philosophical tastes, and he resigned his chair in 1726. He had five years earlier printed the most popular, but not the most important of his works, the 'Lettres Persanes.' A violent literary dispute has arisen from the question whether he withdrew or disavowed some of the religious opinions in this work, with the view of removing the king's opposition to his being a member of the Academy—at all events he succeeded in gaining his object. In 1748 he published his 'Esprit des Loix,' one of the most laborious books ever written. It had an immense influence on the literature of the age, and founded that method of philosophising and finding out facts to justify opinion, which characterized his followers of the French school, and entered in a great measure into the spirit of the Scottish school of philosophy. Like most original minded men he brought to his work a degree of genius and knowledge which his imitators could not cope with, and which concealed, in his hands, the defects of the system. His life is the history of his works, and the even tenor of his days was little disturbed by external events. Little is known of his personal character and habits, and it is hence interesting to find a curious notice of him in the memoirs of Lord Charlemont. He, when a young man, visited Montesquieu. They set off together on a ramble, when, as the narrator says, 'we soon arrived at the skirts of a beautiful wood, cut into walks, and paved round, the entrance to which was barricaded by a moveable bar, about three feet high, fastened with a padlock—"Come," said he, searching in his pocket, "it is not worth our while to wait for the key; you, I am sure, can leap as well as I can, and this bar shall not stop me." So saying he ran at the bar and fairly jumped over it, while we followed him with amazement, but not without delight to see the philosopher likely to become our play-fellow. This behaviour had exactly the effect which he meant it should have. He had observed our awkward timidity, and was determined to rid us of it.'—(Memoirs, 33). Montesquieu died in February, 1755. [J.H.B.]

MONTET, J., a French chemist, 1722-1782.

MONTETH, or MONTEITH, ROBERT, names common to two Scottish writers, one on historical subjects, and the other a collector of all the epitaphs of Scotland; last century.

MONTESUMA, the first of the name, king of Mexico, reigned 1455-1483. The second, Mexican emperor at the time of the Spanish invasion, succeeded 1502, and died of a wound from a stone while in the hands of the Spaniards 1520. One of his children, baptized by the Spaniards, became the stock of the counts of Montezuma and Tula.

MONTFAUCON, BERNARD DE, a French Benedictine, distinguished as a critical and antiquarian writer, 1655-1741.

MONTFORT, A. DE, a Dutch painter, 1532-83.

MONTFORT, L. M. GRIGNON DE, a Fr. Jesuit and missionary, kn. as a relig. founder, 1673-1716.

MONTFORT, SIMON DE. 1. This name, famous in the middle age history of France and England, was first borne by a knight crusader, descended from the lords of Montfort, near Paris. His career dates from 1199, when he went to the Holy Land, companion-in-arms of Thibault, count of Champagne, but it becomes of more historical importance in 1208, when he was appointed chief of the barbarous crusade against the Albigenses, then protected by Raymond, count of Toulouse. In 1213 he obtained a great victory at Muret over the confederated armies of that prince, of his brother-in-law, Peter, king of Arragon, and the nobles who had united with them, and was then appointed by the pope sovereign of all the countries conquered from the alleged heretics. He was killed while besieging Toulouse, 1218. 2. The SIMON DE MONTFORT of English history, was a younger son of the preceding, who quitted France either in 1231 or 1236, in consequence of a dispute with Queen Blanche, mother of Saint Louis. He was the heir of estates in this country, which had been held by his family in the reign of King John, and on coming to settle here, received possession of them with the title of earl of Leicester. Henry III., in fact, received him into great favour, permitted him to marry his sister, the countess dowager of Pembroke, and appointed him lieutenant-general, or seneschal, of Gascony. From this time the interest of English history turns on the disputes between this turbulent subject at the head of a confederacy of the barons and the crown, the first incident in it being Montfort's recall from government. In 1258 Henry had convoked parliament, to procure supplies for the conquest of Sicily. The occasion was seized by Montfort and the barons, to make an armed protest at his government, the end of which was the appointment of twenty-four of their number, Montfort as president, to administer the affairs of the kingdom. Such a truce could not in the nature of things be of long duration. Montfort and his son, Prince Edward, endeavoring to reconquer the royal authority by force of arms, were defeated at the battle of Lewes, an event which transferred the government to Simon de Montfort, though he acknowledged the bishop of Chichester and the Gloucester as his associates. In the year following, 1265, De Montfort convened a parliament, in which representatives were sent from boroughs for the first time on record, and originated the House of Commons. He was the leader of the popular party, and was obliged to take the field by the disaffection of the Gloucester, who soon after, with many other barons, joined Prince Edward, previously active with his father in the camp of Montfort. The battle of Evesham, 5th August, 1265, decided the contest. Simon de Montfort, overpowered by his own army, fell in the midst of his friends, and his family succeeded as a matter of course.

MONTGERNON, LOUIS BASIL CARRE, a French counsellor of the parliament of Paris, famous for his vindication of the miracles wrought at the tomb of the Abbé Paris, for which he was imprisoned in the Bastille, and then exiled, 1686-1701.

MONTGLOTT, MARQUIS DE, a French general, camp-marshal time of Louis XIII. and XIV., 1610-1675.

MONTGOLFIER, the name of two brothers of France, celebrated in the history of balloons, and in the manufacture of paper. The elder, JOSEPH, lived 1740-1810. The younger, JAMES STEPHEN, born 1745, commenced his experiments 1782, died 1799.

MONTGOMERY, the name of a noble family, sprung from ROGER DE MONTGOMERY, a companion-in-arms of William the Conqueror. The son of Roger was banished the kingdom in the reign of Henry I., and one of his descendants created earl of Eglinton by James IV., 1502. BRIEL MONTGOMERY, a member of this family, had the misfortune to wound Henry II. in a tournament, of which the king died, 1559. He afterwards distinguished himself in the religious wars of France, and was beheaded by order of the catholic queen, Catherine de Medici, 1576.

MONTGOMMERY, RICHARD, an Irish general, dist. as a partizan of the Americans, 1737-1781.

MONTI, J., an Italian botanist, 1682-1768.

MONTI, P. M., an Italian cardinal, 1675-1763.

MONTI, VINCENZO, an Italian poet and dramatist, kn. also as a versatile politician, 1733-1804.

MONTJOIE, F. C. GALART DE, a French royalist and man of letters, author of 'Principles of the French Monarchy,' and of a 'History of Robespierre's Conspiracy,' 1756-1816.

MONTMORENCY, the name of a noble family, the first of whom was BOUCHARD, the great feudatories of the 10th century.

ingnished in succeeding ages are,—MATTHEW, constable 1180, regent during the crusade of 1180, died 1160. MATTHEW, grandson of the king, called the great constable, served in the crusade against the Albigenes, and under the regency of Blanche, during the minority of her son, Louis IX., died 1230. CHARLES, marshal and governor of Normandy, died 1381. ANNE, constable of France, born 1493, companion-in-arms in captivity of Francis I., 1525-26, gained the battle of Dreux against the Calvinists 1562, and died at St. Denis, where he fell gloriously, covered with wounds, 1567. HENRY I., second son of Louis, born 1544, fought with his father, and was crowned marshal in Piedmont 1566. He was one of the first to recognize Henry IV., who made him constable 1593; died 1614. HENRY II., son of the latter, born 1559, was named admiral by Louis XIII. as early as 1612, and greatly distinguished himself against the Calvinists. He was beheaded, vainly opposing himself to the ambition of Richelieu, 1632. He was the last of the first branch of this house. His sister, CHARLOTTE MARGARET, became wife of the second Duke, prince of Condé, and mother of the great Duke; died 1650.

DE MONTMORT, PETER RAYMOND DE, a French politician, the disciple and friend of Malesherbes, 1678-1719.

DE MONTPENSIER, ANNE MARIA LOUISA D'ORLÉANS, known as Mademoiselle, Duchess De, was the daughter of Gaston, duke of Orleans, brother of Louis XIII. and of Marie de Bourbon. She is distinguished part in the wars of the Fronde, and is author of 'Mémoires' and some romances, 1627-1693.

DE MONTPENSIER, ANTHONY PHILIP D'ORLÉANS, Duc De, younger brother of Louis Philippe, and officer under Dumouriez, 1775-1807.

DE MONTPENSIER, CATHERINE MARIA OF ORLÉANS, Duchesse De, daughter of the duke of Orleans and wife of the second Louis, duc de Montpensier, noted for her hatred against Henry III., during the wars of the league, 1552-1596.

DE MONTPENSIER, CHARLES. See BOURBON.

DE MONTPENSIER, FRANCIS DE BOURBON, prince, known as the prince dauphin, distinguished in the religious wars, and one of the first to acknowledge Henry IV., 1539-1592.

DE MONTROSE, JAMES GRAHAM, marquis of, b. 1712, was in early life attached to the covenanted, afterwards entered the service of Charles I., from whom he gained several advantages. After the death of Charles I. he retired to France, and then to Germany, and took part in the last campaign of the seven years' war. He next made a campaign on Scotland in favour of Charles II., but, abandoned by his troops, he was delivered to the king, and executed at Edinburgh 1650.

MOTUCCI, A., an It. philologist, 1762-1829.

MOTUCLA, J. S., a Fr. mathem., 1725-99.

MOUVEL, J. M. BOUTET DE, a French dramatist and actor, 1745-1811.

MOUR, KAREL DE, a Dutch paint., 1656-1738.

MORCROFT, WILLIAM, a writer of travels to the Himalayan parts of Hindostan, died 1823.

MORE, EDWARD, son of a nonconformist minister of Abingdon, distinguished as a poet and miscellaneous writer, 1712-1757.

MORE, F., an African traveller, last century.

MOORE, JOHN, an eminent prelate and promoter of letters in the reign of William and Mary, born 1662, died bishop of Ely, 1714.

MOORE, JOHN, archbishop of Canterbury, was b. in Gloucestershire, where his father was a grazier, 1733; promoted to the primacy 1783; d. 1805.

MOORE, JOHN, a physician and miscellaneous writer, was born at Stirling 1729, where his father, the Rev. Charles Moore, was minister of the Episcopal church. In 1772, he set out on his travels as the medical attendant and tutor of the young duke of Hamilton, returning home in 1778. The observations made in the course of their extended tour over Europe, furnished the materials of his most interesting works. Died 1802.

MOORE. SIR JOHN MOORE was born at Glasgow in 1761. He was the son of Dr. John Moore, the well-known physician and author. He entered the army young, and soon rose to rank and distinction. He served in Corsica in 1785, and afterwards in the West Indies, in Holland, and Egypt. In 1802 he did permanent benefit to our army by disciplining several regiments as light infantry in a camp of instruction in Kent. He then introduced several tactical improvements, which have since been generally adopted in our service. After taking part in two expeditions to Sicily and Sweden, Moore received his most important command in 1808. He was then placed at the head of the British army, which was to co-operate with the patriots in Spain and Portugal, against the French invaders of the Peninsula. Moore advanced through the north of Spain to Salamanca; but the Spanish armies with which he was to co-operate were routed by the French; Madrid, which he was to protect, surrendered while Moore was on his march; the reports and promises of the Spanish juntas and their agents proved to be mere bombast and lies; and Moore found that the whole of the vast French armies of the Peninsula were gathering round him to overwhelm the small force that he commanded. A rapid retreat to the northern coast of Spain was the only chance of saving the English troops from destruction or surrender. This retreat was made in the midst of the severe winter of 1808-9, through the rugged country of Galicia; and it is almost unparalleled in military history for the sufferings of the retreating army. Moore at last reached Corunna, closely pursued by superior forces under Soult. Transports lay in the harbour to receive the British troops; but Soult pressed hastily forward, so that it was impossible to effect the embarkation without either checking the enemy by a battle, or entering into a convention. Moore indignantly spurned the dishonouring proposal of a convention, and on the 16th January, 1809, drew his men out, though exhausted and shattered by the horrors of their retreat, to face the advancing French before Corunna. The troops did their duty, and repulsed Soult's columns on every point with severe loss; but the victory was dearly purchased by the death of General Moore, who was struck down by a cannon shot, just as he had called on the 42d Highlanders to 'Remember Egypt,' and reminded them that 'though powder was short they had their bayonets.' Moore's wound was mortal: but he survived long enough to know that the enemy were beaten, and to remind his surviving friends that 'he had always wished to die in that way.' His last words were a hope that 'the people of England would be satisfied, that his country would do him justice.' He was buried that very night, 'with his martial cloak around him,' in a grave hastily dug on the ramparts of Corunna. The glorious stanzas of Wolfe have ennobled that burial; but it ought to be mentioned to the honour of the French as well as of the English general, that Soult, when he entered Corunna after the embarkation and departure of the British, ordered a fitting monument to be erected to Sir John Moore. Moore's only fault was an excessive sensibility to popular opinion, which impaired that political courage, which (as Nelson has truly said) is essential to a great commander. But a braver soldier, a more humane and excellent man, never stepped on a battle-field, than he who died the death of fame in command of the British army at Corunna. [E.S.C.]

[Tomb of Sir John Moore.]

MOORE, SIR JONAS, a mathematic. 1617-1681. MOORE, PHILIP, a minister resident in the Isle of Man, known as a Manx scholar, died 1783. MOORE, THOMAS, was born in 1780, in Dublin, where his father carried on business with no great success as a wine merchant. He showed from boyhood an imaginative and musical turn; and various circumstances concurred in impressing him early with that indignant and melancholy sense of the wrongs and sufferings of Ireland, to which his poetry owes so many of its most powerful touches. His family professed the Roman Catholic creed, as he himself always continued to do; and among his father's friends were several of the United Irishmen, with others who were ardently bent on extorting redress from the government. The political disturbances broke out into rebellion while Moore was a student at Trinity College; he wrote anonymously for a seditious newspaper, and was only saved from implicating himself deeply by faithfully keeping a promise which his mother prevailed on him to give.—He took his degree in 1798, and went to London to keep his terms for the bar. Poetry, however, had taken possession of his mind; and the amatory cast which always prevailed in his poems, was allowed in some of the earliest of them to degenerate into reprehensible looseness. His gay translation of Anacreon published in 1800, was followed by the not less successful 'Poems of Thomas Little,' and the just success with which these and another miscellaneous volume of his were treated in the Edinburgh Review induced the abortive duel between Moore and Jeffrey. At this period the poet's means were very slender, and his prospects discouragingly uncertain; his rising reputation as a song-writer, his literary accomplishments, and his pleasing manners, retarded his introduction into aristocratic society. In 1804, having obtained a registrarship in Berks through the patronage of Lord Moira, he went to discharge the duties of the office. It proved to be much less lucrative than he had expected, and in a very few months he returned home, allowed to leave a deputy, whose defalcation plunged Moore into embarrassments from which he was long in being able to extricate himself. He refused all aid from his friends, Jeffrey, now connected with him, offering generous help. In the end, the claims being favourably adjusted, he obtained the whole sum from his literary earnings, which he continued to contribute liberally to the comfort of his parents.—From the time of his return to England his course of life was very uneventful; he was thenceforth wholly the man of letters, supporting himself by his pen, and courted in society especially that of the higher Whig circles of London. In 1811 he married Miss Dyke, who had been for a short time on the Dublin stage, an able, attractive, and domestic lady. Soon afterwards he took up his residence in a cottage at Ashbourne in Derbyshire, whence he removed to Sloperton, near Devizes. There he continued live ever afterwards, visiting London however frequently, and making other excursions, and obliged soon after his removal to the place to refuge on the continent from his Bermudian creditors. In 1835 he received from Lord Melbourne a pension of three hundred pounds, and in 1850, when his health was completely broken and all his four children were dead, Mrs. Moore obtained a pension of a hundred pounds. He died in the beginning of 1852.—Moore's writings are divided into three groups: the serious poems; the satiric rhymes; and the biographies and works in prose. In the first of these classes are the compositions that support his fame as h Melodies' (the series of which began in 1810) and other lyrics. Many of these are exquisite for force of diction, for beauty, not without sameness, of imagery, and for a refined and ideal kind of ethos. They are poems for the drawing-room, as admirable as such. In 'Lalla Rookh,' published in 1817, the poet tried a more ambitious fit; and, while there is here very great skill and care of execution, with a marvellous richness of fancy, and singular correctness of costume, it cannot be said that he has vindicated his claim to be ranked, with Scott or Byron, among the great painters of romantic narrative. The second group of Moore's works, perhaps, shows his genius in a more brilliant light than any of the others. Unusually severe in his attacks on those public persons who were obnoxious to the Whig party, he made satire as gaily witty, and as irresistibly amusing, as it ever can be. His chief political writings, besides many fugitive contributions to newspapers, were 'The Twopenny Post Bag,' 'The Crib's Memorial to Congress,' and the 'Fables for the Holy Alliance.' A lighter vein was opened in 'The Fudge Family in Paris.' Moore's prose works were really tasks performed for the sake of the gain they brought; and the best of them can only be asserted to be performed with good taste and care. If any of them was a labor of love it was the gorgeous romance of 'The Hesperian,' which appeared in 1827. The only ones that require to be named are the 'Life of Sheridan,' (1825); and the 'Notices of the Life of Lord Byron,' (1830). [W.S.]

[Moore's Cottage at Sloperton.]

MORSON, SIR R., a naval officer, 1760-1835.
MORALES, A., a Span. historian, 1513-1590.
MORALES, C., a Spanish singer, 16th century.
MORALES, J. B., a Spanish missionary, 1501-1664.

MORALES, L., a Spanish painter, 1509-1586.
MORAND, JOHN, a French surgeon, 1658-1726.
SAMUEL FRANCOIS, his son, greatly distinguished as a surgical writer, 1697-1773. JOHN FRANCIS MORANT, son of the latter, an anatomist and physiologist, 1726-1784.

MORAND, J. A., a Fr. architect, 1727-1794.
MORAND, LOUIS CHARLES ANT. ALEXIS, son of the latter, a French general, disting. at the period of the revolution and the empire, 1770-1835.

MORAND, P. DE, a Fr. dramatist, 1701-1737.
MORANDE, C. THEVENOT DE, a French journalist, author of 'Memoirs of Madame du Barry,' and 'Anecdotes of the Court of France,' 1748-92.

MORANT, PHILIP, the historian of Colchester and Essex, born in Jersey, 1700, died 1770.

MORATA, OLYMPIA FULVIA, an Italian lady of illustrious principles, distinguished as the most remarkable woman of her age, 1526-1555.

MORATIN, NICHOLAS FERNANDEZ DE, a celebrated dramatic author of Spain, 1737-1780.

MORAN, LEANDRO FERNANDEZ, appointed royal historiographer under Joseph Buonaparte, and considered as the superior as a dramatic poet, was born in 1760 and was a great student of Shakspeare and Moliere, but especially the latter, d. at Paris 1828.

MORATO, FLAVIO PELLEGRINO, an Italian poet, father of Olympia Morata, died 1547.

MORCELLI, S. ANTONIO, an Italian Jesuit philosopher and theologian, born 1737.

MORDAUNT, CHARLES, earl of Peterborough and Monmouth, a naval and military commander, time of William and Mary, 1658-1735.

MORE, ALEXANDER, a French protestant minister, appointed professor of divinity, and pastor of the church at Middleberg in Zealand, author of theological works, 1616-1670.

MORE, ANTONIO, a Dutch painter, 1519-1575.

MORE, FRANCIS, a famous lawyer, 1558-1621.

MORE, HANNAH, the greatest name in the list of female writers on moral and religious subjects in the last century, was born at Stapleton, Gloucestershire, in 1744. Her father, who had taken orders in the Church of England, was master of a foundation school, in that town, and gave his four daughters a liberal education. They were all highly accomplished, but Hannah was distinguished above the rest of her sisters, both by her natural talents and her extraordinary thirst for knowledge. The Misses More, resolved on rendering themselves independent, opened a boarding school for young ladies in the village, and soon after, on the advice of friends, transferred their seminary to Bristol. In that town, they met with signal success. Their school grew in reputation, and every year added to its numbers, till it outstripped all other institutions of a similar kind, in the south and west of England. Hannah had early tried her powers in original composition, and at the age of seventeen, wrote her pastoral drama 'The Search after Happiness.' Having obtained the friendship of Garrick, she prepared several pieces for the stage, 'The Fatal Falsehood,' 'Percy,' 'The Inflexible Captive.' On attaining higher views of the character and duties of a Christian, she relinquished all thoughts of writing for the stage. But although she renounced the theatre, she still retained her respect and friendship for Garrick, with whom, as literary friends, she conjoined Johnson, Burke, Reynolds, and their learned associates. The death of Garrick produced a great change on her character. Reading and reflection made her a Christian; and she thenceforth dedicated her time and energies to works of piety and benevolence. She fixed her house at Cowslip Green, a beautiful residence in the neighbourhood of Bristol, and there devoted her time to literary pursuits. Having projected a series of didactic works, she published, in 1786, a little volume entitled, 'Thoughts on the Manners of the Great,' 'An Estimate of the Religion of the Fashionable World.' To counteract the principles of the French Revolution, she published 'Village Politics,' by Will Chip; and, next, a periodical work, 'The Cheap Repository Tracts,' including 'The Shepherd of Salisbury Plain.' Resuming her didactic series, she published 'Strictures on the Modern System of Female Education,' which obtained the high approval of Bishop Porteus, who recommended the writer for the office of governess to the Princess Charlotte. This was followed in rapid succession by 'Hints towards Forming the Character of a Young Princess,' 'Cœlebs in Search of a Wife,' and 'Practical Piety,' 'An Essay on the Character and Writings of St. Paul,' 'Christian Morals,' and 'The Spirit of Prayer.' By her various writings she amassed upwards of £30,000. Her sisters and she now relinquished public teaching, and devoted all their energies to the erection of schools, where there were no resident clergymen, and in which no less than twelve hundred children received, through their instrumentality, the benefits of a moral and religious education. In short, they produced, by their benevolent and Christian labours, so great a change on the aspect of society, that what had been a moral desert had produced in rich abundance, the excellent fruits of wide-spread intelligence, of elevated morality, and religious excellence. Miss More died in Sept., 1833. [R.J.]

[Hannah More's Cottage.]

MORE, HENRY, a dissenting minister, d. 1802.

MORE, HENRY, one of that profoundly learned and influential class of philosophical divines who arose in the 17th century to exorcise the spirit of Calvinism from the English universities. Born in 1614, and educated at Cambridge, he took his degree of B.A. in 1635, when he had already run through the scholastic philosophy, and rejected it with disgust for the warmer light and richer fancies of Platonism. The 'Germany Theology' of Taulerus soon after rivetted his attention as the summit of the mystic divinity which he had pursued through the writings of the Platonists and the school of Mercurius Trismegistus. In the works of Tauler the mystic divinity was Christianized, and written from a certain depth of experience, and from the age of Luther to the close of the 17th century, he exercised a vast influence upon the class of minds that revolted from the dogmatism of Geneva. In this class Henry More holds a distinguished place with Cudworth, Glanville, Whichcote, and others of less note, and while he is on a level with the best of them as a prose writer and philosopher, he has the merit of being their representative among the poets. In 1640, after being admitted M.A., he published his 'Psychozoia,' or first part of the 'Song of the Soul,' containing 'A Christiano-Platonical Display of Life,' in passages which may be pronounced rich and beautiful in their very obscurity. His most popular work, however, is the 'Divine Dialogues,' and while the erudition and beauty of such productions are admitted, it is curious to read the exception taken by biographers against the author's consciousness of their origin, in thoughts, full of spiritual wonder, communicated to his spirit. Henry More refused the highest ecclesiastical preferments, and chose a life of learned retirement and undisturbed contemplation, chiefly passed at the seat of Lord Conway. He died universally beloved 1687. His works were published in 3 vols. folio, 1679. [E.R.]

MORE, SIR THOMAS, was born in Milk-London, in the year 1480. His father, Sir was one of the justices of the king's bench was, according to the practice of the day, pl
the household of Morton, the cardinal arch of Canterbury, where the boy obtained a pre reputation for ready wit and subtlety of m which excited high expectations of future em
After having studied at Oxford, he ente chancery practice at the New Inn, then of the other inns of court, but now almost ten. He entered parliament when he was twenty-second year, and immediately ma himself a place in history by standing forth privileges of the House of Commons to t questions of supply as their own exclusive bu
—Through his influence the aid deman Henry VII. for the marriage of his daughter king of Scots was refused. It was not to pected that after a victory of this kind, More rise in the court of Henry VII. He lived fo time in retirement under the shadow of th displeasure, and it was then that without ab neglecting professional advancement he en his mind with the treasures of learning, whic him so illustrious among the statesmen of l
A great portion of his studies lay in divini he delivered lectures on St. Augustine's tr on the City of God. On the accession of VIII. he was soon put on the path of pro
In 1521 he was knighted and made treas
the exchequer. He appears to have ere th considerably enriched himself by practice, an his wife, a daughter of Mr. Colt of New Essex, he kept up a noble hospitality.
VIII., who knew and appreciated genius, he as little permitted it as he did feminine and worth to stand in the way of his fe passions, used to be a frequent guest at table, where he enjoyed the intellectual According to the account of Erasmus the there collected must have been one of th brilliant and engaging that the world ha seen, and it was adorned by virtues, whic associations, high in intellect, have ofte wanting. In 1523 he became speaker of th of Commons, and in 1529 succeeded Wolsey perilous eminence of the woollack. He had meantime published, among other works, rious history of Richard III., and his which, derived from the Greek for happy la become the source of a proverbial expressio language. That he meant this imaginary r seriously to embody his notions of a sound of government can scarcely be believed by a who reads it, and remembers that the e fanciful and abstract existence there de was the dream of one who thoroughly man in all his complicated relations, a deeply conversant in practical govern
When Henry began those attacks on the supremacy, which, however sad his motive be, were instrumental in procuring the re tion, More at once took up the position wh conscience dictated to him as a supporter old system. Henry marked him out for ven as an opponent of his matrimonial views.
endeavoured to shield himself by an early ment from office. He was requested to ta to maintain the lawfulness of the marriage Anne Boleyn. Though it was known that he would be the last man to disturb the succession, he refused to take the oath. This refusal was interpreted into high treason, under the statute. He was condemned to death, and beheaded on the 19th July, 1535. [J.H.B.]

PREAU, H., a French poet, 1810-1838.

PREAU, JACOB NICHOLAS, a French historian, appointed librarian to the queen, and historian of the royal, author of 'Memoirs' towards the end of our own times, 'The Duties of a Prince,' 'Principles of Morality and Polity, and of Public Law,' (written for the use of the dauphin, after Louis XVI.), and of a political journal written in France, 1717-1803.

PREAU, JEAN, a French historian, 16th cent. PREAU, J. L., a physician, better known as 'le Docteur de la Sarthe,' author of a work entitled 'Histoire Naturelle de la Femme,' 1771-1826.

PREAU, J. M., an emi. designer, 1741-1814.

PREAU, JEAN VICTOR MOREAU, was born in France, in 1763. He was educated for the law, but he enlisted when he was seventeen years old, and thenceforth devoted himself to a military career. He was rapidly promoted during the first years of the wars of the French revolution, and in 1796 he was commander of one of the two armies that invaded Germany. The other army, which was under General Jourdain, was completely defeated by the Austrians, who then turned their whole force to bear upon Moreau. In an emergency Moreau extricated himself by a march through the Black Forest, which is considered a masterpiece of military skill. Napoleon, in 1805, gave Moreau the command of the armies of the Rhine and the Rhine; and in the winter of 1806 Moreau gained the great victory of Hohenlinden, the most splendid of his achievements. He was afterwards suspected of plotting against Napoleon's government, and was banished to America. He lived in retirement in America until 1813, when he returned to Europe and joined the armies of the allied sovereigns against Napoleon. He was killed at the battle of Dresden in that year. [E.S.C.]

PREAU, R., a French physician, 1587-1656.

PREAU-SAINT-MERY, M. L. E., a deputy to the constituent assembly, and known as a writer of the French colonies of America, 1750-1819.

PREELSE, N., a Dutch painter, 1571-1638.

PREL, A., a Swiss antiquarian, 1646-1703.

PREL, J. A., a Fr. wr. on music, 1775-1825.

PREL, R., a Fr. devotional writer, 1653-1731.

PRELL, THOMAS, a classical scholar and doctor of divinity, famous for his editions of Ainsworth and Hederick's lexicons, 1703-1784.

PRELLET, A., a French critic, 1727-1819.

PRELLI, J., an Italian critic, 1745-1819.

PRELOS, J. M., a priest and general in the French war of independence, shot 1815.

PRERI, LOUIS, a French ecclesiastic, distinguished as the first compiler of the great 'Historical Dictionary' which bears his name, 1643-80.

PRESES, EDW. ROWE, author of the 'History and Antiquities of Tunstall, in Kent,' was b. there, and being rector of the parish, 1730. He was the originator of the Equitable Society for Assisting the Poor to Live, and a wr. on that subject, d. 1778.

MORET, J., a French historian, 1615-1705.

MORETO-Y-CABANA, DON AUGUSTIN, a Span. dramatist of the reign of Philip IV., 17th ct.

MORGAGNI, JOHN BAPTIST, M.D., F.R.S., an eminent Italian anatomist and physician, was born at Forlì in Italy, 1682; and died at Padua 1771. Morgagni was a rather voluminous writer, but the work by which he is best known is that entitled 'De Sedibus et Causis Morborum per Anatome indagatis.' [J.M.C.]

MORGAN, G. C., an exp. philosopher, d. 1798.

MORGAN, SIR HENRY, a famous buccaneer, appointed governor of Jamaica, by Charles II.

MORGAN, W., a Welch prelate, died 1604.

MORGAN, W., a famous mathematician, and writer on annuities and assurances, died 1833.

MORGHEN, RAPHAEL, a celebrated Neapolitan engraver, 1758-1833.

MORHOF, D. G., a German writer, 1639-1691.

MORICE, SIR WILLIAM, a relative of General Monk, raised by his influence to the office of secretary of state, author of a treatise on the Communion, died 1676.

MORICE DE BEAUBOIS, DON P. HYACINTH, an ecclesiastic and antiquary of Brittany, editor of Lobineau's History, &c., 1693-1750.

MORIER, JAMES, an English writer of Eastern travels, and novelist, 1780-1848.

MORILLO, G., a Spanish poet, 16th century.

MORILLO, P., a Spanish general, 1777-1837.

MORIN, B., a French lexicographer, 1746-1817.

MORIN, J., a French mathematician, 1705-64.

MORIN, J., a French Orientalist, 1591-1659.

MORIN, JOHN BAPTIST, a French physician and professor of mathematics, best known as an astrologer and adviser of Richelieu, 1583-1656.

MORIN, LOUIS, a famous botanist, 1635-1715.

MORIN, P., a French critic, 1531-1608.

MORIN, S., a Fr. visionary, burnt alive 1663.

MORIN, STEPHEN, a French protestant, professor of Oriental languages at Amsterdam, and a philological writer, 1625-1700.

MORISON, J., a Scottish writer, 1762-1809.

MORISON, ROBERT a native of Aberdeen, famous for his skill and writings in botany, appointed prof. at Oxford by Charles II., 1620-1683.

MORISOT, C. B., a French writer, 1592-1661.

MORISOT, J. M. R., a Fr. architect, 1767-1821.

MORITZ, C. P., a German writer, 1757-1793.

MORLA, TH., a Spanish general, died 1820.

MORLAND, GEORGE, an English painter, famous for his landscape and interiors, embodying scenes in humble life, was born in London 1764, and was at his meridian about 1790. He became the victim of his low tastes and drunken habits, and died under arrest for debt in 1804. His history is one of the most melancholy in the long list of those who have wasted their talents, and mis-spent their time. His genius, his moral character, and the circumstances under which he produced his works—many of them to discharge an ale score—entitle him to be regarded as the Sheridan of artists. His talent was most surprising in the delineation of pigs, introduced into his rustic scenes—these animals being his favourite subjects.

MORLAND, HENRY ROBERT, a portrait painter, son of a London artist, and father of the preceding George Morland, died 1797.

MORLAND, SIR SAMUEL, a diplomatist in the service of Cromwell, afterwards an adherent of Charles II., distinguished for his mechanical inventions, among which are mentioned the speaking trumpet, an arithmetical machine, the fire engine, the steam engine, improved pumps, &c., d. 1695.

MORLEY, GEORGE, an adherent of Charles II., appointed by him bp. of Winchester, 1597-1684.

MORLEY, THOMAS, a pupil of the celebrated Byrde, and one of the gentlemen of Queen Elizabeth's chapel, acquired much fame for his work, entitled 'A Plaine and Easie Introduction to Practical Musicke.' He composed many songs, ballads, canzonets, and madrigals. A burial service of his composition still continues to be performed on solemn occasions in Westminster Abbey. It is supposed that he died about the year 1604. [J.M.]

MORLIN, J., a German divine, 1514-1571.

MORNAY, PHILIP DE, Sieur du Plessis-Marly, an illustrious leader of the French protestants, and for more than thirty years in the service of Henry IV., who was greatly indebted to him for the success of his arms and negotiations. Born 1549, died some years after retiring from the court, during which he distinguished himself as a writer in the interest of protestantism, 1623.

MORNINGTON, GARRETT WELLESLEY, earl of, father of the duke of Wellington, acquired considerable celebrity for his musical compositions. He showed an early liking for music, and became, for an amateur, a very tolerable violinist. 'Here in Cool Grot,' is the most admired of his vocal works. The university of Dublin conferred upon him their degree of Doctor in Music. He was born in Meath about the year 1720, and died in 1781. [J.M.]

MORO, or MOORE, ANTONY, a Dutch painter, favourite of Charles V. and Philip II., 1512-1568.

MORO, CHRISTOPHER, a Venet. doge, 1462-71.

MOROSI, J., an Ital. mechanician, 1772-1840.

MOROSINI, the name of several famous Venetians.—1. DOMINICHINO, doge from 1148 to 1156. 2. MICHAEL, succeeded as doge, and died the same year, 1382. 3. PAUL, ambassador to the emperor, and to the kings of Poland, Bohemia, and Naples, 1406-1483. 4. ANDREA, a senator and historian of the republic, 1558-1618. 5. FRANCESCO, born 1618, distinguished in the wars with the Turks as generalissimo of the Venetian troops, afterwards procurator of St. Mark, and successor of Giustinian as doge 1688, died 1694.

MORRELL, B., an Amer. navigator, 1795-1839.

MORRIS, C., an Eng. song-writer, 1739-1832.

MORRIS, L., a Welch antiquary, 1702-1765.

MORRISON, ROBERT, the famous Chinese scholar and missionary, was born of humble parents at Morpeth, in Northumberland, 1782, and was sent to Canton by the London Missionary Society in 1807. From this period to 1824 he was resident in China, and translated into that language the four Gospels, and the greater part of the Epistles. He wrote also numerous important works to facilitate the study of the Chinese tongue, the principal of which is his Dictionary, printed by the East India Company at a cost of £15,000. In 1824 Dr. Morrison visited England. In 1826 he returned to Canton, and died there 1834.

MORSE, J., an American geographer, d. 1826.

MORSER, A., a Swiss mechanician, 1771-1840.

MORTIER. EDMUND ADOLPHE CASIMIR

JOSEPH MORTIER, marshal of France & of Treviso, was born at Chateau-Camille 1768. He joined a regiment of volunteer beginning of the revolutionary war, and under Kleber, Marceau, Pichegru, and Moreau the early campaigns of that contest. He had reached the rank of general of division when he commanded the right wing of Massena's army at the battle of Zurich. Napoleon made him one of his marshals in 1804; and he was highly distinguished in the campaigns of the next year against the Austrians and Russians. In 1806 he was in possession of Hanover and Hamburg, and with singular moderation to the inhabitants he signaled himself at the battle of Friedland in 1807; and was then employed by the emperor in Spain, where he won the battle of Ocana. He served in Russia, and took an active part in the military operations of that year, and in 1813 and 1814. In conjunction with Marmont, Mortier defended Paris against the allies, and fought the final battle of Montmartre, which he was obliged to capitulate. Marshal Mortier was characterized by integrity, and his administrative ability caused him to be much trusted and obeyed by the Bourbons after their restoration. Philippe placed equal confidence in him; and he was riding by his side at a review of the Imperial Guard of Paris, 28th July, 1835, when the machine, which Fieschi had prepared against him, exploded, and killed among many others the veteran marshal.

MORTIMER, JOHN, an English geographer, known as a writer on husbandry, died 1741. MORTIMER, THOMAS, vice-consul in the Austrian Netherlands, known as a writer on commercial and miscellaneous subjects, 1730-1809.

MORTIMER, J. H., an English artist, 1730-1809.

MORTIMER, ROGER, earl of, the 1st Duke of Queen Isabella, b. in Wales 1287, executed 1336.

MORTON, C., a learned antiquarian, 1730-1809.

MORTON, JAMES, earl of. See DORSET.

MORTON, JOHN, archbishop of Canterbury and cardinal, distinguished as a statesman and partizan of the house of Lancaster, was born 1410. He rose in dignity through several reigns, from that of Henry VI. to Henry VII., having escaped the hands of Richard, between this interval, and fled to the continent, where he joined the earl of Richmond. Died 1500.

MORTON, R., a medical writer, died 1741.

MORTON, THOMAS, a learned prelate, belonged to the same family as the fam. Card. Morton, 15th cent.

MORTON, THOMAS, a drama. wr., 17th cent.

MORUS, S. F. N., a German theologian, 15th cent.

MORVAN, a king of Brittany, 8th cent.

MORVEAU. See GUYTON DE MORVILLE.

MORVILLE, CH. JOHN BAPT. FL. Count De, a Fr. ambass. and minister, 18th cent.

MOSCATI, P., a French politician, 17th cent.

MOSCHENI, M. C., an It. poetess, 17th cent.

MOSCHUS, a Greek poet, about 200 B.C.

MOSCHUS, D., a Gk. poet and refugee, 17th cent.

MOSCHUS, J., a Greek monk, au. of the 12th cent.

of the Saints he had known in his travels.

MOSELEY, BENJAMIN, an English physician, experienced in the West Indies, author of a professional work on Dysentery, and of two on Coffee and Sugar, died 1819.

MOSER, G. M., a Swiss artist, 1705-1783.
 MOSER, JOHN JAMES, a German writer on public law, author of a great number of important works, 1701-1785. His son, FREDERIC CHARLES, statesman and writer, 1731-1798.
 MOSER, W. G., a writer on forests, 1729-1793.
 MOSES, the leader and legislator of the Hebrews on their departure from Egypt, supposed to be 1225-1605 B.C.
 MOSES ALSCHECH, a Syrian rabbin, 16th c.
 MOSES BEN-NOCHMANN, a Spanish rabbi, author of 'Wars of the Lord,' &c., 1194-1300.
 MOSES, C., an Armenian prelate, 5th century.
 MOSHEIM, JOHN LAURENCE VON, was born in a noted family at Lubec, 9th October, 1694. He was educated at the university of Kiel, where, though a very young man, he became professor of philosophy. He was especially distinguished as a teacher. He framed his discourses on the best French and English models, and published some volumes of sermons. Such was his popularity, that the king of Denmark invited him to a chair at the university of Copenhagen. In 1725 he was invited by the duke of Brunswick to the professorship of theology at Helmstadt, a sphere which he richly occupied for twenty-two years. In 1747 he was appointed by George II. of Britain to the unity chair, and to the chancellorship of the university of Göttingen. In this responsible position he remained eight years, when he died, 9th September, 1755. The works of Mosheim are extensive, consisting of numerous translations, discourses, sermons, and letters. He is chiefly known to us as a church historian, by his 'Commentaries,' and by his 'Institutes,' both written in Latin. The Institutes, which are a brief and compound, have been translated into German by von Einem and Schlegel, and into English in 1764, by MacLaine, minister at the Hague, and recently by Dr. Murdoch of America, a third edition of whose admirable translation appeared in 1841. The last translation is incomparably the best, and must remove some prejudices against Mosheim which MacLaine's dry and unfaithful translation may have originated. Mosheim's Latin is too succinct to be either classical or elegant. His endeavour in recording the history of the struggles of various religious parties was to preserve a dignified neutrality, which has been abused to such an extent, that to many it has appeared to wear the aspect of complete indifference. Such a view, however, would be very unjust, for those who read his sermons, and other discourses, will discover in them a decided, intelligent, and ardent piety. [J.E.]
 MOSNERON, J., a French writer, 1738-1830.
 MOSS, ROBERT, chaplain to William III., and father in the Bangorian controversy, 1666-1729.
 MOSEWICH, CHARLES, successively bishop of St. Asaph's and of Bath and Wells, d. 1802. CHARLES, the latter, bishop of Oxford, died 1811.
 MOSSOM, ROBERT, an Irish prelate, d. 1679.
 MOSSOP, HENRY, an Irish actor, 1729-1773.
 MOSTAERT, JOHN, a D. painter, 1499-1555.
 MOSTOWSKI, COUNT THADDEUS, one of the most courageous defenders of the independence of Poland, 1766-1842.
 MOTHE-LE-VAYER. See LAMOTHE.
 MOTTERBY, G., an Eng. physician, 1731-93.

MOTHERWELL, W., a Scotch poet, 1798-1835.
 MOTTE. See LA-MOTTE.
 MOTTEUX, P. A., a French poet, 1660-1717.
 MOTTEVILLE, FRANÇOISE BERTAUD, Dame De, the favourite and biographer of Anne of Austria, time of Richelieu, 1621-1689.
 MOTTLEY, JOHN, son of Colonel Mottley, an adherent of James II., known as the biographer of Peter the Great and Catharine of Russia, and the alleged author of 'Joe Miller's Jest,' 1692-1750.
 MOTTRAYE, A. DE LA, a French traveller and historical critic, 1674-1743.
 MOUCHON, PETER, a Genevese ecclesiastic, and friend of Rousseau, author of a 'Table Analytique et Raisonnée de l'Encyclopédie,' 1733-1797.
 MOUFET, or MUFFET, THOMAS, a physician of London, distinguished as a professional writer and naturalist, died about 1604.
 MOUGIN, P. A., a Fr. astronomer, 1735-1816.
 MOULIN. See DUMOULIN.
 MOULIN, J. F. A., a Fr. general, 1752-1810.
 MOUNIER, JOHN JOSEPH, a political writer and orator, distinguished in the estates-general of France, 1758-1806. His son, CL. PHILIPPE, a statesman, 1784-1843.
 MOUNTAGUE, or MONTAGUE, RICHARD, a learned prelate, distinguished for his knowledge of ecclesiastical antiquities, and known to history as the personal friend and associate in principle of Archbishop Laud, 1578-1641.
 MOUNTFORT, WILLIAM, a dramatic writer and actor, assassinated by his rival in love, Capt. Hill, after marrying Mrs. Bracegirdle, 1659-1692.
 MOURAD-BEY, chief of the Mamelukes, and companion-in-arms of Ibrahim Bey, was born in Circassia 1750. On the invasion of Egypt by Buonaparte, he won the admiration of the French by his gallant resistance, but was forced to submit to Kléber, who left him the government of Upper Egypt, under the French protectorate. Died 1801.
 MOURADGEA - D'OHOSSON, IGNACIUS, a Swedish historian of Armenian descent, born at Constantinople 1740. While residing in the East as Swedish minister, he collected the materials of his 'General View of the Ottoman Empire,' published 1787-1790. Died 1807.
 MOURAVIEF, M. NIKITISCH, a Russian poet, philosopher, and historian, tutor in the family of Catherine II., 1757-1807.
 MOURET, J. J., a Fr. composer, 1682-1738.
 MOURGUES, MICHAEL, a French Jesuit and mathematician, author of 'Traité de la Poésie Française,' &c., 1642-1713.
 MOUSKES, PHILIP, a Fr. historian, d. 1282.
 MOUTON, G., a French astronomer, 1618-94.
 MOUTON, J. B., SYLVAIN, a Fr. Jesuit, one of the last refugees living in Holland, 1740-1803.
 MOXON, JOSEPH, a map maker and writer on navigation, mathemat., astrono., &c., 1627-1700.
 MOYLE, WALTER, a classical scholar, member of parlia., and wr. on politi. economy, 1672-1721.
 MOYSART, F., a French writer, 1735-1813.
 MOYSES, DAVID, page to King James, and author of a diary, published as 'Memoirs' of Scottish History, 1573-1630.
 MOZART, JOHANN CHRYSOSTOMUS WOLFGANG GOTTLIEB, born in Salzburg, on the 25th of January, 1756, was the son of Leopold Mozart, a bookbinder of Augsburg, who studied music at Salzburg, and was in 1762 admitted as one of the musicians of the prince-archbishop of that town. The young Mozart, born amidst music, soon evinced a most remarkable musical precocity. At three years old he first began to show signs of that astonishing ability which afterwards made him one of the greatest amongst many great musicians. At four years old, almost without a lesson, he was able to play upon the harpsichord several minuets and other pieces of music. At five he made his first essays as a composer. In all the other studies proper to his age, as letters and arithmetic, he showed a marvellous aptitude, and very rapidly became a proficient in his juvenile tasks. Music, however, was always his favourite study, and his principal amusement. At six years of age, Mozart's father removed with all his family to Munich, where he, with his sister Mary-Anne, had the honour of performing before the elector, who received the infant artists with the most marked condescension. About this time he began privately to study the violin, and before his father, or any one else, was aware of his proficiency upon this instrument, he was able to acquit himself like a master in the second part of some most difficult concertos. Amid all the wonder and admiration which his great talents caused, Mozart never ceased to be a simple, good-natured, and unassuming child, and his instant obedience to the slightest request of his parents was one of his distinguishing traits. In 1763, when only seven years old, his family left Germany, and after having visited and performed in the principal cities of his fatherland, he in November arrived in Paris, and was introduced to play upon the organ at Versailles in presence of the whole court. Here he published his two first compositions, and the wonderful powers of Mozart created quite an excitement amongst all classes of people. In 1764 he came to England, where he received the most unbounded applause, both from the court and the nobility before whom he performed. During his residence in England, he composed and printed six sonatas, which were by request dedicated to the Queen. He returned to France in 1765, and from thence went to Holland, and at the Hague, when not more than eight years old, composed a symphony for a full orchestra, on occasion of the installation of the prince of Orange. They then returned to Paris, where they resided for two months, and where the young artist and his gifted sister were feted and caressed by all manner of people. They then turned their course toward Germany, and from this time forward Mozart devoted himself with increased ardour to the study of his art. In 1768 the two children performed before the emperor Joseph II. at Vienna, who ordered young Wolfgang to compose music to the opera buffo, La Finta Semplice, which, though never performed, was approved of by all the masters and cognoscenti of the period. In 1769 young Mozart was nominated concert master to the archbishop of Salzburg. In the same year he went to Italy, where he was most rapturously welcomed. His first performance in Italy was given at Milan, where he was engaged to return and compose the first opera for the carnival of 1771. At Bologna and Florence the reception he met with was equally flattering to the young musician. At the latter city he made the acquaintance of Thomas Linley, who, about his age, then a pupil under Martini, the celebrated violinist, arrived at Rome in Passion Week, and on Wednesday went to the Sistine chapel, where he heard for the first time the celebrated Miserere, which was prohibited to be copied, or in any manner published, on pain of excommunication. On Good Friday the same Miserere was again performed, when Mozart was present with the copy he had made from memory concealed about him, that he might have an opportunity of making corrections. This circumstance created an immense excitement at Rome, because the peculiarities of the Miserere were thought impossible to be expressed by musical notation, and when Mozart, in presence of some Sistine chorists, sang the composition in the very manner in which it was sung by those who had acquired it after long practice, the professional singers expressed their astonishment in terms of unmeasured admiration. The fame of Mozart after this was spread far and wide. His wonderful musical talents and power of performing on the organ were attributed to a charm which it was supposed he carried in his ring. When the pope first heard him perform, he conferred upon him the order of the Golden Spur, and at Bologna he was elected member of the Philharmonic Society, which at that time an honour rarely conferred even on the greatest musicians. On the 26th of December, 1770, he produced at Milan his Mithridate, which had a successful run of twenty nights, and caused him to be engaged to compose the opera for the year 1773. This opera was Silla, which was performed twenty-six nights in succession. In the interval between the two named above, he went to Venice and Verona, where he received the highest musical honours. At Milan, he, in 1771, composed an opera, and

[House of Mozart.]

Salzburg in 1772 he composed another, for the election of the new archbishop. In 1775 his fame was so completely established, and so well known, that he could have made choice of engagements in all the capitals of Europe. His preferred Paris, and therefore, in 1777, he, with his mother, commenced his second journey to hat city. The death of his mother made Paris unsupportable, and he returned to his father at the beginning of the year 1779. Some time after this Mozart went to Munich, whence he went to Vienna, and entered the service of the emperor, whom he remained attached during the rest of his life, though tempted to leave him by many advantageous offers. His principal works, composed about and after this time, were 'Cosi Fan Tutti,' 'Domeneo,' 'L'Enlevement du Serail,' 'Nozze de Figaro,' 'Don Giovanni,' 'Zauberflöte,' 'Clemenza di Tito,' 'Masses,' and his world-renowned 'Requiem.' During the time he was engaged in the composition of the 'Zauberflöte' he began to be subject to fainting fits, which recurred at short intervals till the close of his life, which took place the 5th of December, 1792, when he had not attained to his thirty-sixth year. He left a widow and two sons. His works, which are too numerous to mention by name, were in all styles of his art, and all great. He is one of the greatest masters of music, and his works will live to all time. [J.M.]

MOZZI, L., a controversial writer, 1746-1813.

MOZZI, M. A., an Italian historian, 1678-1736.

MUDGE, ZACHARY, a dissenting minister, who afterwards entered the Church of England, author of 'Sermons, &c.,' died 1769. THOMAS, his son, distinguished for his improvement of the chronometer, 1715-1794. JOHN, brother of the latter, physician and professional writer, most distinguished for his improvement of the reflecting telescope, died 1793. WILLIAM, son of John, an officer in the army, and an employé in the trigonometrical survey, 1762-1820.

MUDIE, ROBERT, a famous writer on natural history, and contributor to magazine literature, born in Forfarshire 1777, died in indigent circumstances 1842.

MUGGLETON, LODOWICKE, the principal of the enthusiasts, (his companion being John Love), who in the year 1651, announced themselves as the two last witnesses, and went from place to place, denouncing with great violence all whom they regarded as false professors of religion, even magistrates and persons in authority. Their principal attacks were directed against the Quakers and Ranters, some of whom replied to them in writing. The first publication of Muggleton is entitled 'A Remonstrance from the Eternal God, declaring several Spiritual Transactions unto the Parliament and Commonwealth of England, by his Excellency the Lord General Cromwell, the Council of State, the Council of War, and to all that love the second appearing of the Lord Jesus, the only wise God and everlasting Father, Blessed for ever.' This pamphlet was first printed in 1653, and was republished in 1710, with a portrait of the author, the subscription to which gives the true date of his life—'Dyed the 14th of March, 1681 then aged eighty-eight years, seven months, and fourteen days.' Muggleton is depicted with long hair, low forehead, protruding brow, and high cheek bones, and what physiognomists would call the aggressive nose. The exposition of his doctrines is given in his work called 'The Love Looking-Glass,' published 1656, and his followers formed a sect which has survived to the present times. His fanaticism was perfectly sincere, and he more than once suffered imprisonment for the vigorous manner in which he prosecuted his 'Commission.' [E.R.]

MUIS, S. M. DE, a Fr. Hebraist, 1587-1644.

MULLER, ANDREW, a German divine and Oriental scholar, especially dist. for his labours in illustration of the Chinese language, 1630-1694.

MULLER, CARL OTTFRIED, professor of archæology at Gottingen, distinguished for his skill in mythology, 1797-1840.

MULLER, HENRY, a Ger. divine, 1631-1675.

MULLER, GERARD FREDERIC, a German traveller and writer, skilled in the Russian language, and a long time resident in that country as historiographer of the empire. He is considered the father of Russian history, and is author of numerous valuable works in that branch of inquiry. Born in Westphalia 1705; died in Moscow, where he had been appointed keeper of the archives, 1783.

MULLER, J., a Dutch engraver, b. about 1570.

MULLER, JOHN, a Swiss historian, auth. of a 'Hist. of the Helvetic Confederation,' 1752-1809.

MULLER, JOHN, called 'Regiomontanus,' from his birthplace, distinguished as a Greek scholar, astronomer, and mathematical writer, 1436-1476.

MULLER, J. S., a Germ. engraver, 1715-1782.

MULLER, L., a military engineer of Prussia, au. of 'The Wars of Frederick the Great,' 1734-1804.

MULLER, OTHON FREDERIC, an eminent naturalist, was born at Copenhagen in 1730. He died in 1784. He was born of parents in a humble sphere of life, and was destined for the church. Recommended by his learning and regularity of manners to the situation of tutor to the young Count Schulin, he travelled into various countries with him; and was induced by his pupil's mother, a woman of excellent understanding, to engage in the study of natural history. Marrying advantageously, he abandoned his intention of going into the church, and was enabled to devote himself exclusively to scientific occupations. As a naturalist he acquired a high reputation both at home and abroad, and was honoured by his sovereign, who conferred upon him various marks of high distinction. His first works were the Entomology and Botany of the part of his native country where he was born and resided, which was followed by a continuation of the great work begun by Oeder, the Flora of Denmark. Zoology, however, soon superseded botany; and we know no naturalist who has more ably illustrated the fauna of his native country than Muller has done his. Selecting chiefly those portions of the animal kingdom, which from their diminutive proportions, had till then been but little attended to, he struck out an original path, and clothing his descriptions of the little animals of his studies in elegant Latin, he has rendered his works accessible to, and made them the delight of all succeeding zoologists. His histories, or monographs of the infusoria, the hydrachnæ or water spiders, and the entomostraca of Denmark and Norway, are models of composition and monuments of prodigious patience; while his great work, which, however, he did not live to finish, the Zoologia Danica, is one of amazing accuracy, both in the descriptions and in the figures of the animals described, and is indispensable to every naturalist even of the present day. The younger Linnæus has named a genus of plants after him, Mullera. [W.B.]

MULLER, W., a German writer, 1794-1827.
 MUMMIUS, L., a consul of Rome, B.C. 146.
 MUNCER, MUNTZER, or MUNZER, THOS., a chief of the German anabaptists, executed 1525.
 MUNCHAUSEN, GERLACH ADOLPHUS, Baron Von, Hanoverian prime minister, and founder of the university of Göttingen, 1688-1770.

MUNCHHAUSEN, JEROME CH. FREDERIC VON, a German officer, whose wonderful relations of his adventures in the service of Russia, suggested the story of Burger, remarkable for its humour and extravagance; died 1797.

MUNCK, J., a Danish navigator, died 1628.

MUNDAY, A., a dramatic writer, died 1633.

MUNDEN, JOSEPH SAUNDERS, a comic actor, distinguished for humour, born in London, 1758. He was intended by his parents for the medical profession; but, disliking it, he was next apprenticed to a law-stationer. Here having learned to copy, he was originally engaged to write out the parts for the performers, and thus introduced to the histrionic profession, was sometimes permitted to tread the stage as mute, and at length joined a strolling company at Rochdale, Lancashire. In 1780, he was engaged as low comedian at the Canterbury theatre. It was not, however, until 1790 that he made his débüt in London, when he appeared at Covent Garden, as Sir Francis Gripe, in 'The Busy Body,' and Jemmy Jumps, in 'The Farmer.' Transferred in 1813 to Drury Lane, he continued there till 31st May, 1824, when he retired. Old Dornton in 'The Road to Ruin,' was one of his most successful characters. Munden indulged in broad grimace, but added to his humour a pathos which was sometimes irresistibly touching. Unlike most actors, he was distinguished in private life by his economical habits, and accumulated a large fortune. He died 6th February, 1832, in Bernard Street, Russell Square, where he had long resided. [J.A.H.]

MUNNICH, BURCHARD CHRISTOPHER, Count Von, a German officer in the service of Russia, who was exiled to Siberia. On being restored to favour, he appeared at court in the sheep-skin dress worn during his captivity; 1683-1767.

MUNOZ, J. B., a Spanish historian, 1745-1799.

MUNOZ, S., a Spanish painter, 1745-1799.

MUNOZ, T., a Spanish engineer, 1743-1823.

MUNRO, ALEXANDER, M.D., the son of Dr. Alexander Munro, professor of anatomy in the university of Edinburgh, was born at Edinburgh on the 20th of May, 1733, and after having been carefully educated as an anatomist, he was associated with his father in the chair of anatomy in the year 1755, and ultimately succeeded him in that charge. This chair he held for the remainder of his life, which was terminated on the 2d of October, 1817, when he had attained to the eighty-fifth year of his age. He is generally known in medical biography as Munro Secundus, and, with his father, contributed largely to the establishment of the fame of the Edinburgh school of medicine; but though a skilful anatomist and physiologist, he could lay no claim to the possession of the inventive powers and the original genius of the Hunters, with both of whom he was contemporary, and with the elder of whom he maintained a bitter, but now forgotten, controversy on the origin of the lymphatics. [J.M.C.]

MUNRO, SIR T., gover. of Madras, 1760-1769.

MUNSTER, COUNT, a statesman of Hanover, known at the congress of Vienna 1814, died 1818.

MUNSTER, GEORGE FITZCLARENCE, earl, eldest son of the duke of Clarence and Mrs. Stanhope, born 1794, shot himself, after acquiring distinction as a valiant soldier in India, 1842.

MUNSTER, SEBASTIAN, professor of Hebrew at Basle, one of the most learned men of his age, author of numerous works, 1489-1552.

MUNTER, B., a German divine, 1735-1799.

MUNTER, F., a Ger. Orientalist, 1760-1818.

MUNTING, ABRAHAM, father and son, distinguished as physicians and botanists, the son died 1628, the latter 1626-1683.

MURA, F. DE, a painter of Naples, died 1769.

MURAND, E., a Dutch painter, 1622-1700.

MURAT. JOACHIM MURAT, le beau sabreur, leader of the imperial armies, was born in 1767, near Nîmes. His father was a country innkeeper. Young Murat was distinguished, even in boyhood, for his courage, and for his horsemanship. He was intended for the church; but he entered the army at the age of 20, and soon became notorious for his duels, and for the fervour of his democratic opinions. In 1795, when Buonaparte put down the rising of the Sections of Paris, Murat was an officer in one of the regiments of cavalry in the capital; and was of the greatest service to his future master in securing for him the possession of the park of St. Cloud, which was employed by Buonaparte so effectively against the insurgents. When Napoleon made general of the army of Italy, he placed Murat on his personal staff: and he afterwards took him with him to Egypt. Both against the Austrian and Piedmontese in Italy, and against the Mamelukes and Turks in Egypt, Murat proved his brilliant courage, and his ability as a leader of horse. He returned from Egypt with Napoleon, and throughout the consular and early imperial campaigns in Germany he increased his martial renown. His height, his stature, his handsome features, his showy costume, and the unrivalled skill and grace of his horsemanship, all combined to increase the effect which his daring courage and personal prowess produced both on friends and foes. His white plume, that of Henri Quatre, was the standard which his men followed best through the thick of every battle. He had little strategic ability. Napoleon, when he was on Elba, described him truly in these words—'Murat was a good soldier—one of the most brilliant commanders I ever saw on the field of battle. Of no great talents; without much moral courage; timid in forming his plan of operations: but the more he saw the enemy, all that vanished—his eyes became the most sure, and the most rapid—his courage truly chivalrous. Moreover, he is a fine man, and well-dressed, though at times rather fancifully. It was really a magnificent sight to see him in battle heading the cavalry.' Murat married Caroline Buonaparte, Napoleon's youngest daughter. He was made a marshal of France, when the empire was established, and in 1806 Napoleon gave him the grand duchy of Berg and Cleves. Murat received from his imperial patron the title of King of Naples, and reigned over that beautiful country for seven years. Botta, the Italian historian, says of him, 'He was courteous and affable to all, was no lover of rapine, still less of cruelty:'

only was necessary to his happiness.' Such was Murat's general character, both before and during his royalty: but his implicit devotion to Napoleon made him on several occasions become the instrument, if not the cause, of acts of great barbarity and injustice.—In 1812 he joined Napoleon in the great expedition against Russia, and was general of the whole cavalry of the Grand Army. After the disasters of that campaign, Murat continued to serve under Napoleon against the Allies in Germany, till the great defeat of the emperor at Leipzig in the autumn of 1813, seemed to render his cause desperate. Murat then sought to secure his own possession of the Neapolitan throne. He basely betrayed his benefactor; and, joining himself to the Allied Sovereigns against France, he attacked Napoleon's forces in Italy. By this treachery he preserved himself as king of Naples during 1814; but he found that the Allied sovereigns, though they suffered him to reign, regarded him with suspicion and ill-will. On learning Napoleon's escape from Elba in 1815, Murat determined to change sides again; and he attacked the Austrians in Italy. He was speedily defeated, and obliged to take refuge in France, before the opening of the campaign in Belgium between Napoleon and the Allies, by which the war was decided. So deep was the abhorrence among the French soldiery of Murat for his treachery in the preceding year, that Napoleon did not dare bring him to the French army; though the emperor saw well Murat's value in the day of battle. Afterwards, at St. Helena, Napoleon referred to him as a subject, and said, that perhaps Murat, had he been at Waterloo, might have changed the fate of that battle, and of the world. 'There were moments during the battle,' said the emperor, 'when the breaking of a single English square might have won us the victory; and if ever there was the only officer who could have done it, Murat was that man.' After the second fall of Napoleon, Murat lingered about for some months in the south of France and in Corsica: and finally, on the 7th October, 1815, he landed with a small band of armed followers on the Calabrian coast, in the chimerical hope of reconquering his kingdom of Naples. He was speedily overpowered and taken prisoner. The Neapolitan court showed him no mercy. He was sent before a military commission, tried, condemned, and shot within half-an-hour after sentence. He met his fate with the chivalric courage that had ever distinguished him; and his last letter to his wife, written by him while the preparations were making for his court-martial, is one of the most pathetic and heroic that history has preserved. When he confronted the soldiers who were to shoot him, he refused to have his eyes bandaged, and bade them 'spare the face, and point straight to the heart.' Then he pointed to his heart with his right hand; and held in the left a medallion picture of his wife and children, on which he was gazing when the soldiers fired, and which he stretched a corpse at the instant, still holding the medallion to the very last. [E.S.C.]

MURATORI, D., an Ital. painter, born 1661.
MURATORI, LODOVICO ANTONIO, an Italian geologist and historian, author of many valuable works, successively librarian at Milan, and archivist and librarian at Modena, 1672-1750.

MURDOC, a king of Scotland, 715-730.

MURE, SIR W., a Scotch poet, died 1657.

MURENA, C., an Italian architect, 1715-1764.

MURET, J. L., a Swiss economist, 1715-1796.

MURET, M. A. F., an Ital. savant, 1526-1585.

MURILLO, BARTHOLOME ESTEBAN, was born at Seville 1st January, 1618. He was the pupil of his relative Juan del Castillo. In 1642 he visited Madrid, and was aided by Velazquez, then painter to the king, who procured him permission to copy in the Royal Galleries. Murillo returned to Seville in 1645, where he commenced that great series of works which have now made his name so glorious. He married a lady of fortune in 1648, which much aided his personal influence, and he succeeded in establishing an academy of the arts at Seville in 1660, and acted as president the first year. He died at Seville, 3d April, 1682, in consequence of a fall from a scaffolding at Cadiz, where he was engaged in the church of the Capuchins, painting a large altar piece of St. Catherine.—Murillo's principal works are eight large pictures which he painted for the hospital of St. George, called La Caridad, finished in 1674, but which were dispersed during the peninsular war: three are in this country.—'The Return of the Prodigal Son,' and 'Abraham Visited by the Angels,' in the possession of the duke of Sutherland; and 'Christ Healing the Sick of the Palsy,' called 'The Pool of Bethesda,' in the possession of Mr. George Tomline, London, 'Our Lady of the Immaculate Conception,' painted in 1678, and lately purchased by the French government, for the enormous sum of £23,600 sterling, and the picture of the 'Holy Family,' or 'Trinity,' in the British National Gallery, are fine examples of Murillo's later style. In the later part of his life Murillo changed both his style and his subjects; his earlier pictures, chiefly fancy subjects, and illustrative of humble life, are painted in a forcible manner, with predominant dark shadows; his latter works are of equal truth of character, but in a more elevated and chaste style, and are almost exclusively of religious subjects.—(Cean Bermudez, Diccionario Historico de los mas Ilustres Profesores de las Belas Artes en Espana, Madrid, 1806; Stirling, Annals of the Artists of Spain.) [R.N.W.]

MURNER, TH., a French poet, 1465-1533.

MURPHY, ARTHUR, an Irish dramatic and miscellaneous writer, author of 'The Grecian Daughter' and other plays, highly popular in their time. Having supported the government, he was appointed one of the commissioners of bankruptcy. Born at Cork 1727, died 1805.

MURPHY, JAMES CAVANAGH, an Irish architect and antiq., an. of works on Portugal, d. 1816.

MURR, CHR. THEOPHILUS VON, born at Nuremberg 1735, distinguished as a literary savant, Orientalist, and bibliophile, died 1811.

MURRAY, ALEXANDER, a poor self-educated Scotchman, distinguished for his researches into the nature and origin of languages; born 1775, professor at Edinburgh 1812, died 1813.

MURRAY, CHARLES, a successful dramatic wr. and performer, born at Cheshunt 1754, d. 1821.

MURRAY, DANIEL, late Roman Catholic archbishop of Dublin, was born in 1768, and educated at Salamanca, where he was consecrated priest in 1790. He succeeded to the archbishopric in 1823, and during the agitation for catholic emancipation supported that measure by his influence, after which he took no part in political questions. In 1831, he was joined with Archbishop Whately and others in the commission for Irish education, and sanctioned the institution of the Queen's Colleges; he withdrew, however, on knowing the contrary pleasure of the pope. Died 1852.

MURRAY, SIR GEORGE, a British general, born in Perthshire 1772, entered the army in 1789, and greatly distinguished himself in the late wars. In 1812 he was appointed governor of Canada; and, returning to England on the escape of Napoleon from Elba, became, after the peace, governor of Edinburgh castle. He held several other offices, and in 1828 was secretary of state for the colonies. The principal event of his political life was his defeat at the Westminster election 1837. In 1841 he became master-general of the ordnance under Sir Robert Peel; died 1846.

MURRAY, HUGH, a Scottish geographer, historian, and miscellaneous wr., au. of many volumes in the 'Edinburgh Cabinet Library,' 1779-1846.

MURRAY, JAMES, a Scotch divine, 1702-1758.

MURRAY, JAMES, a dissenting divine, d. 1782.

MURRAY, JAMES, an East Indian officer, who commenced his career in the service in the Maharattas 1790, died 1807.

MURRAY, JAMES STUART, earl of, a natural son of James V., king of Scotland, was born 1531, and educated in France with his sister, Mary, but joined the reformers soon after her marriage with the dauphin. His political history is connected with the fortunes of the queen, after whose imprisonment in Lochleven castle, 1567, he was proclaimed Regent, and defeated her troops at the battle of Langside. He was shot by James Hamilton, whose wife he had seduced, 1570.

MURRAY, JOHN, a Scotch physician and chemist, author of works on the Materia Medica Pharmacy, 'Elements of Chemistry,' &c., d. 1820.

MURRAY, JOHN, the eminent publisher whose name is associated with the works of Byron, dist. for his literary acquirements and liberality, 1778-1843.

MURRAY, JOHN AND., a Swedish naturalist, 1740-1791. His brother, ADOLPHUS, professor of anatomy, 1750-1803. A third brother, J. PHILIP, distinguished as a man of letters, 1726-1776.

MURRAY, LINDLEY, born of Quaker parents in Pennsylvania 1745; was educated for the mercantile profession, and practised some time as a barrister. He afterwards realized a competency in his earlier pursuits, and acquired the leisure which he devoted to literary studies. He wrote, besides his well-known English Grammar and Spelling-book, several works on education and morals, d. 1826.

MURRAY, PATRICK, fifth Lord Elibank, a writer on the currency and public credit, 1707-78.

MURRAY, WILLIAM. See MANSFIELD.

MURRAY, W. H., a Scotch actor, 36 years manager of the Theatre Royal, Edinburgh, 1791-1852.

MURRAY, WM. VANS, an American diplomatist, chiefly dist. for his services at the Hague, and at a later period at the French court, d. 1803.

MUSA, ANTONIUS, a Roman physician, celebrated for his skilful cure of Augustus.

MUSA, IBN N., an Arabian general, 640-717.

MUSA, ABU ABDALLAH MAHAMMED BEN, the earliest Arabian writer on algebra.

MUSEUS, an ancient philosopher and poet who flourished at an unknown date at Athens.

MUSEUS, a Greek poet of the 4th cent. author of the 'Loves of Hero and Leander.'

MUSEUS, JOHN CHARLES AUGUSTUS, a popular German writer and satirist, 1735-1787.

MUSCALUS, A., a German divine, died 1511.

MUSCHER, M. VAN, a Dutch pain., 1645-1711.

MUSCULUS, WOLFGANG, a German Helvetian and divine, who distinguished himself among early reformers, 1497-1563.

MUSGRAVE, SIR RICHARD, a member of parliament, and collector of the excise at Dublin, author of 'Memoirs of the Rebellion in Ireland' born about 1758, died 1818.

MUSGRAVE, SAMUEL, a physician of Exeter known as a classical scholar and critic, died 1717.

MUSGRAVE, WILLIAM, grandfather of the preceding, known as a medical writer and antiquarian, 1657-1721.

MUSONIUS, a Stoic philosopher, 15th cent.

MUSS, CHARLES, an enamel painter, d. 1811.

MUSSATO, A., an Ital. historian, 1261-1327.

MUSSCHENBROEK, PETER VON, a Dutch physician, celebrated as a natural philosopher and mathematician, 1692-1761.

MUSSO, C., an Italian prelate, 1511-1574.

MUSURUS, M., a Greek savant, 1470-1511.

MUTIS, DON GIUSEPPE CELESTINO, a learned physician of Spain, dist. as a botanist, 1733-1808.

MUTIUS CÆLIUS. See SCÆVOLA.

MUZIANO, GIROLAMO, one of the most celebrated Italian painters, at whose instance the Academy of St. Luke was founded, 1528-1591.

MUZIO, G., an Italian writer, 1496-1576.

MYCONIUS, F., a German divine, 1491-1551.

MYCONIUS, O., a Swiss reformer, 1488-1551.

MYDORGE, C., a Fr. mathematic., 1585-1648.

MYLE, A. VANDER, a D. philolog., 1558-1611.

MYLIUS, J. C., a Ger. bibliographer, 1710-1781.

MYLNE, ROBERT, the architect of Blackfriars bridge, London, afterwards surveyor of St. Paul's Cathedral, and engineer to the New River Company, born at Edinburgh 1734, died 1811.

MYN, H. VANDER, a D. painter, 1684-1741.

MYRO, a Greek poetess, 3d century B.C.

MYRON, one of the most celebrated artists of antiquity, was born at Eleuthera in Bœotia about 432 B.C. He was the pupil of Ageladas, and temporary with Phidias and Polycletus; he established at Athens.—Myron is remarkable among Greek sculptors for the comparative naturalism of his forms as contrasted with the ideal style of Phidias and other great Greeks: he represented man and animal with equal success; almost, says Petronius, gave the souls of men to animals to brass. 'He was,' says Pliny, 'curious in all corporeal detail, but paid little regard to expression,' this is not a bad description of what is now termed naturalism. The works of Myron which very many are recorded, were mostly in bronze, of Delos; but he was also a sculptor in marble, a carver in wood, and an engraver on metals. The celebrated Townley Discobolus quoit-thrower, found in the villa of Hadrian, at Tivoli, in 1791, is the work of Myron, though supposed to be a marble copy of the original; amongst all his great works, the most celebrated was a bronze cow suckling a calf, set up in a public place.

ce at Athens: there are thirty-six epigrams of this work in the Greek anthology. So extraordinary a popularity can be owing only to life-imitation, which must have been a comparative novelty. No quality in art is so popular, it is that the most vulgar and least informed can understand.—The following will serve as a specimen of the high reputation of this remarkable work: it is from an old Greek epigram in Curl's Anac-

'This heifer is not cast, but rolling years Hardened the life to what it now appears:
Myron unjustly would the honour claim,
But nature has prevented him in fame.'

The cow was, in the time of Procopius, the sixth century, in the temple of Peace at Rome. See a full account of Myron and his works, by the writer, in the Supple. to the Penny Cyclopædia. [R.N.W.]

MYRTIS, a poetess of Bœotia, 5th cent. B.C.

MYRTIUS, CHERUBIN, a local historian, born near Treves, and settled in an Italian monastery in 1592; date of his death unknown.

MYTENS, A., a Flemish painter, 1541-1602.

MYTENS, DANIEL, the name of two Dutch painters, father and son, the elder, known to have been living in 1656, the younger, 1636-1688.

MYTENS, M., a Swed. painter, famous for his imitations of the antique, born at Stockholm, 1695; d. at Vienna, where he was painted, to the court, 1755.

MYTZES, a king of the Bulgarians, 1258.

N

NABEGA, an Arabian poet, 6th century.

NABI-EFFENDI, a Turkish poet, 17th cent.

NABIS, a general and tyrant of Sparta, who had a considerable part in the affairs of Greece from 205 to 192 B.C., at the time his country was in conflict with the Roman power. He was killed by his pretended ally, Alexamenos, after being repeatedly defeated by the army of the Achaean league.

NABONASSAR, a k. of Babylonia, whose name marks an era commencing 26th Feb., 747 B.C.

NABOPOLASSAR. See NEBUCHADNEZZAR.

NADAB, a king of Israel, 343-341 B.C.

NADAL, A., a French miscel. wr., 1659-1741.

NADASTI, or DE NADAZD, THOMAS, a Hungarian nobleman distinguished in the wars of Ferdinand of Austria against Solyman II., and in the reign of Charles V., 16th century. His grandson, FRANCIS, Count de Forgatsch, a patriot and historian, executed 1671.

NADAUD, JOS., a French ecclesiastic, d. 1792.

NADAUULT, J., a French naturalist, 1701-1782.

NADIR SHAH, otherwise THAMASP KOULI KHAN, a famous military adventurer, who was born in Khorassan, 1688; and by 1736 had raised himself by a series of crimes and conquests to the throne of Persia. He then invaded the empire of the Mogul, and after carrying fire and sword through some of its richest provinces, enriched himself and his officers with nearly a hundred millions sterling in money, jewels, and effects. He was despatched in his tent, after a fierce personal struggle with the conspirators, 19th June, 1747.

NAEVIUS, C., a Roman dramatist, d. B.C. 203.

NAEVIUS, J., a Saxon physician, 1499-1574.

NAEVIUS, F. C., a French ascetic, 1734-1816.

NAEL, J. A., a Prussian sculptor, 1710-1795.

NAEL, H., one of the Jewish prophets, 7th c. B.C.

NAELSON, J., a French painter, 1757-1832.

NAELSON, J. A., a French atheist, 1738-1810.

NAELSON, M., a Dutch painter, 1570-1651.

NAELSON, A., a Russian poet, 1782-1814.

NAELDI, NALDO, an Italian wr., d. about 1470.

NAELDI, S., an Italian singer, killed 1819.

NAELSON, JOHN, a Church of England minister, author of historical works elucidating the reign of Charles I., 1638-1686.

NAELSON, V., a Ch. of Engl. divine, 1641-1724.

NAELSON, W. DE, a French historian, 14th ct.

NAELSONI, GIOVANNI BATISTA FELICE GASPARI, a diplomatist and hist. of Venice, 1616-78.

NANNI, GIOVANNI, an Ital. painter, called from his birth-place, Giovanni di Udine, 1494-1564.

NANNINI, A., an Italian writer, 15th century.

NANNIUS, PET., the Latinized name of Peter Nanni, or Nanning, a Dutch philologist, 1500-57.

NANNONI, A., an Italian surgeon, 1715-1790.

NANTEUIL, P., a French dramatist, d. 1681.

NANTEUIL, R., a French engraver, 1630-78.

NANTIGNI, L. C., a Fr. genealogist, 1692-1755.

NAPIER, LIEUTENANT-GEN. SIR CHARLES JAMES, who combined the talents of a great administrator with those of a conqueror, and was in many respects one of the most remarkable men of the present age, was born in 1782, and began his military career in Ireland at the period of the rebellion. He won his first laurels in the peninsular war, where he fought desperately under Sir John Moore, and became the prisoner of Ney, dreadfully lacerated by the wounds he had received during the retreat on Corunna. Being permitted to return to England on parole, he filled up a period of military inaction by writing several works on colonization, the state of Ireland, military law, and engineering. In 1811 he joined Wellington as a volunteer, and was present at some of his hardest fought actions in the peninsula, including Fuentes d'Onore and Badajoz. It was his fate to be absent on a cruising expedition when Europe was surprised by the sudden return of Napoleon, but he reached the army three days after the battle of Waterloo, assisted in what fighting there remained to do, and accompanied it to Paris. He was then some years governor of Cephalonia, and drew up a plan, in conjunction with Lord Byron, for achieving the independence of Greece, won the lasting gratitude of the Cephalonians, who call him the father of their country, and was ultimately recalled. In 1841, during the administration of Lord Auckland in India, he was appointed commander of the Bombay army, and commenced that reform of abuses which rendered his name a hateful one to the magnates of Leadenhall-Street, and the authorities under their influence. On the appointment of Lord Ellenborough, his plan for a campaign in Afghanistan found support in a kindred spirit, and taking the field with only 2,000 men, he found himself face to face with an army of 30,000 whom he defeated with dreadful slaughter at the famous battle of Meenacee, 17th February, 1843. His forces were afterwards augmented to 5,000, and with these he completed the conquest of Scinde, by the defeat of Shere Mahomed at the head of 25,000 men in a pitched battle at Hydrabad. Lord Ellenborough appointed him governor of the conquered territory, and it was now that his brilliant talents as a ruler found the scope necessary for their development. Troops of bandits had to be put down, suttee abolished, a general survey of the country taken, roads made, the laws revised, the whole of the administration reorganized; yet in addition to all this, Sir Charles Napier added to his labours the social improvement and education of the people; besides writing and arguing against the opposition of the civil authorities of India. In the midst of these toils the battles of Ferozeshah and Sobraon finished the scheme of conquest while he was speculating on its enlargement, and in 1847 he was induced by the declining health of Lady Napier to return to England. In 1849 another Sikh war had broken out, and the anxious eyes of the country were fixed on Sir Charles Napier, who, conscious that his only friends were in the army and the people of England, for some time declined going. He yielded at last to the duke of Wellington, whose last words were,—‘If you don’t go, I must,’ and forty-three days after he was in Bombay, where he learned that the war had been concluded. The manner of his reception by Lord Dalhousie completely realized his misgivings. ‘In ten minutes,’ (says Sir Charles) ‘he told me in substance, nay, the words were,—That in letters from England he had been warned against my endeavouring to encroach upon his power, and had answered he would take a—d good care I should not!’ On such terms it is rather surprising that Napier remained commander of the army two years than that he tendered his resignation at the end of that period and returned home—not, however, until he had effected further reforms in all that came under his authority. He died at Oaklands, near Portsmouth, 29th August, 1853, leaving a name that will long be honoured among the worthies of England—a great soldier, a great ruler, and a fearless exposé of all manner of abuses. His last appearance in public was at the funeral of the duke of Wellington, when his usual grotesque appearance on horseback was rendered painful by his too evident infirmity. The vanity so conspicuous in his writings, is rendered less objectionable than it might otherwise be, by his soldier-like frankness, and graphic skill in circumstantial description. The last from his pen is entitled ‘Defects, Civil and Military, in the Indian Government,’ lately edited by his brother, Sir W. F. P. Napier; the most interesting is his account of Scinde as he found it and as he left it. [E.R.]

NAPIER, JOHN, Baron of Merchiston, the illustrious inventor of logarithms, was the eldest son of Archibald Napier, of Edinbellie and Merchiston, master of the mint in Scotland. He was born at Merchiston castle, near Edinburgh, in 1550. After going through the usual course of study at St. Andrews, he is said to have applied himself to mathematics, during a tour to the Netherlands, France, and Italy. Upon his return to Scotland, he declined all civil employment in order that he might devote himself entirely to literary and scientific pursuits. The principal subjects of his study were mathematics and sacred writings, and he began his career as author by the publication of his commentary on the apocalypse, under the title of ‘A Plai covery of the Revelation of St. John.’ This was translated into French, and published, revised by himself, at Rochelle in 1602, and wards in 1605 and 1607. It was highly valued by the protestants of France, owing to and learning with which he endeavoured that the pope was the antichrist of Scripture he was more successful in this discussion than others, in which he vainly attempted to future events from the revelations at Patmos. The attention of Napier was at this time directed to other subjects than theology, though reasoning feeling was the motive which impelled him to his task. In 1596 he addressed a letter to Adam Bacon, (the original of which is in the Arecopal Library of Lambeth), entitled—‘Secrecy Necessary in these Days for the Improvement of this Island, and Withstanding Strange Enemies to God’s Truth and Religion.’ The object of these inventions, is a burning mirror for destroying the enemy’s ships at any distance, by reflecting to a focus the beams of the sun; and the other is another mirror for effecting the same object by reflecting ‘the beams of any material fire or light.’ It does not appear that Napier made any experiments with these mirrors, or placed his inventions in the hands of those who alone could apply them. When, a short time before his death, a parish friend implored him not to bury in the grave himself such excellent inventions, he replied that there was already too many devices for the overthrow of man; and that as the more the human heart would not allow mankind to diminish the number of them, ‘they should be increased by any new conceit of his.’ The reason to believe that Napier had previous to his death begun those investigations which led to the invention of logarithms. We are informed by Wood in his ‘Athenæ Oxoniensis,’ that Dr. James Hutton, a Scotchman, who had come from Denmark, told Napier that Longomontanus had invented a method ‘of saving the tedious multiplications and divisions in astronomical calculations,’ and that this was done by ‘proportionable numbers,’ which Napier taking, he desired him upon his return to call upon him again. Craig, after some time had passed, did so, and Napier then showed him the rude draught of what he called Canon Miræ Logarithmorum; which draught, with some corrections, he printed in 1614. Wood adds, ‘It came into the hands of our author Briggs, William Oughtres, from whom the relation of this matter came.’—It is quite possible that Longomontanus may have been occupied with the attempt to abridge astronomical calculations, but if he made the slightest progress in such an invention, his friend Kepler would not have failed to give him the credit which he may have deserved. Whereas, in a letter to Cruger, he distinctly states that ‘nothing can surpass the method of Napier (Nepereanæ rationem).’—The work in which Napier gave his great invention to the world was published at Edinburgh in 1614, with the title ‘Mirifici Logarithmorum Canonis Descriptio.’ When the invention of logarithms was first own to Mr. Henry Briggs, Reader in astronomy at Gresham college, and the improver of logarithms, he was so surprised with admiration that he did not rest till he saw the inventor. When Napier heard of this he invited Briggs to Scotland. When they met, 'about one quarter of an hour was spent each beholding the other with admiration before one word was spoken.' The Baron entertained his guest most nobly, and Briggs visited Merchiston castle every summer during the life of his friend.—Baron Napier improved trigonometry by the invention of his universal tables, which he calls the first circular parts, for solving all the cases of right-angled spherical triangles, and which was published in his posthumous work, 'Mirifici Logarithmorum Canonis Constructio,' which appeared in 1619.—The last publication of our noble author was his 'Rabdomagica seu numerationis per virgulas,' published in 1617, and reprinted at Lyons in 1618, and 1620. The instrument here described is known by the name of 'Napier's Rods or Bones,' an account of which will be found in our various encyclopædias.—This was the last work written by Napier. He died at Merchiston castle, on the 4th April, o.s., 1617, in the sixty-eighth year of his age, and was buried in the church of St. Giles, Edinburgh, where a stone tablet, with a Latin inscription, points out the burial place of the Napiers.—Baron Napier was twice married, and has left behind him a race distinguished by their talents, by their writings, and by their military and naval services.—So high was Napier's reputation, that the illustrious Kepler dedicated to him his 'Ephemerides,' which appeared in 1617; but the greatest compliment that has been paid to his memory was that of Laplace, who speaking of the value of logarithms in astronomy:—'This admirable invention,' he says, 'is due to the ingenious algorithm of the Indians, by reducing to a few days the labour of several months, doubles, if we may so speak, the life of astronomers, and spares them the errors and inseparable from long calculations; an invention, which is the more satisfying to the human mind, from its having been entirely deduced from its own resources. In the arts man makes use of the materials and the forms of nature to increase his powers, but in this case, it is all his own work,' ('Système du Monde,' Liv. v., chap. iv. ed. 2mo, p. 326). See the 'Account of the Life, Writings, and Inventions of John Napier of Merchiston,' by the earl of Buchan, Perth, 1787; and the life of him by one of his descendants, Mr. Napier, Esq., Edinburgh, 1834. [D.B.]

PIER, MACVEY, a Scottish lawyer and literary savant, successor of Jeffrey as editor of the 'Edinburgh Review' in 1829, and editor of the latest edition of the 'Enc. Britannica,' d. 1847.

PIER, WILLIAM JOHN, Lord, a dist. naval officer, born at Kinsale, 1787, appointed superintendent of the trade and interests of the British nation in China 1833, died at Macao 1834.

PIONE, C. A. GALEANI, an Ital. officer and militaryologist, died 1814. His brother, J. GALEANI, Count de Napione, dist. as a dramatic writer.

POLEON BUONAPARTE, was born at Ajaccio, in Corsica, on the 5th February, 1768. He afterwards gave out that he was born on 15th Augt, 1769, being his saint's day, and that is usually considered as the period of his nativity; but that the former is the real date is proved in the most authentic way by the attestation of himself,

[View of Ajaccio.]

his brother Joseph, and the principal members of his family, on occasion of his marriage with Josephine, in 1795, which still exists in the parish register, in Paris, where the marriage was solemnized. He had no interest at that time, and on that occasion, to make himself older than he really was, though he had a decided interest afterwards to make himself younger, as in the interval between Feb., 1768, and Aug., 1769, Corsica was annexed to France, so that he could not be a French citizen by nativity, without understating his birth. His family was respectable but not illustrious, and he always disdained to take advantage of the adventitious lustre of events. When some Italian genealogists, in the days of his greatness, tried to flatter him by tracing back his pedigree to the dukes of Treviso, he cut them short by saying that his patent of nobility dated from the battle of Montenotte, his first victory over the Austrians, in Italy. His mother was a woman of great beauty, courage, and ability, a peculiarity generally observed with those destined for future greatness; and having been taken with her pains in church, she was brought home, and Napoleon was brought into the world on a couch representing the heroes of the Iliad. He received the rudiments of his education at Ajaccio, in Corsica, where, by a curious coincidence, Count Pozzo de Borgo, afterwards his persevering and bitter opponent through life, was also instructed. Having early evinced a decided taste for military life, he was, at the age of eleven, sent to the military school, at Brienne, in Champagne, where he remained till he obtained his commission in the artillery. Pichegru, afterwards so famous, and whom Napoleon in the end destroyed, left the academy soon after the young Napoleon. At this academy, where he remained several years, his talents, especially for mathematics and the exact sciences, attracted the attention of his preceptors, who reported in the highest terms on his capacity to the government at Paris, and one of their memorandum books had this entry: 'Keep an eye on young Buonaparte, and promote him as fast as possible, for if you do not he will make his way for himself.' While at school, in a severe winter, the boys made bastions and ravelins of snow, and Napoleon distinguished himself at the head of the storming party. He received his first commission in the artillery at the age of sixteen. His figure was then diminutive and so thin that when he first appeared with his uniform on, and the huge part of it on his legs, he looked so ridiculous that Madle. Permon, afterwards duchess of Abrantes, with whom he was in love, burst into an immoderate fit of laughter, which gave no small offence to the young soldier. His first employment in real service was at the siege of Toulon, in 1794, when it was observed 'that a young lieutenant of artillery was very busy about a gun.' Even in that subordinate situation, however, his talents made themselves felt, and it was by his advice that the operations were directed against an outwork on the Mount Taron, which, when taken, by commanding the ships in the harbour, rendered the place no longer tenable. When dictating a despatch there on the head of a drum to an unknown sergeant of artillery, a cannon ball fell close to them and threw a quantity of dust on the paper. 'That is lucky,' exclaimed the sergeant, 'we shall not require sand for this paper.' 'What can I do for you,' said Napoleon, 'to evince my regard?' 'Everything,' said the sergeant, 'you can convert my worsted shoulder-knot into an epaulette.' Napoleon recommended him for promotion, and he got his commission. His name was JUNOT, and he became duke of Abrantes, and one of the most distinguished marshals of France. After the fall of Toulon, Napoleon was for some time out of employment. He was suspected, not without reason, of being implicated with the government of Robespierre; and he shared in the disgrace of its fall. He remained in consequence about five months at Paris without any occupation, and in a state of extreme poverty. So low indeed were the fortunes of the future emperor fallen at this period, that, as he himself said, he never got his boots blackened, and never wore gloves, for they were a useless expense. His imagination, however, abated nothing of its vigour by the decline of his fortunes, and despairing of effecting anything in Europe he dreamed of the East, and entertained serious thoughts of offering his services to the grand seignor, with a view to pushing his fortunes in Asia. 'Asia,' said he, 'contains six hundred millions of men, it is there alone that anything is to be done! Europe is worn out, there is nothing practicable here.' He was ere long, however, called to active and important duties in his own country. Though suspected and therefore unemployed by the government of the Directory, his abilities were well known; and when the directors were reduced to extremities by the insurrection of the sections in October, 1795, the first great reaction against the crown and honour of the revolution, they cast their eyes upon him as the only man who could resuscitate their tottering fortunes. The first day's conflict, in which Gen. Menon commanded, turned out entirely to the advantage of the insurgents, who were 30,000 strong, all national guards, and comprised the whole flower and educated classes of Paris. In great agitation the directors sent for Napoleon in the evening, and gave him the command of their forces, which were only 5,000, shut up in the squares of the Carusel and the Louvre. Napoleon instantly took his line. In the night he despatched an officer, destined for future greatness, MURAT, to save a village in the neighbourhood of Paris, where a park of fifty pieces of artillery was placed, the chiefs of the national guard with inconceivable infatuation had neglected to seize. Murat's possession of the guns and brought them to the Tuileries. This decided the affair. Next day the insurgents commenced their attack from the quarter of St. Roch, in the Rue d'Honore, and at the same time from the opposite side of the river. Napoleon was received with so terrible a discharge of shot that after standing several rounds they fled, leaving the victory to the regular army and the government of the Directory firmly established. Napoleon was rewarded, as well he deserved, for this important victory, by the command of the army of Italy. The favour of Barras as a member of the Directory, contributed also to his elevation, as he had recently married JOSEPHINE BEAUHARNAIS, his future empress, who had been intimate with that profligate director. The young Napoleon took the command of the army of Italy he was only 27 years of age, and wholly accustomed to high command. He found the troops in the most miserable condition, perched on the shining summits of the maritime Alps, where they had been driven by the united arms of the Austrians and the Piedmontese, in the present campaign, and in want of everything. From long sufferings he predicted a speedy change in their fortunes. 'Famine, cold, and misery,' said he in his first proclamation, 'are the school of soldiers. Here on the plains of Italy you will conquer them, and then you will find comfort, riches and glory.' He was as good as his word. Descending like a torrent from the summits of the Alps he soon carried everything before him. Having defeated the combined armies in several battles he appeared before the walls of Turin and the Piedmontese government to conclude a separate peace with France, the condition of which was the cession of all their fortresses to the conqueror, a public, which at once gave him a solid foothold in Italy, and secure basis for ulterior operations against the Austrians. He was not long of putting this basis to the best account. Having rested his troops with a fortnight's rest and his prisoners with ample contributions he advanced to Mantua where he was received by the revolutionary government with transports, which were soon cooled by the position of a contribution of £800,000 on its partisans, suppressed with dreadful severity and a reaction in Pavia, and forced the 'terrible bridge of Lodi,' as he himself called it, though defended by 25,000 Austrians. It was then, as he has said in his memoirs, that high ambition took possession of his soul; he became impressed with the idea he was destined to do great things. Putting up his career of success he defeated the Austrians in several encounters and compelled their commanders to shut themselves up in Mantua, a strong fortress in the centre of the plain of Italy. Impressed with the importance of this stronghold, the bulwark of their possessions in Italy, the Austrian government made the greatest effort for its relief. They successively collected powerful armies to relieve it; one of which, a series of desperate actions, succeeded under the veteran Marshal Wurmser in penetrating to ess and reinforcing the garrison. But this advantage was gained only by incurring defeats in the quarters; for Napoleon raising the siege concentrated his forces and severely defeated the Austrians, who were incautiously advancing in two columns separated from each other by the lake of Garda. The blockade of Mantua, encumbered with 10,000 additional mouths, was now resumed, and the Austrians assembled a second army for its relief, but it was defeated by Napoleon with desperadoes on the dykes of Arcotà. A third collected corps, composed of the best troops in the monarchy, and shared the same fate on the Plateau of Rivoli, on the banks of the Adige, between Verona and Trent. Despairing now of being relieved, and having exhausted all his means of subsistence, the Emperor was obliged to capitulate. Napoleon, regarding his age and valour, granted him honourable terms, and this campaign closed with the French occupying Mantua and the whole fortresses of the Alps, the barrier in that quarter of the Austrian monarchy. Seriously alarmed now for the very existence of the monarchy, the cabinet of Vienna withdrew the archduke Charles, who in the preceding campaign had gained successes nearly as great in Germany, as Napoleon had in Italy, to oppose the indomitable conqueror in the Venetian plains. He brought with him 30,000 of his best troops, and, clad with victory on the Bavarian plains, and two youthful conquerors were arrayed against each other on the banks of the Tagliamento. But the fear of Napoleon prevailed. With equal skill and daring he forced the passage of the Tagliamento, and drove the archduke out of the Venetian plains, through the passes of the Alps, and following him up he drove him from one pass and one position to another, till he had placed his standards on the snow-capped, the last ridge of the Alps, before they melted away into the valley of the Danube, and from these the steeples of Vienna are visible. Driven to their last shifts, the Austrians sued for peace, which Napoleon willingly accorded, for in truth his position, how brilliant soever, was full of peril from being too far advanced, with only 35,000 men, into the Austrian dominions. On this occasion Austria and France adjusted their differences without difficulty, for in return for large concessions to the conquering republic, the French handed over to her the whole dominions of the republic of Venice, which at first had been neutral, and had, in the course of the contest, effected a revolution in favour of France; one of the blackest instances of political ingratitude recorded in history. After this Napoleon remained inactive for about a year, the object of the utmost jealousy and terror to the French government, to whom his unbending ambition, his ambition, and fame rendered him an object of the utmost apprehension. To get rid of this formidable rival, they fell upon the experiment of offering him the command of a great expedition they were preparing against Egypt, and he promised to bring Napoleon into the theatre of nearly and favourite dreams of ambition, and the conceived matters were not ripe for the revolution which he meditated in Europe, he acceded to their offer. The expedition, the greatest that ever sailed in modern times from the shores of Europe, was accordingly sailed, having 35,000 soldiers on board, and escorted by fourteen ships of the line and above 300 transports. Though Nelson was in the Mediterranean straining every nerve to intercept the expedition, it arrived in safety before Malta, which at once capitulated to the French arms, and then steering for Alexandria, disembarked the whole troops there in safety in June, 1798. Napoleon, overjoyed with his good fortune in having escaped the English fleet, pursued his advantage with the utmost alacrity. Advancing from Alexandria towards Cairo, his army, after undergoing incredible hardships in the desert, arrived in sight of the Pyramids, where they beheld the Turkish army 30,000 strong, of which 15,000 were splendid Mameluke horse, ready to receive them. Impressed but not daunted by the noble spectacle, Napoleon said to his men, 'From the summit of these monuments forty centuries are gazing upon you.' They were not unworthy of their mission. Drawn up in squares, a deadly rolling fire as from so many flaming citadels issued from their ranks, a charge of cavalry completed the rout of the Turks, Cairo opened its gates and the French dominion was established over the whole of Egypt. Meanwhile, a dreadful reverse, apparently fatal to Napoleon's prospects in Europe, had occurred at sea. Nelson having at length discovered where the French fleet was, had stood into the bay of Aboukir, where they lay moored under protection of the land batteries, and totally destroyed it, one only sail having escaped to carry the mournful tidings to France. This catastrophe seemed fatal to the French army, for it cut them off from any communication with their country. Napoleon, however, was not discouraged. 'We must remain here,' said he, 'or emerge from it great like the ancients;' and he immediately set about preparing an expedition into Syria. His plan was to rouse the Christian population of Lebanon and Asia Minor, and reinforcing by their aid his French troops, to approach Constantinople from the Asiatic side, and place himself on the throne of the East. Surprising success in the first instance attended his efforts. He crossed the desert which separates Asia and Africa; stormed Jaffa, and cruelly massacred 4,000 prisoners taken in cold blood, laid siege to Acre, pushed on to Nazareth, the early dwelling-place of our Saviour, and defeated 40,000 Ottomans with great slaughter, at Mount Tabor. But this was the summit of his success. Sir Sidney Smith landed with a party of marines from the British ships at Acre, placed himself with his brave followers in the breach, when the place was on the point of falling, and infused such vigour into the defences that all the assaults of the French were repulsed, and Napoleon, abandoning all his ideas of Oriental conquest, was obliged to wend his way back with disgrace to Egypt. During the retreat, he poisoned several hundreds of his wounded soldiers, to prevent them from falling into the hands of the Turks, by whom they would have been barbarously massacred, and soon after was consoled for his reverses by a victory over 20,000 Janissaries, whom the English landed in the bay of Aboukir. Yet though so great a career awaited him in Europe, Napoleon never ceased lamenting his check at Acre, and repeatedly said, especially when reviving his eventful career in the solitude of St. Helena, when speaking of Sir Sidney Smith, 'That man made me miss my destiny.' But another fate awaited the young general. France speedily felt the want of his tutelary arm when it was withdrawn. 'The sun of Buonaparte,' as Mr. Pitt expressed it, 'was falling before the rising star of Suwarrow.' That daring and celebrated general, at the head of a combined Austrian and Russian army, had defeated the French in several pitched battles on the plains of Lombardy, regained all the fortresses, surmounted the maritime Alps, and appeared on the shores of the Var, on the frontiers of Provence. The republicans had been entirely driven out of Germany, and Massena, shut up in France with 50,000 men, with difficulty maintained himself against the superior army of the archduke Charles and Korsakow. In these circumstances all eyes were turned to Napoleon, as the only man capable of saving the country. He now felt, in his own words, that 'the pear was ripe,' and he resolved to return to Europe. His usual good fortune did not desert him on this occasion. Setting sail in a single frigate from Alexandria, he eluded the English cruisers who were anxiously looking out to intercept his return, and landed safe at Cannes, in Provence, in October, 1799. From thence he proceeded to Paris, where finding the government of the Directory utterly discredited, and in the last stage of decrepitude, he ventured on the bold stroke of a coup d'état, expelled the Legislatures from their halls by means of fixed bayonets, and under the name of 'first consul' seated himself on the throne of France. His first care after this great success, was to expel the Austrians from Italy, the scene of his earliest triumphs and of such obstinate conflicts between them and the French. His plan for this purpose was laid with equal skill and secrecy. Assembling an army, styled 'the army of reserve,' at Dijon, in the heart of France, he suddenly led them across the St. Bernard, a pass 8,000 feet high, deemed impassable for artillery or carriages, overcame the resistance of the Fort of Bard, in the southern declivity of the mountain, entered Milan in triumph, defeated the Austrian advanced guard, 10,000 strong, at Stradilla, and encountered their main body, 30,000 strong, returning from the Var, at Marengo. After an obstinate conflict, in which he was on the point of being destroyed, he defeated them with great slaughter. The peculiar position of the two armies rendered this victory decisive, and demonstrated the strategical skill with which Napoleon's plan of the campaign and march across the St. Bernard had been laid. The Austrians, returning from the Var, fought with their faces towards Vienna and their backs towards the maritime Alps and the bay of Genoa. Defeat in such circumstances was ruin; and Melas, the Austrian commander, was too happy to conclude a convention, in virtue of which, he was allowed to retire to Mantua after delivering up the whole fortresses of Piedmont to the victorious French. Securely seated by this great triumph on the Consular throne, Napoleon ere long forced the Austrians to make peace at Luneville, and thereby pacified the whole continent. He underwent a deep mortification, however, soon after by the successful result of the English expedition, under Sir Ralph Abercrombie, to Egypt, and the wresting from his grasp of his whole conquests on the banks of the Nile. His projects for the destruction of this country, also the great object of his life, were blasted about the same time by Nelson's victory at Copenhagen, which destroyed the northern fleet, and the death of the emperor Paul withdrew Russia from that formidable ally. England and France now had no longer the prospect of fighting. They could not reach each other; they were both victorious on their respective elements, and like monsters of the land and sea, hostility could not be exerted against each other. Sensible of this they concluded peace in June 1801, which put the first period to the dreadful reign of the revolutionary war. The peace, however, proved only an armed truce. Both parties were only gaining breath for a renewal of the contest. Napoleon did great things during its continuance. He reformed the whole civil administration of the empire, and commenced the code Napoleon. He has survived his fall, and forms the most illustrious monument to his memory. He was indefatigable during the interval of hostilities in increasing his navy; and as the English government, in order to the usual infatuated demand of the country, reduction of the national armaments on the pretext of peace, had seriously diminished the British fleet, he was all but overmatched on our own element. Hostilities broke out again in 1803. Encouraged by this hopeful state of affairs, Napoleon ordered a gigantic fleet for our subjugation, which was very near proving successful. Having succeeded in forcing Spain into his alliance, he had ordered for assembling 70 sail of the line in the Channel, who were to transport 130,000 men into Ireland, and 30,000 into Ireland, on board of 2,000 boats, which he had prepared at Boulogne for conveyance across the Channel. Vast as was the plan, it was on the very verge of proving successful. The Toulon fleet set sail from Cadiz, decoyed Nelson into the West Indies; subsequently it encountered Sir R. Calder off Finisterre, with 15 sail of the line, defeated them, and took two sail of the line. This action proved to be the whole design. Velleneuve, who commanded the combined squadron, retreated to Toulon instead of proceeding to Brest, where Ganteaume was ready with 21 sail of the line to join him, he went to Cadiz, where he was blockaded by Nelson, and totally defeated with the loss of 20 sail of the line, on 21st October 1805. Thereafter the maritime war was ended, and Napoleon had to trust solely to his land victories for our destruction. Instantly taking advantage of the line he extracted out of his maritime defeat, he means of achieving his greatest land triumph. Russia had joined Austria, and the army of 120,000 strong, had advanced to Ulm, in the south of Germany. Crossing France and the north of Germany with incredible rapidity, Napoleon defeated the Austrians in several actions, and at length 30,000 in Ulm, where they were forced to surrender the very day before the battle of Austerlitz. Advancing then, at the head of 180,000 men, into the valley of the Danube he captured Vienna, totally defeated the combined Austrian and Russian armies, under the emperor Alexander in person, on 2nd December. This catastrophe drove Austria to separate peace, which she only purchased by the loss of 30,000 men, wended their way in mourning to their own dominions. Next day the Prussians with infatuated hardihood the field. Napoleon encountered them at Jena, Auerstedt, and defeated them with such loss that a few weeks 100,000 men had disappeared and 120,000, with which they had commenced conflict. Prussia was speedily overrun, Berlin was taken, and the remnant of their armies driven back to Vistula, where they were supported by the Russians, who now came up in great strength. Bloody actions took place during the depth of winter, in which the French discovered the sturdy character of the new antagonists with which they had to contend, and in a pitched battle fought at Eylau, on December 8, 1807, the French emperor was defeated with the loss of 30,000 men. But ere long he had his revenge. Having gathered up all his reserves, he collected 150,000 men round his standard, he defeated the Russians, in June, 1807, and after a series of bloody actions, defeated them in a pitched battle at Friedland, on July 14. The result of this battle was the treaty of Tilsit, which virtually reduced all lesser powers, in effect divided the whole continent of Europe between Napoleon and Alexander. Insatiable in ambition, Napoleon had never achieved that great victory over his Russian enemies then he turned his eyes to the Iberian Peninsula, seized on Portugal, without a pretext, of a pretext, and decoyed the king, queen, and their apparent of Spain to Bayonne, where he subjected them to threats, treachery, and cajolery he succeeded in extracting from them all a renunciation of the throne of Spain, upon which he immediately placed his own brother, Joseph, and at the same time gave the throne of Naples to his nephew-in-law, Murat. About the same time he issued the famous Berlin and Milan decrees, and to exclude the English permanently from the whole trade of continental Europe. His abominable treachery to the Spanish royal family set up a frightful war in the Peninsula, which was attended with surprising success. The British surrendered with 25,000 men to Castanos, and Andalusia. Portugal was recovered by Wellington, and the French were obliged to retire behind the Pyrenees. But Napoleon was at hand to repair the loss. Directing his whole reserves from Germany to Spain, he entered Navarre at the head of 100,000 men, defeated the Spaniards in several battles, retook Madrid, and pursued the English under Sir John Moore into Galicia, where, though he was delayed at the eleventh hour a glorious victory was gained over Soult and Ney, they were forced to retreat and return to England, weakened by a loss of their numbers, and having lost the whole object of the campaign. Austria deemed it most favourable when the chief forces of Napoleon were immersed in the Peninsula to endeavor to regain some of her lost provinces. She was accordingly in May, 1809, and advanced 100,000 men into Bavaria, when the archduke Charles at first gained considerable success. But he fled to the spot, defeated the Austrians in several pitched battles, and treacherously gaining possession of the bridge of Vienna, made himself master of that capital. He sustained, however, a check soon after from the archduke Charles at the battle of Aspern, who defeated him with the loss of 30,000 men, and brought him to the very brink of ruin. He recovered himself, however, and collected 150,000 men in Vienna, threw six bridges in one night over the Danube, and defeated the Austrians in a pitched battle which lasted two days, on the field of Wagram. This triumph won for France the peace of Presburg, which deprived Austria of a fourth of her dominions, and for Napoleon the hand of the archduchess Maria Louisa, daughter of the emperor of Austria. He had previously been declared emperor of France in 1804, and divorced Josephine in order to make way for this splendid alliance, and as he was now recognized emperor by all the states in Europe except England, and admitted to a matrimonial connection with the highest and proudest of them, he seemed to have arrived at the utmost limits of earthly grandeur and felicity. Nevertheless, it turned out otherwise, and his marriage proved not only the limit of his good fortune but the commencement of his decline. The emperor Alexander was personally hurt by the Austrian marriage, for Napoleon had been on terms of proposal for his own sister, and he never forgave the affront. This, coupled with the rapid strides of the French emperor in northern Europe, who had halved Prussia, and incorporated Holland, the Hanse Towns, and nearly the whole of northern Germany with his dominions, led to a rupture with Russia in 1812. The whole of 1810 and 1811 was spent by both parties in preparing for this contest, which every one saw was approaching; and at length his preparations being complete, Napoleon crossed the Niemen, and invaded Russia in May, 1812, at the head of 500,000 men, the greatest military armament of real soldiers ever seen since the beginning of the world. The Russians had not half the force to resist this crusade, and the consequence was they were driven back into the very heart of their territories. Smolensko was stormed by Napoleon in person, and in a desperate battle fought at Borodino, on Sept. 6, when 30,000 men fell on both sides, the Russians were so far wasted that they were obliged to abandon Moscow to the conqueror. But this was the extreme point of the French emperor's success. The Russians burned their ancient capital to prevent it from affording shelter to the enemy; the French reduced now by the sword, fatigue, and sickness to 100,000 men, were obliged to retreat on the wasted line of their former advance; and the cold having set in with great severity they were attacked by the Russians on several occasions, with such success that not 20,000 escaped across the Niemen, nearly all in the last stage of exhaustion and misery. Napoleon himself abandoned his troops in the middle of their sufferings, and made his escape to Paris on a sledge accompanied only by a single attendant. This terrible and unexampled reverse, coupled with the victorious career of Wellington in the same year in Spain, who had defeated the French in a pitched battle at Salamanca, recovered Madrid, and liberated all the southern provinces of Spain from their oppressors, produced a general insurrection in Europe. Prussia took up arms; desperate battles were fought at Lutzen, Bautzen, Dresden, and other places; and at length Napoleon having made a last stand at Leipzig, the battle of Giants began on 18th Oct., 1813. 300,000 Germans and Russians commenced the attack, which 200,000 French resisted. 2,500 pieces of cannon spread destruction around, and after a bloody conflict of two days' duration, Napoleon was totally defeated with the loss of 40,000 men and 250 guns, and with difficulty brought back 60,000 of his vast army behind the Rhine. At the same time Wellington, who had totally defeated king Joseph in person at Vittoria, had crossed the Pyrenees and was threatening Bayonne, so that the French empire on all sides was crumbling into ruins. Early in the following spring, the allies invaded France along the whole course of the Rhine, while Wellington pursued his career of success in the south of France. Driven to extremities, Napoleon exerted himself to the utmost, and exhibited the most splendid military abilities. But, although he gained with forces greatly inferior several important victories over the allies, he was at length overpowered. Paris was taken by the emperor of Russia and king of Prussia in person, at the head of 200,000 men. Napoleon was dethroned, and the Bourbons restored to the French throne, and he himself banished to the Isle of Elba, where a mimic sovereignty was permitted him to console his mind after such a dreadful series of reverses. But the restless mind and ambitious spirit of Napoleon could not long rest in this state of forced seclusion. Having ascertained that discontent was universal in the French army, the natural result of their misfortunes, he set out from Elba accompanied only by 600 of the old guard who had shared his exile, and landing at Cannes, marched to Paris without opposition, dethroned Louis XVIII., and re-established himself on the throne of France. He was then immediately denounced by the allied sovereigns, who set about collecting forces on his frontiers; and despairing of averting a war by negotiation, he resolved, with his usual vigour and decision, to anticipate the allies and strike the first blow. He all but succeeded. Crossing the frontier of Flanders, on the morning of the 15th June, 1815, he attacked and defeated the Prussians, 80,000 strong, under Blücher, at Ligny, and the same day sustained a bloody conflict with Wellington's advanced guard, in which he was at length routed at Quatre Bras. But two days after he met the stroke of fate. Wellington retired to and stood firm at Waterloo, where, on the 18th, he gave battle to the French, with an army nearly equal in numerical amount, but greatly inferior in artillery and the quality of part of his troops, being not more than a-half of them English. A desperate battle ensued, in which both parties displayed prodigies of valour, and victory seemed long doubtful. At length the Prussians came up late in the evening, and Napoleon was by the united allied force totally defeated with the loss of 40,000 men and 150 pieces of cannon. This victory was decisive: Napoleon fled to Paris, where he was soon after forced to abdicate the throne and surrender to the English cruisers. St. Helena was assigned as the future residence of the fallen conqueror, where he was guarded with the most vigilant care by the English troops and vessels, to whom the custody of the illustrious state prisoner was committed. He remained there fretting in inaction and loudly complaining of trifling indignities till the period of his death, which occurred on May 5, 1821. His conduct there exhibited alternately the grandeur of a noble and the littleness of a despicable man. He wrote several most able and interesting works, chiefly relating to his eventful biography, and which, not less than his long series of victories, has tributed to his colossal fame; but at the time he fretted beyond measure at being denied the title of emperor, and attended even at a distance by English sentinels in his rides. He was frequently treated by the English government with expensed £12,000 a-year on his private establishment, and £400,000 yearly on the island; his ardent spirit could not brook even indignity and real inaction. His imaginations, coupled with a hereditary malady, in the stomach, of which his father had died, led on a mortal distemper, of which he died May, 1821. He quitted this life during a storm of wind and rain, which recalled to his mind the roar of battle. His last words were d'armée (head of the army). He was interred

[Tomb of Napoleon at St. Helena.]

Slain's valley, in the island of St. Helena, whence his remains were, in December, 1840, by the consent of the English government, transported to Paris, where on the 15th of that month they were interred in a mausoleum under the dome of the Invalides, and now repose beside the bones of Louis XVI. and Louis XVIII., the paladins of France.

[Tomb of Napoleon at the Invalides.]

APPER-TANDY. See TANDY.

ARBONNE, the viscounts of, distinguished any particular merits are,—AYMERI, died in Holy Land beginning of the 12th century. AYMERI II., perished in Arragon, on his way to join Alfonso against the Moors, 1134. ERMENDE, famous for the wise administration of her government, abdicated in favour of her nephew, died 1197. PIERRE DE LARA, nephew and successor of the preceding, abdicated in favour of Aymeri III., son and successor of the preceding, subduced by Simon de Montfort, who took the title of duke of Narbonne, 1239. AYMERI IV., or AMELRIC I., son and successor of the latter, died 1270. AYMERI V., son and successor of the preceding, and his successor in the government, 1270, died 1298. AYMERI VI., or AMELRIC II., son and successor of the preceding, commander of the troops of Florentine for Charles II., king of Sicily, died 1328. AYMERI VII., his son, who succeeded him, died 1341. AMELRIC III., son and successor of the preceding, died 1341. AYMERI VIII., brother and successor of the latter, named admiral of France by Charles V., 1369, died 1388.

ARBONNE-LARA, LOUIS, Count De, minister of war under Louis XVI., and lieutenant-general and ambassador to Vienna under the emperor, born at Parma 1755, died 1813.

ARBONNE-PELET-FRITZLAR, J. F., Count De, a French officer, died 1784.

ARBOROUGH, SIR JOHN, an English naval officer, died against the Dutch and Algerines, d. 1688.

ARCISSUS, the freedman and favourite of Augustus, memorable for his part in the fall of Agrippina: being afterwards exiled by the emperor, Agrippina, he died by his own hand 54.

ARCISSUS, Sr., patriarch of Jerusalem, died 216.

ARDI, JACOPO, an Italian histor., 1476-1555.

ARDIN, TH., a French merchant, 1540-1616.

ARDINI, P., an Italian violinist, 1725-1796.

AREG, G. DE, an Armenian ascetic, 951-1003.

AREES, JAMES, an eminent English composer and director of music, successor of Dr. Green as organist and composer to the king, author of a treatise on Singing, &c., 1715-1783. His son, Robert, assistant librarian at the British Museum, published as a theologian and critic, died 1829.

AREW, nephew of James, a clergyman of the church of England, 1762-1841.

ARENI, J. M. DE, a Capuchin preach., 17th c.

ARESES, the companion-in-arms of Belisarius, one of the most successful generals of the empire of Justinian, was an Asiatic slave and whom the latter had taken into favour and appointed to a command in 538. Between 540 and 552, he put an end to the dominion of the Goths in Italy, and in 553 was himself emperor, and fixed his court at Ravenna.

AREW, deposed under the emperor Justinus II. and died at Rome 568.

ARESZEWIEZ, ADAM STANISLAUS, a lyrical and historian of Poland, 1783-1796.

AREZ, PAMPHILA DE, one of the Spanish poets of America, killed in Florida, 1526.

ARE, CORNELIUS, a catholic div., 1660-1738.

ARELLI, F., an Italian painter, died 1630.

ARELLI, JOHN, a distinguished architect of the metropolis, originally a miniature painter, designer of Buckingham palace, the Brighton pavilion, the Haymarket theatre, the Regent-Street improvements, &c., 1752-1835.

NASH, RICHARD, a man of taste and pleasure, commonly called Beau Nash, and the King of Bath, in which city he was for more than fifty years the arbiter of fashion. Born at Swansea in Glamorganshire 1674, died 1761.

NASH, THOMAS, a dramatic writer and satirist, known as the literary antagonist of the puritan writer Marprelate, flourished about 1558-1601.

NASH, T. R., a divine and antiq., 1724-1811.

NASINI, J. N., an Italian painter, 1650-1736.

NASMITH, J., a divine and antiq., 1740-1808.

NASMYTH, A., a Scotch painter, 1757-1840.

NASMYTH, P., a Scotch painter, 1786-1831.

NASSIR, EDDIN, a Persian astronomer, 1201-74.

NATALE, J., a Span. Jesuit, who co-operated with Loyola, and became vicar-general, died 1580.

NATALI, P., a Venetian hagiographer, 14th ct.

NATALIS, M., a French engraver, died 1670.

NATHAN, a Jewish prophet, 10th cent. B.C.

NATHAN-BEN-JECHIEL, a learned rabbin, president of the synagogue at Rome, died 1106.

NATHAN, ISAAC, a rabbi of the 15th century, who was the first Jew to write a Concordance.

NATHAN, NATA-SPIRA, a rabbi of the 17th c.

NATTIER, J. M., a French painter, 1685-1766.

NATTIER, L., a medal engraver, died 1763.

NAU, M., a Fr. Jesuit missionary, 1631-1683.

NAUBERT, B., a German novelist, 1755-1819.

NAUDE, GABRIEL, a French physician, author of an 'Apology for Great Men Accused of Magic,' the principal argument of which is his scepticism concerning the existence of spirits, 1600-1653.

NAUDE, PHILIP, a Fr. mathema., 1654-1729.

NAUDET, T. C., a French painter, 1774-1810.

NAUMANN, JOHANN GOTTLIEB, master of the electoral chapel at Dresden, and one of the first German composers, was born of very poor parents, in a small village near Dresden, in 1741. He received his principal instructions in music from a Swedish master, named Van Weestrom, who took him to Italy and used him in a severe and niggardly manner. Though Naumann had to struggle on amidst poverty and hardships his industry never relaxed. He pursued his studies until he made himself one of the first musicians of his age.

His compositions, which were very numerous, include works of every kind, operas, oratorios, songs, cantatas, odes, compositions for the piano-forte, symphonies, &c. For the last years of his life, he devoted himself to the composition of sacred music, and left many valuable works in the library of the chapel of Dresden. He died of apoplexy, in the year 1801. [J.M.]

NAUNTON, SIR ROBERT, secretary of state to James I., author of historical notices of Queen Elizabeth and others, died 1635.

NAUSEA, F., a Ger. prelate, about 1480-1552.

NAVAGERO, ANDREA, in Latin, NAUGERICES, a Venetian noble, distinguished as a poet and orator, 1483-1529.

NAVAGERO, B., a Venetian cardinal, 1507-65.

NAVARETTA, DOMINGO FERNANDEZ, a Spanish friar and missionary to China, died 1689.

NAVARETTE, J. F., a Spanish painter, called 'El Mudo,' being deaf and dumb, 1526-1579.

NAVARE, HENRY OF, the popular designation of Henry IV., king of France, was the son of Anthony of Bourbon, king of Navarre, descended in the direct male line from Robert of Clermont, fifth son of Saint Louis. He is sometimes called Henry of Béarn, from his birth-place, where he first saw the light in 1553. His mother, Jeanne D'Albret, educated him as a Calvinist, and though she imparted to him the full measure of her own intrepidity and intellectual superiority, it was unaccompanied with either her constancy of purpose or her domestic virtues. In 1569 she presented the young prince to the protestant camp at Rochelle, where he was hailed chief of the party—its leaders at that time being the famous Condé and Coligni. A few weeks afterwards, the battle of Montcontour deprived the Calvinists (or Huguenots as they were called) of 16,000 brave soldiers left on the field or taken prisoners, and on the 11th of August, 1570, the civil wars were hushed for the time by the peace of St. Germain. This was followed by a negotiation for the marriage of Henry with the Princess Margaret, daughter of Catherine de Medici, and sister of the reigning king, Charles IX., the catholic party, however, darkly plotting the massacre of St. Bartholomew, which, in August, 1572, drowned the marriage festival in blood. Henry, who was in the power of the king, saved his life by embracing catholicism; and remaining at the French court till 1576, was imbued with its licentiousness and intriguing policy. Meanwhile the succession of Henry III., brother of Charles IX., in 1574, tended to a breach of the truce with the Huguenots, in consequence of the ambitious designs and religious hatred of the Guises, chiefs of the catholic league, and in 1576 Henry of Navarre made his escape from Paris, and rejoined the protestants, once more in arms. He now displayed all the qualities of a great commander, and some years following were occupied with military operations and negotiations for peace, in which the reigning king accumulated defeat and shame upon himself, under the dictation of the duke of Guise; and the name of Henry of Navarre became identified with the protestant cause and the liberties of France. In 1585 he was excommunicated by Sixtus Quintus, and in October, 1587, obtained a splendid victory over the duke of Joyeuse at Contras. The year 1588 was signalized by the attempt of the reigning king to liberate himself from the dictation of Guise, whom in December of that year he caused to be assassinated. He then made overtures to Henry of Navarre, who joined him with his troops, and took the field against the league—their reconciliation leading to his acknowledgment as the rightful successor by Henry III., who was assassinated in August, 1589. Henry of Navarre, at the head of his protestant subjects, had now to conquer his kingdom, his opponents being the duke of Mayenne, appointed lieutenant-general by the parliament of Paris, and in alliance with him the old catholic league, the house of Savoy, the forces of Spain, and the Cardinal de Bourbon, whom Mayenne acknowledged king. Henry repulsed Mayenne at Arques in 1589, and gained the great battle of Ivry in March, 1590, but was compelled to desist from the siege of Paris, and more lately from the siege of Rouen, both these cities being relieved by his active enemy the duke of Parma. The forces of the two were capable of carrying on the war for a finite period, but neither of them could obtain the superiority. So at least it seemed to their leaders, and as a consequence, in July Henry purchased the crown by his apostasy to the catholics on their part agreeing to the terms of the Huguenots. In 1594 he entered Paris, the principal cities of the kingdom soon submitted to him, and in the same year the Jesuits were condemned to exile in consequence of an attack on the king's life by the fanatic John Chastellaine held out in Burgundy till 1596, and the Spaniards till 1598, when the war was closed by the treaty of Vervins. By the edict of Nantes, dated this year, Henry secured to his protestant subjects the freedom of worship and education, and they were even allowed to occupy fortified cities as a guarantee of its fulfilment. The remaining political events of this reign are summed up in our account of SULLY, the minister, whose designs were often crossed by Henry's intrigues with his mistresses. The MARIE DE MEDICI may also be consulted for the princess having been married to him on the 10th of Margaret in 1601. Henry of Navarre, the dagger of Ravallac, 14th May, 1610, preparing for a political war with the house of Austria, and was succeeded by his son, Louis XIII. He was the most popular monarch ever reigned over France, and was certainly the possessor of many high and kinglike qualities. The questionable point in his career is the compromise of his faith by the public profession of catholicism as a means of peace. Granting the sincerity of his motives, there is the question whether he ever could have had the faith of a protestant; the principles of the Bible, or the trust of a devout man in the final triumph of God's kingdom. On the other hand, the character of the nation must be considered, and the adaptation of Calvinism and catholicism, respectively, to the outward habits of a people in many respects otherwise.

NAVARE, M., a Spanish theologian, 1491.

NAVARE, P., a native of Biscay, known as a military adventurer and engineer, died 1528.

NAYLOR, JAMES, a well-known emigrant among the Quakers, was a native of York, born 1616. Converted by the preaching of George Fox, after serving in the parliamentary army 1651, he was punished with the severest penalties for his extravagance, and died 1660.

NEAL, DANIEL, a dissenting minister, author of a 'History of the Puritans,' 'History of the dissenting churches of England,' and other works, 1678-1743.

NEAL, or NELE, T., a catholic divine, born 1724.

NEANDER, C. F., a German poet, 1724.

NEANDER, JOHANN AUGUST, the celebrated Church Historian, was of Jewish descent, and born at Göttingen, 13th January, 1789. Having placed in Hamburg to attend the classical studies of that town, he was introduced, during his residence, to the acquaintance of several Christian families, by whose conversation, as well as by religious works put in his way, he early renounced Judaism, and embraced the Christian faith. He was token of the sincerity and strength of his faith by being publicly baptized, and, farther, assum-name 'NEANDER,' from two Greek words signifying a new man. Having resolved to dedicate himself to the pursuits of Theology, he repaired in 1806-12, to study successively at the Universities of Halle, Göttingen, and Heidelberg, and at the end of that period, the extraordinary extent of his acquirements raised him at once to the status of professor Extraordinarius of Theology. Thence, a wide-spread fame procured his removal in a few years to the Metropolitan University of Berlin, the scene of his public labours and honours, and where he spent a life of intense devotedness to the study of Ecclesiastical History and Literature. He was a very pious as well as learned man. In his pursuits, his animating principle was the love of Christ, and the advancement of the Redeemer's Kingdom: and accordingly he was a warm supporter of Bible and Missionary Societies, to the aid of which, as well as to the cause of general edification, he frequently contributed the whole proceeds of his publications. He took the greatest interest in his students, was always ready to assist and meritorious young men with his counsel, at his purse, and was in the habit of inviting a host of them every Saturday evening to his house, where he held a familiar and literary conversazione. Neander was an interesting and most instructive teacher. His classes were always crowded, and the hundreds of ministers, protestant, catholic, as well as minor denominations, scattered throughout Germany, who attended his prelections, show the extent of his reputation, and the value of his literary services. From his extreme short-sightedness, as well as his fits of mental abstraction, he was ever eccentric in some of his habits. He was rarely ever trusted to walk alone in the streets; a friend or his sister generally accompanying him from his house to the lecture-room, and waiting at the door to conduct him home again. He was a man of warm affections, of amiable manners, and of bounded charity. Many a poor student was indebted to him, not for gratuitous attendance on lectures only, but for maintenance at the university; and not seldom has he been known to give all the money he had about him away, the moment an appeal was made to his benevolence. The character, as well as the writings of Neander, has exercised an extensive and beneficial influence on the religious sentiments and state of Germany. Many found in him a stern and uncompromising, but at the same time, a calm and judicious opponent; perhaps none, in the modern school of Evangelical divines, not even excepting Schleiermacher and Fichte, have rendered such essential aid in restoring his countrymen to soundness in the faith. Neander having been seized with sudden illness during the delivery of his lecture, was with difficulty conveyed home, where he lingered in great sufferings till the 14th July, 1850, when he peacefully fell asleep. His funeral was attended by a large concourse of citizens, many of them in the highest rank in Berlin. A funeral discourse was pronounced, in German fashion, first in his own language, another address being delivered, by Dr. Baumgarten, at the grave. Neander's works, which have also held in high estimation in England and America, as well as in his own country, consist of several volumes. The chief of them are 'The Kingdom of Christ,' in refutation of Strauss, his

'General History of the Church,' and his 'History of the Apostolic Church.' [R.J.]

NEANDER, M., a Germ. philologist, 1525-95.

NEANDER, M., a German physician, 1529-81.

NEARCHUS, a Greek navigator, 4th cent. B.C.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR, whose name is otherwise written Nebuchadrezzar, Nabuchodonosor, &c., was a king of Assyria, who is supposed to have reigned from 669 to 648 B.C.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR, otherwise Nabopolassar, was a king of Babylonia, who united with Assyria in the conquest of Syria, and founded the second Assyrio-Babylonian empire, 626-605 B.C.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR, 'the Great,' who is the king of that name so much spoken of in Scripture, was the son and successor of the preceding. He died, after a reign of 43 years, B.C. 562.

NECHAM, NECKHAM, or NEQUAM, ALEXANDER, an English monk, who became abbot of Cirencester, and died 1217. He is author of a great variety of works remaining in MS.

NECK, JOHN VAN, a Dut. painter, 1635-1714.

NECKER, JAMES, the famous minister at the commencement of the French revolution, was descended from a family originally German, and was born at Geneva, where his father was in practice as an advocate, 1732. Having in a few years made a handsome fortune as a banker, he became, in 1764, syndic of the French India Company, which was dissolved by the government in 1770. Necker, ambitious of rising in the public service, now made himself known as an economist by publishing, in 1773, his 'Eulogium of Colbert,' the beginning of his controversy with the economists of the school of Quesnay. His next step was to forward a Memoir upon the French Finances to Maurepas, president of the Council of Finances, who persuaded Louis XVI. to appoint him to the treasury, the direction of which he retained during the five years 1776-1781. In May of the last mentioned year he resigned, in consequence of being refused a seat in the council—the fact being that his suppression of abuses had created him many enemies at court. He then published his famous 'Compte Rendu,' in which he furnished the public with a clear statement of the condition in which he had found things, of what he had done, and what he had intended to do. The effect of this document was quite startling—it was translated into all the languages of Europe; and when the successors of Necker, Calonne and Lomenie Brienne, were compelled to retire by the disastrous state of the finances, the honest minister was recalled, and public credit began to revive again. This was on the 24th of August, 1788. On the 6th of November he summoned the old notables, who had met under Lomenie Brienne in 1787, and they remained in session till 12th December. In January of the following year the states-general were convoked, in fulfilment of the previous pledges of the government, and in May they were assembled for business. The constitution of this body was ruled by the advice of Necker, to whom therefore it was owing that the members of the 'Tiers Etat' were equal in number to the nobles and the clergy united. This circumstance occasioned a 'dead lock,' disagreement arising on matters of form necessary to constitute the assembly, and after three weeks had been wasted in altercation, a 'Séance Royale' was resolved upon, in which instructions were to be given from the throne. The deputies being excluded from the hall while preparations were making for this sitting, held that famous meeting in the Tennis Court, presided over by Bailly, where they swore an oath to meet under all circumstances, and in all places wherever they could get together, and not to separate till they had made the constitution. The issue of the 'Séance Royale' may be read in the article MYRABEAU, and to which that Nocker made a decided stand in favour of the people, resisted the attempt to coerce the assembly by the action of the army, and in the course of a fortnight, 11th July, received his dismissal. This was known to Paris on the 12th, and the people instantly rose in arms, one of their principal movers being Osmile Desmoulins, and their first step a tumultuous procession through the streets, bearing aloft the wax busts of Nocker and the duc d'Orléans. On the 14th the Bastille was taken; on the 15th Nocker was recalled, and his return to Paris was marked by a popular ovation, which placed him at the very summit of renown. He remained in office till 2d September, 1790, taking no salary, and advancing as much as two millions of livres to the government. During the whole of this period his popularity was rapidly declining under the rising star of Mirabeau, on the one hand, and the increasing difficulties of carrying on the government with such a court as that of Louis XVI. on the other. On the date mentioned he asked permission to resign, leaving the money he had advanced, together with his house and furniture, as the material guarantee of his previous integrity, and this being with the greatest indifference accorded him, he retired to Cugot, near Geneva, where he died in 1804. Nocker was married in 1764 to Mademoiselle Cuvier, the daughter of a Swiss minister, who had previously won the heart of the historian Gibbon, (next article), and his daughter by her became the famous Madame de Staël. This lady published the numerous works of her father, whom she almost idolized, in 15 vols. 8vo, 1821. [E.R.]

NECKER, MADAME, whose maiden name was Susannah Cuvier, was born in 1789, in the mountain village of Grussy, situated between the Pays de Vaud and Franche-Comté. Her father was a man of considerable talents as a pastor of the Swiss church; her mother was descended from an ancient family of Provence, who had fled to Switzerland on the revocation of the edict of Nantes. As stated in the preceding article, this accomplished lady was married to the minister Necker, and she greatly distinguished herself during his terms of office in every possible form of benevolence. She erected an hospital in Paris with her own money, was a great reformer of prison abuses, and surrounded herself with the most distinguished men of the time, who offered her the homage due to her great learning, and her rare goodness of heart. She died in 1796, the year after publishing her 'Reflections on Divorce.' Her works were published by her husband in 5 vols. 8vo, 1798 and 1801. [E.R.]

NECKER, N. J., a Flem. botanist, 1729-1798.

NECTARIUS, patriarch of Constantinople, 381-392.

NECTARIUS, patriarch of Jerusalem, d. 1668.

NEEDHAM, JOHN TILBURYVILLE, a Rom Catholic divine, distinguished as a naturalist and physiologist, 1718-1781.

NEEDHAM, M., a political writer, 1690-16

NEEDHAM, W., an anatomical writer, died 1

NEEF, or NEELS, PETER, the elder of name, a Flemish painter, 1670-1681. The younger his son, born about 1690.

NEEL, L. R., a French author, died 1744.

NEELE, HENRY, a poet and miscellaneous writer, born 1708, died by his own hand 1808.

NEER, ARNOLD VAN DER, a Dutch painter, 1619-1688. His son and pupil, EUGEN NEER, distinguished for his portraits and historical compositions, 1648-1708.

NEGRI, P., a Venetian painter, 17th century.

NEGRI, VIRGINIUS, see NEGRI, above, d. 17

NEGRO, NERO, or NIGER, ANTONIONE, an astronomer of Genoa, born 1270.

NEGRO, F., an Italian saint, 16th century.

NEHEMIAH, a celebrated Jew of the age who obtained permission of Artaxerxes I. to rebuild the Temple, and govern the people, 5th century B.C.

NELEDMINSKY, MELECKI, JURI ALEXANDROVITCH, a Russian song-writer, 1781-1802.

[Birth-place of Nelson.]

NELSON. HORATIO NELSON was born September, 1758, at Burnham Thorpe, in Norfolk. His father was a clergyman of the Church of England, and the rector of Burnham Thorpe parish. His uncle, by the mother's side, Captain Saundby, commanded the Raisonnable, a sixth-rate ship, on board of which young Nelson entered as a midshipman at the age of 12. He was a lad of weakly frame, and soon ill-suited for the hardships of a seafaring life, but he had moral courage as well as physical courage of the highest order. His strong sense of duty, combined by earnest religious feeling, gave him once the keenest incentive to exertion, and a falling stay and support amid the vicissitudes of fortune. As boy, and as man, he won the confidence of all whom he met, whether as superiors, equals, or inferiors. The details of Nelson's early life, as given in Southey's admirable biography, abound in such marks out the spirit of the future hero of the Nile and Trafalgar, and of the almost of the British navy.—In 1773, Nelson served as a volunteer on the Polaris under Commodore Phipps. In 1777 he was made a lieutenant, two years afterwards he obtained the rank of captain, and the command of the HMS Agamemnon of 28 guns. He distinguished himself in separate attacks on the Spanish forts in Egypt, and served on the American coast till general peace in 1783.—In 1784 he was appointed to the Bonetta, and for some time was posted in the West Indies. He here showed unusual courage and independence of character in stopping the contraband traffic which the French carried on with our colonies. This had remained at, and even sanctioned by the local authorities in the islands, and Nelson ran constant risk of ruin in peace and in professional prospects by the steady course which he pursued. He said himself afterwards of this part of his career, 'Conscious certitudes came through it;' and he obtained in the end the thanks of our government for his patriotic conduct. While in the West Indies he married Elizabeth, the widow of Dr. Nisbet, a physician. In England took part in the wars of the revolution, Nelson was appointed to the Agamemnon, a 64 gun-ship. He did good service out of her in the Mediterranean during 1794, and 1795, and he equally signalized himself on shore in Corsica, while co-operating with the patriotic party in that island against the French. He lost an eye at the siege of Calvi. In 1796 he took a distinguished part in the victory over the Spanish fleet off Cape St. Vincent. He commanded the Captain, 74, in the action; and boarded and captured two of the enemy's large ships, the San Nicolas and the San Juan. He led the boarders himself from the Agamemnon to these prizes to the other, exclaiming the while, 'Westminster Abbey or victory!' He was now knighted, and advanced to the rank of rear-admiral. In 1797 he led an expedition on the island of Tenerife, which was defeated with severe loss to the assailants. He was not the attack in person, but his right arm and his life was saved with the greatest gallantry by his son-in-law, Lieutenant Nesbit. A memorial which he was required to present, in answer of terms, after this action, to enable him to pension, he gave in the following catalogue of services performed by him during the war. It has been in four actions with the fleets of the British in three distant war expeditions, and in another seven. He had served ashore with only two months, and commanded the batteries in two sieges. He had assisted in the capture of seven sail of the line, six frigates, four ships, eleven privateers, and fifty sail of small vessels. He had been actually personally engaged with the enemy one hundred and thirteen times, in which service he had lost his right arm and his right arm, and received several wounds and contusions in the body.—In 1798 he joined the fleet in the Mediterranean, and went with a squadron to watch the French fleet which was fitting out at Toulon, and was ultimately escaped by favour of the weather. He did not arrive off Egypt. Nelson did not arrive off time to prevent Buonaparte's army from landing, but he found the French fleet in Aboukir Bay, on the 1st of August, and though it far outnumbered his own force, he instantly attacked and nearly destroyed it in a battle, which it is hard to watch in naval warfare, either for the genius shown by the victorious admiral in his tactics, or the heroism which he and his men displayed throughout the contest. This, the battle of the Nile, was, as Nelson truly said, not a mere victory, it was a conquest; and Napoleon in his memories bears ample testimony to its decisive effects on the French prospects. Nelson was now raised to the peerage, and honours of the highest kind were heaped on him by every Court that was engaged in war with France. He now took an active part in restoring the royal family of Naples to the throne of that country; and formed an unfortunate attachment for Lady Hamilton, a companion of the Neapolitan Queen, which led to the destruction of Nelson's domestic happiness; and caused his fame to be sullied by his leading his old to the cruel reprisals which the mean and cowardly Bourbons of Naples took on the chiefs of their lately insurgent subjects. In 1801, Nelson was second in command of the expedition which was sent against Denmark. On the 2d of April in that year, he led the advanced squadron of the fleet against the Danish capital, and fought the desperate battle of Copenhagen. He refused to obey the signal to retire, which the commander-in-chief, alarmed at his peril, displayed; and continued the action till the Danish line of defence was nearly destroyed. A flag of truce was then sent by him, and after some negotiation the Danes submitted to the requisitions of the English government. On the renewal of the war between England and France, after the breach of the peace of Amiens, in 1803, Nelson received the command of the Mediterranean fleet. He blockaded Toulon for many months, but at length the French squadron under Admiral Villeneuve escaped to sea, and effected a junction with the Spanish ships off Cadiz. The combined fleets now sailed for the West Indies, and thither and back again to Europe did Nelson follow them, twice traversing the Atlantic in unrelenting but unsuccessful chase. When Nelson anchored at Gibraltar on the 20th June, 1805, he went on shore for the first time since 16th June, 1803. In his own words, 'he had not had his foot out of his ship, the Victory, for two years, wanting only ten days.' For the seamanship and resolution which the English admiral showed during this arduous part of his career, the warmest eulogium is to be found in the writings of a French naval officer, in Captain Julien de la Gravière's History of the Last Naval War. Nelson returned to England; but when intelligence arrived that the combined enemies' fleets, after their action with Sir Robert Calder, were at Cadiz, Nelson volunteered to take the command again against them. His services were gladly accepted, and on the 15th Sept., 1805, our fine old English admiral left England for the last time. He arrived off Cadiz on the 25th Sept.; and, on the 16th of October, the enemy's admiral came out of port. They were defeated by Nelson's skillful tactics, as to the number of the English ships, and they hoped to crush him with an overwhelming force. Even as it was, they had 33 sail of the line and 7 frigates, against 27 of the line and

5 frigates under Nelson. On the 21st of October, he attacked them off Cape Trafalgar. Forming his fleet into two columns, one of which he led himself in the Victory, while Collingwood led the other in the Royal Sovereign, Nelson burst through the double line of the French and Spaniards, and brought on the close and general action, for which he had long ardently prayed. In four hours 20 of the enemy had struck; others were flying in despair; and the marine on which Napoleon had relied for the invasion of England was annihilated. But the victory was bought at the expense of the chief victor's life. About a quarter past one, in the heat of the battle, Nelson was shot through the back by a musket ball. He survived long enough to know that the victory was complete; and his last words were, 'Thank God I have done my duty.' His ever-memorable signal to his fleet, immediately before the battle commenced, had been 'England expects every man to do his duty,' and, if ever a man lived and died in earnest, fearless, unselfish discharge of his duty to his country, it was Admiral Nelson, victor of the Nile, Copenhagen, and Trafalgar. [E.S.C.]

NELSON, ROBERT, a minister of the Church of England, known as the author of several devout and learned works, the principal of which is his well-known 'Festivals and Fasts.' For the substance of this work, there is reason to believe, he was greatly indebted to Dr. Francis Lee. He is generally called 'the pious Nelson,' and was much esteemed by Archbishop Tillotson, who died in his arms. Born in London 1656, died 1715.

NELSON, SAMUEL, an Irish patriot, and editor of the 'Northern Star,' in the rebellion of 1790.

NEMESIUS, a Christian philosopher, 4th cent.

NEMOURS, a titular name borne by several persons distinguished in French history, among whom are—JAMES D'ARMAGNAC, Duc De Nemours, cousin by marriage to Louis XI., who caused him to be beheaded 1477. LOUIS, his son and successor in the duchy, viceroy of Naples for Charles VIII., killed at the battle of Cerignola 1503. GASTON DE FOIX, son of Mary, sister of Louis XII., killed at the battle of Ravenna 1512. PHILIP OF SAVOY, uncle to Francis I., who invested him with the duchy 1528. JAMES OF SAVOY, a distinguished commander, 1531-1585. HENRY, second son and successor of James, connected with the league, and afterwards with Henry IV., 1571-1632. HENRY II., second son and successor of Henry I., born 1625, appointed archbishop of Rheims 1651, abandoned the church on the death of his elder brother, and married Mary D'Orleans, daughter of the duc de Longueville, 1657, died 1659. This lady survived her husband many years, and, in 1694, was recognized sovereign of Neuchâtel. She died in 1707, leaving valuable 'Memoirs' of the minority of Louis XIV. and the wars of the Fronde. The title was borne again by the second son of Louis Philippe, late king of the French.

NENNIUS, a British historian, 7th century.

NENY, P. MAC, a Belgian statesman, 1712-84.

NEPOS, CORNELIUS, a Roman historian of the time of Julius Cæsar and the first six years of Augustus. The only remains of his works are some short biographies of twenty Greek generals, and of Hamilcar and Hannibal.

NEPOS, FLAVIUS JULIUS, emperor of the V predecessor of Augustulus, 473-475.

NEPREU, F., an ascetic writer, 1639-1708.

NERI, POMPEO, an Ital. economist, 1707-1

NERI, SAINT PHILIP DE, founder of the congregation of the Oratory in Italy, 1515-1595.

NERLI, FILIPPO, an Ital. historian, 1485-1

NERO, emperor of Rome, whose full name

LUCIUS DOMITIUS NERO CLAUDIUS CÆSAR the son of Domitius Ahenobarbus and of Agrippina, daughter of Germanicus. He was born at Antium, and after the marriage of his mother in third nuptials, with her uncle, the emperor Claudius, was adopted by that prince, and made to his daughter Octavia. When Nero was seventeen years of age his abandoned mother poisoned her husband, Claudius, and by means of her criminal favours succeeded in raising her son to the throne, over whom she expected to exercise the most absolute control. Nero became emperor in 54, and the year following disposed of the youthful heir, Britannicus, by poison. For the first years his public conduct, under the control of Agrippina and Seneca, was unexceptionable: in private, however, he disgraced himself by the most dissolute vices, and his mother endeavoured to retain influence by shamefully complying with his inclinations. In 59 Nero caused this detestable woman to be murdered, and then, fearing no rival in power, gave full scope to the darkest traits of his character. In 62 he repudiated his wife Octavia. In 64 the burning of Rome occurred, which was charged, with great probability, upon Nero himself, who, however, accused the Christians of this crime, and made it the occasion of the most dreadful cruelties towards them. His debaucheries and cruelties occasioned an almost general conspiracy against him, known as that of Piso, in 65, the discovery of which led to more tortures and bloodshed. The revolt of Vindex was also suppressed. In 68 Galba succeeded, and Nero escaped by stabbing himself, being then in the thirty-first year of his age, and the fourteenth of his reign. He was a lover of arts and letters, and possessed much taste as a poet and histrionic performer. It was the remark of Nero's father, Ahenobarbus, that 'nothing but what was hateful and pernicious to mankind, could ever come from Agrippina and herself.' Yet, the story of a strange hamlet strewed flowers upon the tomb of this tyrant, well known.

NERVA, MARCUS COCCEIUS, emperor of Rome, was born 27, and was twice consul,—with Trajan in 71, and with Domitian in 90. He succeeded to the sovereign power on the assassination of the latter 96; died 98. Trajan succeeded him.

NESBIT, or NISBET, ALEXANDER, a Scotch antiquarian and writer on heraldry, 1672-17

NESMOND, T. DE, a French prelate, died 17

NESSE, C., a nonconformist divine, 1621-96.

NESSEL, D. DE, a Ger. bibliographer, 16

NESSON, P. DE, a French poet, 15th cent.

NESTOR, a monk of Kieff, whose annals are the sources of Slavonic history, 1056-1116.

NESTOR, D., a classical writer, 15th cent.

NESTORIUS, a patriarch of Constantinople in the 5th century, author of the Nestorianism, which is represented to this day by a separate body of Christians in Mesopotamia. The people his doctrine was that of Anastasius, who held it was the human person, and not the divine, that suffered in Jesus. Nestorius was deposed by council assembled at Ephesus 431.

NETSCHER, the name of three Dutch painters. ASPAR, the father, celebrated for his domestic scenes and portraits, 1639-1684. THEODORE, his eldest son, a good painter of female portraits, 1661-1722. CONSTANTINE, younger brother of the elder, dist. for his portraits and groups, 1670-1722. NETTELBLADT, CHRISTIAN, Baron De, a Danish jurist, histor., and antiquary, 1696-1776. NETTELBLADT, DANIEL, a learned German lawyer, 1719-1791. His brother, HENRY, historiographer of Mecklenburg, died 1761.

NETTIER, THOMAS, an English monk, professor of philosophy and divinity, and privy councillor to Henry V., died 1430.

NETTLETON, THOMAS, a physician of Halifax, known as a miscellaneous writer, 1683-1742.

NEUBECK, V. W., a German poet, born 1765.

NEUHOF, THEODORE STEPHEN, Baron Von, a Prussian adventurer, born of a noble family at Danzig in 1690, and proclaimed king of Corsica and died in London 1755.

NEUKIRCH, B., a German poet, 1665-1729.

NEUMANN, G., a Germ. Hebraist, 1648-1715.

NEUMANN, G., a German chemist, 1683-1737.

NEUMANN, J. G., a Lutheran div., 1661-1709.

NEUSER, A., a Germ. theologian, died 1576.

NEVE, TIMOTHY, a dignitary of the Church of England, and professor of divinity, son of a divine of the same name, author of 'Sermons,' 'Notes on Cardinal Pole,' &c., 1724-1798.

NEVILE, or NEVYLE, ALEXANDER, secretary to Archbishop Parker, known as a scholar and poet, 1544-1614.

NEVILE, or NEVILLE, HENRY, a republican writer, member of the council, 1620-94.

NEVILE, or NEVIL, THOMAS, brother of Alexander Nevile, the dean of Canterbury, known as an eminent benefactor of Trinity College, died 1615.

NEVIZAN, J., an Ital. juriconsult, died 1549.

NEWBOROUGH, or NEWBURGH, WILLIAM, commonly known as Gulielmus Newbrigensis, a classic historian of the period, 1066-1197.

NEWCASTLE. See CAVENDISH and HOLLIS.

NEWCOMBE, THOMAS, chaplain to the second Duke of Richmond, known as a miscellaneous writer, 1671-1766.

NEWCOMBE, W., archbishop of Armagh, born of nonconformist parents, in Bedfordshire, 1728, author of a 'Harmony of the Gospels,' and an advocate for a revision of the Bible, died 1799.

NEWCOMEN, M., a nonconf. divine, d. 1666.

NEWCOMEN, THOMAS, a country locksmith, first projector of the means of creating a vacuum beneath the piston of the steam engine, died 1729.

NEWCOURT, R., an ecclesiast. lawyer, d. 1716.

NEWDIGATE, SIR ROGER, an elegant scholar and benefactor of Oxford, which he represented in parliament, 1719-1806.

NEWLAND, JOHN, an English abbot, employed as a diplomatist by Henry VIII., died 1515.

NEWLAND, P., a Dutch savant, 1764-1794.

NEWTON, SIR ADAM, a Scottish protestant scholar, tutor to Prince Henry, son of James I., died 1630.

NEWTON, G. S., a disting. painter, 1794-1835.

[Birth-place of Newton.]

NEWTON, ISAAC, a celebrated mathematician and natural philosopher, was born at Woolsthorpe, near Colsterworth, Lincolnshire, on the 25th December, 1642, o.s. His father, Isaac Newton, was proprietor and farmer of the manor, and died a few months after his marriage to Hannah Ayscough, so that young Newton was a posthumous child. He was so small at his birth that 'they might have put him into a quart mug,' but he gradually attained size and strength, destined to enjoy a vigorous manhood, and to survive even the average term of life. The estate of Woolsthorpe, worth only about £30 per annum, had been in the family upwards of one hundred years. The origin of the family is still in obscurity. Newton himself, according to the usual forms, gave in his pedigree on oath to the Herald's Office in 1705, stating that he had reason to believe (from tradition), that his great grandfather's father was John Newton of Wesby, in Lincolnshire; but it is certain, that twenty years after this Newton told Professor James Gregory, that his grandfather was a gentleman of East Lothian, and it is equally certain that Newton corresponded on the subject with the last baronet of the family, Sir Richard Newton of Newton, and that this family considered Newton to be a distant relation of theirs. For three years Mrs. Newton watched over her only child with maternal anxiety till her marriage with the Rev. Barnabas Smith, of North Witham, by whom she had one son and three daughters. In consequence of this marriage Newton was left under the care of his grandmother, and was sent at the usual age to the day school at Skillington and Stoke. At the age of twelve he went to the public school of Grantham, where he was boarded with Mr. Clark the apothecary. Here he was very inattentive to his studies, and was low in the school till a quarrel with a boy above him in the class, who had used him ill, induced him to apply diligently to his lessons till he rose above his rival, and reached the head of the class. During his leisure hours he occupied himself with all sorts of mechanical contrivances, windmills, water-clocks, carriages, and paper kites; and among his early tastes may be mentioned his love for drawing and writing verses, in neither of which he was destined to excel.—On the death of his father-in-law in 1656, his mother came to reside at Woolsthorpe with her three children and Isaac, who was now in his fifteenth year. He was recalled from school, to assist in the management of the farm; but while he was occupied with books, models, water wheels, and dials, the business of the farm was neglected, and the cattle were luxuriating among the corn. Thus found to be unfit for the profession of a farmer, he was sent back to Grantham school, and in due time to Trinity College, Cambridge, with recommendations from his uncle, the Rev. W. Ayscough. —On the 5th of June, 1661, when nineteen years old, he was admitted sub-sizar in Trinity College, very ill prepared for its course of instruction by his preliminary mathematical studies. He had been disposed to undervalue the ancient geometry, and he afterwards confessed to Dr. Pemberton that he had applied himself to the works of Descartes and others before he had sufficiently considered the Elements of Euclid. On the 28th April, 1664, he was elected scholar. He took his degree of B.A. in January, 1665. He was elected Major Fellow in March, 1668, and he took his degree of M.A. on the 7th July. —On the 20th May, 1665, he committed to writing his first ideas on fluxions. In 1666, having procured a prism, he discovered the unequal refrangibility of light, and the true doctrine of colours, and having drawn the erroneous conclusion that the improvement of the refracting telescope was impossible, he set himself to the construction of a reflecting telescope. While thus occupied he was driven from Cambridge by the plague in 1666, and went to Woolsthorpe, where the idea of gravitation first presented itself to him, from observing the fall of an apple in his garden. Here he continued his inquiries into the application of fluxions, and after his return to Cambridge in 1668, he made a very small reflecting telescope, which he described to a friend. —On the 29th October, 1669, Newton was appointed to the Lucasian chair of mathematics on the resignation of Dr. Barrow, and from this time we may date the commencement of his great discoveries. —His first communication to the Royal Society was a description of a second reflecting telescope, which excited great interest in England and abroad. The telescope itself was sent to the Society in December, 1671, 'for his majesty's perusal.' —On the 18th September, 1672, he announced to the secretary, Mr. Oldenburg, a philosophical discovery which he considered the oddest, if not the most considerable detection hitherto made in the operations of nature. This was the discovery of the composition of light, which was read to the Society on the 8th February, 1672, and which led him into interminable controversies with Hook, Huygens, and several eminent foreigners. These controversies embittered his peace, and made him resolve to have nothing more to do with that litigious lady philosophy. —On the 11th January, 1671, Newton was elected a fellow of the Royal Society. In 1673 he was disappointed in a competition for the law fellowship, then vacant; a disappointment increased by the fact that he was about this time in such circumstances as to be unable to afford the weekly payment to the Royal Society, who 'excused him.' Very soon afterwards, however, when his fellowship was about to expire, he obtained permission from the crown to hold the Lucasian chair with a fellowship, without being obliged to give orders. —On the 9th December, 1675, Newton communicated to the Royal Society a discourse on colours. This interesting paper contained details on the composition and decomposition of white light, and a new hypothesis concerning colours with some propositions explaining the colours of thin transparent plates, and their relation to the colours of natural bodies. —This discourse brought Newton into a controversy with Hooke, but notwithstanding this interruption, he was occupied with those profound studies, the results of which were afterwards consigned in his immortal work the 'Principia.' He had long ago deduced from the laws of Kepler the important law that gravity decreased with the square of the distance, a law to which Sir Christopher Wren, Halley, and Hook, had all been led by independent study. Newton's demonstration of it, however, had been given, and no proof obtained that the same power which made the apple to fall, was that which retained the moon and the other planets in their orbits. Adopting the ordinary measure of the earth's radius, he had been led to the conclusion that the force which kept the moon in her orbit, if the moon's gravity was one-sixth greater than that which was actually observed, a result which perplexed him, and prevented him from communicating to his friends the great speculation in which he was engaged. In June, 1682, however, he had heard of a more accurate measure of the earth's distance, and repeating with this measure his former calculations, he found to his extreme delight that the force of gravity, by which bodies fall at the earth's surface, 4,000 miles from the earth's centre, diminished as the square of 240,000 miles, the moon's distance, was almost exactly equal to that which kept the moon in her orbit. Hence, it followed that the same power retained all the other satellites round their primaries and all the primaries round the sun. —In August, 1684, when Dr. Halley visited Newton at Cambridge, he learned from him that he had surmounted the difficulties of the planetary motion, and promised him a copy of the treatise he had written on the subject. This treatise, 'De Motu Corporum,' was after some delay completed, and presented to the Royal Society on the 28th April, 1686, being the first book of the 'Philosophiæ Naturalis Principia Mathematica.' The second book was sent to the Society on the 1st March, 1687, the third on the 6th April, and the whole work published at the expense of Dr. Halley about midsummer of that year. —We have already seen that Newton discovered the doctrine of fluxions in 1666, the principle and application of which he explained in his treatise 'De Fluxu et Ritu per Equationes numero terminorum infinitarum,' which he communicated to Dr. Barrow in 1667. Although this treatise was not published till 1711, its contents were circulated throughout Europe by letters between 1669 and 1671. The principle of the new calculus was published in the 'Principia' in 1687, and the 'Algorithmus arithmeticus' was communicated to Dr. Wallis in 1692. —The great discovery of fluxions was also made by Leibnitz, and a controversy arose on the subject of priority, which continued for nearly two centuries to agitate the mathematical world. The violent friends ty falsely charged their principals with plagiarism, and thus embittered a controversy carried on with all the violence of politics or theology. There can be no doubt that Newton first invented fluxions, and that Leibnitz was an independent inventor of them before Newton had published his method. In the year 1692 a rumour prevailed abroad that Newton had become insane, either from intense mental application, or from the loss of valuable MSS. by fire. It is quite true that Newton's health had at this time suffered from inability to sleep, and that he had exhibited symptoms of a nervous indisposition in some of his letters to his friends; but his mind had never given way, and it was during this period that he wrote his four celebrated letters to Dr. Bentley, and was occupied with the profound subject of the Lunar Motion.—Newton had now brought to a close the investigations which had occupied the early and middle portion of his life. He was in the thirty-third year of his age, and no mark of natural gratitude had been conferred upon him, though he was counted the pride of England, and the ornament of his species. In this position a sphere of usefulness was unveiled to him, and triumph and honours awaited his acceptance.—Charles Montague, a fellow of Trinity College, eight twenty years younger than Newton, secured his friendship at Cambridge. They had met together in the convention parliament of 1688, and had entertained the same liberal opinions in politics. In 1694 Montague was appointed chancellor of the exchequer, and after consulting Newton, Locke, and Halley, he resolved to restore to its intrinsic value the adulterated coin of the nation. With this view Newton was appointed warden of the mint in 1695, with a salary of about £4, and in 1699 he succeeded to the mastership, the highest office in the establishment, which was worth £1,200 or £1,500 per annum. In the next year he was elected one of the eight associate members of the Royal Academy of Sciences in Paris. In 1701 he was re-elected one of the members for the university of Cambridge. In 1703 he was chosen president of the Royal Society, an office which he held till his death, and on the 16th of April, 1705, the honour of knighthood was conferred upon him by Queen Anne in Trinity Lodge, Cambridge.—When George I. ascended the throne in 1714, Newton, then in his seventy-second year, was a favourite at court. His character, his reputation, and his piety, had gained him the favour of the princess of Wales, afterwards queen consort to George II., who took great pleasure in his conversation. She corresponded also with Leibnitz, and seems to have availed herself of this privilege to learn the character of Newton, by representing the Newtonian philosophy as false and hostile to religion. Locke was involved in the same charge, and the king's desire an answer was prepared by Sir Isaac and Dr. Clarke, which seems to have satisfied the royal scruples. At the princess's request Sir Isaac gave her a MS., which he calls a 'Chronological Index.' The Abbé Conti having got possession of it, published it in Paris without the leave of the author, and thus involved him in a disagreeable controversy. He was in this way induced to prepare for the press his posthumous work, entitled 'The Chronology of Ancient Kingdoms,' which appeared in 1728.—In the year 1722, when in his eightieth year, Newton was attacked with a complaint in the urinary organs, which continued to afflict him till the time of his death, but though he suffered also from an affection of the lungs and gout, he was able on the 28th February, 1727, to preside at a meeting of the Royal Society. He suffered, however, from the exertion which he made on this occasion, and as the master disease under which he suffered was found to be stone, no hope was entertained of his recovery. He preserved his faculties entire till two days before his death, when he became insensible, and expired on Monday, the 20th March, 1727, between one and two o'clock in the morning, in the eighty-fifth year of his age.—His body was removed from Kensington to London on the 28th March. It lay in state in the Jerusalem Chamber, and was buried in Westminster Abbey, in a conspicuous part of which a monument was erected to his memory in 1731 by his relatives.—Newton left about £32,000, which was divided among his four nephews and four nieces of the half blood, the grandchildren of his mother: one of them the beautiful and accomplished Miss Catherine Barton, was married to Mr. Conduit, in Newton's lifetime, and they lived together. Mr. Conduit left an only child, a daughter, who married Mr. Wallop, the eldest son of Lord Lymington, and from this cause all Newton's papers came into the hands of the Portsmouth family.—The most important of Newton's philosophical works are his 'Principia,' already mentioned, his 'Arithmetica Universalis,' his 'Geometria Analytica,' his 'Treatise on Optics,' published in 1705, his 'Lectiones Opticae,' published after his death, and others which have been collected by Bishop Horsley, and published in 5 vols. 4to, under the title of 'Newtoni Opera quae Extant Omnia,' London, 1779 and 1782. His literary and theological works, included in the same collection, are his 'Chronology,' his 'Observations on the Prophecies of Holy Writ,' viz., Daniel and the Apocalypse, and his 'Historical Account of two Notable Corruptions of Scripture.'—For further information respecting Sir Isaac Newton, see 'Life of Sir Isaac Newton,' by Sir David Brewster, London, 1831; a very brief but excellent Memoir of Newton by Professor De Morgan, in 'Knight's Cabinet Historical Gallery,' vol. XI, p. 78-118; and 'Memoirs of the Life, Writings, and Discoveries of Sir Isaac Newton,' by Sir David Brewster, in 2 vols. 8vo, (from the Family Papers), now in the press. [D.B.]

NEWTON, JOHN, a mathematician, 1622-78.

NEWTON, JOHN, a Calvinistic clergyman of the Church of England, author of a 'Review of Ecclesiastical History,' 'The Messiah,' a series of sermons on the well-known oratorio, a 'Narrative of his Life,' &c., 1725-1807. Newton was a friend of Cowper the poet, and his life has been written by the Rev. R. Cecil.

NEWTON, R., a learned divine, 1676-1753.

NEWTON, THOMAS, a clergyman of the Church of England, originally a schoolmaster and physician, author of a 'History of the Saracens,' 'The Herbal to the Bible,' &c., 16th century.

NEWTON, THOMAS, an English prelate, well known as the author of 'Dissertations on the Prophecies,' born at Lichfield, where his father was a wine and spirit merchant, 1704; appointed rector of St. Mary-le-Bow 1744, king's chaplain 1756, and bishop of Bristol 1761; died 1782.

NEY. MICHEL NEY, marshal of the French empire, duke of Elchingen, prince of the Moskwa, and 'The Bravest of the Brave' in Napoleon's armies, was the son of a cooper at Sarre-Louis. He was born in 1769. He entered the army very young; and was a subaltern in a hussar regiment at the commencement of the wars of the revolution. Ney soon attracted the notice of his commanders, especially of Kleber and Hoche, by his valour and skill in the campaigns against the Austrian armies; and in 1798 he had attained the rank of general of division. In 1799 he shared in the glories of Massena's campaign in Switzerland; and in 1800 he aided, under Moreau, in gaining the victories of Moeskirch and Hohenlinden. Napoleon afterwards employed him as minister plenipotentiary to complete the submission of the Swiss to French ascendancy—a task which Ney performed with success—and thereafter stood high in Napoleon's favour. He was made marshal of the new French empire in 1804; and in the campaign of 1805 against Austria, he commanded the French at the victory of Elchingen, whence the dukedom which the emperor conferred upon him was named. Ney contributed greatly to the overthrow of the Prussians at Jena, and to the defeat of the Russians at Friedland. In 1807 he was sent to the peninsula, and for some time commanded in Galicia, and on the northern frontier of Portugal. In 1810 he acted under Massena in the invasion of Portugal, which was baffled by the genius of Wellington, and the lines of Torres Vedras. During that invasion, and during the retreat of the French army, which was its result, Ney displayed 'A happy mixture of courage and skill,' to adopt the words in which the English historian, Napier, has justly described his conduct. But the altercations between him and Massena were frequent and violent, and at last Massena deprived Ney of his command. Napier says that Massena's general views were as superior to Ney's, as the latter's readiness and genius for handling troops in action were superior to Massena's. In 1812 Ney served again under Napoleon, and took part in the invasion of Russia. He commanded the French centre at the battle of the Moskwa, and gained from that victory his princely title. His heroic bravery was still more signally displayed in the dreadful retreat from Moscow. His honourable task was to protect the French rear. On leaving Smolensko, Ney, at the head of about 7,000 men, found his path barred near the river Losmina by a large Russian army under Milaradovich. Ney was summoned to surrender—'A marshal of France never surrenders' was his answer, and he led his men on with the bayonet against the Russian batteries. Driven back repeatedly with frightful carnage, Ney counter-marched the remnant of his column, and wheeling to the left under shelter of the night, he eluded the Russian pursuit. He reached the bank of the Dnieper at a spot where the river was frozen over, but so thinly, that the ice bent beneath the soldier's tread. He effected the perilous passage, and in a succession of desperate contests with other Russian forces that strove to intercept him, Ney fought his way with 1,500 of his men to Orcha, where Napoleon was with the wreck of the main army. Napoleon's joy was almost rapturous when Ney rejoined him, for all had believed that the intrepid marshal must have been slain or captive. The emperor hailed Ney as 'the bravest of the brave,' which thenceforth became his undisputed title. After Napoleon left the army, Ney still continued to fight in the rear against the advancing Muscovites. Thrice did he stand in the rear guard which he commanded melt away beneath him by death, captivity, or flight; and as often was it reorganized by the indomitable marshal. At last, Ney, with only thirty men under him, defended the gate of Kowno, the last place in Russian dominions through which the French retreated—against the pursuing enemies, of whom his comrades escaped at the other end of the line. He was himself the very last man to retire. He fired with his own hand the last shot against his foes, threw the musket into the river Niepr, and plunged into the neighbouring forests to baffle his enemies who held him in chase; and after a series of almost incredible personal adventures, rejoined his comrades in the Prussian territory. In the campaign of 1814 Ney was present at the victory of Lutzen and Bautzen, but he was defeated with great loss by the crown prince of Sweden, Dennewitz. He fell in consequence under Napoleon's displeasure, and was little employed during the rest of the struggle against the allies, which ended in Napoleon's first abdication. At the first return of the Bourbons, Ney professed loyalty, and probably felt great willingness to serve them; and when, in 1815, the news reached Paris of Napoleon's escape from Elba, Ney took the command of the army which was sent to oppose him. Ney expressed the utmost devotion to the royal cause, and promised Louis XVIII. that he would bring Buonaparte to Paris 'Like a wild beast in a cage.' There seems no reason to doubt Ney's sincerity in this unhappy crisis of his career. He was an impulsive, rather than a reflective man; and prone both to speak and to act with more enthusiasm than consistency. But he advanced against the emperor, he received a letter from Napoleon, who summoned him by the magic name of 'The bravest of the brave' to raise his old master beneath the old banner. The army which Ney was leading, showed, both officers and soldiers, their fixed resolve to fight on, and not against Buonaparte. Ney caught the contagion. He became Napoleonist with violence equal to that which he had displayed a few days before in the Bourbon cause, and paid over with all his troops to the emperor, who received him with expressions of the warmest passion and welcome. But, though Ney had thus deeply committed himself against the Bourbons, Napoleon seems to have mistrusted him, and have long hesitated as to employing him in the campaign of 1815. It was only on the night of the 11th of June that Ney received at Paris an order to join the French army in Belgium. In obeying forward to the frontier, Ney met Napoleon on the 15th at Charleroi, after active operations had commenced. Napoleon gave him the command of the left wing, and sent him to seize the post of Quatre Bras, and oppose the English. Those who censure Ney's supposed want of romptness in this eventful campaign, should remember that the marshal had been so suddenly appointed to his command, that he did not know the strength of the regiments placed under him, or even the names of their commanding officers. On the 16th, Ney attacked the allies at Quatre bras, but after many hours' hard fighting was repulsed; though he succeeded in preventing the English from marching to the help of the Prussians, who were being defeated by the emperor at Wagram. On the 18th, Ney acted as the emperor's lieutenant at Waterloo. He led in person several of the fiercest assaults upon various parts of the British line, and especially the final charge of the Imperial Guard. Never was his valour more nobly and unsuccessfully displayed. His horse was killed under him in the last great attack, and he was seen, both by friends and foes, on foot, his clothes torn with bullets, his face blackened with powder, striving, sword in hand, first to urge his men forward, and at last to check their flight. After the second restoration of the Bourbons, Ney was brought to trial by them for treason. He was condemned by the Chamber of Peers on the 19th of December, 1815; and was shot, in pursuance of his sentence, on the morning of the next day. He met death with the same firmness with which he had braved it on the battle-field for five and twenty years. Ney was an erring, but a noble-hearted man. He was honourably free from the vices and vices that tarnish the fame of many of his brethren-in-arms; and, take him for all in all, he was a man in whom even deplorable faults could have been forgiven. [E.S.C.]

NEY, P. DE, a Dutch painter, 1596-1639.
NICAISE, C., a French antiquarian, 1623-1701.
NICAISE, ST., a martyr of the 3d century, said to be the first bishop of Rome. Another martyr of the same name was bishop of Rheims, 5th c.
NICANOR, commander of the Syrian army for Antiochus Epiphanes, slain by Judas Maccabæus at Bethoron B.C. 161.

NICANOR, or NICATOR. See DEMETRIUS.
NICCOLAI, A., an Italian Jesuit, 1706-1784.
NICCOLAI, J. B., an Ital. mathematic., 1726-93.
NICCOLI, N., an Italian writer, 1363-1437.

NICEPHORUS, the name of two saints—the first, a martyr of Antioch about 260; the second, a Greek historian and patriarch of Constantinople, born about 750, died 828.

NICEPHORUS I., emperor of the East, formerly grand treasurer and chancellor of the empire under Basil II., was proclaimed on the fall of the latter 802, and in war with the Bulgarians 811. NICEPHORUS II., born 912, succeeded 963, assassinated by his enemies, one of his generals, who suc. him 969.
NICEPHORUS III., commander of the Asiatic forces, deposed by Alexius Comnenus 1081.

NICEPHORUS, a Greek theologian, and metropolitan of Kiev, in Russia, 12th century.

NICEPHORUS-BLEMMIDAS, a learned Greek theologian, abbot of a monastery at Mithos, 13th cent.

NICEPHORUS-BRYNNE, a Byzantine general who became emperor of the East, and was vanquished by Nicephorus (Boutaniates) III. 1078.
NICEPHORUS, married to Anna, daughter of Alexius Comnenus, kn. as an historian, d. 1137.

NICEPHORUS-CALLISTUS, a monk of Constantinople, au. of an 'Ecclesiastical Hist.,' 14th c.

NICEPHORUS-GREGORAS. See GREGORAS.
NICERON, J. F., a Fr. mathematic., 1613-1646.

NICERON, J. P., a Fr. historian, 1685-1738.

NICETAS, the name of several Greek writers—DAVID, author of a Life of St. Ignatius, 9th century.
ACHOMINATUS, or CHONIATES, author of Annals, died about 1216. SERRON, author of several panegyrics and Commentaries, 11th century. EUGENIANUS, a novelist, 12th century.

NICETAS, ST., abbot of Mount Olympus, d. 824.

NICETIUS, FLAVIUS, a Gaulonite jurist, 5th c.
NICETIUS, ST., a bishop of Treves, appointed 527, died 566. Another of the name, bishop of Besançon, died about 612.

NICHOLAS I., pope of Rome, in whose reign the schism between the Greek and Latin churches commenced, 858-867. NICHOLAS II., reigned 1058-1061. NICHOLAS III., 1277-1280. NICHOLAS IV., author of Commentaries, 1288-1292. NICHOLAS V., a great patron of learning, founder of the Vatican library, &c., 1447-1455. An antipope (P. de Corbiere) assumed the title of Nicholas V., and died in prison about 1338.

NICHOLAS, an emperor of the East, deposed after a few days' reign by Alexis Ducas, 1204.

NICHOLAS, a king of Denmark, 1104-1134.

NICHOLAS, two dukes of Lorraine—the first, born 1448, succeeded John 1470, died 1473. The second, succeeded his brother, Charles IV., who abdicated 1634, died 1670.

NICHOLAS, three lords of Ferrara, Modena, and Reggio—the first reigned 1317-1346; the second, 1361-1388; the third, 1393-1422. This last, in his nineteenth year, was commander of the papal army directed against Milan, 1403. He caused his second wife, Parasina de Malatesta, to be put to death, together with his natural son, Hugues, for adultery; a circumstance which has furnished Byron with the subject of one of his poems.

NICHOLAS, patriarch of C'tinople, died 1111.

NICHOLAS, a monk of Clairvaux, 12th cent.

NICHOLAS, EYMERICUS, inquisitor-general of Spain, au. of 'Directorum Inquisitionum,' d. 1393.

NICHOLAS OF MUNSTER, founder of a German sect in the sixteenth century, whose followers called themselves the family or house of Love. He published the 'Evangel of the Kingdom,' and other mystic works.

NICHOLLS, F., an Eng. physiolog., 1699-1779.

NICHOLS, JOHN, a well-known name in literature, was the apprentice and successor of Bowyer, an eminent and learned printer. He was born at Islington 1744, became the partner of his master in 1766, and died 1828. His works are—'Literary Anecdotes of the 18th Century,' 13 vols. 8vo, 'Illustrations of the Literature of the 18th Century,' 3 vols. 8vo, 'The History and Antiquities of Leicestershire,' 6 vols. folio, &c.

NICHOLS, R., a poetical writer, born 1584.

NICHOLS, W., a learned divine, 1664-1712.

NICHOLSON, W., a wr. on chemis., 1758-1815.

NICIAS, an Athenian painter, 4th cent. B.C.

NICIAS, an Athenian general, companion-in-arms of Alcibiades and Lamachus, put to death after the ill success of his expedi. to Sicily, B.C. 413.

NICOLAI, a Dutch painter, born 1766.

NICOLAI, CH. FREDERIC, a famous bookseller and miscellaneous writer of Berlin, where he was born, 1733. He exercised great influence over the direction of the new literature in Germany, both by his enterprise and his own writings, and is generally mentioned with the literati of the revolutionary philosophy. Died 1811.

NICOLAI, E., a Swedish theologian, d. 1580.

NICOLAI, J., a Saxon philologist, died 1708.

NICOLAI, N. A., a Ger. pathologist, 1722-1802.

NICOLAI, N. M., an Italian writer, 1756-1833.

NICOLAI, W., a French writer, 1716-1788.

NICOLAS, A., a French historian, 1622-1695.

NICOLAS, ARMELLE, generally called 'the good Armelle,' was a French servant girl, remarkable for her charity and pious devotion, 1606-1671. Her life was published in 1676, entitled 'The Triumph of Divine Love in the Life of a great servant of God.'

NICOLAS, SIR NICHOLAS HARRIS, a naval officer who afterwards became a barrister, and devoting himself to literary pursuits acquired a distinguished name as a genealogical and historical critic. He is generally known by the shorter designation of Sir Harris Nicolas. His principal works are a 'Chronology of History,' 'Despatches of Lord Nelson,' 'Life of Hatton,' 'History of the Battle of Agincourt,' &c. He was engaged at his death on a 'History of the Navy,' and the Papers of Sir Hudson Lowe, the latter of which have since been edited by Forsyth. Born in Cornwall 1799, died 1848.

NICOLAS, P., a Fr. mathematic., d. about 1720.

NICOLAUS-DANASCENUS, a poet and historian of Damascus, who lived in the 1st c. B.C.

NICOLAUS-MYNEPSUS, a med. wr., 13th c.

NICOLAUS-PREPOSITUS, a med. wr., 12th c.

NICOLAY, L. H., a German poet, 1737-1820.

NICOLAY, N., a French traveller, 1517-1583.

NICOLE, CLAUDE, a French poet, 1611-1686.

NICOLE, F., a French geometrician, 1683-1758.

NICOLE, N., a French architect, 1701-1784.

NICOLE, PETER, nephew of Claude Nicole the poet, and one of the most celeb. of the Port Royal auth. as a moralist and theologian, 1625-95.

NICOLEF, N. P., a Russian dram., 1758-1816.

NICOLINO, G., an Ital. singer, cel. 1697-1717.

NICOLLE, G. H., a Fr. journalist, 1767-1828.

NICOLO DEL ABBATE. See ABATI.

NICOLO-ISOUARD, generally called NICOLO, a famous theatrical composer, born at Malta of French origin, and distin. at Paris, 1777-1818.

NICOLSON, WILLIAM, a learned prelate and antiquary, author of three valuable works entitled respectively the English, Irish, and Scotch Historical Library, b. in Cumberland 1655, d. 1727.

NICOMEDES, a Ger. geometrician, 1st c. B.C.

NICOMEDES, the first of the name, king of Bithynia, B.C. 278-250; the second, 148-89; the third, time of Mithridates, 89-75.

NICOT, JOHN, a French statesman, 1590-1600.

NICUESSA, D., a Span. navigator, 16th cent.

NIEBUHR, CARSTEN, a celebrated Danish traveller, was born in the duchy of Lauenburgh, 1733, and having raised himself from the condition of a peasant to that of a land surveyor, was sent on a scientific expedition to Arabia in 1758. The object of this mission was to collect materials for illustrating the Bible, as suggested to the Danish government by Michaelis, and it occupied six years, from 1761 to 1767, in travelling through the East. Niebuhr published his 'Description of Arabia,' in 1772: his 'Travels in Arabia and circumjacent Countries,' in 2 volumes, 1774-8, to which a third volume was added in 1837. He was appointed an office under the civil administration of Holstein, 1778. Died 1815.

NIEBUHR, BARTHOLOMGE, son of the preceding, was born at Copenhagen, 1776. He was famous as an historian, diplomatist, and philologist—holding, in fact, such high rank in the first of these characters, that he has originated a school of historical criticism, and our own Annales may be numbered among his followers. His father's stories of the East, and the new German literature ushered in by such writers as Klopstock, Lessing, and Goethe, fixed his attention when a boy; and the Turkish war of 1778, the French Revolution soon afterwards, and other great events of that age, deeply interested him in the fortunes of states. His memory and capacity for methodising knowledge were at the same time great. By his eighteenth year he had acquired at home and at school, ten languages, to which a few years afterwards, he added as many more; and there were few facts in the compass of history to which he was not able to speak accurately without the aid of books. In 1794 he was sent to pursue his studies at Kiel. In 1796 he went to Copenhagen as private secretary to the Danish minister of finance, Count Schimmelmann, and in 1797, exchanged this office for an appointment in the Royal Library. From 1798 to 1800 was occupied with a literary visit to England and Scotland; and in the last named year he married his first wife, Amelia Behrens, and took up his residence in Copenhagen as secretary to the African Company. In 1804, he became first director of the East and of the East India department of the Berlin Trade, besides being promoted to the command of the affairs of Barbary, of which he had hitherto been secretary. From 1806 till 1810 he was in the Prussian civil service, part of the time as minister at the court of Holland, and, at Berlin, as head of the department for managing the national debt. In 1810, Hardenberg having returned to power, Niebuhr resigned, and became professor of history at the new university of Berlin till 1813. In 1813 to 1816 he was engaged in affairs of state connected with the administration of the German countries re-conquered from Napoleon, and the negotiations of the court of Berlin with England and Holland; besides instructing the Crown in finance. In 1816 he went on a mission to the East, and this occupied him till 1823. His object was to procure a frank understanding and recognition of the new development of religion in Germany; this, however, he was disappointed, and he shrewdly observed that he might have made his position much easier there had he only been an Atheist! He turned his lengthened sojourn to account, however, in making those archaeological observations, which enter so largely into his histories. At the close of this mission he entered the most important period of his life, as professor of history at the university of Bonn, and there 1831. The great work of his life is his Roman history, to which must now be added the series of posthumous works in course of publication—among others his 'Ancient Ethnology and Geography.' The novelty and value of

John Nivart

Colonel John Lambert

Giovanni de' Medici Pope Leo X

Louis 16.th King of France consist in their minute reproduction of the very circumstances, in the midst of which the events of history occurred, and the faculty of the author for judging of similar occurrences from the conflicts of his own times. In politics, he was the friend of constitutional freedom, with guarantees for a national education and religion, and perhaps no greater instance could be found of a statesman whose life and manners so completely represented his convictions. The men of the hour found it difficult to agree with him, simply because he had convictions and acted up to them. [E.R.]

NIEL, L., a French composer, died about 1760.

NIELD, JAMES, a goldsmith of London, who devoted himself, on retiring from business, to the visitation and improvement of prisons, and projected the Society for the Relief of Prisoners Condemned for Small Debts, 1744-1814.

NIEMEYER, A. H., a German wr., 1754-1828.

NIENEMBERG, JOHN EUSEBIUS DE, a learned Spanish Jesuit, distinguished as a writer and naturalist, 1590-1658.

NIEPPEER, COUNT, an Austrian general, who was a principal agent in the coalition against Napoleon, and afterwards lived with the empress Maria Louisa. 1771-1828.

NIETO, DAVID, a Venetian rabbi, 1654-1728.

NIEUHOFF, JOHN DE, an agent of the Dutch East India Company, who wrote interesting narratives of his embassies to China, &c., 17th cent.

NIEULANT, A., a Dutch painter, died 1601.

NIEULANT, W., a Dutch painter, 1584-1635.

NIEUPOORT, W. H., a learned Dutch philologist, professor at Utrecht, about 1670-1730.

NIEUPORT, CHARLES FRED. ANT. FLORENT. DE PRUD'HOMME D'HAILLY, Viscount De, a Fr. diplomatist and mathematical savant, 1746-1827.

NIEUWELANDT, WILLIAM, VAN DEN, a Dutch dramatic author and painter, 1584-1635.

NIEUWENTYT, BERNARD, a Dutch physician, &c. as a philosopher and mathematician, 1654-1730.

NIEUWLAND, PETER, a classical scholar, professor of mathematics and physics, 1764-1794.

NIFO, AUGUSTIN, an Ital. philosopher, d. 1538.

NIGHTINGALE, JOSEPH, successively a Methodist and unitarian minister, author of 'Beauties of England and Wales,' and some religious works, 1775-1824.

NIGIDIUS-FIGULUS, PUBLIUS, a learned Roman and Pythagorean philosopher, to whose assistance Cicero was much indebted in the defeat of Catiline's conspiracy. Being banished by Cæsar as a partizan of Pompey, he died in exile B.C. 45.

NIHUSIUS, B., a Ger. controv. wr., 1584-1657.

NIMMO, A., a Scottish engineer, 1783-1832.

NITHARD, a grandson of Charlemagne, known as a French historian, 790-859.

NITSCH, P. F. A., a German savant, 1753-94.

NIVELLE, G. N., a Fr. theologian, died 1761.

NIVELLE, J. DE, a Flemish lord, known as an adherent of the duke of Burgundy, 15th century. Being dispossessed by his father, his estates passed to his third brother, WILLIAM, who was father of the constable, Anne de Montmorency. See MONTMORENCY.

NIVELLE CHAUSSEE. See CHAUSSEE.

NIVERNAIS, LOUIS JULIUS BARON MARQUIS DE MAZARINI, Duc De, a French ambassador and political writer, 1716-1798.

NIVERS, G., a Fr. musical writer, died 1707.

NIZAM-EL-MOLOUK, KODJAH HASSAN, vizier to the Persian sultan, Alp Arslan, a great statesman, historian, and patr. of learning, 1017-92.

NIZAM-EL-MOLOUK, or AL-MOULK, viceroy of the Deccan under Mohammed Shah, the Mogul emperor, to whose dethronement, by Nadir Shah, he was an active party; died 1748.

NIZAMI, a Persian poet, died 1180.

NIZZOLI, M., an Italian scholar, 1498-1575.

NOAILLES, a noble French family, many members of which are distinguished in history. The principal are—ANTHONY, admiral of France under Henry II., 1504-1562. FRANCIS, brother of Anthony, ambassador to Venice, Constantinople, and London, 1519-1585. LOUIS ANTHONY, second son of Anne, first duke of Noailles, cardinal and archbishop of Paris, noted for his vacillation in the religious quarrels of the age, first against the Jansenists, and afterwards against the Bull Unigenitus, 1651-1729. ANNE JULIUS, brother of the latter, a marshal of France, 1650-1708. ADRIAN MAURICE, son of Anne Julius, duke and marshal, distinguished in the Spanish war of succession, afterwards commander in the wars of 1733-5 and 1743, when he lost the battle of Dettingen. He was subsequently known as a statesman, and is the author of Political and Military Memoirs, 1678-1766. LOUIS, eldest son of the latter, duke and marshal, perished on the scaffold, 1713-1793. PHILIP, his second son, known as the marshal and duke de Mouchy, perished on the scaffold, 1715-1794. JEAN PAUL FRANCIS, eldest son of Louis just mentioned, 1739-1824. EMMA-NUEL MARIE LOUIS, marquis de Noailles, brother of the latter, 1743-1822. PHILIP LOUIS MARK ANTONY, prince de Poix, eldest son of Philip, the before-mentioned marshal de Mouchy, commander of a regiment of dragoons that had been raised by his grandfather in the war of succession, and a partizan of the Bourbons, 1752-1819.

CHARLES, his son and successor in the command and the dukedom, 1771-1834. LOUIS MARK ANTONY, viscount de Noailles, second son of the marshal de Mouchy, and uncle of the last mentioned, born 1753. He was one of the first among the nobles to join the commons in the estates-general 1789, and was killed at the Havannah 1804. ALEXIS, count de Noailles, son of the preceding, a diplomatist of the restoration, 1783-1835. ALFRED, brother of the latter, born 1786, killed in the retreat from Russia 1812.

NOBILI, R., a Roman Jesuit, 1606-1656.

NOBLE, MARK, a clergyman of the Church of England, author of historical and biographical writings, died 1827.

NOBLE, SAMUEL, a learned minister of one of the congregations formed by the receivers of the writings of Swedenborg, author of an 'Appeal' on behalf of those doctrines, and of 'The Plenary Inspiration of the Scriptures,' designed to enforce and illustrate the internal sense of the Word; d. 1859.

NOCETI, C., an Ital. savant, about 1695-1759.

NOEHDEN, GEORGE HENRY, a learned German, successively librarian and superintendent of the numismatic dep. in the Br. Museum, 1770-1826.

NOEL, F., a Germ. Jesuit, known as a Chinese scholar and missionary, born about 1640, d. 1715.

NOEL, F. J., a French scholar who fulfilled many administrative and diplomatic functions, and wrote many useful works of research, the principal of which is his 'Dictionnaire de la Fable,' 1755-1841.

NOEL, P., a Flemish painter, died 1823.

NOETUS, an Asiatic theologian, supposed to have flourished about the middle of the 3d century. The Noetian Creed, attributed to him, is an endeavour to state the doctrine of Christ's divinity, without supposing a trinity of separate persons.

NOGAROLA, ISOTTA, a lady of Verona, remarkable for her beauty, her learning, and her talents for poetry, 1428-1466. A brother of hers, named LEONARDO, is also kn. as a theological wr.

NOGAROLA, L., an Italian savant, 16th cent.

NOGAROLA, T., an Ital. theologian, 18th cent.

NOIROT, CLAUDE, a Fr. writer on the origin of Masks, Mummings, &c., born 1570, publ. 1609.

NOLAN, M., an Irish lawyer, died 1827.

NOLDIUS, CHRISTIAN, a learned Danish minister and professor of divinity, 1626-1683.

NOLLEKENS, JOSEPH FRANCIS, an English painter, son of a Fleming, long resident in this country, 1706-1748. His son, JOSEPH, a cele. sculptor, and favourite of George III., 1737-1823.

NOLLET, D., a Flemish painter, 1640-1736.

NOLLET, J. A., a Fr. natural philos., 1700-70.

NOMSZ, JAN, a Dutch poet, 1738-1803.

NONIUS, MARCELLUS, a philosopher, 4th cent.

NONIUS, or NONNIUS, the Latinized name of Pedro Nunez, a Portug. mathemat., 1492-1577.

NONIUS, NONNIUS, or NUNNEZ, LEWIS, a Spanish physician and philologist, b. about 1560.

NOODT, GERARD, a Dutch jurist, 1647-1725.

NORBERG, or NORDBERG, DR. GEORGE, a Swedish historian, chaplain and biographer of Charles XII., 1677-1744.

NORBERG, MATTHIAS, a Swedish Orientalist, prof. of Greek and theology at Upsala, 1747-1826.

NORBY, S., a Danish admiral, killed 1530.

NORDEN, FRED. LOUIS, a Danish traveller, author of 'Memoirs upon the Ruins and Colossal Statues of Thebes,' and of 'Travels in Egypt and Nubia,' both illustrated, 1708-1742.

NORDEN, JOHN, a scholar and surveyor of the crown lands, author of several religious quaint works, died about 1625.

NORDENANKER, J. DE, a Swedish naval commander, author of several memoirs, last cent.

NORDEN-FLEICHT, HEDWIGE CHARLOTTE DE, a lady of Stockholm, known in Sweden as a poetess, 1719-1763.

NORDENHEIM, J. CHRISTOPHER, a Swedish physician, and wr. on Hereditary Diseases, d. 1719.

NORDENSCHOLD, a Swedish governor of Finland, disting. as a political economist, died 1764.

NORDENSKJOLD, AUGUSTUS, a Swedish traveller, and one of several followers of Swedenborg who interested themselves in African enterprise, close of last century.

NORDIN, CHARLES GUSTAVUS, a Swedish savant and statesman, author of 'Materials for Swedish History,' 1749-1812.

NORFOLK, ROGER BIGOD, earl of, one of the barons who compelled Henry III. to confirm Magna Charta, died 1270. His nephew, of the same names, distinguished in the reign of Edward I., about 1301. See HOWARD.

NORGATE, EDWARD, an Eng. artist, 17th cent.

NORIS, HENRY, a learned Italian cardinal of Irish descent, author of a 'History of Pelagianism,' and chief librarian of the Vatican, 1631-1700.

NORIS, M., a Venetian dramatist, 1640-1710.

NORMAND, CL. J., a Fr. antiquary, 1704-60.

NORMANN-EHRENFELS, CHAS. FRED. L.

BRECHT, Count DE, a Ger. officer, who organized an armed band at Corinth, and was mortally wounded in the cause of Greek independence, 1784-1822.

NORRIS, JOHN, founder of a professorship and prize essay at Cambridge university, 1734-1777.

NORRIS, JOHN, second son of Henry, first Lord Norris, distinguished in the military service

France during the civil wars of that country. He went to Ireland with the earl of Essex, and afterwards served in Flanders under the archduke

Austria, the duke of Lorraine, and William Nassau. In 1585 he was commander of the English troops sent to the aid of Antwerp. In 1588 he was intrusted with the power of the crown in Ireland by Queen Elizabeth, and in 1591 commanded the troops sent in aid of Henry of Navarre against the leaguers. He returned to his Irish government in 1594, and died a few years after. [E.H.]

NORRIS, JOHN, whose name ranks among the principal of our philosophical divines, was born at Collingbourne Kingston, in Wiltshire, of which place his father was rector, 1657. He took the bachelor's degree at Oxford in 1680, and was admitted M.A. 1684. In 1689 he became rector of Newton Sodoc in Somersetshire; in 1691 was promoted to the richer living of Bemerton near Salisbury; and died there in 1711 after a life of hard study, which probably hastened his end.

Norris, at college, was an ardent student and admirer of Plato, and when, a few years afterward the tendency of Locke's philosophy to one extreme of belief, provoked a controversy which travelled the length and breadth of Europe, he was found with the opposite party—followers of Cartesian and Malebranche. He published his principal work in 1701, entitled 'An Essay towards a Theory of the Ideal or Intellectual World,' written, professedly in support of Malebranche—the theory that we perceive all things in God, whose thoughts, to use such a term, are our ideal forms. Norris, in short was an idealist, to the extent of declaring that all that had been argued from the time of Descartes to his own, the existence of external objects of sensation is only probable but by no means certain.

His other works, which rank in the Platonic class of divinity with those of Henry More, his contemporary and correspondent, are 'The Picture of Love

Unveiled,' translated from Waryng, 'An Ideal Happiness,' 'Theory and Regulation of Love

'Reason and Religion,' 'The Natural Immortality of the Soul,' together with poems and discourses on a variety of subjects. [E.H.]

NORRIS, SIR JOHN, a naval officer, distinguished in the Mediterranean under Sir Cloudesley Shovel, d. 1744.

NORRIS, ROBERT, a native of Liverpool, famous for his sojourn of eighteen years on the coast of Guinea. He wrote 'Memoirs of the Reign of Bossa Ahadee, king of Dahomey, an inland country of Guinea, to which is added the author's journey to Abomey the capital,' published in London, 1789.

NORRIS, S., a theological writer, died 1680.

NORRMAN, L., a Swed. Oriental., 1654-1700.

NORRY, C., a French architect, author of

Journal of the Expedition to Egypt, which he accompanied, 1756-1832.

NORTH, the name of a distinguished family, of whom we may mention—SIR EDWARD, an eminent lawyer, created Baron North, of Catledge, in Cambridgeshire, by Queen Mary. DUDLEY, Lord North, his great grandson, born 1581, distinguished as a partizan of the parliament, and appointed by them to the admiralty, died 1666. DUDLEY, son and successor of the latter, distinguished in parliament, and author of the 'Life of Edward, Lord North,' 'Passages Relating to the Long Parliament,' 'Light in the Way to Paradise,' &c., died 1677. His sons of the last named—FRANCIS, Baron Hildford, lord-keeper of the great seal in the reigns of Charles II. and James II., author of Political Essays and Narratives, and a Philosophical Essay in Music, about 1640-1685. SIR DUDLEY, a great Turkey merchant, author of 'Observations on the Customs, and Jurisprudence of the Turks,' died 1691. JOHN, born 1645, elected professor of Greek at Cambridge 1672, and created D. the following year on the visit of Charles II., died 1683. ROGER, attorney-general to James II., known as an historical critic and miscellaneous writer, died 1733. To the same family belongs the subject of the following article.

NORTH, FREDERICK, earl of Guildford, generally called LORD NORTH, belongs to English history as chief of the administration during the American war of independence. He was appointed Commissioner of the Treasury 1759; and resigned his leader in July, 1765, when he joined the opposition to the Rockingham ministry. He came to office again with the Grafton ministry, 1766; in 1767 became chancellor of the exchequer; and in 1770 succeeded the duke of Grafton as minister, when he brought in a bill for the repeal of all the laws lately imposed upon the American colonists, with the exception of that upon tea, and this execution, in 1773, led to disturbances, which in 1775 ended in actual hostilities, and to the declaration of independence, 4th July, 1776. The struggle lasted during the whole of Lord North's administration, but was virtually ended by the surrender of Lord Cornwallis, at York Town, 19th Oct., 1781. Lord North resigned on the 20th of March, 1782. He became earl of Guildford by the death of his father in 1790, and died 1792, after being blind several years with blindness; 1732-1792.

ORTH, G., an Engl. numismatist, 1710-1772.

ORTHAMPTON, EARL OF. See HOWARD.

ORTHAMPTON, SPENCER JOSH. ALWYN COTTON, marquis of, well known for his love of science and literature, was born 1790, and succeeded to the title of his father in 1828. He was known in the House of Lords as an advocate of various measures; but the arena in which he distinguished himself was that already indicated. From 1838 till 1849 he held the presidency of the Royal Society, and during this period his mansion was the scene of frequent and brilliant reunions of the most distinguished men in philosophy, art, and literature. The marquis of Northampton was also one of the presidents of the British Association, and he filled the same office in the Royal Society of Literature at the time of his death, 1851.

ORTHOCOTE, JAMES, an eminent historical painter and writer on art, was born at Plymouth, where his father was a coachmaker, 1746. His best works are 'Hubert and Arthur,' and 'The Murder of the Two Princes in the Tower.' He is author of Fables illustrated with his own designs, of 'Memoirs of Sir Joshua Reynolds,' and a 'Life of Titian.' Died 1831.

NORTON, LADY F., a religious wr., died 1720.

NORTON, JOHN, a wr. on orthography, 17th c.

NORTON, THOMAS, a barrister-at-law, known as a zealous Calvinist, and translator of the famous 'Institutes.' He assisted Sternhold and Hopkins in a metrical version of the Psalms, and is supposed to have died about 1584.

NORWOOD, RICHARD, an English geometer, one of the first to measure a degree of the meridian, 1635.

NORZI, SOLOMON, an Italian rabbin, 17th cen.

NOSTRADAMUS, MICHAEL, a physician of Provence, known as an astrologer in the time of Catherine de Medici. He composed 'Seven Centuries of Prophecies' in enigmatical rhymes, some of which are admitted to have been most exactly fulfilled; among others his prophecy, a hundred years before its occurrence, of the execution of Charles I., and still more surprising, of the exact date of the French Republic, 1792. He died in 1566. His brother, JOHN, known as an historical writer, died 1590. His son, CÆSAR, a poet and historian, flourished 1555-1629. MICHAEL, another son, known as an astrologer and prophet like his father, died 1574.

NOTARAS, C., a patriarch of Jerusalem, d. 1733.

NOTT, JOHN, a surgeon in the employ of the East India Company, dist. as an Oriental scholar and poetical and miscellaneous writer, 1751-1826.

NOTT, MAJOR-GENERAL SIR WILLIAM, an officer in the East Indian service, greatly distinguished in the late Afghan war, born at Caermarthen 1782, died 1845.

NOTTINGHAM. See FINCH, HOWARD.

NOUE. See LANOUE.

NOUET, JAMES, a French ascetic, 1605-1680.

NOUET, N. A., a French astronomer, d. 1811.

NOUGURET, P. J. B., a Fr. novelist, 1742-1823.

NOULLEAU, J. B., a Fr. theolog., 1604-1672.

NOUR-DJIHAN, wife of the Mogul emperor, Djihan-Guir, famous for the happy influence which she exercised over him, and said to be the discoverer of the essence of roses, reigned 1611-1645.

NOUR-ED-DEEN-ALI, sult. of Egypt, 1257-59.

NOUR-ED-DEEN-MAHMOUD, MELEK-EL-ADEL, commonly called NOURADIN, or NOUR-ED-DEEN, a celebrated Moslem ruler of Syria and Egypt, born 1117, succeeded his father in Syria 1145, commenced the conquest of Egypt after the death of Baldwin III., king of Jerusalem, 1162, died when he was preparing to march against his ambitious lieutenant, Saladin, 1174.

NOUWAYRI, SHEHAB-ED-DEEN AHMED, an Arabian historian and encyclopædist, 1283-1331.

NOVA, J. DA, a Spanish navigator, 16th cen.

NOVALIS, the literary cognomen of FREDERICK VON HARDENBERG, a German literature and poet, born at Mansfeld near Eisleben, 1772, died 1801. His works were published by Tieck and Schlegel in 1814—the principal of them being lyrical poems and the philosophical romance 'Heinrich Von Ofterdingen.'

NOVATUS, a presbyter of the church of Carthage in the time of Cyprian, who procured his excommunication for heresy, and gave him occasion to form a new church. After this, in 251, Novatus went to Rome and became a partizan of his namesake, the subject of the following article.

NOVATUS, NOVATIAN, or NOVATIANUS, supposed to be a native of Phrygia, and to have been educated as a Stoic philosopher, was a presbyter of the Roman Church, distinguished for his learning and eloquence. He is called the first antipope, from being chosen bishop of Rome by a minority of the clergy at the same time as Cornelius, whose election was confirmed by a council in 251. The party of Novatian was distinguished by their refusal to re-admit apostates to the communion of the church. This, with some other points of discipline, gained for them the appellation of Cathari, or Puritans. The time of his death is uncertain.

NOVERRE, J. G., a Fr. ballet comp., 1727-1810.

NOVIKOFF, N. L., a Russian an., 1744-1818.

NOWELL, ALEXANDER, a dignitary of the Church of England, and the last surviving father of the reformation in this country, was born at Whalley, in Lancashire, 1507 or 1508. He was first employed as second master of Westminster school, and, in 1551, became one of the prebendaries of Westminster. He was among the exiles at Strasburg in the reign of Queen Mary, and, returning on the accession of Elizabeth, he became dean of St. Paul's in 1560. He is the author of the Church of England Catechism, and the founder of a free grammar school in his native county, and of thirteen Oxford scholarships. Died 1602.

NOWELL, LAURENCE, younger brother of the preceding, became dean of Lichfield, and is known as the author of a Saxon Dictionary, now in the Bodleian library; died 1576.

NOY, WILLIAM, attorney-general in the reign of Charles I., and author of the ill-advised project for raising supplies without the consent of parliament, 1577-1634.

NUCK, A., a German anatomist, 1660-1692.

NUGENT, GEORGE GRENVILLE, Lord, known when a young man as Lord George Grenville, was the second son of the marquis of Buckingham, and brother of the late duke. He was born in 1789, and sat in four parliaments, as member for Aylesbury, previous to the passing of the reform bill. In 1830 he became connected with the Whigs in the government; and from 1832 to 1835 was lord high commissioner of the Ionian Islands. He had no seat in the house from this period till 1847, when he appeared for his old constituency. Died 1850. Lord Nugent wrote 'Memorials of Hampden and his Times,' and 'Lands, Classical and Sacred.' His name was generally a popular one.

NUGENT, ROBERT CRAIGS, Earl, a descendant of the Nugents of Westmeath, known as a poet, died 1788.

NUGENT, THOMAS, a miscellaneous writer and translator, au. of a French Dictionary, died 1772.

NUMA POMPILIUS, said to be the successor of Romulus as king of Rome, and distinguished as a philosopher and legislator, was of Sabine origin, and died after a reign of forty-three years, B.C. 672. He was the founder of the most important religious institutions of the Romans, and left writings explanatory of his system, which were burnt by order of the senate, when accidentally discovered four hundred years after his time.

NUMENIUS, a Christian Platonist, 2d century. NUMERIANUS, MARCUS AURELIUS, emperor of Rome, succeeded his father, Carus, 283 or 284, and is supposed to have been murdered a few months afterwards by his father-in-law, Arrius Aper, who was stabbed without trial by Diocletian.

NUMITOR, said to be the son of Procas, king of Alba, and grandfather of Romulus.

NUNEZ, or NUNNEZ, the name of several distinguished Portuguese and Spaniards—AMBROSE, a physician and professor at Salamanca, died 1615. FERDINAND, a learned philologist and classical editor, about 1473-1553. JUAN and PEDRO, distinguished painters; the former in the 16th century, the latter about 1614-1654. MATTHEW Nunez de Supeveda, fresco painter to Philip I in 1640, and Nunez de Villavicencio, a pupil of Murillo, 1635-1700.

NUNEZ DE BALBOA, a Spaniard, governor of the small colony of Darien, guided by report of the Indians, that a great sea existed a few days' journey to the south, undertook a most difficult and hazardous journey across the marshy tracts of the isthmus in September, 1513, in the hope of discovering the ocean so long the object of Columbus of a fruitless search. Nearing at length the watershed, his impatience became uncontrollable, and he ran forward in advance of his men to eminence in sight. Having reached this, he mounted into a tree, his delighted eye rested on the vast expanse of the boundless Pacific. Now hurried forward, and plunging into the waves, he claimed the sovereignty of the 'Great South Sea' for the crown of Spain. From the natives of the coast he received the most wonderful accounts of the power and wealth of the nations occupying the lands to the far south, which they affirmed to be without end. Thirteen years after, the former statement was fully confirmed by Pizarro; six years after Magellan disproved the latter. Messengers were immediately sent to Spain with the important tidings; but instead of a reward, or important appointment arriving for De Balboa, he was in short time superseded in his government by Vasco de Gama, a mean, envious, and cruel man, who, four years after, on some trifling accusation, had the hero-discoverer of the Pacific put publicly to an ignominious death.

NUNNING, J. H., a Ger. antiquary, 1675-1717.

NUVOLONE, the name of three painters of Lombardy—PAMFILO, the father, born about 1600, died 1651. CARLO FRANCESCO, his eldest son, surnamed the Guido of Lombardy, 1608-1670. GUISEPPE, younger brother of the latter, called Pamfilo, a great painter of altar-pieces, 1619-1670.

NUZZI, MARIO, an Italian painter, 1603-1670.

NYE, PHILIP, a minister of the Church of England, who became a nonconformist, and seems to have been a time-server and demagogue, 1596-1640.

NYERUP, ERASMUS, a Danish hist., 1759-1810.

NYMANN, G., a Germ. anatomist, 1594-1670.

NYSTEN, PIERRE HUBERT, a French physician, distinguished for his researches in electrical physiology, author of a Dictionary of Medical Pathological Chemistry, and Experiments upon the Muscular Organs of Man, and of the Red-blooded Animals, 1771-1818.

DATES, TITUS, well known to English history as a political intriguer in the reign of Charles II., was the son of an anabaptist preacher, and was born about 1619. He was educated for the Church of England, and became chaplain in one of the king's ships, but was dismissed in disgrace, and joined the Jesuits. In September, 1678, having joined the Church of England, he made a disclosure of a pretended popish plot, which caused an execution and imprisonment of many eminent persons; and for which he received a handsome pension, and a residence at Whitehall, till the end of Charles II.'s reign. On the accession of James, he was convicted of perjury and publicly whipped, recovered his liberty, and was pensioned again by William III. Died 1705.

BEID-ALLAK, a famous Arabian commander, successively governor of Khorassan, Basrah, and Meshah; killed 685.

BEID-ALLAH, ABU MOHAMMED, the first caliph of the Fatimite dynasty, reigned 910-933.

BEIRNE, THOMAS LEWIS, an Irish prelate known as a political and miscell. wr., 1748-1823.

BEREIT, J. H., a Swiss alchemist, 1725-98.

BERKAMP, F. J., a Ger. physician, 1710-1768.

BELSON, F. PHILIP, prof. of anatomy, died 1793.

BERKAMPF, C. PHILIP, the originator of the French manuf. of printed cotton, 1738-1815.

BERLIN, JOHN FREDERIC, pastor of Waldbach, was born at Strasburg, on 1st August, 1740. His father held office in the Gymnasium of that city, and being a man of great vivacity, as well as assiduous devotedness to his duties, was in the habit of taking his children on holidays to a small paternal farm he possessed a few miles out of town. There entering into all the feelings and joys of boyhood, he joined in every active and highly amusement, and especially, as playing 'at soldiers' was a favourite pastime, the father invariably acted the part of drummer and major. His mother, a woman of great talents, energy, and piety, imbued her family not only with her earnest spirit and sound principles of religion, but also with her own passionate fondness for sacred music, and never did the children separate at night without her leading the juvenile circle in chanting one of Luther's beautiful hymns. Dr. Lorentz, an angelical minister of high popular gifts, was his favourite preacher, and as young Frederic frequently accompanied her to the Lutheran chapel, his tones, manner, as well as strains of the Doctor's preaching made such an impression on the susceptible and pious heart of the boy, that he cherished the desire of devoting his future life to the service of God and the good of his fellow-men. Having completed his studies, and acted a few years as tutor in the family of an eminent surgeon at Strasburg, Oberlin entered on the duties of the sacred profession, by engaging to act in the capacity of chaplain to a French regiment which was quartered in the city. During the four years he held that situation he prosecuted his private studies with great ardour, and at the expiry of his term, he resigned the office on obtaining a curacy in the Ban de la Roche, or Steinthal, a mountainous district in Alsace. It was an extensive valley lying in a state of wild uncultivated nature, divided into two parishes, of which the Waldbach was one, and comprising from eighty to a hundred families. These people, whose sequestered condition had hitherto placed them almost beyond the pale of civilization, were in a state of rude simplicity or rather barbarism, indolent and filthy—because almost entire strangers to all the useful arts of life; and their state as to religion may be imagined from the fact, that they knew nothing of the Bible, except that it was a large book, said to have come from God. The idea of undertaking the pastoral duties of such a wild and neglected people, was a prospect from which most persons would have shrunk. But Oberlin was known to possess the self-denying spirit, the energetic fortitude, and the enterprising genius suited to the exigencies of the place; and accordingly being urged by those who were interested in the regeneration of that people, he at length accepted the onerous charge. Oberlin was precisely of the cast of mind adapted for the Waldbach. A person of literary attainments or studious habits would have been perfectly useless in such a parish. The pastor who aimed at doing any good required bodily activity far more than study, and was under a necessity of combining physical and social with spiritual improvement. Wedded to habits of hereditary indolence, the people made open resistance to Oberlin's first attempts at innovation; and although his experimental measures were of an obviously useful and practical character, they excused themselves in the usual spirit of the sluggish, on the plea that what had done for their fathers might well satisfy them. The resolute minister, no way discouraged, proceeded to the execution of his projected schemes; and the first attempt he made was to form roads. Throughout the whole parish there was nothing but foot tracks, which were impassable during the greater part of the year, and the Bruche, a stream that bounded it in the direction of Strasburg was crossed only by a series of stepping-stones, which, when the river was swollen by the winter rains, were submerged, so that for nearly nine months the inhabitants were completely secluded from all intercourse with the world. Oberlin proposed to throw a wooden bridge over this stream, and by excavating the mounds or blasting the rocks, construct a road to the city. Having assembled his parishioners in a field, he explained his design, and finishing his address with the words "Whoever is persuaded of the benefits of the bridge, let them follow me," he shouldered a pick-axe, and accompanied by his servant, commenced the work of excavation. The effect of his words and his example was electric. When the first surprise was over, all classes—old and young, offered their assistance, and from morning to night continued to labour for six months at their pastor's side with unabated assiduity till the bridge was erected. When opened, it received the name of Le pont de charité. The obvious advantages of this bridge disposed the parishioners to listen the more readily to other undertakings which their public-spirited pastor contemplated for their benefit. He opened roads to the neighbouring towns—introduced the use of agricultural implements—sent the more promising boys, some to the nearest counties to learn farming, and others to Strasburg to be taught the knowledge of different trades—erected neat cottages instead of the wretched cabins of turf in which the inhabitants dwelt—introduced the culture of the potato instead of the wild apples and pears which had hitherto formed their staple subsistence—showed them the use of many common plants for food and physic—instructed them in every useful art that tended to the comfort and advancement of social life, and made so many improvements in the villages, houses, fields, and gardens of the Steinthal, that the parish which at his entrance was a neglected waste, a dreary desert, began to blossom as the rose. These improvements on the domestic, social, and agricultural economy of the Steinthal were only preparatory to other and higher reformatations he contemplated on the moral state and religious character of the inhabitants. The confidence he had gained by his benevolent exertions for their temporal good he employed for promoting their spiritual welfare by establishing weekly prayer-meetings, introducing infant schools, as well as seminaries of a higher character, in which, besides the common branches of education, astronomy, agriculture, and various mechanical arts, such as plaiting straw, knitting, cotton-spinning by the hand, and the manufacture of silk ribbons were taught by masters and mistresses properly qualified for the office. He himself superintended the religious instruction of the children, teaching them not only to read and understand the history and principles of the Bible, but instructing them in a knowledge of sacred music by chanting the hymns sung in the church, and also of several branches of natural history, with a view of illustrating the perfections of God. By means of a printing press he had in his own house, he prepared religious tracts for distribution, and established itinerant libraries which, after being devoted to one village for three months, were then removed for the use of another. The expense of all these various schemes he was enabled to meet by the liberality of some Christian friends in Strasburg. Oberlin having been deprived of his wife, who had entered with intelligent and zealous activity into all his undertakings, her place in the care of his house as well as in the domestic duties of the parish was supplied by a pious and sensible young woman, Louisa Schelper, who had long been a resident in his family. There was need of so economical and prudent a manager; for during the disorders consequent on the great French revolution Oberlin no longer enjoyed his scanty stipend, and his maintenance was derived wholly from the contributions of his parishioners. During the reign of terror, however, when all worship elsewhere was proscribed, he was allowed to minister to his flock—an immunity for which he was indebted partly to the poor and isolated position of his parish, and partly to the excellence of his own character. At once the result and the evidence of the great improvements he had made, the population of the Steinthal during his incumbency rose from eight or a hundred, to three thousand. Oberlin was simple, earnest, evangelical preacher, and one of the characteristic of his discourses was the numerous anecdotes he introduced of persons eminent for piety, known to him by reading or intercourse. The population of his parish being of a mixed character, he preached on Sabbaths in French, and on Friday evenings in German. Other meetings he held for reading to the people, and as he studied always to improve every moment of time, he caused the women to knit stockings; and when he had said or spoken long, he used to stop and say, 'Children are you tired yet?' or, 'you have had enough for to-night.' He was decorated by Louis XVIII. with the legion of honour. Oberlin died in 1826, at the age of eighty-six, having earned the character of being one of the most useful men that have appeared in any country in modern times.

[View of the Ban de la Roche.]

OBÉRLIN, JEREMIAH JAMES, elder brother of the preceding, distinguished as an antiquarian and philological writer, b. at Strasburg 1735, d. 1812.

OBICINI-OBIZZING, THOMAS, a catholic missionary, afterwards professor of Oriental languages, died 1636.

OBRECHT, ULRIC, a Fr. juriscon., 1646-1711.

OBSEQUEUS, JULIUS, a Latin wr., 4th c.

OBSOPÆUS. See OPSOPÆUS.

OCAMPO, F. D., a Span. historian, 16th c.

OCARIZ, or OCARITZ, DON JOSEPH, Count of D', a Spanish diplomatist, who held the post of chargé d'affaires at Paris in 1792, and distinguished himself by endeavouring to save Louis XVI., born about 1750, died 1805.

OCCAM, or OCKHAM, WILLIAM OF, born at Ockham in the county of Surrey about the middle of the thirteenth century; taught with brilliant success in Paris, in the early part of the fourteenth century; a Franciscan, like his master, Duns Scotus the greatest of the later Schoolmen—by title the 'Invincible Doctor'; the philosopher who gave the final blow to the fantastic Realism of the middle ages, and perhaps the first effective blow to the authority of the Pope; the predecessor of Descartes and Gerson, and, not remotely, the progenitor of LUTHER.—It cannot be expected that a work like this, any extensive appreciation of the given of a subject so thorny and strange as the Scholastic Philosophy; nevertheless, occasion may be taken of our mention of Occam, to warn the Student against hastily adopting those crude and common views of its deserts, and its place in the story of Thought. Difficult to peruse, as most of the writings of these singular disputants unquestionably are, and in great part from the apparent barbarism of their language, it must not be overlooked that this difficulty and uncouthness beget almost necessarily to the excessive subtlety and sagacity with which they attacked the highest problems that can engage the Human Intellect. It falls to every new metaphysical school, or rather every great school in a new epoch, to invent in its own language: take for example the writings of the Philosopher of Königsberg, who, strangely enough, was long reputed obscure and even unintelligible, because of the very pains he took to render his expression of profoundest thought, about the clearest and most precise, of which any language contains a record: nor is the mark of Mr. Hallam to be doubted, that as words are meant to express precise ideas, 'it was impossible,' in the times of which we speak, 'to write metaphysics in good Latin, as modern naturalists have found it to describe plants and animals.' Besides the strangeness of terminology, we must keep in mind that every age has a notion peculiar to itself, around which, as a centre, the battle of Thought is contested; and it is only by taking account of this speciality, and starting from it the tactics and efforts of the warring Parties, that one can come to recognize the identity in all ages, of these Parties and Tactics. — At one can discern in the East, in Greece and late, in those Middle Ages, and in modern Europe, the representatives and movements of forces, whose antagonism is perpetual, and whose conflicts we live. The form in which the Schoolmen placed the great question they discussed, was mainly a grammatical one; but, beneath that form, those precise problems were posed which divided the followers of Aristotle and Plato, which sever Descartes and Hobbes, Locke and Kant. If sometimes subtle to a fault, and minute apparently to painful affectation—an error into which the grammatical form of their speculations inevitably led them—Aquinas, Scotus, Roscelin, Abelard, and Occam, were neither scholastic nor scholastic, but brave divers into the depths of human thought: men who struggled bravely with the difficulties, the doubts, and the enigmas of the Soul: and, by their energy of purpose, their eloquence in speech, and the firmness of the grasp with which they held the tendencies of their time, they again emancipated the World. Let us note in addition, and in general and catholic terms, the requisites which engaged Occam.—It is universally admitted that Schoolmen became finally divided into two great sects—Realists and Nominalists. The former, whose leaders were Aquinas and Duns Scotus, had a subdivision into Thomists and Scotists; the latter—including the Conceptualists—bearing the great names of Roscelin, Abelard, and Occam. The following were the positions held by Occam.—In those days as now, the first dispute was the Theory of Perception. How do we perceive? How do Mind and Matter interact? Occam maintains that we know only two things—the existence of an object, and the existence of a mental impression. The notion of an object transmitted, he declares a pure fantasy.

Certain senses, he says, receive an image of external objects, (sight, for instance), but this reception accompanies the act of perceiving, and does not constitute it. There are but two partial causes of sensation—the Subject which feels; and the Object, that is perceived:—further, we know nothing and need not inquire. And so of objects remembered: he rejects with equal decision the theory then in vogue, that we perceive or image what is past, through effect of Resemblances of objects continuing, as essences or shadows in the Mind: he says that Recollection is a power of the mind, and that we cannot define it more minutely. So also with regard to general terms or notions. They result from the action of the Intellect, on things perceived. Intelligible Species or Entities, representing general ideas, he utterly repudiates. The Mind, which has the faculty to perceive objects, has also a power to abstract, to compare, to differentiate, to combine. And so, it forms conceptions corresponding to these operations, and expresses their results. There was a prevalent belief or position connected with this subject, in reference to the Divine mind. His attributes of Justice, Goodness, Wisdom, &c., were imagined separate Entities, with which he held council, on proceeding to act. No! said Occam, these are modes or forms of the Supreme Reason; they are Attributes, and not Entities. The Nominalism of Occam as thus expressed, certainly does not reach that of Hobbes and Locke; nor indeed can we easily distinguish it from views that would not be termed Nominalist, in these our modern times. But is it not easy to recognize, in the basis of such disputations, the most important difficulties of Philosophy—those very problems that agitate us still? One thing at least is clear;—questions of such sort regarding all things Human and Divine, clothed in any garb—even in the grammatical—could not be presented with the ardour of an Abelard, or the logic of Occam, without stirring men's souls to an extent, so that no dogma of Popish Infallibility, could lay the tumult again. Occam, as we have said, was therefore a legitimate progenitor of Luther: but another point of most anxious interest is inseparable from the subject we contemplate,—we mean the singular influence on the fates of the World, of the genius of the French or Gallic race. It may be taken now almost as an historic maxim, that the Teuton originates Thought, France dissolves it, and the Anglo-Saxon realizes it, and gathers its good fruits. How strange in the providence of God, that Paris, even under its most absolute Monarchs, should have been the source—moral as well as material—of mightiest Revolutions! Is it that the peculiar genius of the Gallic Race, endows it with the gift to foresee, as well as the facility to be dazzled, by new Ideas? Paris when most Catholic, was, par excellence, the seat of those intellectual strifes which ultimately destroyed the Pope: Paris when most absolute, was, through the popularity of the Encyclopædists, the centre of those influences which first introduced the wildest Republicanism into Europe: Paris under a profound despotism, ploughed up the roots of every despotism in the old Continent: Paris, now, in its fresh anomalous condition, has, we doubt not, a similar and singular Destiny to fulfil. [J.P.N.]

OCCHIALI, the common appellation of Kilig-Ali, captain pacha under Selim II., distinguished at the battle of Lepanto 1572, died about 1577.

OCCO, ADOLPHUS, a Ger. numism., 1524-1605.

OCELLUS-LUCANUS, a Pythagorean philosopher, supposed author of a work 'On the Universe,' B.C. 500.

OCHINUS, B., an Italian polemic, 1487-1564.

OCHS, PETER, a doctor of law, dist. at Basle for his part in the Helvetic revolution, 1749-1821.

OCHTERLONY, SIR DAVID, an officer in the service of the East India Company, disting. in the Nepaulese war, b. in New England, 1758, d. 1825.

OCKLEY, SIMON, distinguished for his Oriental learning, and his zeal in promoting the culture of the Arabian language, of which he was professor at Cambridge, was born at Exeter 1678, and died, prematurely, 1720. His principal works are a 'History of the Saracens,' a 'Life of Mahomet,' a 'History of the Present Jews,' from the Italian of Leo Modena, 'An Introduction to the Oriental Languages,' and 'The Improvement of Human Reason, exhibited in the Life of Hai Ebn Yok-dhan,' translated from the Arabic.

O'CONNELL, DANIEL, was born near Cahir Siveen in the county of Kerry, on the 6th of August, 1775. In his youth, and subsequently as the hospitable lord of Derryunane Abbey, he lived much amid the wild scenery, and as wild population of his native district. It is still a scarcely accessible territory, with but scanty road communication through the narrow gaps in the mountain ranges, and so sterile, as to present even a part of Ireland thinly peopled.—It is impossible to look at O'Connell's career and character without believing that the spot with which his career was so closely connected, had a characteristic influence on his mind. His father was a petty landowner. Whether O'Connell was of high or humble birth, has been a matter ever disputed. He claimed high descent, and it was conceded to him by his Irish followers; but this is one of the characteristics without which that singular people would never acknowledge leadership. It was necessary as a point of policy that he should be reported to come of the true old blood, and when he swept through the crowd in his great family coach, broadly emblazoned with a quartered shield and conspicuous supporters, it was evident to the large-built, handsome, rather highly dressed man, who looked around with the air of an East prince, was by no means the democratic leader a republican people. He had an uncle who high in the military service of France, of whom used to speak as ashamed to own that his nephew occupied the humble position of an avocat. was educated at St. Owen and Douay, and at destined for the church, but the relaxation w admitted Roman Catholics to the bar, opened him a more brilliant career. He kept his term the Middle Temple, and was admitted to the bar in Easter term, 1798. He was a very student, and is described by Sir Jonah Barrington as having 'bottled' a quantity of legal knowledge for subsequent use. His great characteristic, as a daring leader of the people against the existing order of things, was the wonderful facility with which he could march along the boundary line of strict legal action without crossing, or committing either himself or his followers. In the Irish bar he was beyond all question the advocate of his day, whether for oratory or a ready adaptation of the law. And thus, when it is known that he collected large subsidies from his fellow-countrymen in the form of what was termed the patriotic rent, it must at the same time be remembered that he gave up a practice as lucrative as the Irish bar could afford. His later career is intimately connected with the recollection of all who have paid attention to the passing pages of the day. It may be mentioned, however, in chronologically fixing the commencement of his historical career, that it was in the year 1809 that he first came forth as a champion of the Irish Roman Catholics, by boldly proposing, in a public meeting of the body in William-Street, Dublin, the establishment of a general committee. In 1815 he made himself unpleasantly notorious by killing in a duel Mr. D'Este, who chafed at him for calling the corporation of Dublin beggars. When the 'Catholic Association,' afterwards formed by him, was denounced by the law he found means of evading the penalties, and reconstructing the association on a firmer basis. Then he proceeded systematically to obtain election of persons who could not take the oaths, statesmen saw the necessity of concession, and the Roman Catholic Emancipation Act was passed. When the Reform Bill he became conspicuous as the head of a parliamentary body, who, acknowledging his leadership, and voting together, were called 'O'Connell's Tail.' About the year 1840 he took out the agitation for the repeal of the Union, which became a failure in his hands. In January, 1844 the government of Sir Robert Peel resolved to grapple with him and the repeal agitators began criminal proceedings, and obtained a conviction, followed by a sentence of imprisonment, but it was reversed in the House of Lords. O'Connell, however, was now an old man—the trial shook his nerves and his position. It was followed by the miseries of the potato blight, and on the 15th of May, 1847, he died during a sojourn in Italy, which was called a pilgrimage, and proposed to partake of a penitential or religious character. [J. B.]

[Derryunane Abbey.]

O'CONNOR, GENERAL ARTHUR, uncle of the notorious Feargus O'Connor, and one of the principal actors in the Irish rebellion of 1798, was originally a barrister, and having the good fortune to escape punishment, after that event went to France, where the first Consul appointed him general of division. In 1809 he married the daughter of the famous Condorcet, niece on her mother's side to Marshal Grouchy, and in 1834 purchased the chateau of Bignon from the heirs of Mirabeau, where he died 1852.

O'CONNOR, CHARLES, a catholic clergyman, author of works elucidating Irish history, d. 1828. O'CONNOR, RODERICK, king of Connaught, the time of the conquest of Ireland by Henry II. O'CONNOR, TURLOGH, called 'the Great,' a king of Connaught, who aimed at the entire sovereignty of the country, 1088-1156.

OCTAVIA, the sister of Augustus, illustrious for her virtues, her beauty, and her accomplishments, was the widow of Claudius Marcellus, by whom she had a son and two daughters, when she was married, at the instance of her brother, to the emperor, Mark Antony. The latter neglected her. Cleopatra, queen of Egypt; notwithstanding which, Octavia displayed the most noble fidelity to her house and fortunes, and devoted herself to the education of all his children. She died of the depression into which she was thrown by the loss of her son by Marcellus, who was the intended heir of Augustus, and who was idolized by the people of Rome, B.C. 11. [E.R.]

OCTAVIA, a daughter of the emperor Claudius Messalina. She was the sister of Britannicus, and at the age of sixteen, became the wife of Nero. The latter divorced her and married Poppaea, at whose instance she was put to death in the twentieth year of her age, A.D. 62.

DARRI, G., an Italian painter, 1663-1731.

DENATUS, SEPTIMIUS, son of an Arabian prince, who allied himself with the Romans against the king of Persia, and, after defeating the latter, was associated with Gallienus in the empire. He was married to Zenobia, who remained queen of Palmyra after his death. Assassinated 267.

DERICO-DE-PORTEAU, a cele. Francis-Commissary, author of his travels, 1286-1331.

DERICO, G. L., an Italian numismatist, 1712-1803.

DESCALCHI, the name of two noble philanthropists of Rome—the first of whom, MARK ANTONIO, was cousin to Innocent XI., and founder of a hospital for the destitute, died 1670. The second, THOMAS, almoner to the same pope, founded an institution for the education and employment of poor children, died 1692.

DER, LEWIS, a physician of Geneva, who distinguished himself by the introduction of vaccination on the continent, author of a 'Manual of Practical Medicine,' 1748-1817.

DER, P. A., a Fr. administrator, 1774-1825.

DER, ST., a famous abbot of Clugny, distinguished as a Latin poet and theologian, 962-1048.

DER, WALTER, commonly called 'Walter of Evesham,' being abbot of that monastery, distinguished in music and astronomy, 13th cent.

DER, a Romish saint, and abbot of Clugny, famous for his reforms in monastic discipline, 879-943.

DER OF KENT, a Benedictine monk, who became successively prior of St. Saviour's and abbot of Battle Abbey. He is the author of some learned writings, and was a friend of Becket, died 1200.

OECOLAMPADIUS, JOHN, was born at Weinsperg in Franconia in the year 1482. He was educated at Heilbrunn, and afterwards at Heidelberg. At Stuttgart he met with the famous Reuchlin, under whom he studied Greek so ardently as in a short time to compose and publish a Greek grammar. In 1515 he began to preach, and he cordially assisted Erasmus at Basle in publishing his Annotations on the New Testament. After this he entered the monastery of St. Bridget at Augsburg, but after two years left it for more active labours. In 1521 the protestant light began to dawn upon him, and he soon came to the assistance of Zwingli, the Swiss Reformer, and concurred with him in his views of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper in opposition to Luther. He was mingled up for many years in those discussions, and in the conventions held to secure agreement. He disputed with Dr. Eck at Baden, and the debate lasted eighteen days. Basle was his headquarters, and the scene of his earnest and multiplied pastoral labours. In 1531 he was seized with severe and sudden sickness, and he died in December of that year, in the forty-ninth year of his age. He has left behind him several works, but his special memory lies in his living diligence, meekness, prudence, self-denial, and success in carrying on the Swiss reformation from Popery. His original name was Hausschein, House-lamp, which he, according to a prevalent custom, changed into the Greek surname Oecolampadius, of similar meaning. [J.E.]

OECUMENIUS, a Gr. commentator, 10th cent.

OEDER, G. C., a German botanist, 1728-1791.

OEFELS, A. F. D., a Ger. savant, 1706-1780.

OEHLENSCHLÄGER, ADAM, the greatest dramatic poet of the Scandinavian North, was b. 1777. He commenced his career on the stage, but abandoned the profession for literature, and finally became professor of Æsthetics in his native city. Among his greatest works may be mentioned—1. 'The Death of Balder;' 2. 'The Gods of the North;' 3. 'Aladdin;' 4. 'Stærkodder;' 5. 'Hakem-Jarl;' 6. 'Palnatoke;' 7. 'Axel and Valborg;' 8. 'The Admiral Fordens Kjøld,' and many others. Died 28th January, 1850.

OEHLMULAR, D. J., a Ger. archit., 1791-1823.

OELRICHS, G., a Germ. antiquarian, 1727-89.

OELRICHS, J. C. C., a Germ. hist., 1722-98.

OELRICHS, J. G. A., a Ger. savant, 1767-91.

OENOMAUUS, a Greek philosopher, 2d century.

OENOPIDES OF CHIO, a Pythagorean philosopher, 5th century B.C.

OERN, N., a traveller and wr. on Lapland, 1707.

OERNHEIM, or ORNSJOELMS, CLAUDIUS, called in Latin Aorhenius, a Swed. hist., 1625-95.

OERNESCHOELD, P. ABRAHAM, Baron De, founder of the manufacture of linens and prints in Sweden, died 1770.

OERSTED, HANS CHRISTIAN, professor of physics at the university of Copenhagen, and secretary of the Academy of Sciences in that city, was born 1777. He is the author of numerous works in physics—more especially in magnetism and chemistry, most of which are written in Latin. His last production, in Danish, entitled 'Aanden i Naturen,' caused a great sensation. Died 1851.

OESER, A. F., a painter and engraver of Presburg, 1717-1799. His son, FREDERIC, died 1792.

OETINGER, FRED. CHRISTOPHER, a learned philologist and mystic divine of Germany, who finally became prelate of Murhard, in Wurtemberg, and died at the age of eighty, 1782. His principal work is the 'Earthly and Heavenly Philosophy of Swedenborg and Others,' which included notices of Boehmen, Malebranche, Newton, Cluvers, Wolffe, Plouquet, Bagliv, and Fricker. This publication involved him in considerable trouble with the Consistory; and in a controversy with Faber. Oetinger, however, was protected by the duke of Wurtemberg, as Dr. Tafel has been in the same cause by the present king. The son of Oetinger published a work, entitled 'Metaphysica et Chemica,' his father at the time being interdicted from writing. This prelate was a great master of the philosophy of Leibnitz. [E.R.]

OETTER, S. W., a German historian, 1720-92.

OEXMELIN, A. O., a Flem. buccaneer, au. of a 'History of the Adventures to India,' publ. 1686.

O'FARRIL, G., a Spanish general, 1784-1831.

OFFA, the successor of his uncle, Ethelbald, as king of Mercia, was placed on the throne after a successful insurrection in 757. He greatly extended his kingdom, and added that of the East Angles to it by treacherously murdering Ethelbert. In his latter years, he made peace with his conscience by the foundation of St. Alban's Abbey, and an annual payment to the pope, known in after ages as Peter's pence. Died 796.

OGDEN, SAMUEL, a learned minister of the Church of England, born at Manchester 1716, master of Halifax school 1744-1753, and, finally, rector of Lawford and Stansfield; died 1773. He is the author of some popular 'Sermons.'

OGE, a creole of the French colony of St. Domingo, who distinguished himself at the period of the revolution, as leader of an insurrection. Being overpowered by the troops, he and his lieutenant, Chavannes, were broken on the wheel.

OGEE, J., a French geographer, 1728-1789.

OGIER, C., a French writer of his travels and residence in the North of Europe, 1595-1654.

OGILBY, JOHN, an ingenious Scotchman, dist. as a literary speculator and author, 1600-1676.

OGILVIE, JOHN, a Scottish divine and poet, author of 'Philosophical and Critical Observations on Composition,' 'Evidence of Prophecy,' and an epic poem entitled 'Britannia,' 1733-1814.

OGINSKI, COUNT, a Polish patriot, 1731-1803.

OGLETHORPE, JAMES EDWARD, an English officer, who distinguished himself in the German wars under Prince Eugene, and afterwards as chief founder of the colony of Georgia. Being sent in pursuit of the rebels in 1745, and not overtaking them, he was tried by court-martial, and honourably acquitted. Born in Surrey 1698, died 1785.

O'HALLORAN, SYLVESTER, an Irish antiquarian, author of an 'Introduction to Irish History,' a 'General History of Ireland,' &c., 1728-1807.

O'HARA, KANE, an Irish dramatist, died 1782.

O'PENART, A., a Spanish historian, 16th cent.

OISEL, or OUZEL, J., a Ger. civilian, 1631-86.

OISEL, or OUSEL, P., a Ger. Hebr., 1671-1724.

OISELAY, J. D., a French poet, 15th century.

O'KEEFE, J., an Irish comedian, 1746-1833.

OKOLSKI, F. S., a Polish historian, 17th cent.

OLAFSEN, the name of several distinguished Icelanders—MAGNUS, a clergyman, and Lat. translator of the Edda, 1573-1636. STEPH. translator of the Edda and Voluspa, died 161. EGGERT, a minister, distinguished as a naturalist 1721-1776. His brother, JOHN, an antiquarian 1731-1801. A third brother, MAGNUS, an administrator and writer, 1728-1800.

OLAHUS, NICHOLAS, a Hungarian prelate, a statesman, au. of a 'History of Attila,' 1493-1514.

OLAUS, or OLOF, the first of the Swedish chiefs who received the title of king, born 98 received at his baptism the English name of Sigfried 1008, died 1026.

OLAUS, the name of two Danish kings—the first of whom reigned in Jutland only, and was killed 814. The second, reigned 1086-1095.

OLAUS, the first of the name, king of Norway reigned 994-1000. The second, 1014-1032. The third, shared the throne with Magnus II., 1035-1096, and reigned alone 1069-1093. The fourth reigned, with his two brothers, 1103-1116. The fifth, born 1370, became king of Denmark at Waldemar, 1376, and king of Norway on the death of his father, 1380; died 1387.

OLAUS, P., a Danish chronicler, 16th cent. OLAVIDES, PABLO ANTONIO JOSEF, Count de Pinos, a Spanish statesman, distinguished as a promoter of agricultural industry in the Sicily, and author of a religious work, entitled 'The Triumph of the Gospel,' 1725-1803.

OLBERS, H. W. M., a Ger. astron., 1758-1819.

OLDCASTLE, SIR JOHN, commonly called 'good Lord Cobham,' was a domestic of the court of Henry V., and is both the first author and the martyr of our nobility. Becoming a disciple of Wickliffe, he devoted his wealth and energies to the propagation of the reformed doctrines, which he was hung in chains and then burnt at 1417. His life has been written by Gilpin.

OLDENBURG, HENRY, a physician, born the duchy of Bremen 1626, who became one of the first members, and the colleague of Dr. Wilkins in the secretaryship of the Royal Society. He published the 'Philosophical Transactions,' from 1665-1677, and died 1678.

OLDERMAN, J., a learned German, 1686-1717.

OLDFIELD, ANNE, an Eng. actress, 1683-1717.

OLDHAM, HUGH, an English prelate, supposed to have been born at Oldham, near Manchester, founder of the grammar school in the last-named town, and a great benefactor of Corpus Coll., Oxford; died 1519.

OLDHAM, JOHN, a satiric poet, 1653-1688.

OLDISWORTH, W., a miscel. writer, d. 1717.

OLDMIXON, J., an historical wr., 1673-1717.

OLDINOI, A., an Italian savant, 1612-1688.

OLDSWORTH, E., an Eng. writer, 1688-1717.

OLDYS, WILLIAM, distinguished as a biographical writer, and for his great knowledge of English books, was the natural son of Dr. W. Oldys, chancellor of Lincoln, and was born 1696. He was almost constantly employed by the booksellers, and died 1761. His principal works are a 'Life of Sir Walter Raleigh,' 'The British Librarian,' a translation of Camden's 'Britannia,' and the 'Signed G. in the 'Biographia Britannica.'

OLEARIUS, the name by which ADAM C. SCHLEGEL is generally known, a famous Ger.

reller and mathematician, author of Stories in the Persian, a Voyage to the Indies, a Chronicle of Holstein, &c., 1599-1671.

OLEARIUS, GODFREY, a German divine, author of biblical translations, &c., 1604-1685.

JOHN, son, author of 'Sacred Hermeneutics,' and various theological works, 1639-1713.

JOHN GODFREY, elder brother of the latter, an ecclesiastical grapher, 1635-1710.

GODFREY, son of John, of historical and theological works, 1672-1715.

O'LEARY, ARTHUR, an Irish priest, distinguished for his loyalty to the English government, author of 'Addresses,' and of 'A Defence of his Conduct and Writings,' 1729-1802.

OLEASHER, J., a Portuguese divine, d. 1663.

OLENSCHLÄGER, J. D., called 'Olearius,' a German publicist and historical writer, 1711-1778.

OLEJNIKI, S., a Polish cardinal, died 1455.

OLEY, BARNABAS, a learned divine, who became archdeacon of Ely after the restoration, and died 1686. He published the works of Dr. Jackson and Herbert's 'Country Parson.'

OLGA, a woman of obscure birth, who became wife of Igor, grand duke of Russia; and after the death of her husband, in 945, governed the country for ten years as regent. Having become Christian, and contributed to the spread of the faith, she is regarded as a saint in the Greek Church; died 968.

OLGIERD, grand duke of Lithuania, 1330-81.

OLIER, J. J., a French ascetic writer, 1608-57.

OLINA, J. P., an Italian naturalist, 16th cent.

OLIVA, ALESSANDRO, a Ital. cardinal, 1408-63.

OLIVA, F. P. D., a Span. wr., abt. 1497-1533.

OLIVA, JOHN, an Italian antiquary, author of 'Progress and Decay of Roman Learning,' 1689-1757.

OLIVAREZ, GASPER GUZMAN, Count Duke of Spanish statesman, devoted to the house of Austria, descended from the Guzmans of Castile, at Rome, during his father's embassy to Pope Sixtus Quintus, about 1587, minister for twenty years during the reign of Philip IV. and his political enemy, Richelieu, died a few months after his dismissal, 1643.

OLIVECRANTZ, JOHN PAULIN, a Swedish statesman, and master of polite literat., 1633-1707.

OLIVER, ISAAC, an English miniature painter, 1617. His son, PETER, same profession, died 1654. JOHN, supposed to be his nephew, a painter on glass, 1616-1700.

OLIVER, W., a physician of Bath, died 1764.

OLIVET, JOSEPH TOULIER D', a Fr. Jesuit, distinguished as an elegant writer and classic, 1682-1768.

OLIVETAN, PETER ROBERT, a relative and grandson of Calvin, said to have been poisoned at Avignon 1536, and, by other accounts, to have died at Ferrara 1538. He was one of the first reformers, and published a French version of the Scriptures, which became the foundation of the Geneva Bible.

OLIVEYRA, FRANCIS XAVIER DE, a Portuguese writer, who was connected with several emperors, and, becoming a protestant, took up his residence in England, 1702-1783.

OLIVEYRA, S., a Portuguese rabbin, d. 1708.

OLIVER, C. M., a French critic, 1701-1736.

OLIVER, F., chancellor of France, 1497-1560.

OLIVER, JAMES, a president of the parliament of Paris, born about 1460, died 1519. His son, JOHN, a poet, and grand almoner, afterwards bishop of Angers, died 1540.

OLIVIER, S., prof. of canon law, 1538-1609.

OLIVIER, W. A., a Fr. naturalist, 1756-1814.

OLIVIERI, A. C., an Ital. antiquary, 1708-89.

OLIVIERI, D., an Italian painter, 1679-1755.

OLIVIER, R., a French writer, 1727-1814.

OLMOS, F. A., a Span. missionary, died 1571.

OLYBRIUS, FLAVIUS ANICIUS, emperor of the West, died after a three months' reign, 472.

OLYMPIAS, daughter of Pyrrhus, and wife of Alexander, king of Epirus, died about 240 B.C.

OLYMPIAS, daughter of Neoptolemus, king of Epirus, wife of Philip, king of Macedon, and mother of Alexander the Great. Having been repudiated by Philip, shortly before his assassination, B.C. 336, she is supposed to have instigated that crime, and was guilty of great atrocities during the minority of her son. Put to death B.C. 317.

OLYMPIODORUS, a Platonic philosopher of Alexandria, commencement of the 6th century. Another philosopher of the same name and place, author of a commentary on Aristotle, about the end of the 6th century. A third savant of this name was deacon of Alexandria about the end of the 7th century, and wrote Commentaries.

OLZOFFSKI, ANDREW, a Polish statesman and prelate, distinguished for his wisdom and patriotism, born 1678.

OMAR, the first caliph of the name, and father-in-law of Mahomet, succeeded Aboubeker 634, conquered Jerusalem 637, and Alexandria 640. It was on this occasion that the great library of the Ptolemies was destroyed, and in the reign of Omar that the institutions of the Mahomedans began to assume their proper form. He was assassinated by a Persian slave 644. The second Omar succeeded 717, and was assassinated 720.

OMAR, the fourth and last Arabian king of Badajoz, suc. his brother 1082, and was k. 1090.

OMAR, a cel. Mussulman doctor, abt. 1068-1142.

OMAR-PACHA, dey of Algiers, 1815-1817.

OMAYAH, or OMMIAH, a prince who ruled the Arabian tribe of Khoreish, the same to which Mahomet belonged, before the advent of the latter at the commencement of the 7th century. He was the stock of the Omniade caliphs.

O'MEARA, BARRY EDWARD, a surgeon in the British navy, whose medical skill and knowledge of Italian induced the emperor Napoleon to invite him to St. Helena, in the capacity of his medical attendant. He remained with the emperor till 1818, when a rupture occurred between him and Sir Hudson Lowe, whose conduct he deemed oppressive, and he returned to England. He became a partizan of O'Connell in his later years, and died 1836, at the age of sixty-six. He wrote 'A Voice from St. Helena,' and several other works on the same subject.

OMMEGANCK, B. B., a Fle. painter, 1775-1826.

ONESICRITUS, a Gr. historian, 4th cent. B.C.

ONIAS, the name of several high priests of the Jews—the first of whom governed the Hebrew republic, 322-302 B.C. The second, 233-219 B.C. The third, who is much spoken of in the book of the Maccabees, 199-170 B.C. The fourth, called also Menelaus, reigned 172-162 B.C.

ONKELOS, a celebrated rabbin, supposed to have been a native of Babylon, and to have flourished about the time of our Lord. He wrote the Chaldee Targum, or paraphrase on the Pentateuch, which is remarkable for the purity of its language, and conformity with the Hebrew text.

ONOMACRILUS, a Greek poet, 6th cent. B.C.

ONOSANDER, a Greek Platonist, whose only remaining work is a discourse on the duties and virtues of the general of an army, 1st century.

OORT, LAMBRECHT VAN, a Flemish historical painter, born in 1520. ADAM, his son, 1557-1641.

OOST, JACOB VAN, the elder, a Flemish painter, greatly distinguished for his numerous altar-pieces, born about 1600, died 1671. His son, of the same names, called the Younger, a portrait and historical painter, 1637-1713.

OOSTERWICK, MARIA VAN, a pupil of J. De Heam, celebrated for her exquisite fruit and flower painting, 1630-1693.

OPIE, AMELIA, was the daughter of the late distinguished physician, Dr. Alderson, of Norwich, and the sister of Mr. Baron Alderson. She was married to John Opie, the eminent historical painter, in 1784, and survived him nearly half a century. From an early period she devoted herself to literary pursuits, principally in the composition of works of fiction and moral tales. These have been chiefly admired for their simplicity and genial feeling. Her public literary career extended from 1805, when she published her 'Adeline Mowbray,' down to 1834, when her 'Lays for the Dead' issued from the press. Besides these she is the author of 'Detraction Displayed,' 'Father and Daughter,' 'Madeline,' 'Temper,' 'Valentine's Eve,' &c. But her happiest effort is considered to be the 'Illustrations of Lying.' For the last twenty-five years of her life she was a member of the Society of Friends, and lived in the strictest retirement at Norwich, where in 1853 she died, aged 84.

OPIE, JOHN, the famous historical painter, was son of a carpenter, and was born in the neighbourhood of Truro, Cornwall, 1761. Having shown many proofs of his genius, he commenced painting under the advice of Dr. Wolcott, and at the age of twenty was introduced to Sir Joshua Reynolds, in London. He succeeded Fuseli as professor of painting at the Royal Academy, and was a lecturer at the Royal Institution. He wrote 'An Inquiry into the Requisite Cultivation of the Arts of Design in England.' Died 1807.

OPINEER, P., a Dutch annalist, 1526-1595.

OPITZ, or OPITIUS, HENRY, a German divine and Orientalist, whose singular opinions as the pupil of Matthias Wasmuth, subjected him to much enmity among the learned, 1642-1712.

OPITZ, or OPITIUS, MARTIN, regarded as the father of modern German poetry, 1597-1639.

OPPIAN, a Gr. poet and grammarian, 8d cent.

OPPIUS CAIUS, the name of two Romans—the first, a tribune of the people, B.C. 215. The second, one of Cæsar's lieutenants, 50 B.C.

OPSOPÆUS, J., a German critic, 1556-1596.

OPSOPÆUS, V., a Ger. philologist, died 1540.

OPSTRAET, J., a Fr. Jansenist, 1651-1720.

ORCAGNA, A., an Italian painter, 1320-1389.

ORDERIC, VITALIS, an English monk of French descent, kn. as an ecclesiastical historian, 12th cent.

ORDINAIRE, C. N., a Fr. naturalist, 1736-1809.

OREGGIO, A., an Ital. theologian, 1577-1635.

O'REILLY, ALEXANDER, Count, an Irish general, disting. in the service of Spain, 1735-1793.

O'REILLY, ANDREW, Count, a native of Ireland, who became a general of cavalry in the service of Austria, and was governor of Vienna when it capitulated, 1741-1832.

ORELLANA, FRANCISCO, a Span. adventurer, regarded as the discoverer of the Amazons, 1475-1526.

ORESME, N., an eminent Fr. prelate, d. 1218.

ORFANEL, HYACINTH, a Spanish missionary and hist. of Japan, where he was burnt alive, 1629-1686.

ORFILA, M., a physician, celebrated for his contributions to toxicological chemistry, born at Port Mahon in 1783, died in Paris 1853.

ORGAGNA, A., an Italian painter, 1329-1389.

ORIANI, B., an Italian astronomer, 1753-1820.

ORIBASIIUS, a Greek physician, 4th cent.

ORIENT, J., a Hungarian painter, died 1800.

ORIENTIUS, Sr., bishop of Auch, d. abt. 1100.

ORIGEN, surnamed ADAMANTIUS, was born at Alexandria about the year A.D. 186. His father, Leonides, an intelligent and educated Christian, was martyred in the year 203. Origen, his mother, and six younger sons, were left in great destitution. The fatherless child studied under Clemens Alexandrinus and monius Sacas, and made so great proficiency, that in his eighteenth year Demetrius the bishop appointed him to the office of catechist. In this position success in teaching Christianity was so great, that his life was threatened by his pagan adversaries. During this period he practised peculiar austerities, and subjected himself to a strange mutilation, agreeably to what he deemed the correct meaning of the statement in Matthew xix. 12. He sold his library of secular books for a perpetual income of four oboli a-day, went without shoes, and slept on the ground. About the year 212 he made a brief visit to Rome. On his return to Alexandria he devoted himself more exclusively and assiduously to biblical studies. Among the persons rescued from error by him, was a man of wealth, called Ambrose, who gratefully supplied his teacher with seven amanuenses and as many copyists. The anger in which persecution placed him, obliged him to leave Alexandria in 215, and he took refuge in Cæsarea. Here, though invested with no ecclesiastical office, he publicly expounded the Scriptures. In the year following he was recalled to Alexandria, and still pursued his Scripture studies. Immediately afterwards he journeyed into Greece on his way through Palestine he was ordained a presbyter, and at Antioch had an interview, at the earnest request, with Mammaea, mother of the emperor Alexander Severus. The bishop, Eusebius, who had been for some time jealous of the growing fame of Origen, now openly attacked him on his return. In an assembly of prelates he pronounced sentence of exile upon Origen, and, in doing so, another degraded him from the priesthood. He sent a circular to all the bishops demanding their concurrence in the judgment. In Palestine, however, Origen was protected; he lived, studied, and preached in Cæsarea. Persecution broke out again under Decius, and he was imprisoned and tortured. He showed himself prepared for martyrdom, but was at length released. His sufferings, however, shortened his life, and he died at Tyre in the year 253, about his sixty-ninth year.—The priv. life and character of Origen were marked by great piety, moderation, meekness, humility, and industry. Under trying provocation he maintained an unflinching temper, and in times of danger he was never unnerved. His orthodoxy was impeached during his lifetime, and Origenism became in succeeding centuries an interminable theme of wrangling and censure. The fancy of Origen did lead him ten astray into wild and extravagant speculations, such as the dream of an ante-natal existence, the pre-existence of Christ's human soul, and the final restoration of men and fallen spirits. His grammatical knowledge did not preserve him from the common and enticing error of spiritualizing, or allegorizing Scripture. As a defender of the faith, Origen was far before any of his contemporaries, as may be seen in his book 'against Celsus,' and the remains of the Philocalia, which was compiled out of his writings by Basil and Gregory Nazianzus, and principally from this clever theme. In the shape of commentary, scholia, homilies, he published on nearly the whole of Scripture, though only a few portions of these voluminous works have been preserved. His treatise 'De Principiis' is extant in the Latin version of Rufinus. Others of his numerous works exist only in scanty fragments. The 'Exhortation to martyrdom,' and the book 'On Prayer,' have come down to us. Eusebius speaks of having collected a hundred of his letters. But one chief province of Origen's literary labours was upon the text of Scripture. His famous Hexapla, the best known of his editions, presents, in successive columns the Hebrew, Hebrew in Greek characters, and the Greek versions of Aquila, Symmachus, the Vulgate, and Theodotion; other Greek versions were occasionally added in additional columns. There was a critical attempt to amend the text of the Septuagint. The surviving remains of this noble and costly polyglot were published by Montfaucon, in 2 folio volumes, Paris, 1714. The later editions of Origen's works were chiefly in Latin versions, such as those of Merlin, Erasmus, Pagnin, and Genebrard. Huet published the exegetical works in 2 folios, Rouen, 1688; but the Edition princeps is the Benedictine one, of De La Rue, Paris, 1733-59, 4 vols., folio, reprinted in fifteen volumes by Oberthür, Würzburg, 1785. A later edition by Lommatzsch in twenty-five 12mo volumes, was printed at Berlin, 1832-48, and a new life was published by Redepenning in two volumes at Bonn, 1846. With all his skilled diligence in biblical literature, Origen was not a safe guide in theology. There is at the same time no doubt that many of his works were interpolated, and it is plain that he was prone to theorize, and to propound hypotheses which could not be sustained. His hints were by and by broadened by others into assertions, and his conjectures changed into positive affirmations. We cannot but admire his industry and erudition, though we smile at his credulity, and refuse to admit the truth of many of the dogmas with which his name has been so long connected. [J.E.]

ORIGEN, the disciple and friend of Porphyry, lived about the same time as the preceding, and was the successor of Plotinus in the chair of philosophy at Alexandria.

ORLANDI, CL., an Ital. architect, 1694-1775.

ORLANDI, P. A., an Ital. art-writer, 1660-1727.
ORLANDINI, N., an Italian Jesuit, known as the first historian of his order, 1554-1606.

ORLAY, B. VAN, a Flem. painter, b. abt. 1490.

ORLAY, J. VAN, a Flem. painter, b. abt. 1656.

ORLEANS, an ancient dukedom, and titular name borne by the princes of the blood royal in France, of which there are two lines:—1. The first line has given the following names to history:—LOUIS I. of France, duke d'Orleans, second son of Charles V., born 1371, became regent in consequence of the mental incapacity of his brother, Charles VI., 1393, and was murdered by his cousin, the duke of Burgundy, 1407. This event was the source of the bloody feuds between the houses of Orleans and Burgundy. CHARLES, son of the preceding, duke of Angouleme in his father's lifetime, taken prisoner at the battle of Agincourt, died while attempting the conquest of the Milanese, which he claimed in right of his mother, 1465. He left a son, LOUIS II. of Orleans, who, in 1498, succeeded to the crown as Louis XII.—Between the first and second houses we find JOHN BAPTIST GASTON, third son of Henry IV. and Mary de Medici, born 1608, created duke of Orleans 1626, and noted for his intrigues during the reign of his brother, Louis XIII. He was banished to Blois by Mazarin in 1652, and died there 1660.—2. The second house of Orleans commences with PHILIP I., second son of Louis XIII. and Anne of Austria, born 1640, received the title of Orleans on the death of his uncle, Gaston, 1660, and the next year was married to his cousin, Henrietta Anne, daughter of Charles I. of England. He is suspected of having poisoned this princess, and, in 1671, was married to Elizabeth of Bavaria, of whom his successor was born; died 1701. PHILIP II., born 1674, succeeded to the title of the preceding 1701, and became the celebrated regent Orleans after the death of Louis XIV. He was educated in profligacy by the abbé Dubois, and brought the kingdom to the verge of an insurrection (see LAW); died suddenly 1723. LOUIS, son and successor of the latter, born 1703, was distinguished for his accomplishments as a universal scholar and linguist. He died, after passing his life in a literary and religious retirement, 1752. LOUIS PHILIP, son and successor of Louis the preceding, born 1725, was lieutenant-general in the Flemish wars and governor of Dauphiné. He was a man of taste and a lover of literature, and died generally regretted 1785. LOUIS JOSEPH PHILIP, son of the last named, see article below. LOUIS PHILIP, his son and successor, same as the late king of French. See LOUIS PHILIPPE. FERDINAND PHILIP LOUIS CHARLES HENRY, eldest son of the late king of the French, was born 1810 at Palermo, and distinguished himself in 1831 at the siege of Antwerp, and more recently in the African campaigns. He was killed by a fall from his carriage, near Neuilly, 13th July, 1842. His sons are the present Count de Paris, born 1838, and the duc de Chartres, born 1840. His sister, MARIE, princess of Orleans, born at Palermo 1813, was greatly distinguished for her love of art, and especially for her skill in sculpture. She was married to the duke of Wurtemberg in 1837, and died of consumption 1889. Her greatest work is the statue of Joan of Arc, in the museum of Versailles.

ORLEANS, LOUIS PHILIPPE JOSEPH, Duc D', father of the late king of the French, and cousin of Louis XVI., was born at St. Cloud, with the title of Duc de Montpensier, 1747, became duc de Chartres 1752, and succeeded to the title and estates of his father in 1787. In 1769 he married the daughter of the duc de Penthièvre, and enjoyed some measure of the popularity that belonged to her as member of a family beloved by the people. In the conflict between the court and the parliaments, which preceded the revolution, Louis d'Orleans fully justified this preference by opposing the former, and, as a natural consequence, was received coldly by the royal family, and exposed to many mortifications at court; one considerable instance of which was the refusal of the king to appoint him grand admiral of France—a dignity that had fairly reverted to the duc d'Orleans by ordinary custom. His predilection for the popular cause was accompanied by a private character undeniably bad. It may be enough to say on this point, that, as he frequently visited England, he was the boon companion of the prince of Wales, and shared in all those nameless crimes against morality that we commonly understand by 'blackguardism.' The scene of his orgies in France was the Palais Royal. 'He changed the noble and spacious gardens of his palace into a market of luxury, devoted by day to traffic (as a means of repairing his shattered fortunes), and by night to play and debauchery—a complete sink of iniquities, built in the heart of the capital—a work of cupidity which antique manners never could forgive this prince; and which, being gradually adopted as their forum by the indolence of the Parisian population, was destined to become the cradle of the revolution.' The duc d'Orleans, in fact, and the Palais Royal, became the centre of the great conspiracy that was striding onwards to overthrow all that should have been dear to the descendant of a line of kings. Honour, decency, the privacy of the domestic life of royalty, and the fair name of his cousin Marie Antoinette, were all sacrificed by the man whose natural place at such a crisis was among the chief defenders of the throne. In 1792 Louis d'Orleans took his seat with the republicans in the National Convention, and adopted for himself and his heirs the name of Egalité—even voting for the king's death, 'simply occupied with his duty,' as he expressed himself, 'and convinced that the enemies of public liberty deserved to die.' It has been affirmed that he went to see Louis executed, but this is by no means certain; for his position, especially after the king's death, as first prince of the blood, was such as to bring upon him the hatred and suspicion of all parties. He was accused, at last, of plotting to re-establish the monarchy, either in his own person, or in his family, and the Jacobins were resolved to rid themselves of the embarrassment of his presence. A revulsion of feeling seems to have taken place after his arrest, and he conducted himself with unexpected courage, propriety, and self-possession on the day of his trial and execution—which took place, after several months' imprisonment, on 6th November, 1793. On being asked 'Whether he had not voted the death of the tyrant with the ambitious premeditation of succeeding him?'

'No,' he replied, 'I obeyed my heart and science.' 'Since you were determined to condemn me,' he added, 'you should have found more specious pretexts, for you will never persuade me one that you believed me really guilty of the treason you charge me with.' Louis d'Orleans, in truth, understood the temper of the people well to think of aspiring to the crown, and made himself too familiar with them to dread any respect in such a character. The republic sacrificed him for future security, as they would have done every member of the royal family if it had been possible to secure their persons. [E.]

ORLEANS-DE-LA-MOTTE, LOUIS FRANÇOIS GABRIEL D', born 1683, became bishop of Angoulême 1733, and died 1774. He is regarded as the model of a Christian minister, and is author of 'Spiral Letters,' published 1777. His life, by Frothingham, was published 1788.

ORLEY, B. VAN, a Flemish painter, 1490-1510. ORLEY, RICHARD VAN, and his son, J. N., distinguished at Brussels as miniature painter and engravers; the former 1652-1732.

ORLOFF, GREGORY, a Russian general and political intriguer, who greatly promoted the elevation of his mistress, Catharine II., to the throne. Being disappointed in his hope of sharing the crown with her, and declining a private marriage, he was supplanted by a new favourite, and died insane 1783. He had one son by the empress, named Bobrinski. ALEXIS, his brother and low-conspirator, was a man of gigantic strength, and is said to have strangled the emperor Peter with his own hands. He was a favourite of Catharine, and was married to the princess Taranoff, daughter of the empress Elizabeth; died 1808. GREGORY VLADIMIROVICH, a nobleman of the same family, bearing the title of COUNT ORLOFF, was distinguished for his patronage and culture of letters. He is author of 'Historical, Political, and Literary Memoirs of Russia,' a 'History of the Arts in Italy,' flour. 1778-1810.

ORME, ROBERT, son of Dr. Alexander Orme, a physician and surgeon, employed by the East India Company, distinguished for his historical works on British India, 1728-1801.

ORMEROD, OLIVER, a Church of England minister and polemical writer of the time of James I., author of 'The Picture of a Puritan,' and 'The Picture of a Papist,' died 1626.

ORMOND, JAMES BUTLER, duke of, a commander in the army of Charles I., and a strenuous adherent of his son Charles II., whose restoration he laboured to promote, 1610-1688. His son, THOMAS, earl of Ossory, distinguished as a naval and military commander, 1634-1680. His grandson, JAMES, second duke of Ormond, a part of the prince of Orange, and afterwards of the regent, 1665-1747.

OROBIO, BALTHASAR, called by some philosophers ISAAC DE CASTRO OROBIO, was a Spanish Jew, who professed the Roman Catholic faith in his native country, where he was a physician and professor of metaphysics. He was tortured and imprisoned by the inquisition on suspicion of his real character, and afterwards on going to Amsterdam, was circumcised and became a Jew. He wrote a philosophical book against Spinoza.

OROSIUS, P., a Spanish ecclesiastic, 4th cent.
ORRENTE, P., a Spanish painter, died 1642.
ORSATO, J. B., an Italian antiq., 1673-1720.
ORSATO, SERTORIO, an Italian antiquarian and historian, usually called Ursatus, 1617-1678.
ORSI, J. A., an Italian historian, 1692-1761.
ORSINI, a noble Italian family, the most celebrated of whom are—NICHOLAS, count of Pitigliano, a Venetian general, time of the league of ambray, 1412-1510. His cousin, LORENZO, or ENZO DE CERI, conquered the duchy of Urbino, in the interest of Leo X., and defended Rome against the constable Bourbon, died 1536. FULIO, in the Latinized form, FULVIUS URSINUS, a distinguished scholar and antiquarian writer, 1529-1600. The popes, Nicholas III. and Benedict III., were of this family, and a branch of the family entered the Neapolitan service, and became the counts of Nola and dukes of Gradina. FRANCESCO and PAOLO, of this branch, were strangled in Sinigaglia by Caesar Borgia, and the cardinal Ursini was poisoned by Caesar's father, the pope Alexander VI. See also URSINS.
ORTE, or ORTHES, H. D'ASPREMONT, Viscount D', governor of Bayonne at the period of the massacre of St. Bartholomew, in which, to his honour, he refused to participate.
ORTEGA, C. G. DE, a Span. botanist, 1730-1810.
ORTELIUS, A., a Flem. geographer, 1527-1598.
ORTON, Job, an Eng. dis. minister, 1717-1783.
ORUS APOLLO, otherwise HORUS APOLLO, and HORAPOLLO, the supposed author of two ancient books concerning the Hieroglyphics of the Egyptians, first published by Aldus in 1505, was native of Egypt, and first taught as a grammarian at Alexandria, and then at Constantinople, in the reign of Theodosius, about 380. The interesting fragment known by his name is supposed to be, substantially, of much older date, and have been written in the Egyptian tongue, the texts we now have (according to this hypothesis) being a reproduction or abridged version in Greek. The explanations of Orus Apollo have exercised a great deal the curiosity of the learned, and some of the signs are admitted to have the value he assigns to them. The book has often been republished since the time of Aldus, and several times in a Latin version, the latest being that of J. Mans, Amsterdam, 1834. The following will give some idea of the meanings of Orus Apollo:—the scarabæus—virility, paternity, strength; the lotus—fate and providence; the dew, or soft rain—grace; fire and water, as emblems of lustration and expiation—purity; the ox—temperance and strength; the crocodile—insane fury, rapacity, ferocity; the frog—an imperfect or unformed being; the lion's head—watchfulness; the anterior members of the lion—power; the lamp burning—illumination; the eye—God; the face without eyes, or two eyes represented over a mask—the manes, or divine gods; the black dove—constancy in widowhood. It is quite clear that this interesting fragment of antiquity contains the remnant of the traditions of remote times, mingled with later inventions or guesses. Orus Apollo gives the meaning of the cross as future life or salvation, and confesses that he cannot explain why. This is the crux ansata, erroneously regarded as the key of the Nile, and usually held by Osiris. [E.R.]

ORVILLE, J. P. D., a Dutch critic, 1696-1751.
ORY, F., a French jurisconsult, died 1657.
ORZECZOWSKI, STANISLAUS, in Latin, ORICHOVIVS, a Polish orator and historian, 16th cent.
OS, J. VAN, a Dutch flower painter, 1744-1808. His son, T. WILLIAM, a landsc. painter, b. 1776.
OSBECK, P., a Swedish navigator, died 1805.
OSBORNE, FRANCIS, a parliamentary and republican statesman, formerly master of the horse to the celebrated earl of Pembroke, known as an historical and political writer, b. abt. 1588, d. 1658.
OSIANDER, ANDREW, a celebrated protestant theologian, who joined the party of Luther when he declared against indulgences, and took part in all the discussions when the confession of faith was formed at Augsburg. Born at Guntzenhausen, in Franconia, 1498, died 1552. His son, LUKE, called the elder, a famous controversialist, 1534-1604. LUKE, son of the latter, chancellor of the university of Tübingen, 1570-1638. ANDREW, another son of the elder Luke, well known as a theologian and commentator, 1562-1617.
OSIANDER, JOHN ADAM, a theologian and philologist, professor at Tübingen, 1622-1697. His son, of the same names, a physician, 1659-1708. The son of the latter, who also bore the same names, 1701-1756. JOHN, son of the first John Adam, distinguished as a philologist, 1657-1724.
OSIO, F., an Italian historical critic, 1587-1631.
OSIUS, a Spanish theologian, bishop of Cordova at the period of the council of Nice, 256-358.
OSMAN, son of Ibrahim, emperor of the Turks, who was taken captive when a child by certain Maltese adventurers, and, being educated as a Christian, became vicar-general of the Dominicans at Malta: died 1676.
OSMAN-BEY, NEMSEY, a Hungarian officer in the service of Austria, who was born about 1740, and, when disgraced in his regiment, retired to Constantinople and became a Moslem. He was distinguished for his skill in archaeology and numismatics, and was murdered by his servants, 1785.
OSMOND, J. B. L., a Fr. wr. on books, d. 1775.
OSMUND, ST., a bishop of Salisbury, 11th cent.
OSORIO, J., a Portuguese prelate, 1506-1580.
OSSENBEECK, J. VAN, a D. painter, 1627-78.
OSSIAN, a Gaelic bard, who is supposed to have lived in the 3d century, and is represented as the son of Fingal, king of Morven. See MACPHERSON.
OSSOLI, THE COUNTESS, better known as Margaret Fuller, was born in Massachusetts, U.S., 1810, and when quite a girl was remarkable for the avidity with which she applied herself to classical and literary studies. She became mistress of a brilliant reputation in Boston and New York, chiefly founded on her conversational powers, and the leading part she took in the friendly conversazioni made up at her friends' houses, and in a less degree on the genius and sensibility displayed in her writings. In 1847, while on a tour in Italy, she became the wife of the marquis Ossoli, and on returning to America in 1850, they both perished by shipwreck on the beach of Fire Island. With her perished the MS. of a work on Italy, containing the last and ripest fruits of her genius.
OSSORY, THOMAS, count of. See ORMOND.
OSTADE, ADRIAN VAN, a Dutch painter, 1610-1685. His brother and pupil, ISAAC, 1617-1671.

OSTERVÄLD, J. FREDERIC, a Swiss divine, author of a Catechism and a History of the Bible, 1699-1747.

OSTERWICK, MARIA VAN, celebrated as a flower painter, born near Delft 1630, died 1693.

OSTIUS, a Latin poet, 1st century.

OSTROJSKI, vaivode of Kieff, died 1608.

OSTROWSKI, a Polish general, 16th century.

OSTROWSKI, TH. ADRIAN RAWICZ, a Polish statesman and friend of the constitution, 1739-1817.

OSWALD, a saint and king of Northumberland, converted, and killed in battle 642. Another St. Oswald, bishop of Worcester and York, died 922.

OSWALD, E., an Austrian savant, 1511-1579.

OSWALD, J., a Scottish philosopher, last cent.

OSYMANDIAS, a king of Thebes, who built the Memnonium, B.C. 2000.

OTFRID, a German poet and divine, 9th cent.

OTHER, OHTHER, or OTTAR, a Norwegian traveller of the age of Alfred the Great.

OTHMAN, or OSMAN, the founder of the Ottoman empire and the dynasty of the Osmanlis, was a Turkish chief who made himself master of Bithynia, flourished 1259-1326. A second, of the same name, was the sixteenth Ottoman sultan, reigned 1618-1622. A third, who was the twenty-fifth sultan, reigned 1754-1774.

OTHMAN AL RHADY, ABOUL SAID, a king of Fez and Morocco, reigned 1310-1331.

OTHMAN-IBN-AFFAN, son-in-law of Mahomet, succeeded to Omar as third caliph 644. He was murdered by Mohammed, son of Abubekr, 656.

OTHO, emperor of Rome, reigned 32-69.

OTHO I., emperor of Germany, distinguished as the Great, was the eldest son of Henry the Fowler, duke of Saxony. He was born 912, elected king of Germany 936, and crowned emperor 962, after subduing Bohemia and Italy, besides waging a successful warfare with Nicephorus, emperor of the East. Died 973. OTHO II., son of the preceding, was born 955, consecrated king of Lombardy 962, and reigned as emperor after his father 973-983. OTHO III., son and successor of the latter, was a boy when his father died, and died when only thirty years of age, probably of poison, 1002. OTHO IV., son of Henry, the lion duke of Saxony, was born about 1175, and succeeded 1197. He was not recognized over all Germany till 1208, nor consecrated till 1209. In 1214 he was totally defeated by Philip Augustus. Died 1218.

OTHO, duke of Saxony, was the first hereditary lord of that country, and reigned from 880 to 912.

OTHO II., same as the first emperor of that name.

OTHO, a duke of Burgundy, 956-965.

OTHO, the first of the name, count of Burgundy, third son of the emperor Frederick I., succeeded him in the county 1190, died 1200. The second of the name succeeded the preceding by marrying his widow, Beatrice, 1200, and died 1234. The third, son of the preceding, died 1248. The fourth, eldest son and suc. of Alix, 1279, d. 1302.

OTHO OF BAVARIA, elected king of Hungary 1305, was compelled to abdicate 1307. OTHO, duke of Suabia, obtained the duchy of Bavaria in 976, and was killed the same year. The second Otho of Bavaria received the duchy from Agnes, mother of Henry IV., in 1061, and was slain after many reverses in 1083. The third, called 'the Great,' was nominated by Frederic Barbarossa, and reigned 1180-1183. The fourth, called the Illustris, succeeded his father, Louis I., 1231, died 1253.

OTHO OF BRUNSWICK. See BRUNSWICK.

OTHO, HENRY, Count Palatine, reig. 1556.

OTHO, Sr., the apostle of Pomerania, 1060-1067.

OTHO, or OTTO, bishop of Freysingen, son of Leopold, margrave of Austria, and Agnes, daughter of the emperor Henry IV., celebrated as a writer; died 1158.

OTHO, OTHON, or OTTON, GEORGE, an Orientalist and rabbinical philosopher, 1634-1701.

OTRANTO, JOSEPH FOUCHÉ, duke of Angoulême, minister of police under Buonaparte, was born at Nantes in 1763. When the revolution broke out he made himself conspicuous by the extravagance of his manners in the patriot club of that city, and in 1793 was sent to the convention. His career as a teacher of philosophy before the revolution was probably the reason of his appointment, in convention, on the Committee of Public Instruction. This function, however, presented little scope for his ambition, he soon worked himself into the Committee of Public Safety. In this capacity he displayed his abilities in realizing a good deal of confiscated property for the use of government; and his public spirit was highly approved that he was next sent to raise a battalion of troops in the city of Troyes. The revolution of Louis XVI. was now approaching, and Fouché, who had identified himself with the party of the Girondins, voted for the instant execution of the king. In September, 1793, he was sent to the department of the Nièvre, to see the decrees of the convention executed; and besides suppressing public worship, he loaded himself with the spoil of the churches. This mission being satisfactorily executed, he was associated with that of Collot D'Herbois to Lyons, and there the most horrible atrocities were committed. His maxim was, that nothing ought to arrest the will of the people, 'the explosion of the mine, the devouring activity of the flame, should express their power . . . their determination, like that of the tyrant, should be felt as a thunder-clap.' Such was the language of the day to which Fouché lent himself with Jesuitical cunning; for him there is no apology, as for a Marat, in sincerity. 'Brought up in a cloister, Fouché had learnt that monkish humility which stoops only to rise the higher; and he devoted himself to the tyranny of the people, until he became the instrument of a new Cæsar. More of an actor by nature than Collot was by profession, he played the part of Brutus with the soul of Sejanus.' He was not then, in his real element; the overthrow of all the disgrace of the cross and the Bible, which had caused to be dragged through the streets at the tail of an ass, the plunder of mansions, churches, and the wholesale butcheries of the Girondins of Lyons, were coolly calculated the price for popular influence. After the fall of Robespierre accusations were heard against him of desertion, and in June, 1795, he was driven out of the convention. Enabled to return by the amnesty of October, Fouché remained quiet for about two years, and then, under the Directory, became successively ambassador to Milan, ambassador to Holland, and minister of police. This latter was the very function for which nature had organized Fouché, and for which his career had thoroughly prepared him. He was to the political Jesuits that Buonaparte became to the army; in him the active cunning of the born conspirator and the finished spy arrayed itself against the daring of the soldier, and the genius of the statesman. He was wise enough to be aware that power like his could only be exercised in secret, and hence his willingness to contribute to the establishment of Napoleon as consul; the successful soldier, on the other hand, seems to have been always conscious of the meanness and danger of employing such an instrument; but in this he had no choice, for unless he would have assassinated Fouché, the only means of keeping such a man harmless, was to employ him in his own interest. Fouché had mixed with men of all parties, was thoroughly conversant with their projects, and held the secrets of a thousand conspiracies in his hands. Napoleon finding such a man in authority, and his system of espionage in full action, continued him in office till the peace of Amiens in 1802, when his functions were united to those of the minister of justice, M. Régnier, and Fouché was sent to Aix to the dignity of senator. In 1806, after Napoleon had become emperor, a new coalition was formed against him, and to meet certain of its emergencies, Fouché resumed his post as minister of police; his evening parties from this time becoming more brilliant than ever, for he was now created duke of Otranto, and opened his drawing-room to the old French nobility, many of whom acted as spies. Napoleon in the midst of his brilliant successes, was restive under the general persuasion Europe that his throne was dependent on such a system; yet he retained the minister till his marriage with the Austrian princess, when he only supposed that his dynasty was established. Preceding that event in 1809, Fouché had made a glaring exhibition of his power. During Napoleon's absence in the campaign concluded by the peace of Schönbrunn, the English made a descent on Belgium. Fouché at this time was minister of the interior as well as minister of police, and without consulting the emperor, he organized an army of the National Guard with astonishing rapidity, and having put Bernadotte at its head, he was not in favour with Napoleon, sent him to expel the enemy; about the same time he had, usually, his own private agent at the court of St. James's in the person of M. Ouvrard. The complications arising out of these circumstances determined the emperor's course, and after his second marriage Fouché was appointed governor of Rome, the duke of Rovigo becoming minister of the interior. It was well understood that this change was equivalent to his disgrace, and Fouché remained in a splendid retirement till the disastrous campaign of Russia in 1812, when the emperor, sensible of the mischief he might now do, appointed him governor of the Illyrian provinces, and on the loss of Germany, still to keep him at a distance, governor of Naples. The services of Fouché were not enlisted by the provisional government of 1814, and there is a question how far he was a party in any way to Napoleon's return from Elba. He resumed his old function, however, as minister of police during the hundred days, and at the battle of Waterloo, advised the emperor to abdicate, at the same time making his own peace with the Bourbons at Ghent. The services of Fouché were retained some time by Louis XVIII., but he soon found his position untenable, and thought it convenient to make good his retreat by going as ambassador to Dresden. The law of 1816, passed generally against all the regicides, deprived him of this last political refuge, and after travelling some time in Germany, he settled at Trieste. Fouché died in 1820, leaving a fortune estimated at half-a-million sterling. [E.R.]

OTT, JOHN HENRY, a Swiss divine, 1617-1682. His son, J. BAPTIST, cel. as an Orientalist, b. 1661.

OTT, PET. CHARLES, Baron, an Austrian field-marshal, disting. against the Turks, and more recently in the wars of Italy against France, d. 1809.

ÖTTER, JOHN, a Swedish Orientalist, 1707-48.

OTTH, ADOLPHUS, a Swiss physician, 1803-39.

OTTINI, PASCAL, an Italian painter, d. 1630.

OTTLEY, WILLIAM YOUNG, late keeper of the prints in the British Museum, author of works connected with the fine arts, including a critical catalogue of the National Gallery, 'The Italian School of Design,' 'The Origin and Early History of Engraving,' &c., 1772-1836.

OTTO. See GUERICKE.

OTTO, EVERHARD, a Ger. juriscn., 1685-1756.

OTTO, LOUIS WILLIAM, Count De Moslay, a French diplomatist, who negotiated the marriage of Napoleon with Marie Louise, 1754-1817.

OTTO, VENIUS, an Italian painter, 1556-1634.

OTWAY, THOMAS, was born in 1651, at his father's parsonage in Sussex. From Winchester school he was sent to Oxford, but left the university for London in his twenty-first year, without a degree. Going on the stage, he failed completely, and began to write plays in 1675. His tragedy of 'Don Carlos' was extremely popular; two or three comic pieces, though very indifferent, were licentious enough to please the debauched patrons of the theatres: the author was likewise a jovial companion; and one of Charles II.'s natural sons procured for him, in 1677, a commission in the army then serving in Flanders. Very soon, however, he retired from service, returned to London in great poverty, and recommenced authorship. He now wrote some translations, and many occasional and miscellaneous poems, and produced a new series of plays. Among these were the two tragedies through which his name is remembered: 'The Orphan' appeared in 1680, and 'Venice Preserved' in 1682. Both of these, especially the latter, abound in that deep pathos which was so cordially admired by Dryden, and which attracted the sympathy of the poetic and imaginative Collins. Otway continued to be poor; and his unfortunate life came to a close in his thirty-fourth year. He died, 1685, in a house in Tower-Hill, where he was hiding from his creditors; and it is asserted that, suffering from hunger, he eagerly swallowed a crust of bread, and was choked by it. [W.S.]

OUDENARDE. See AUDENAERD.

OUDENDORP, F. D', a D. philolog., 1696-1761.

OUDET, JA. JOSEPH, a French officer, born about 1773, killed at Wagram, 1809.

OUDIN, CASIMER, a French monk, author of 'Commentaries on the Ancient Writings of the Church,' 1638-1717.

OUDIN, CÉSAR, a French interpreter and diplomatist, time of Henry IV., author of a translation of Don Quixote, died 1625. His son, ANTHONY of the same profession, and author of a history of the Flemish wars, died 1653.

ODIN, C. F., a French writer, 17th century.

ODIN, F., a Jesuit and Latin poet, 1673-1752.

ODINET, M. A., a Fr. medallist, 1643-1712.

ODINOT, CHARLES NICHOLAS, duke of Reggio, and marshal of France, was the son of a merchant, and was born at Bar-Sur-Ornain 1767. He entered the army when nineteen years of age, and when the revolution broke out held the rank of captain. He embraced the popular cause, and rising to the rank of general, accompanied Massena into Italy as one of his staff-officers in 1799. His fortunes from this time were linked with those of Napoleon till the capitulation of Paris, March 31, 1814, when he became a Bourbonist. In that character he headed the army that invaded Spain in 1823, and was resident at Madrid some months as governor. In 1830, true to his principles, he adhered to the new dynasty. He succeeded Marshal Moncey as governor of the Invalides 1842, and died 1847.

ODRY, J. B., a French painter, 1686-1755.

OUGHTRIED, WM., a minister of the Church of England, dist. as a mathematician, 1574-1660.

OULOUGH-BEYG. See ULUGH-BEIGH.

OUTNEMAN, HENRY D', a Flemish historian, 1546-1605. His br., PHILIP, an ascetic, died 1652.

OUSEL. See OISEL.

OUSELEY, SIR WILLIAM, an Oriental scholar and wr. on Persian history and literat., 1771-1842.

OUTHIER, R., a Fr. astronomer, 1694-1774.

OUTRAM, or OWTRAM, WILLIAM, a Church of England minister, celebrated for his learning as a theologian, 1625-1679.

OUVILLE, ANTOINE LE METEL D', a French dramatist and translator, died about 1656.

OUVRARD, JULIAN, a French grocer who became contractor to the army, and ultimately a political employé, died in England 1847.

OUVRARD, RENE, a French ecclesiastic, dist. as a writer on music and polemics, died 1694.

OUWATER, A. VAN, a D. painter, 14th cent.

OUWATER, J., a Dutch painter, 1747-1793.

OVENS, JURIEN, a Dutch painter, 1620-1668.

OVERALL, JOHN, a learned prelate, author of a work entitled 'The Convocation Book,' written in opposition to Parsons, to advocate the divine right of government. He had a share also in the translation of the Bible and the Church Catechism. Born 1559, died bishop of Norwich 1619.

OVERBECK, BONAVENTURE VAN, a Dutch historical painter and designer, 1660-1706.

OVERBURY, SIR THOMAS, known as an elegant miscellaneous writer, but more especially for his tragical death at the instance of the earl of Rochester and the countess of Essex, was born in Warwickshire about 1581. He contracted an intimacy with the earl, then Robert Carr, at the court of James I., and provoked the anger of the countess by endeavouring to dissuade his friend from marrying her; the fact being that he was privy to their intrigues, and well acquainted with the infamous character of the lady. Rochester had the address to procure the imprisonment of his friend in the Tower of London, by creating a cause of offence between him and the king, and, some months later, caused him to be poisoned there, September 15, 1613. Though suspicions were entertained at the time, it was not till 1616 that deed of darkness was discovered, when the infernal agents were all apprehended, tried, and executed. Rochester, now earl of Somerset, and the countess were also tried and condemned, but they were pardoned by the king, for private reasons. nephew of Sir Thomas Overbury, who bore same names, and inherited his estates, was aut. of some curious tracts, published 1676-1677.

OVID. PUBLIUS OVIDIUS NASO, the 1st poet of the Romans, was born at Sulmo, (now Sulmona), a town in the country of the Peligni, about ninety miles south-east from Rome, on the 20th of March, B.C. 43, the year which witnessed the fall of the Roman consuls under the walls of Brundisium, the formation of the second triumvirate, and the cruel murder of Cicero. The leading events of his life have been transmitted to us chiefly by his own writings. His father belonged to an equestrian family, and the future poet was the second son, his elder brother being exactly two months his senior. At an early age he was brought to Rome along with his brother, and there educated under the most distinguished masters. When the usual period arrived he repaired to Athens for the purpose of completing his studies; and, before returning to Rome, visited, along with the poet Macer, the magnificent cities of Asia Minor. Ovid had manifested even in boyhood a decided taste for poetical composition; but his father, believing that poetry did not necessarily lead to wealth or political distinction, endeavoured to check the youthful aspirations of his son, and urged him to adopt the profession of law, as that which opened up to him the highest offices of the state. Parental authority for a time prevailed, and his poetical studies gave place to attendance in the forum. On attaining the legal age, he performed successively the duties of several of the minor offices of state; but his bodily health and his mental constitution alike disqualified him for active or public life. Poetry was his delight; and, therefore notwithstanding the remonstrances of his father he resolved to abandon the forum, and to devote himself exclusively to the cultivation of the muses. He now courted the society of the most eminent poets of the day; and the admiration which he cherished for them is pleasingly evinced by a statement, that, when they were assembled, he regarded them as so many divinities. Among his most intimate friends were Macer, Propertius, Ponticus, and Bassus. Ovid was married three times. His first wife, to whom he was united when scarcely beyond boyhood, was, he tells us, unworthy of his affection, so that the union was of short duration; the second, though of blameless character, was also soon discarded, without any serious charge being alleged against her. His third wife, who belonged to the Fabian family, appears to have been every way worthy of his sincere affection which the poet entertained for her till the day of his death. By her he had a daughter, Perilla, who was twice married, and had a child by each husband. Till the end of his fiftieth year, Ovid had spent a life of uninterrupted prosperity and enjoyment. His fortune, though moderate, placed within his reach the luxuries of refined life, and his fame as a poet collected around him a large circle of devoted niers. The favour and patronage of Augustus the imperial family were also extended to him. At a reverse of fortune, as sudden as it was expected, was destined to overtake him. At the close of the year A.D. 8. he was ordered by imperial edict to transport himself to Tomi, a city in the country of the Getæ, on the shore of the Euxine, a little to the south of the mouths of the Danube. Resistance was vain. Overwhelmed with grief he tore himself from the arms of his afflicted wife, and set out in the month of September for the place of his destination, which he reached the following spring. The cause of his banishment is a question which has long puzzled the ingenuity of scholars; and though many solutions of it have been proposed, it still continues to be a subject of discussion. The probable reason was the immoral tendency of the Art of Love, which had been published for only two years, and to this Ovid frequently alludes; but there is no room for doubt that the death of the emperor had been excited by some act and more grave offence. The poet himself avers that his offence was an inadvertence, rather than a crime; but his expressions, when alluding to it, are ambiguous, and even inconsistent. This sudden transition from the luxury and refinement of Rome to the inhospitable soil of the barbarism of Moesia, would have tested even the sternest philosophy; and it can be admitted that Ovid did not display great prudence in submitting to his fate. He died at Tomi, A.D. 18, in the sixtieth year of his age, and in the seventh of his banishment. Ovid was born a free man; he 'lisp'd in numbers, for the numbers were his'; and that he possessed high poetical talents is unquestionable. His judgment and taste, however, are sometimes at fault, and the ingenious fancy and warmth of colouring displayed in some parts of his works are required to counterbalance the false taste and frigid conceit which prevail themselves in others. At the same time, it must be granted that no poet, either ancient or modern, has expressed beautiful thoughts in more appropriate language. The works of Ovid consist of the Amores, or Loves, in three books; the Heroides, or Heroical Epistles, twenty-one in number; the Ars Amatoria, or Art of Love; the Metamorphoses, the Metamorphoses, in fifteen books; the Fasti, in six books; the Tristia, in four books; the Epistles from Pontus, in four books; besides some minor poems. [G.F.]

OEDO, A. DE, a Spanish prelate, died 1577.

OEDO, GONZALO FERNANDES DE, a Spanish naturalist who became director of the gold and silver mines of Hayti, and is known as one of the earliest and best historians of the New World. He was the discoverer of the curative virtues of guaiacum. Born Madrid abt. 1478, date of his death unknown.

OWAIN, a famous British or Welch name borne by a son of Mexen Wledig, who was elected king of the Britons of the Romans, and is numbered with the twelve Fish saints. Another OWAIN was prince of Wales, 1110-1114, when he was killed by Gerald, the brother of Pembroke, whose wife he had seduced.

OWAIN CIVEILOG, known as a warrior and poet, died about 1197.

OWIN-GLANDWR. See GLENDOWER.

OWIN, or OWEN TUDOR, the grandfather of Henry VII., was lord of Pennrynnydd, in Anglesea. In 1426 he married Catharine, the widow of Henry V., and had three sons by her. The eldest became a monk. The second was EDMUND, earl of Richmond, father of Henry VII., and the third, JASPER, earl of Pembroke.

OWEN, GEORGE, an English physician, d. 1558.

OWEN, HENRY, a learned divine of the Church of England, born in Merionethshire 1716, died in London 1795. He is author of 'Observations on the Four Gospels,' 'The Intent and Propriety of the Scripture Miracles,' 'An Inquiry into the Present State of the Septuagint Version of the Old Testament,' an 'Introduction to Hebrew Criticism,' a 'Treatise on Trigonometry,' &c.

OWEN, JOHN, D.D., a scion of an ancient Welch family, was born in 1616 at Stadham, Oxfordshire. His precocious talents and acquirements procured him admission into Queen's College at the age of twelve, and he was made Master of Arts at nineteen. Devoted to his studies at that age, he spent only four hours in bed, but at the same time was fond of all manly and athletic sports, which tended greatly to give vigour and stamina to his constitution. When only twenty-one, he headed the students in a determined resistance to some superstitious rites which the then chancellor of Oxford, Archbishop Laud, designed to impose: and though successful in putting down the innovation, Owen paid dearly for the part he acted, for he was obliged to leave the university. He immediately took orders, although he entered into no pastoral duties owing to the state of his bodily as well as mental health, for he became subject for a time to a deep and desponding anxiety about his spiritual interests. Owen's prospects in life were greatly affected by the part he acted on the outbreak of the civil war. Having zealously espoused the parliamentary cause, an incensed uncle, who had promised to make him heir to his large estate, expunged his name from his will; and he was left accordingly to his own resources. He went an entire stranger to London, and there commenced his career of authorship by publishing his 'Display of Arminianism,' a work suited to the times. The society for purging the church of heresies rewarded him through their Chairman with the living of Frodham in Essex, and during the year and a-half he resided in that parish, his popularity as a preacher was so great, that crowds flocked to hear him from all the surrounding districts. He resigned this living for a charge at Coggeshall, a market town about five miles distant, where he changed from the presbyterian form of church government to the congregational, as being more accordant with the primitive church of the New Testament. His name and character had risen so high, that he was invited to preach before the parliament on 20th April, 1646, and on several occasions afterwards he performed the same duty, being selected particularly from his energy as well as his full approval of the proceeding to preach before that body on the day after the execution of Charles I. He became a favourite with Cromwell, who took him as his chaplain first to Ireland, and at a later period into Scotland. On returning home, his design was to resume his pastoral labours at Coggeshall. But the parliament having nominated him dean of the university of Oxford, he removed thither in 1651, and was soon after chosen vice-chancellor. During his administration of the chancellorship, which he held for five years, he rendered important services, and by his moderation, amid the sectarian contests that were then bitterly carried on, secured the love and respect of all parties. His duties as chancellor, though onerous, were not allowed to interfere either with his labour in preaching, or his pursuit in literature. He preached every Sabbath at St. Mary's, and he published several of his best works, such as 'The Perseverance of the Saints,' in 1654, 'The Vindiciæ Evangelicæ, or the Mystery of the Gospel Vindicated,' and 'Communion with God,' which has been valued by many as one of his greatest performances. The restoration of the Stuart dynasty led, amongst other changes of government, to Owen's ejection from his university offices: and, having gone to reside at Stadham, a small estate he possessed, lived there in retirement, till, things having become settled and tranquil, he ventured to return to London, and take a public share in works connected with the interests of religion and learning. The rancour of the royalist and High Church party raged so violently against dissenters generally, and Owen in particular, that he contemplated seriously two successive offers made him of important offices in American colleges. His personal safety was sometimes endangered, for on one occasion, his mansion at Stadham was beset by troopers, and he narrowly escaped being made prisoner, by flight through a postern door. He was, even when invested with power and the chief direction of affairs, an enlightened and consistent advocate of the right of private judgment and religious toleration. A brief period of respite was granted to the nonconformists, during Buckingham's administration which commenced in 1667, and Owen undertook the charge of a numerous and influential congregation in Leadenhall-Street. But this interval of indulgence was of short duration. A bill against conventicles was passed into a law in 1670, and by the fines and imprisonments it imposed, gave a heavy blow and great discouragement to the cause of dissent. Owen about this time began to decline in health. His great and long-continued labours had made serious inroads on a frame naturally robust and athletic, and having retired to a house at Ealing, occupied himself in preparing his last work, 'The Glory of Christ,' for the press. He expired on 24th August, 1683, and was interred in the cemetery of Bunhill Fields. Owen has been often styled 'The Prince of Divines,' and his works, though marked by the tedious prolixity of the age, are a storehouse of valuable matter. [R.J.]

OWEN, JOHN, a Welch epigrammatist, d. 1622.

OWEN, JOHN, a minister of the Church of England, born about 1765, known as the secretary and historian of the Bible Society. He wrote also, 'Reflections on the State of Religion and Politics in France and Great Britain,' and 'The Christian Monitor for the Last Days.' Died 1822.

OWEN, LEWIS, a Welch Jesuit, born 1572.

OWEN, THOMAS, a learned judge, died 1598.

OWEN, WILLIAM, one of the ablest English portrait painters, was born at Ludlow in Shropshire in 1769. He came to London, by the advice of Payne Knight, at the early age of seventeen, and became the pupil of Catton the Royal Academician.

He attracted also the notice of Sir Joshua Reynolds by a copy he made of the 'Perdita' of the painter. Owen first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1792; his connections increased so rapidly that in the following year he exhibited seven portraits. He frequently very much enhanced the value of his portraits by making them general, interesting as fancy pictures, such as 'Venus'—'The Bacchante'—'Cottage Child from Nature'—'The Children in the Wood,' &c. His success was certainly very great; notwithstanding the rivalry of Lawrence, Beechey, and Hoppner; had painted the Lord Chancellor and William Pitt before his thirtieth year; and the list of Owen's portraits comprises a very large proportion of the men of rank and talent of the early part of the century. He was superior to Lawrence in many heads: they were void of the simpering prettiness and delicacy of complexion which injure many Lawrence's heads: the sitting full length of William Scott, Lord Stowell, in his robes, is worth of Vandyck. He was elected a member of the Royal Academy in 1806; in 1810 he was made principal portrait painter to the Prince Regent, and in 1813 he declined the honour of knighthood. He died 11th February, 1825, in his fifty-six year, after a lingering illness, though the immediate cause of death was his taking opium instead of an aperient draught, owing to the mistake the druggist, who had misplaced the labels. (Cunningham, Lives of the Most Eminent British Painters, &c.) [R.N.V.]

OWTRAM. See OUTRAM.

OXBERRY, W. H., a popular English comedian, 1808-1851.

OXENBRIDGE, J., an Eng. theolog., 1609-1681.

OXENSTIERNA, AXEL, Count, one of the greatest statesmen that Sweden ever produced, was born at Fano in Upland, 1583, and educated in several of the German universities. He made his first appearance at court in the reign of Charles IX., father of Gustavus Adolphus, and was employed in an important diplomatic mission as early as 1606. Gustavus and Oxenstierna were great friends, and when the former succeeded to the crown in the eighteenth year of his age, the latter, only ten years older, stood by his side as high chancellor. From that time, 1611, to the majority of Christina, 1644, the name of Oxenstierna occupies a large space in Swedish history—indeed in the history of Europe, as the political antagonist of Richelieu. Gustavus reposed most unlimited confidence in his honesty and statesmanship, and we shall see immediately that Christina, though far from feeling the same friendship for him as her father, was compelled to do so on account of his true worth and ability. We can only mark a few principal dates to mark his career. In 1617 he negotiated the peace between Sweden and Denmark. In 1617 he concluded the peace of St. Bova, which followed the Russian campaign, and in 1630, when Gustavus took the field against the imperialists, he was invested with full authority in all civil and military affairs on the Rhine. At the fall of the Swedish hero at Lutzen, 1631, he devolved on the chancellor to take measures for the security of the kingdom, and the senate trusted him with full powers, so that, in fact, he became virtual king during the minority of Ch-

a. The burden of the war and the administration both rested on his shoulders, and he was not man to shrink from the responsibility of either. October, 1633, he presented his memorial to council, which embraced a complete plan of public defence and finance, provided for the improvement of towns, the abolition of burdens on the people, and the security of civil freedom. He was necessarily intrusted with great power, and it is a proof of his greatness that he retained it without losing his popularity; and though it was a period of reform and reorganization, he consolidated the empire, and placed the daughter of his friend on an impaired throne. In 1642 Christina began to reign; in 1644 she assumed the government, and in the month of August, 1645, Oxenstierna concluded the peace of Denmark, on which occasion she created him count of Soderberg. He was, of course, a principal party to the conclusion of the thirty years' war, by the peace of Westphalia, 1648, and sent his son, John Oxenstierna, as plenipotentiary to the convention of the powers on that occasion: it was in answer to his professions of diffidence that the chancellor used those words which have become proverbial,—'You do not know, my son, with how little wisdom men are governed!' Oxenstierna vainly opposed the abdication of the queen to abdicate, and he died a few months afterwards in the same year, 1654. It is thus the daughter of Gustavus writes of him:—his great man had large attainments, having studied much in his youth. He contrived to read in the midst of his great occupations. He had a great capacity and knowledge of the affairs and interests of the world. He knew the strong and weak points of all the states of our Europe.

He had consummate wisdom and prudence, a vast capacity, a great heart. He was indefatigable. He had an assiduity and application to business incomparable. He made it his pleasure and his only occupation; and when he took relaxation his diversion was business. He was sober, as much as one could be in an age and country where that virtue was unknown. He was a full sleeper, and said that no affair had ever hindered him from sleeping in his life except twice: the first was the death of the late king, the other the loss of the battle of Nordlingen. He has often told me that when he went to rest he stripped off his cares with his clothes, and let them repose till the next day. For the rest, he was ambitious but faithful, incorruptible, a little too slow and phlegmatic.' [E.R.]

OZANAM, J., a Fr. mathematician, 1640-1717.

OZAROUSKI, PETER, hetman or grand-general of the crown of Poland, hung by the people of Warsaw as a partizan of the Russians, 1794.

OZELL, JOHN, an English writer of great learning and industry, whose principal works are translations from the French, Italian, and Spanish. Among these are Don Quixote, Fenelon on Learning, Rabelais, a complete version of Molière, and some of the dramas of Corneille and Racine. He is introduced into the Dunciad by Pope, whose rival he was. He d. in the office of auditor for St. Paul's Cathedral and St. Thomas's Hospital, 1743. OZERETZKOVSKI, NIKOLAI YAKOWLEWITSCH, a Russian naturalist, 1750-1827.

OZEROFF, WLADISLAV ALEXANDROVITSCH, a Russian officer, dist. as a dramatic wr., 1770-1816.

OZI, STEPHEN, a French composer, 1754-1805.

OZIAS, the chief of Bethulia, when it was besieged by Holofernes. See HOLOFERNES, JUDITH.

P

PAAW, PETER, a Dutch botanist, 1564-1617.

PACATIANUS, TITUS CLAUDIUS MARCIUS, a Roman usurper, killed by Decius about 249.

PACATUS, LATINUS DREPANUS, a poet and orator of the time of Theodosius the Great, 4th c.

PACCA, BARTOLOMEO, Cardinal, born at Benevento 1756, was raised to that dignity by Pius VI. in 1801, and distinguished himself in the politics of the succeeding period as the enemy of Napoleon, who twice imprisoned him. He retired to private affairs in 1824, and has since published 'Memoirs.' Died 1844.

PACCHIONI, A., an Ital. anatom., 1664-1726.

PACCIOLI, L., an Ital. mathematician, 16th c.

PACORI, A., an ascetic writer, 1649-1730.

PACIO, or PACIO, an Ital. jurisc., 1550-1635.

PACE, or PAICE, RICHARD, one of the most able diplomatists and men of learning in the 17th century, was born in Hampshire about 1482, educated at the university of Padua. He commenced his public life in the service of Cardinal Beaufort, or Bainbridge, whom he accompanied to France, and was afterwards often employed in diplomatic affairs by Wolsey. Having fallen under the displeasure of that haughty prelate, he was imprisoned two years in the Tower; and his mind was so affected that, in the later years of his life, he was only in the possession of his faculties at intervals. He wrote several learned pieces, and was highly esteemed by his friends, Sir Thomas More and Erasmus. Died 1532.

PACHECO, FRANCESCO, a Spanish painter and art-writer, taught by the same master as Velasquez, 1571-1654.

PACHECO, DONNA MARIA. See PADILLA.

PACHYMERAS, G., a Gr. historian, 13th cent.

PACIAN, ST., a Spanish prelate, 4th century.

PACIANDI, PAOLA MARIA, an Italian ecclesiastic, distinguished as an antiquarian and historian, 1710-1785.

PACIFICUS, an Italian mechanician, 776-844.

PACIFICUS, M., a Latin poet, 15th century.

PACIO, GIULIO, an Italian savant, 1550-1635.

PACK, R., a miscellaneous writer, died 1728.

PACUVIUS, M., a Roman poet, 2d cent. B.C.

PADILLA, DON JUAN DE, a Spanish noble, who distinguished himself as leader of the popular party in a revolt against Charles V., during the period 1620-1622. He organized a general convention of the malcontents under the title of a junta, by which body he was appointed chief commander of a force of 20,000 men, but not until the cause had been greatly endangered by an unskilful leader. He was taken prisoner at the rout of Villatar, April 23, 1622, and shot the following day. His wife, DONNA MARIA DE PACHECO, exhibited the same heroic spirit as her husband, and, after his death, defended the city of Toledo till reduced to the last extremity. She then made her escape to Portugal, where she died in poverty.

PADILLA, LORENZO DE, a Spanish antiquarian and historical writer, died about 1540. His nephew, FRANCIS, author of an ecclesiastical history of Spain, 1527-1607.

PAER, F., an Italian composer, 1774-1839.

PAEZ, F. A., a Portuguese divine, died 1532.

PAEZ, PEDRO, a famous Spanish Jesuit and missionary, author of a Description of Abyssinia, where he introduced the Roman Catholic faith, 1564-1622. Another of the name, GASPARD PAEZ, also distinguished in Abyssinia, 1582-1635.

PAGAN, a king of Bulgaria, reigned 764-771.

PAGAN, BLAISE FRANÇOIS, Count De, a famous marshal in the French wars, founder of the French school of fortifying, 1604-1665.

PAGANACCI, J., a French writer, 1729-1797.

PAGANEL, P., a French politician, 1745-1826.

PAGANI, the name of several Italian painters:—VICENZO, died towards the end of the 15th century. LATTANZIO, his son and scholar, known as a painter till 1553, when he abandoned the art. FRANCESCO, flourished at Florence, 1531-1561. GREGORIO, son of Francesco, 1558-1605. PAOLO, distinguished at Venice and Milan, 1661-1716.

PAGANINI, NICOLÒ, one of the greatest violinists that ever lived, was born at Genoa in 1784. His first lessons in music were imparted to him by his father, who seems to have discovered in the early infancy of the young Nicolo germs of that marvellous genius, which afterwards struck the musical world with wonder. At eight years old the boy was so far advanced that he took a prominent violin part in public saloons, as well as in the orchestra of the church. After having studied under Costa, Rolla, Ghiretti, and Paer, he was appointed director of the orchestra to the court at Lucca. In 1828, after having performed in various cities in Italy, he visited Vienna, when a charge of having murdered his wife was brought against him. He was able, however, to successfully refute the ill-founded charge. In 1831, Paganini went to Paris, where he created an immense sensation. After this he went to Brussels, where his wonderful slight of hand on the violin created only laughter. In the year last named the 'Wizard of the Bow,' as he was called, came to England, where he met with astonishing success, and where he received larger sums for his public performances than ever had even been dreamed of before his advent. Paganini died at Nice, in 1840, from a disease of the larynx, leaving an immense fortune. It has been said that though this great and original artist and inventor of difficulties and novel effects on the violin, was inordinately fond of money, he frequently ventured large sums at play in the gaming houses at Paris and other capital cities. His reputation is tarnished from the fact that he often condescended to mean tricks that he might secure the worthless applause of the crowds of 'pretended amateurs,' who flocked to his exhibitions. In person Paganini was tall and thin, with emaciated features, an acquiline nose, and long black elf locks, which personal peculiarities added greatly in the eyes of the unskilled, to enhance the merit of his performances. [J.M.]

PAGE, WILLIAM, a divine of the Church of England, an. of 'The Peace-Maker,' &c., 1590-1663.

PAGEAU, M., a French poet, 16th century.

PAGES, F. X., a French novelist, 1745-1800.

PAGES, GARNIER, a French politician, d. 18

PAGES, PIERRE MARIE FRANÇOIS, Viscount De, a Fr. navigator, k. at St. Domingo, 1748-17

PAGET, EUSEBIUS, a puritan divine, 1516-1617. His son, EPHRAIM, a divine, 1575-164

PAGET, LORD WILLIAM, a statesman and a bassador, reign of Henry VIII. and Edward VI. died 1564.

PAGI, ANTHONY, a learned ecclesiastic of order of cordeliers, author of Annotations on Annals of Baronius, 1624-1690. His nephew FRANCIS, a cordelier and historian of the pop. 1654-1721. A nephew of the latter, called ABBE PAGI, author of a history of the Netherlands, about 1690-1740.

PAGNEST, A. H. C., a Fr. painter, 1790-18

PAGNINO, S., an Ital. Orientalist, 1470-15

PAINE, THOMAS, born at Thetford, in Norfolk on the 29th of January, 1737. He was of humble origin, and conducted in early life his father's business of a staymaker. He was destined afterwards to a vast notoriety which might have proved enduring reputation if he had well applied great talents with which he was endowed. His history may be cited as an unhappy illustration of the defectiveness of any social system which does not supply a legitimate place for the ambitious longings of men of humble rank, by supplying them with education and the means of advancement. In other conditions, Paine might have been a great popular preacher, a distinguished statesman, or an eminent lawyer. He went to America at the outbreak of the war of independence, there enlisted himself against the claims and interests of his own country, by writing the pamphlet called 'Common Sense.' He led a restless life, passing from one employment to another. He generally said that he was repeatedly dismissed for misconduct. But the prejudices against his writings were so deep that all statements about his personal conduct should be taken with caution. In 1790, he published the first part of his 'Rights of Man,' a controversial attack on Burke's views on the French Revolution. The second part, which was a mere palpable attack on the constitution of government of Britain, procured a verdict for Paine against its author in the King's Bench. There is no doubt that this work, not undeservedly, laid many abuses, but it, at the same time, showed so much a desire for reform as a reckless malignancy against every class and person wielding power and influence in society. The clear tenderness of his style and the appliances of his illustrations made many readers regret their defects, which came still more flagrant in his subsequent, 'Agriculture and Reason.' He acted as a citizen of France. For all his sympathy with the republic, he narrowly escaped being guillotined by Robespierre, and died at Baltimore on the 8th of June, 1809. [J.H.]

PAINTER, W., an English writer, 16th century.

PAISIELLO, GIOVANNI, was born at Taranto in 1741. Having been placed at the Jesuits' college, in his native city, Paisiello soon distinguished himself amongst his fellow-pupils when they were according to the rule of the college, to join in singing the hymn to the Virgin. His father was induced to send him to Naples, that he might study music, where he was placed under the tuition of a surante, a celebrated master of the period; and, after five years' study, he became first master among the pupils of the Conservatoire. His first opera was brought out at the theatre of Bologna, 1763. The reputation of Paisiello rose so high, that he had engagements to compose operas for all the principal states of Europe, and in the prosecution of his artistic career he visited Germany, Austria, Russia, and France. Paisiello, whose compositions were the most popular of the day, composed about sixty operas, besides masses, oratorios, concertos, songs, &c. He was named member of many learned societies in Italy, and was elected an associate of the French Institute, on the 14th of December, 1809. He died in Naples in the year 1818, when his remains received a public funeral, attended with all the pomp which the Catholic church knows so well to employ on such occasions. On the evening of his funeral the 'Nina' was performed, when the king of Naples and the whole court attended. [J.M.]

PAITONI, J. M., a Venetian writer, died 1774.

PAJOL, P., a French general, 1772-1844.

PAJON, C., a Fr. protestant writer, 1626-1685.

PAJOU, H., a French author, died 1776.

PAJOU, A., a French sculptor, 1780-1809.

PAKENHAM, SIR THOMAS, a famous naval commander in the last general war, 1758-1836.

PAKINGTON, DOROTHY, Lady, supposed by Hickeys to be the authoress of the 'Whole Duty Man,' died 1679.

ALADINI, FILIPPO, a painter of the Florentine school, 1544-1614. His daughter, ARCH-ELA, a painter, poet, and musician, 1599-1622.

ALEMON, a Latin grammarian, 1st century.

ALEFATUS, an ancient Greek philosopher.

ALEOLOGUS, the surname of several emperors of the East:—1. ANDRONICUS II. and ANDRONICUS III., which see. 2. JOHN VI., born at Constantinople 1332, succeeded his father, Andronicus, 1341, shared his power with Cantacuzenus till 1355, died, after a debauched life and many reverses, 1391. He was succeeded by his son, Michael. 3. JOHN VII., grandson of John VI., born 1390, associated with his uncle, Manuel, succeeded him 1425, died 1439.

ALAFOX-Y-MELZI, DON JOSEPH, the brave leader of Saragossa, was a Spanish officer descended from an old family of Arragon. He was living in privacy at Alfranca, near Saragossa, when the city was menaced by the French armies in 1808 and was proclaimed governor by the people, though only twenty-nine years of age, and without experience, on the 25th of May in that year. Such was the heroism of the people of Saragossa, headed by Palafox, that the French were compelled to retreat, after a murderous siege and bombardment of thirty-one days. They returned, however, in much greater force, under Marshals Moncey and Mörner, in the month of November, and the former, a few weeks later, was succeeded by Lannes. The city held out till the 20th of February—men, women, and children fighting in its defence till it became a heap of ruins, and suffering dreadfully from an epidemic fever. Palafox himself being prostrated by the disease, and, hopeless of success, then assigned the command to St. Marc, and the next day the city capitulated. Its defender became a prisoner at Vincennes till the restoration of Ferdinand, who, in June, 1814, appointed him captain-general of Arragon. Died 1847. [E.R.]

PALAFIX-Y-MENDOZA, JUAN DE, a Spanish statesman and prelate, best known by his 'History of the Siege of Fontarabia,' and his 'History of the Conquest of China by the Tartars,' 1600-1659.

PALAPRAT, J. B. DE, a Fr. dramat., 1650-1721.

PALAZZI, J., a Venetian historian, 1640-1713.

PALEARIUS, A., an Italian scholar and theologian, executed at Rome for heresy, 1570.

PALENCIA, A. DE, a Span. historian, 15th c.

PALEOTTI, G., an Italian cardinal, 1522-1597.

PALESTRINA, GIOVANNI PIETRE, ALOISIA DA, sometimes, also, called PIERLUIGI, was born at Palestrina, the ancient Præneste, near Rome, about the year 1524. It is believed that his first instructor in music was Claude Goudimel, a Huguenot, native of Besançon, who was murdered at Lyons in 1572, on the fatal day of the St. Bartholomew.

Having distinguished himself as a composer he was about the year 1551, admitted into the pope's chapel at Rome, where he was soon afterwards appointed master by Pope Julius III. In 1555, it having been discovered that Palestrina had quitted the state of celibacy, Pope Paul IV. abruptly dismissed him from his post, to which he was afterwards restored in 1571. He having brought church harmony to a degree of perfection that had never before been attempted and never since excelled, departed this life on the 2d of February, 1594. In the course of this master's life, the council of Trent having, amongst other matters, taken the state of church music into consideration, appointed two cardinals to superintend the reform, which they had resolved upon. Immediately, by their direction, Palestrina set about the duty, and produced his celebrated work, known as 'The Mass of Pope Marcellus.' Such was the effect this work produced, that, when it was first performed, every person was enraptured, and the pope compared it to the heavenly melodies which the apostle John heard in his visions. The following account of Palestrina's death was entered in the register of the Pontifical chapel:—'February 2, 1594, this morning died the most excellent musician, Signor Giovanni Palestrina, our dear companion, and maestro de capello of St. Peter's church, whither his funeral was attended, not only by all the musicians of Rome, but by an infinite concourse of people, when "Libera me, Domine," (as composed by himself) was sung by the whole college.' Upon his coffin was inscribed 'Joannes Petrus Aloysius Prænestinus Musicae Princeps.' His works, which were very numerous, were chiefly ecclesiastical. Several of his motets and sacred songs are in use in England at the present day. [J.M.]

PALETTA, J. B., an Ital. anatomist, 1747-1832.

PALEY, WILLIAM, D.D., a celebrated divine of the Church of England, was born in 1743 at Peterborough, Northamptonshire. At the age of sixteen he entered Christ's College, Cambridge. But unhappily, seduced by the influence of a few gay and dissolute companions, the first two years of his university residence were entirely lost or misspent. Having had the wisdom and fortitude, however, to disentangle himself from this disgraceful connection, he resolved on a course of devoted study; and such rapid progress did he make that, in 1768, he became a fellow of the college, and soon after colleague to Dr. Law in his public lectures on Moral and Political philosophy, as well as on the New Testament. This early occupation directed the mind of Paley to those subjects, which, when more maturely studied, he gave to the public in works which have obtained him extensive fame as an author. Both as a college lecturer and a preacher, he was greatly admired for his sound sense and discretion, especially for his extraordinary skill in simplifying the most abstruse and difficult subjects, and bringing them down to the level of the humblest capacity. His early patron, Law, who had become bishop of Carlisle, and who was well aware of Paley's merits, promoted his views in the church by presenting him first to the vicarage of Dalston, Cumberland, then to Appleby, in Westmoreland, till in the course of years, he rose to be archdeacon of Carlisle. It was not till 1785, that his 'Elements of Moral and Political Philosophy' appeared. It was almost immediately adopted as a text-book in Cambridge; and although its leading principle,—that of expediency, has often drawn down upon the moral system of which it is the foundation, the weight of severe censure, the work from the sound sense that pervades it, as well as from the clearness and force of its arguments, still maintains its ground. Not long after, Paley again came before the world as an author by the publication of Horæ Paulinæ, or 'The Truth of the Scripture History' proved from undesigned coincidences in the epistles of Paul. More than any other of Paley's works, this treatise displays the characteristic qualities of the author's mind, and it formed a most important contribution to sacred literature, not only from the intrinsic value of the work, but from its opening up a new line of argument in illustration of the evidences. Paley did not take any open or prominent part in the discussion of public or political questions. But his hostility to the slave trade roused all his energies; and having drawn up an answer to the claims of the slave dealers, sent it to the parliamentary committee immediately previous to the discussion of the subject in the House of Lords. It produced a deep impression, and the author was rewarded not only by seeing the adoption of his views, but by promotion to the rectory of Bishop-Wearmouth, one of the most lucrative situations in the Church of England. It was there he composed and published his 'Natural Theology,' amid the paroxysms of a painful disease which brought him gradually to the grave. Dr. Paley was suspected of heterodoxy, having discovered a strong inclination to Arian sentiments. In other respects, he was a genial, warm-hearted, benevolent man, distinguished for shrewdness and strong good sense; and those mental qualities which he possessed in so eminent a degree were brought to bear predominantly on the subjects of religion. Died 1805. [R.J.]

PALFIN, J., a Flemish anatomist, 1649-1730.

PALISOT-DE-BEAUVOIS, AMBR. MARIE FR. JOSEPH, a dist. French naturalist, 1752-1820.

PALISSOT-DE-MONTENOY, CHARLES, a Fr. dramatic writer and literary critic, 1730-1814.

PALISSY, BERNARD DE, one of the greatest geniuses produced by the French nation, painter, physician, chemist, naturalist, and economist, born about 1500, died in the Bastille, where he was imprisoned by Henry III. as a Calvinist, 1589.

PALLADINO, GIACOMO, or JAMES, an Ital. prelate and theologian, generally called Giacomo de Teramo, author of 'Consolatio Peccatorum' religious romance, 15th century.

PALLADIO, ANDREA, a famous Italian architect, to whose skill Italy is indebted for many of her most beautiful edifices, born at Vicenza 1508, author of a 'Treatise on Architecture,' first published at Venice 1570, died 1580.

PALLADIUS, the name of several ancient writers:—1. A bishop of Helenopolis, in Bithynia, author of a 'History of the Hermits of the Desert' and friend of Chrysostom, born about 368. 2. A Roman writer on agriculture, author of a 'Dialogue of the Life of Chrysostom' written at Rome 408. It is a question among learned whether or not he is the same as the preceding. 3. A Roman writer on agriculture, so called. 4. A Gaulish prefect, born about 405. 5. A Roman prelate, mentioned as 'the first apostle of the South,' named Sophista, or Satrosophista, author of several medical works in Greek, 6th century.

PALLAS, the freedman and confidant of emperor Claudius, who, at his instance, married Agrippina. He was put to death by Nero.

PALLAS, PETER SIMON, a German traveller and naturalist, author of works on the history, topography, and natural history of various parts of the Russian dominions, 1741-1811.

PALLAVICINI, or PELAVICINO, the name of two Italian chiefs of the Ghibellines, died 1135 and 1136.

PALLAVICINO, FERRANTE, a satirical Italian author of letters, born 1618, beheaded 1644.

PALLAVICINO, SFORZA, an Italian cardinal, author of a 'History of the Co. of Trent,' 1607-1611.

PALLIERE, V. L., a Fr. painter, 1787-1818.

PALLIOT, P., a French genealogist, 1608-1680.

PALLISER, SIR HUGH, a British admiral, born 1721, and after distinguishing himself in several occasions, including the taking of Quiberon, was second in command to Admiral Keppel in his famous action off Ushant, 1778. On this occasion a misunderstanding arose between the two officers, who preferred charges against each other, which ended in the censure of Palliser. He became governor of Greenwich Hospital, and died there 1783.

PALLUEL, F. C. DE, a Fr. agriculturist, 1743-1800.

PALM, J. G., a German divine, 1697-1748.

PALM, J. P., a German patriot, shot 1806.

PALMA, JACOB, the name of two Italian painters, the elder of whom was born at Bergamo 1554, and died at Venice 1574. The younger, his nephew, flourished at Venice, 1544-1628.

PALMELLA, DON PEDRO DE SUZA, a Portuguese statesman, duke of, a distinguished Portuguese statesman, was born at Turin 1781; and after an education in Portugal, followed by the customary European travels of a nobleman, took a leading part in the political troubles of his country, and especially in opposing the succession of Don Miguel; died 1840.

PALMER, H., a learned divine, 1601-1647.

PALMER, JOHN, an English actor, was born in London about 1742, and commenced his career as an actor in inferior parts at the Haymarket Theatre, Drury Lane theatres. Gradually increasing reputation, he was at length appointed manager of a new theatre proposed to be built in the Strand, London, but not being able to procure a patent, he returned to Drury, under circumstances of pecuniary distress.

embarrassment, which ultimately induced him to solve to emigrate to America, which country, however, he never visited. His death was remarkable. It took place on the stage of the Liverpool theatre, while performing the character of 'The Stranger,' and uttering the exclamation—'There is another and a better world.' This event occurred 2d August, 1798. Mr. Palmer was one of those actors who are made by time and practice. He was a modest and punctilious man, and, as respected, with, it would seem, a dash of eccentricity in his character; and, according to tradition, seems to have had a presentiment of his death. [J.A.H.]

PALMER, JOHN, held in remembrance as the projector of mail coaches, was a native of Devon, where he followed the trade of a brewer. In the adoption of his scheme, he became comptroller-general of the post office, from which office he was removed in 1792, died 1818.

PALMER, S., an historian of printing, d. 1732.

PALMIERI, M., an Italian annalist, 1405-1475.

PALMIERI, V., an Ital. theologian, 1753-1820.

PALMQUIST, MAGNUS, Baron De, a Swedish mathematician, and president of the Company of Mines, 1660-1729.

PALMSCHOELD, ELIAS, a Swedish historical mathematician employed at Stockholm, died 1719.

PALOMINO-Y-VELASCO, A. ANTONIO, a Spanish painter and biographer of artists, 1653-1726.

PALSGRAVE, JOHN, a polite wr., died 1554.

PAMELE, J. DE, a Fr. theologian, 1536-1587.

PAMPILIUS, a Greek painter, 4th cent.

PAMPILIUS, ST., a presbyter of Caesarea, in Palestine, who suffered martyrdom in the persecution under Maximinus, 309.

PAMPARD, C. F., a Fr. poet, about 1691-1764.

PANASIUS, a Stoic philosopher, 2d cent. B.C.

PANCIOLOLI, G., an Italian jurist, 1523-1582.

PANIKOUCKE, ANDREW JOSEPH, a Flemish painter and literateur, 1700-1753. His son, PANIKOUCKE JOSEPH, distinguished as a journalist at the founder of the 'Moniteur,' &c., 1736-1798.

PANIEL, A. X., a Fr. numismatist, 1699-1777.

PANIGAROLA, F., an Italian prelate, 1548-94.

PANIN, NIKITA JOANOVITCH, Count De, a Russian statesman, who rose to distinction in the service of Peter the Great, and became prime minister to Catharine; b. at Lucca 1718, d. 1783.

PANINI, GIAN PAOLO, an Italian architect and landscape painter, 1691-1764. His son, FRANCESCO, in the same line of art, dates unknown.

PANONINO, J., a Hungarian poet, 1434-72.

PAPENUS, a Christian philosopher, 2d cent.

PAPALEON, H., a Fr. historian, 1522-1595.

PAPANIO, O., an Ital. historian, 1529-1568.

PAPASIAS, a Greek poet, 5th century B.C.

PAPACETIA, MARIA HELENA, an Italian painter, as an historical painter, 1668-1709.

PAPER, G. W. F., a Ger. bibliog., 1729-1805.

PAPAI, D. S., an Italian literateur, 1684-1751.

PAPAI, HYACINTH, or GIACINTO, a native of Corsica, distinguished for his part in liberating his country from the Genoese, 1729. He became one of the chief magistrates of the country, and acted as lieutenant of the king elected by the patriots. He fled to Naples on the invasion of the French, and there about 1755. His son, PASCAL, is the subject of the following article. An elder son, CLEMENT, also a distinguished patriot, died in Italy, and with him, as he left only daughters, the name of Paoli became extinct.

PAOLI, PASCAL, was born in Corsica in 1726. His native island had long been under the oppressive domination of the Genoese, which the Corsicans made repeated efforts to shake off. Paoli was raised to the headship of the liberating party in 1755. He organized a regular civil and military government, and for thirteen years carried on the war of independence against the Genoese with unvarying spirit, and with general success. In 1768, the Genoese sold their right of sovereignty over Corsica to France. The French endeavoured to induce Paoli to recognize their dominion and adopt their interests, by lavish offers of rank and money. But Paoli rejected all their bribes, and made a gallant though unsuccessful resistance to the troops which they poured into Corsica. After the French conquest was completed, Paoli took refuge in England, where he was received with merited respect. The British government settled a pension on him, and he passed many years in honoured friendship with Burke, Johnson, and other distinguished Englishmen of the age. When the war of the French Revolution commenced, Paoli headed an expedition to Corsica, by which it was sought to detach that island from France, and unite it to the British dominion. This attempt, after some temporary successes, ultimately failed. Paoli returned to England, where he passed the remainder of his life in tranquillity. He died in 1807. He deserved the eulogium which the English historian Lord Mahon has pronounced on him, of being 'a brave and skillful soldier, and an upright and disinterested statesman.' He was also a warm and sincere friend; his literary acquirements were considerable; and he was a man of spotless integrity and pure morals in private life. [E.S.C.]

PAOLINI, P., an Italian dramatist, 1663-1726.

PAPA, J. DEL, an Ital. physician, 1649-1753.

PAPIAS, a grammarian of the 11th century.

PAPIAS, ST., a bishop of Hierapolis, 2d cent.

PAPILLON, A., a French poet, 1487-1559.

PAPILLON, JOHN, two French wood engravers, father and son—the former, 1639-1710; the latter, 1661-1710. A younger son, NICHOLAS, same profession, 1663-1714. A grandson of the elder John, named JOHN BAPTIST, noted for his foliage and flowers, 1698-1776. A brother of the latter, J. B. MICHEL, 1720-1746.

PAPILLON, P., a French canonist, 1666-1738.

PAPILLON, T., a Fr. jurisconsult, 1514-1596.

PAPIN, DENIS, an ingenious Frenchman, who assisted Boyle in many of his experiments, and invented the digester known by his name, died 1710.

PAPIN, ISAAC, a French divine, 1657-1709.

PAPINIAN, a celebrated Roman jurist, 175-212.

PAPON, J., a French Hellenist, 1505-1590.

PAPON, J. P., a French historian, 1734-1805.

PAPPENHEIM, COUNT, one of the most illustrious generals of Austria during the thirty years' war, 1594-1632.

PAPPONI, J., an Italian jurist, died 1605.

PAPPUS, a mathematician of Alexandria, 4th c.

PAPPUS, J., a German divine, 1549-1610.

PAQUOT, J. N., an Austrian hist., 1722-1803.

PARABOSCO, G., an Italian poet, 16th cent.

PARACELSUS. PHILIPPUS AUREOLUS

THEOPHRASTUS PARACELSUS BOMBAST, AB HOHENHEIM, was born about the year 1493, near Zurich. Although he has left no discovery behind him, he is highly distinguished as the founder of the modern science of medicine. He instituted an immense number of experiments on the influence of chemical remedies in disease, and acquired much fame by the successful result of his treatment. He travelled extensively throughout Europe for the purpose of adding to his stock of knowledge, and of studying nature in her varied departments. He was professor of physic and surgery at Basle, from 1526 to 1527, when he abdicated his office and afterwards became a wanderer through various parts of Germany, Colmar, Moravia, Vienna, Hungary, and finally Salzburg, where he died in 1541, in his forty-eighth year. Paracelsus was a man of most dissolute habits and unprincipled character; and his works (Opera) are filled with the highest flights of unintelligible bombastic jargon, unworthy of perusal, but are such as might be expected from one who united in his person the qualities of a fanatic and a drunkard. [R.D.T.]

PARADIN, WILLIAM, a French historian, 1510-1590. His brother, CLAUDE, a writer on genealogy, &c., about the same period. JOHN, cousin of the preceding, dist. as a poet, about 1508-1588.

PARADIS, PAUL, a Jewish convert, first professor of Hebrew at Paris, died 1559.

PARADIS DE RAYMONDIS, JOHN ZACHARIAH, a Fr. moralist and agriculturist, 1746-1800.

PARADISI, COUNT AGOSTINO, an Italian poet, professor of civil economy and the Belles Lettres at Modena, born at Vignola, Reggio, 1736, d. 1783.

PARADISI, COUNT JOHN, son of the preceding, born about 1760, became director of the Cisalpine republic in 1797, and, at a later period, president of Napoleon's Italian senate. He died 1826, distinguished as a philosopher and man of letters.

PARASINA MALATESTA. See NICHOLAS.

PARCK, THOMAS, an engraver, 1759-1834.

PARCELLES, JOHN, a Dutch painter, noted for his storm-pieces, 1597-1641. His son, JULIUS, born about 1628, painted in the same style.

PARCIEUX. See DEPARCIEUX.

PARDIES, J. G., a French savant, 1636-1673.

PARDOUX, B., a French physician, 1545-1611.

PARE, AMBROSE, one of the greatest surgeons of modern times, called the father of French surgery, was born in 1509, and was professional adviser of four French sovereigns. Though a Huguenot, he was in the fullest confidence of Charles IX., and by his favour escaped the massacre of St. Bartholomew; died 1590.

PAREJA, J. DE, a Spanish painter, 1606-1670.

PARENT, A., a Fr. mathematician, 1666-1716.

PAREUS, the name of three distinguished theologians and philologists of Germany:—DAVID WOENGLER, author of many commentaries, 1548-1622. PHILIP, his son, about 1576-1650. DANIEL, son of the latter, 1605-1635.

PARFAIET, F., a Fr. dramatist, 1698-1753.

PARIJI, J., an Italian architect, died 1635.

PARINI, J., an Italian poet, 1729-1799.

PARIS, A., a French ecclesiastic, 1631-1683.

PARIS, F., a notary of Paris, known at the period of the revolution as a friend of Danton.

PARIS, F., a French religious writer, d. 1718.

PARIS, FRANCIS, commonly called the PARIS, was a French ecclesiastic, born He died after a life of religious mortification charity 1727, and was buried in the cimet Saint-Medard. Here the most extraordinary scenes took place, occasioned by the allegiances wrought at his tomb, where persons into convulsions and transports of prophetic rium. An account of these occurrences written by the magistrate Montqueron, an only ceased when the government took measures, prosecuted some of the parties walled up the ground.

PARIS, J. B. F., a French general, 1748-1820.

PARIS, JEAN J., a political writer, died

PARIS, L. M., a writer on grammar, 1740

PARIS, MATTHEW, one of our earliest historians, was a Benedictine monk of St. and is known from 1245, to the year of his 1259. He was a man of the highest character and distinguished as a musician, poet, orator, logian, painter, and architect. His practical were turned to the reformation of monastic discipline, on which account he was sent to by the pope. His principal work, first published in 1571, extends over English history from the of William the Conqueror to his own time, the earlier portion being lost. Other works exist only in MS.

PARIS, M. A., a French general, killed

PARIS, P. A., a French architect, 1747

PARIS, P. L., an actor of the French revolution, originally a priest of the oratory, executed

PARISAN, P. G., a French dramatist, 1

PARK, SIR J. A., a disting. lawyer, die

PARK, MUNGO, was born at the Fowlshiels, near Selkirk, on the 10th Sep 1771. An aptness for learning which he showed, and a reserved and thoughtful and grave deportment, which were natural to him, and distinguished him through life, led his parents to select him as the most eligible of their sons for the ministry of the Church of Scotland. His education was directed accordingly; but his own tastes and aspiration took a different turn, and choosing the medical profession, he was apprenticed, at the age of fifteen, to Mr. Anderson, a surgeon in Selkirk. He remained three years, and then went to Edinburgh college, where his attendance on the usual course was continued for three sessions, the term necessary for graduation as a surgeon. A taste for botany acquired in his rambles, was of the greatest use to him afterwards, and may be said to have in a great measure determined his future career. A young man, James Dickson, afterwards his brother-in-law, came to London to seek employment as a gardener, engaged by a nurseryman at Hammersmith, whose gardens Sir Joseph Banks was a frequent visitor. Dickson's superior intelligence attracted Sir Joseph's notice; and when some years afterwards he began business on his own account as a seedsman, and waited upon Sir Joseph Banks, most kindly received by him, and offered him the use of his library. Dickson gladly availed himself of the advantages thus presented to him.

me afterwards a distinguished botanist, author of work on cryptogamic plants, and of many valuable papers in the Linnean transactions. He went with him on a botanical tour in the islands while he was a student; and when Parkwards went to London, on the completion of course, he introduced him to Sir Joseph Banks, whose influence the situation of assistant son in the Worcester East Indiaman was soon ned. Park sailed in February, 1792, and red the following year. He brought home interesting plants, and contributed to the an Society a paper on eight new fishes from tra. He now remained for some time inac-enjoying intercourse with scientific men, to a he was introduced by Sir Joseph Banks, president of the Royal Society, whose warm ship towards him knew no interruption dur-is entire career. Sir Joseph was an active er of the African Association, formed in for the exploration of the central portions at continent; and Park's attention must, of e, have been much drawn to the subject. Havg ardour in the pursuit of his profession, and bly even no fondness for it, while he had cherished a strong desire for foreign travel, a natural that Park should offer himself to e association when they were looking out for ecessor to Major Houghton, who had perished e attempt to reach the Niger from the west e. Park's knowledge of natural history and ine, his age—the full vigour of youth—his us experience of a hot climate, his enthus- and a reputation for courage and address, and, it would seem, rather upon an observa- of his personal qualities and general bearing, e upon anything which he had yet done, and recommendations of so strong a nature e the Association accepted his offer. After due eparation he left England on the 22d May, 79, and on the 5th July reached Pisanía, a e factory 200 miles up the river Gambia, e he remained some time with Dr. Laidley, e ident agent. Beginning his journey on the eember, he first crossed the country E.N.E. e ara, and then turning S.E. traversed the eains of Leedamar and Bambarra, till he e sight of the Niger near Sego: 'I saw with e pleasure the great object of my mission, e sought-for majestic Niger, glittering to e morning sun, as broad as the Thames at eminster, and flowing slowly to the eastward. e turned to the brink, and having drunk of the e lifted up my fervent thanks in prayer to e Great Ruler of all things, for having thus far eed my endeavours with success.' Thus, the e step was gained in the solution of a most dif- e problem, deemed by his country of great im- e portance, and which had already baffled the skill e numerous enterprising travellers, and the efforts e powerful states. Park was determined to work e problem fully out, by tracing the mysterious e of this great river. He found it impossible, e to proceed farther down than Silla, near e and on the 30th July he began his homeward e towards the Gambia. Following the Niger e as Bammakoo, and there turning to the e he crossed the country watered by the e of the Senegal, by a route more southerly than his former track, and at length reached Pisanía on the 10th June, 1797; having thus accom- plished a journey whose hardship and suffering are, perhaps, without a parallel in the history of inland discovery. Soon after he returned home; and residing mostly at his native place, occupied himself in preparing an account of his travels. In August, 1799, being then in his twenty-eighth year, he married the daughter of his former master, Mr. Anderson, and, in October 1801, settled in the town of Peebles for the practice of his profession. During the few years which he spent here, he en- joyed much domestic happiness, and the privilege of associating with Sir Walter Scott, Dr. Adam Ferguson, the historian, and other persons of note. His mind was, however, kept in an unsettled state up till the end of 1804, by several proposals from government for new schemes of discovery. One for a new expedition to Central Africa was at length matured, and Park was requested to take the com- mand. 'Park,' says his biographer, 'was so much afraid of encountering the distress of his family, that he proceeded directly to London from Edinburgh without returning to bid them a formal adieu.' Towards other friends he practised the same con- straint upon his feelings. He sailed from Ports- mouth January 30th, 1805. Pisanía was again fixed on as the point of departure. His companions on his former journey were two negroes, and even these had accompanied him no farther than Yarra, so that for more than three-fourths of his journey he was quite alone. On the second journey he had stipulated for a good escort; and the presence of two friends, Mr. Anderson, his wife's brother, as sur- geon, and Mr. Scott, a young neighbour, as artist. With these two friends, five artificers from the royal dock-yards, Lieutenant Martyn, thirty-five privates from the garrison at Goree, and Isaaco, a Mandingo, a priest and trader, as guide and interpreter, and forty asses with baggage, Park left Pisanía on the 4th of May, 1805. He chose the route by which he had returned on his first journey; but the time of starting was most unfortunate and ill-chosen,—less by any fault of his, than the delay of the govern- ment in despatching the ships from England. On the 8th June the rainy season set in, and the mis- fortunes of the expedition began. On the 19th August, Park reached the summit of the mountain ridge, dividing the river basins of the Senegal and Niger, and came once more in sight of the latter, 'rolling its immense stream along the plain,' and, on the evening of the same day, pitched his tent on the banks of the Niger at Bammakoo, where he had struck off from the river on his homeward route. Only seven men now remained; most of the rest had died of fever or dysentery by the way, among whom was Mr. Scott the artist; a few had been left sick in charge of friendly natives, but were not afterwards heard of. Nearly a month be- fore, the last of the forty asses had died. The ex- pedition now descended the river in two canoes to Sansanding, between Sego and Silla, where his brother-in-law, Mr. Anderson, and two of the men, fell victims to the dreadful climate. Lieu- tenant Martyn and three soldiers were all who now survived. With their aid, Park constructed a vessel, which was named the schooner Joliba, 40 feet long by 6 broad, and drawing, when loaded, only one foot water; and having engaged a guide and interpreter, named Amadi Fatouma, instead of Isaaco, who was sent back to the Gambia with his journal and letters, purchased three slaves, and laid in a stock of provisions, he set sail down the river on the 17th November, in the hope of tracing the remaining course of this famed stream, the lower part of which, according to the theory which he had formed, was identical with the Congo, or Zaire, entering the Atlantic in lat. 15° S. This, however, it was destined that the intrepid and enthusiastic traveller was not to accomplish. His despatches, forwarded by Isaaco, contained the last intelligence ever received from him, and for many years his fate was involved in mystery. It was at length distinctly made out by information gleaned from various quarters, that, about the beginning of June 1806, he had descended the river as far as Boussa, 650 miles below Timbuctoo; that here his interpreter, whose engagement now terminated, was sent on shore with a present for the king of Yaouri; that this was withheld by the Dooty, or chief, to whom it was given, and the king was told the white men had gone to return no more; that the king hereupon imprisoned the interpreter, and sent a band of armed men to intercept Park's passage at rocky narrows near Boussa; and that here, after a vain struggle against superior numbers, Park and all his companions, except one of the negroes, leaped into the river to attempt their escape by swimming, and were drowned. Fatouma was afterwards released, and met with this negro. Their narratives, and Park's journal, with an introductory sketch of his life and labours, were published together in 1815. Government paid to his widow, according to stipulation before he left home, the sum of £4000. His family consisted of three sons and one daughter; the latter, married to H. W. Meredith, Esq., of Pentry-Bichen, Denbighshire, and his youngest son, Archibald, an officer in the East India Company's service, are still alive. All his brothers and sisters had families, many of whom are still living; and several of his relatives occupy stations of high respectability in Glasgow. In person, Mungo Park was tall and muscular, and possessed an extraordinary power of enduring fatigue; and by his many noble, mental, and moral qualities, was no less fitted for the right conduct of the important enterprises in which he was engaged. [J.B.]

PARK, T., a bibliographical writer, 1759-1834.

PARKE, J., a famous musician, 1745-1829.

PARKER, GEORGE, earl of Macclesfield, son of the first earl, who was lord chancellor of England, distinguished as a mathematician, died 1766.

PARKER, HENRY, Lord Morley, one of the barons who threatened Clement VII. with the loss of his supremacy if he refused his consent to the divorce of Henry VIII. He bears the reputation of a man of letters, and some of his works exist in MS., 1476-1556.

PARKER, MATTHEW, the second protestant archbishop of Canterbury, was born at Norwich 1504, and was early distinguished by his progress in every branch of knowledge connected with the study of divinity. In 1533 he became chaplain to Queen Anne Boleyn, and was charged by her with the care of her daughter Elizabeth. He remained in concealment during the reign of Mary, though search was several times made for him, and was elevated to the primacy on the accession of Elizabeth. He was among the first selected to print the Reformed Liturgy; and the 'Bishops' Bible, which remained in use till the present translation was effected, was printed under his inspection. Archbishop Parker was also a great antiquary, and had some share, either as patron or coadjutor, in the work 'De Antiquitate Britannicæ Ecclesiæ', besides being the founder of the first Society of Antiquaries. He died 1575.

PARKER, RICHARD, appointed admiral of the fleet by the mutineers during the revolt at Spithead, was a disgraced midshipman, who was acting at that juncture as a common sailor. He was a man of enterprise and address, and acquired much influence over the men. On the reduction of the mutiny by Lord Howe, he was hanged on board the Sandwich, June 30, 1797.

PARKER, ROBERT, a puritan writer on theological subjects, known from 1583 to 1607. His son, THOMAS, a theological and religious writer, took refuge in America 1634, died there 1677.

PARKER, SAMUEL, a prelate of the reign of James II., who at that period joined the party. He is author of a history of his own times and of other works, in particular 'A Discourse of Ecclesiastical Polity,' written against the dissenters, born at Northampton 1640, died 1687.

PARKES, SAMUEL, a practical chemist, known as the author of many useful elementary works, 1759-1825.

PARKHURST, JOHN, bishop of Norwich in the reign of Elizabeth, and previously the teacher of Bishop Jewel, at Merton college. He was a scholar of eminent learning and piety; 1511-1577.

PARKHURST, JOHN, author of the well-known Hebrew and Greek lexicons, was born in Northamptonshire 1728, and educated at Clare College, Cambridge. He entered into orders, but held no preferments in the church, and, possessing considerable property, devoted himself to literary pursuits. He was a man of high principle, and a receiver of the philosophy of John Hutcheson. Died at Epsom 1797.

PARKINS, J., a writer on law, 16th cent.

PARKINSON, J., a writer on botany, d. 1726.

PARKINSON, T., a mathematician, 1745-1818.

PARMENIDES, of Elea, in Magna Græcia, born about 536 B.C.; one of the chief of the Eleatic school. That great search concerning the substance of things occupied Parmenides instead of finding Unity in Nature, he discovered it in Mind alone. It is the Reason which perceives and bestows Unity on Plurality; so that true Reality is Subjective. The scheme of Parmenides is a pure Idealism, and open to the objections to which one-sided schemes are liable. He exercised, however, much influence on the speculations of Plato.

PARMENIO, a Macedonian gen., d. B.C. 341.

PARMENTIER, ANTHONY A., a famous French agricultural writer and philanthropist, 1737-1826.

PARMENTIER, J., a Fr. painter, 1658-1700.

PARMENTIER, J., a French navigator. He was also a versifier and translator, 16th cent.

PARMIZIANO. See MAZZUOLI.

PARNELL, THOMAS, born at Dublin in 1739, took orders, and became archdeacon of Clonmel. He received, also, other preferments through the influence of his family.

terest of Swift, when he deserted the Whig party on their fall in the latter part of the reign of Queen Anne. He was a contributor to the Spectator and Guardian, and, after flying to London on his Irish parsonage, became intimate with the leading men of letters. His poetry comes nearer Pope's, in sweetness of versification, than do any other verses of the time: and he has not only much felicity of diction, but also a very pleasing seriousness of sentiment, shown in such pieces as his popular allegory 'The Hermit.' His death, which occurred in 1718, is said to have been hastened by intemperate habits, and these have been attributed to the grief he felt for the loss of his wife. [W.S.]

PARODI, FILIPPO, a Genoese sculptor, born about 1640, died 1708. DOMENICO, his son, an historical painter, 1668-1740. BATTISTA, brother of Domenico, 1674-1730. PELLEGRINO, son of Domenico, a portrait painter, died after 1741.

PAROLETTI, VICTOR MODESTE, an Italian physician, dist. as a philos. and natural., 1765-1834.

PARR. See CATHARINE PARR.

PARR, RICHARD, an Irish divine, an. of Sermons and a 'Life of Archbishop Usher,' 1617-91.

PARR, SAMUEL, an eminent classical scholar and critic, was the son of an apothecary of Harrowthe-Hill, in Middlesex, and was born there in 1666. He obtained a living in the Church of Englefield, in the gift of Sir Francis Burdett, and wrote several works of temporary interest; died 1825.

PARR, THOMAS, noticed here as an extraordinary instance of longevity, was a native of Shropshire. He was born in 1488, and laboured in business till after he was one hundred and thirty years old. He died in 1635, when nearly one hundred and fifty-three years of age; and even then, Dr Harvey, who opened his body, found no internal signs of decay. His grandson died at the age of one hundred and twenty.

PARR, W., a partizan of Mary Stuart, ex. 1584.

PARRENNIN, D., a Fr. mission., 1665-1741.

PARRHASIUS, a Greek painter, 5th cent. b.c.

PARRHASIUS, AULUS JAMES, an Italian grammarian and classical editor, 1470-1534.

PARROCEL, BARTHOLOMEW, a French painter, died 1660. His son, JOSEPH, a great painter of battles, 1648-1704. CHARLES, son and pupil of Joseph, 1688-1752. IGNATIUS, nephew and pupil of Joseph, died 1722. PIERRE, younger brother of the latter, also a pupil of his uncle Joseph, about 1720-1765. IGNATIUS, son of Pierre, and last painter of the family, d. abt. 1774.

PARRY, CALEB HILLIER, father of the well-known arctic navigator, distinguished as a physician and naturalist, and more than forty years physician at the Bath hospital, was born in 1756. His principal work is entitled 'The Elements of Zoology,' died 1822.

PARRY, R., bishop of St. Asaph, died 1620.

PARRY, R., a divine and theologian, 1722-1780.

PARRY, W., an English painter, 1742-1791.

PARSON, J., a Dutch engraver, 16th century.

PARSONS, A., an English traveller, died 1785.

PARSONS, JAMES, a physician, anatomist, and anatomian, an. of several curious works, 1705-70.

PARSONS, JOHN, an anatomist, 1742-1785.

PARSONS, PHILIP, a minister of the Church of England, kn. as a miscellaneous wr., 1729-1812.

PARSONS, ROBERT, whose name is sometimes written PERSONS, an English Jesuit, famous for his intermeddling in affairs of state, 1547-1610.

PARUTA, PAUL, a Venetian diplomatist, and historiographer to the state, 1540-1598.

PARUTA, PHILIP, an antiquarian, died 1629.

PAS, ANTH. DE, a French general, 1641-1711.

PAS, or PAAS, CRISPIN DE, a Dutch designer and engraver, born about 1536, had three sons in the same profession:—CRISPIN, the eldest, born 1570; WILLIAM, the second, dates unknown; SIMON, the third, a portrait engraver, born 1574. His daughter, MADELEINE, also distinguished herself in the art, born 1576.

PASCAL, the first of the name pope, 817-824. The second, 1099-1113. The third, an antipope, elected in opposition to Alexander III., and supported by the emperor Frederick, 1164-1168. Another antipope, of the name, headed a faction some time in 687.

PASCAL, BLAISE, was a native of Clermont in Auvergne, where he was born 19th June, 1623. His ancestors had, for several generations, held high offices in the French government, and his father was a provincial judge in his native county. Even in boyhood, the extraordinary power and acuteness of Blaise Pascal displayed itself. His father, who was an eminent mathematician, undertook the sole management of his son's education, and for that purpose removed to Paris. The bias of young Pascal's mind being strongly inclined towards mathematical science, the prudent father, afraid lest the favourite subject might engross his mind to the neglect of other necessary branches, took care to give him little or no access to his library. He confined his son's attention, as much as possible, to the study of languages. But nature could not be repressed, and the daily pastime of the boy was to draw mathematical diagrams, with charcoal, on the floor. In this stolen enjoyment, his father surprised him, and the figure that was then absorbing his thoughts was the 32d proposition of Euclid; showing that he had already mastered all the previous elements that enter into that demonstration. His father thenceforth set him to the regular study of Euclid; and so great was his proficiency in the science, that, before completing his sixteenth year, he had composed a treatise on conic sections, invented an arithmetical machine, for which, in 1649, he obtained a patent; and at the age of twenty-three had finished those important experiments, in pneumatics and hydrostatics, which have so honourably connected his name with the progress of natural philosophy, and raised him to the same rank with Torricelli and Boyle. A serious illness, brought on by intense application to study, obliged him, for a long time, to suspend his favourite pursuits, and on his recovery, circumstances occurred that powerfully diverted his thoughts into a different channel. During his protracted sickness, he had received deep impressions of religion, so that under an overwhelming sense of its importance he resolved to renounce all the scientific and secular pursuits, to which his taste and genius so strongly directed him, and to apply his mind exclusively to the study of theology, and the means by which he might promote the best interests of his fellow-men. Through the loopholes of his pious retreat, however, he took an occasional glance at what was passing in the world, and on the outbreak of the fierce contests that were waged between the Jansenists and the Jesuits, Pascal showed himself a keen and powerful advocate of the former. It was in connection with the controversy respecting Arnauld, that he wrote his famous 'Letters of a Provincial to one of his Friends,' which first appeared in the year 1656, under the fictitious authorship of Louis de Montalte. They contain a most withering exposure of the false morality of the Jesuits, and the sentiments are expressed in a style of elegance, accompanied with the most sparkling wit and bitter sarcasms, which, although enlisted in a foreign and bygone controversy, have secured to the work a lasting fame. Pascal meditated a work of high importance, viz., an inquiry into the character and evidences of Christianity, and in the hands of so original, profound, and independent a thinker, there was reason to expect a production which would interest and instruct the whole Christian world. But his Pensees, or 'Thoughts on Religion,' a posthumous volume of loose and desultory fragments, which were meant to be woven into a regular composition, is all that was accomplished of this grand design, for he was arrested in the midst of his work by death in 1662, which happened so suddenly and in such suspicious circumstances, as gave some colour to the charge of his being carried off by poison.

[R.J.]

[House in which Pascal died.]

PASCH, G., a German philologist, 1661-1707.

PASCH, J., a professor of philosophy, d. 1709.

PASCH, JEAN, a Swedish landscape and marine painter, 1706-1769. LAURENCE, of the same family name, is known as a portrait painter; and his daughter, ULRICA FREDERICA, was a member of the Academy of Painting and Sculpture, 1735-96.

PASCHAL. See PASCAL.

PASCHAL, C., a Fr. antiquarian, died 1625.

PASCHAL, F., a Fr. dramatist, 17th century.

PASCHUIS, G., a Ger. philologist, 1661-1707.

PASCOLI, A., an Ital. anatomist, 1669-1757.

PASCOLI, L., an Ital. art-writer, 1674-1744.

PASINELLI, L., an Ital. painter, 1629-1700.

PASQUALIS. See MARTINEZ.

PASQUIER, STEPHEN, an eminent French civilian, and enemy of the Jesuits, 1529-1615.

PASS, PASSE, or PAAS. See PAS.

PASSAROTTI, BARTALOMEO, an Italian painter and engraver, died 1592. He had two sons also disting. in art:—TIBURZIO, died 1612; AURELIO, who died between 1592 and 1605.

PASSEMENT, C. S., a Fr. astronomer, 1702-

PASSERAT, J., a French poet, 1584-1602.

PASSERI, GIAMBATTISTA, an Italian aquarian and naturalist, 1694-1780.

PASSERI, GIAMBATTISTA, an Italian painter and poet, 1610-1679. His nephew, GUISEPPA, also a painter, 1654-1714.

PASSEROTTI. See PASSAROTTI.

PASSIGNANO, DOMINICO CRESTI DA, a disting. painter of the Florentine school, 1568-1634.

PASSIONEI, DOMENICO, a learned Italian cardinal, and promoter of literature, 1682-1768.

PASSWAN-OGLOU, OSMAN, a pacha of Valdin, in Bulgaria, who revolted against the porte, as his father had been put to death; and, after a struggle, compelled the sultan to confirm him in the government. He was afterwards faithful to the Turks in a war with the Russians, 1758-1810.

PASTEUR, J. D., a Dut. naturalist, 1763-1842.

PASTORIUS, J., a Ger. historian, 1610-1680.

PATARASI, L., an Ital. naturalist, 1674-1740.

PATEL, PETER, a French landscape painter, killed in a duel, 1654-1703. His son, of the same name, painted several emblematic subjects; date unknown.

PATER, PAUL, a Hungarian savant, 1656-1710.

PATERCULUS, a Roman historian, d. 18 B.C.

PATERSON, C. W., a Brit. admiral, 1756-1810.

PATERSON, S., a bibliographer, 1728-1800.

PATICHI, A., an Italian painter, 1762-1790.

PATIN, GUY, a French physician, distinguished in the disputes which divided the profession concerning chemical remedies, as the determined enemy of antimonial and similar preparations, 1601-1672. His letters, which have been published since his death, are curious and interesting. CHARLES, his second son, distinguished as a physician and numismatist, 1633-1693. The wife of the latter, and their two daughters, CHARLOTTE and GABRIELLE, were women of remarkable learning, and have left some writings.

PATISSON, M., a Fr. Hellenist, died abt. 1700.

PATKUL, JOHN REGINALD DE, a gentleman of Poland, who distinguished himself by his deavours to shake off the Swedish yoke in the reigns of Charles XI. and Charles XII. He was treacherously given up to the latter by Augustus and broken on the wheel 1707.

PATON, R., an English painter, last century.

PATOUILLET, L., a Fr. Jesuit and controversialist, an. of 'Apology for Cartouche,' 1699-1740.

PATRAT, J., a French playwright, 1732-1810.

PATRICK, A., a Polish prelate, 16th century.

PATRICK, PETER, one of Justinian's ambassadors, and finally master of the palace, was a native of Thessalonica. Very little is known concerning his history; and of his work, 'The History of the Ambassadors,' written in Greek, only some fragments remain.

PATRICK, ST., the patron of Ireland, was first to convert the pagan Irish to Christianity and is supposed to have commenced his mission in 432 A.D.

re in 433. According to his own account he was born at Kilpatrick, between Dumbarton and Glasgow, but other accounts represent him as a native of Pembrokeshire and of Brittany. Nennius, who wrote in the 7th century, states that his original name was Maur, and that the name Patricius was given to him when consecrated by Pope Celestine. He fixed his residence at Armagh, which is become the metropolitan see, and is supposed to have continued his missions about forty years. Usher, however, places his death as late as 493.

PATRICK, SAMUEL, a divine and classical scholar, editor of an edition of Hederick's Greek Lexicon, died 1748.

PATRICK, SIMON, a learned prelate, born at Ashborough 1626, died bishop of Ely 1707. His sermons are—'Heart's Ease, or a Remedy against all Tribles,' 'Jewish Hypocrisy,' 'A Convert to the present Generation,' 'Parable of the Pilgrim,' 'Position of the Commandments,' a 'Debate between a Conformist and Nonconformist,' 'Treatise on the Holy Communion,' 'The Devout Christian,' 'The Resurrection Justified by Witnesses in Heaven and Earth,' 'A History of the Church of Ashborough' (of which he was dean), various parables and commentaries on the Prophets, and a number of occasional sermons. When rector of St. Paul's, Covent Garden, he greatly endeared himself to his parishioners by remaining with them during the whole time of the plague in 1665.

FRIN, E. L. M., a Fr. geologist, 1742-1815.

TRIX, P., a French poet, 1585-1672.

TRIZI, A., an Italian historian, died 1496.

TRIZI, F., an Italian Platonist, 1529-1597.

ATTE, P., a French architect, 1723-1814.

ATTEN, T., an English theologian, 1754-90.

ATTISON, JAMES, well known as member of parliament for London, and governor of the Bank of England, was born 1786. He was the representative of an old commercial family. His parliamentary career began in 1835. In 1841 he was unsuccessful, but was returned on the death of Sir Wood in 1843, and again at the general election 1847. Died 1849.

ATTISON, WILLIAM, a native of Sussex, who distinguished himself as a poet, and died in his first year, after a miserable life, 1706-1727.

BUZZI, J. V., an Ital. theologian, 1700-69.

BUXTON, M. J. P., a Fr. mathematic., 1736-98.

UDITZ, C., a German painter, 17th century.

PUL, or SAUL, (Acts xiii. 9.) was a native of Tarsus, in Cilicia, and inherited the privileges of a Roman citizen. (Acts xxii. 28, 29.) His talents and education were wholly Jewish, and he was of the highest order. Under the instruction of Gamaliel, a distinguished Jewish teacher at Jerusalem, (Acts v. 34,) he became master of the Jewish law. (Acts xxii. 3; Gal. i. 14.) He had been also taught a useful mechanical trade, according to the custom of the nation, for the Talmudists, he that does not train his son to some occupation is as bad as if he taught him to be idle. The handicraft to which Saul was trained was that of a 'tent-maker.' Tent-making is a common and popular branch of business in the East, and these light and portable edifices are in so constant requisition. Cilicia, Saul's native province, was famed for a certain species of goat's hair, which was woven into haircloth. This form of industry may have been Saul's early employment, and as such tent-cloth was largely used in the army, this manufacture may have suggested to the apostle's mind the many military figures and illusions which are scattered through his writings. (Acts xviii. 3.) His residence at Jerusalem commenced at an early period, (Acts xxvi. 4,) and he was probably from twenty-two to twenty-five years old when Christ commenced his public ministry. He belonged to the sect of the Pharisees, as did also his father. (Acts xxiii. 6.) The preaching of the gospel by the apostles, and especially the fact of Christ's resurrection from the dead, on which they placed their chief stress, excited, of course, a violent opposition among the Jews, which, before long, broke out in open violence. Stephen, an eloquent and powerful advocate of the new religion, was seized and stoned to death. Among the spectators, and perhaps promoters, of this bloody deed, was Paul; who, we may suppose, from the manner in which he was regarded by the murderers, and, indeed, from his own confession, was fully with them in the act. (Acts vii. 58. Comp. xxii. 20.) His temperament, talents, and education fitted him to become a leader in the persecution of the apostles and their adherents; and he commenced his career with a degree of zeal bordering on madness. He 'breathed out threatenings and slaughter.' His whole spirit was excited against the new religion, and he even sought for authority to go to Damascus, whither many of the disciples had fled after the murder of Stephen, and bind and drag to Jerusalem, without distinction of age or sex, all the followers of Christ whom he could find. Just before he reached Damascus, however, he was arrested by a miraculous light, so intense as to deprive him of vision. He fell to the earth in helpless prostration and terror. (Acts xxii. 11.) At the same time Christ revealed himself as the real object of his persecution. (Acts xxvi. 15. Comp. 1 Cor. xv. 8.) Paul on being converted did not wait very long in Damascus; and we are not to infer from the narrative of Luke that immediately on leaving Damascus he went to Jerusalem. The time which he spent in Arabia may be estimated at from one year and a-half to two years; for immediately after his conversion, he must have spent at least some months at Damascus, before, as an apostle, he gave himself to his missionary journeyings,—and such was his journey into Arabia. When now he had returned to Damascus, he commenced making known, unreservedly and energetically, the gospel of Christ in the synagogues of the Jews, in the same manner that he did in his first abode in that city. The following chronological arrangement will enable the reader to connect the principal events in the life of Paul:—

A.D.

Paul's conversion. (Acts ix.,) 21st year of Tiberius, 36
He goes into Arabia, and returns to Damascus;
(Gal. i. 17;) at the end of three years in all, he escapes from Damascus and goes to Jerusalem, (Acts ix. 23, &c.) 39
From Jerusalem Paul goes to Cilicia and Syria.
(Acts ix. 30; Gal. i. 21.) From Antioch he is sent with Barnabas to Jerusalem to carry alms, (Acts xi. 30.) 45
The first missionary journey of Paul and Barnabas from Antioch, continued about two years, (Acts xiii., xiv.,) commencing, 45

After spending several years in Antioch, (Acts xiv. 28.) Paul and Barnabas are sent a second time to Jerusalem, to consult the apostles respecting circumcision, &c., (Acts xv. 2.).....	52
The Jews expelled from Rome, A.D. 52-54; Paul, on his second missionary journey, (Acts xv. 40.) after passing through Asia Minor to Europe, finds Aquila and Priscilla at Corinth, (Acts xviii. 2.)..	54
Paul remains eighteen months in Corinth. (Acts xviii. 11.) After being brought before Gallio, he departs for Jerusalem the fourth time, and then goes to Antioch, (Acts xviii. 22.).....	56
The apostle winters at Nicopolis, (Tit. iii. 12.) and then goes to Ephesus, (Acts xix. 1.).....	57
After a residence of two years or more at Ephesus, Paul departs for Macedonia, (Acts xx. 1.).....	59
After wintering in Achaia, Paul goes the fifth time to Jerusalem, where he is imprisoned, (Acts xxi. xxiil.).....	60
The apostle remains two years in prison at Cesarea, and is then sent to Rome, where he arrives in the spring, after wintering in Malta, (Acts xxiv. 27; xxv. xxviii.).....	68
The history in Acts concludes, and Paul is supposed by some to have been set at liberty.....	65
Probable martyrdom.....	66

[J.E.]

PAUL, the name of two saints besides the apostle, the earlier a hermit of the Thebaid, about 229-341. The later, a patriarch of Constantinople, elected 340, put to death 350 or 351.

PAUL, the first of the name, pope, reigned 757-767. The second, 1464-1471. The third, of the Farnese family, succeeded Clement VII., 1534, excommunicated Henry VIII. 1535, concluded a league with the Venetians and Charles V. against the Turks 1538, concurred in the foundation of the Jesuits 1540, convoked the council of Trent 1542, died 1549. The fourth, reigned 1555-1559. The fifth, of the Borghese family, succeeded Leo XI. 1605, sustained a quarrel with Venice, which was terminated by Henry IV. 1605-1607, died 1621.

PAUL I., emperor of Russia, son of Catharine the Great and Peter III., was born 1754, and succeeded on the death of his mother 1796. He was assassinated 1800, and suc. by his son, Alexander.

PAUL, an exarch of Ravenna, killed 728.

PAUL OF BURGOS. See PAUL OF S. MARIA.

PAUL THE DEACON, a monkish histor., d. 743.

PAUL-DE-LA-CROIX, an Italian founder of a religious congregation, 1720, died 1775.

PAUL OF SAMOSATA, bishop of that place, on the Euphrates, and patriarch of Antioch, flourished from 260 to 273. He was deposed for heresy 270, but could not be expelled from his dignities till after the fall of Zenobia. The sect of Paulians, or Paulianists, was named after him, and condemned by the council of Nice. Their doctrines were a form of Socinianism.

PAUL OF SANCTA MARIA, a converted Jew, born at Burgos in 1353, died a dignitary of the church 1435. His three sons, ALPHONSO, GON-SALVO, and ALOARES, also rose in the church, the elder of them becoming bishop of Burgos. He is the author of an abridgment of Spanish history.

PAUL THE SILENTIARY, a Christian poet, chief of the officers who had charge of Justinian's palace.

PAUL DE VINCENT, one of the most revered saints of the Roman calendar, founder of the congregation of 'Priests of the Missions,' was born in humble life 1576; and in all the offices which he held, was renowned for his warm zeal and extensive charity; died 1600.

PAUL, A. L., a French ecclesiastic, 1740-1

PAULA, a sainted lady of Rome, died 404.

PAULET, J. J., a Fr. medical wr., 1740-1

PAULET, W., an English courtier, 1475-1

PAULI. See PAULLI.

PAULIANS, AIME HENRI, a learned Fr. J. author of several philosophical works, 1722-1

PAULIN-DE-SAINT-BARTELEMY, name by which JOHN PHILIP WERDIN, an Aus. Carmelite and missionary, is generally known. principal scene of his labours was in the Indies, and he has left some valuable Ori. works, 1748-1806.

PAULINUS, the name of three saints:—1. bishop of Treves, elected 349, deposed 353, died in exile 359. 2. A famous ecclesiastical writer, in Gaul 353, died bishop of Nola 431. 3. A patriarch of Aquileia, 726-804.

PAULLI SIMON, a Danish physician and naturalist, 1603-1680. His son, of the same name, settled at Strasburg as a painter 1661, author of miscellaneous publications, 1664. Another son, JAMES HENRY, was professor of anatomy at history at Copenhagen, and was employed in the service of state by Christiern V. A third son, OLIVIER, born at Copenhagen 1644, became secretary of the India Company, and acquired a large fortune by commerce. He then suddenly announced himself as the subject of certain visions, in obeying the mandates of which he lost his property, and endeavoured to engage the Christian powers in a crusade against the Turks, for the purpose of restoring Israel. He published numerous works in Flemish and German, and suffered imprisonment in pursuit of this object, and at last in obscurity, 1715.

PAULINI, C. F., a Ger. naturalist, 1643-1

PAULMIER DE GRENTMESNIL, JAMES LE, a French physician, who witnessed the massacre of St. Bartholomew, and wrote on surgery, 1520-1588. His son, JAMES, a learned anatomist and philologist, 1587-1670.

PAULMY, ANTHONY RENE DE VOYER D'AR-GENSON, Marquis De, a Fr. literateur, 1722-1

PAULUS OF EGINA, a medical wr., 7th c.

PAULUS, EMILIUS LUCIUS. See EMILIUS.

PAULUS, JULIUS, a Roman lawyer, 3d c.

PAULUS, PETER, a statesman of Dutch orders, author of a 'Commentary on the Treaties of Utrecht,' and other works, 1754-1796.

PAUSANIUS, a Greek geographer, 2d c.

PAUSANIAS, a general of Cleombrotus of Sparta, who distinguished himself at the battle of Plataea, and was afterwards detected in a treasonable attempt to deliver his country to the Persians. Having fled to a temple of Minerva, the sanctity of which secured him from violence, the Greeks surrounded the building with heap stones, and thus starved him to death, B.C. 479.

PAUSIAS, a Greek painter, 4th century.

PAUSON, a Greek painter, 5th cent. B.C.

PAUW, C. DE, a Dutch savant, 1739-1791.

PAUW, J. C., a Dutch classic, 17th century.

PAUW, REIGNIER, a Dutch magistrate and diplomatist, 1664-1636. ADRIAN, his son, pensionary of Holland, 1631, plenipotentiary for the peace of Munster, 1648, died 1653. CORNELIUS, brother of the latter, a statesman, 1593-1631.

PAUWS, P., Dutch physician, 1564-1617.

PAUWELS, J., a Belgian composer, 1771-1804.
 PAVILLON, JOHN FRANCIS DU CHEVRON
 Du, a French naval commander, 1730-1782.
 PAVILLON, NICHOLAS, a famous preacher, born at Paris 1597, died bishop of Aleth 1677.
 STEPHEN, his son, a man of letters, 1632-1705.
 PAYNE, J., an English engraver, 1608-1648.
 PAYS, RENE LE, a French poet, 1636-1690.
 PAZ, J. A. DE, a Spanish Jesuit, 1560-1620.
 PAZZI, JACOPO, chief of the Italian faction opposed to the Medici, put to death 1478.
 PEACHAM, HENRY, an accomplished gentleman, who is supposed to have been tutor in the Earl of Arundel's family, and who wrote many works known to the readers of polite literature:
 among these are some complimentary poems,
 'The Gentleman's Exercise,' intended as a treatise on art; 'Minerva Britannica,' a collection of emblems in verse, illustrated with plates; and 'The Complete Gentleman.' This latter work is the one in which he was most celebrated, and it has been frequently reprinted. Died about 1640.
 PEACOCK, R., a learned prelate, 1390-1460.
 PEARCE, NATHANIEL, a sailor famous for his residence in Abyssinia, 1780-1820.
 PEARCE, ZACHARY, successively bishop of Bangor and Rochester, distinguished as a classical scholar, and author of a 'Commentary on the Evangelists,' 1690-1774.
 PEARSALL, R., a nonconf. divine, 1698-1762.
 PEARSON, EDWARD, a learned minister of the Church of England, author of a Norrisian prize essay on the 'Goodness of God, as Manifested in the Mission of Jesus Christ,' a 'Collection of Sermons,' and Tracts against the theory of Paley on moral obligation, 1756-1811.
 PEARSON, GEORGE, a physician of London, and writer on analytical chemistry, died 1828.
 PEARSON, JOHN, a learned English prelate, born in Norfolk, where his father was rector of Creake and Snoring, 1612, and died, bishop of Ely, 1686. He is regarded as the greatest one of his age, and is best known by his 'Exposition of the Creed,' published while he was vicar of St. Clement's Eastcheap, 1650. The principal of his other works is a 'Defence of the Epistles' of St. Ignatius.
 PEARSON, MARGARET EGLINTON, disting.
 for her skill in the art of painting on glass, d. 1823.
 PECCHIO, G., an Italian economist, 1785-1835.
 PEECE, J. A., an Ital. antiquarian, 1693-1768.
 PECHANTRÉ, N. DE, a Fr. dram., 1638-1709.
 PECHMEJA, J., a Fr. literateur, 1741-1785.
 PECK, FRANCIS, a dignitary of the Church of England, known as an antiquarian and historian.
 His principal works relate to English history, and the antiquities of Stamford, 1692-1743.
 PECKHAM, J., archb. of Canterbury, d. 1292.
 PECKWELL, H., a Calvinist divine, 1737-87.
 PEQUET, ANTHONY, grand master of the arts and forests of Rouen, known as a writer on forest laws and general politics, 1704-1762.
 PEQUET, J., a French anatomist, 1622-1674.
 PEDRAZI, P., an Ital. antiquarian, 1644-1720.
 PEDRO, emperor of Brazil, was eldest son of Don VI., king of Portugal, eldest brother of Don Miguel, and nephew to Ferdinand VII., king of Spain. He was born in 1798, and was married in 1816 to Leopoldine, archduchess of Austria, daughter of Francis I., emperor; and in 1829, when that princess had been dead three years, to Amelia, princess of Leuchtenberg, daughter of Eugene Beauharnais. In 1831 he abdicated the throne of Brazil in favour of his son, Pedro II., and came to England; his object being to solicit aid against his brother, Miguel, who had usurped the throne of Portugal. The defeat of Miguel's fleet in 1832, by Admiral Napier, decided the war, which had been marked by some sharp engagements on land.

 Pedro died in 1834, and his daughter by his first wife, Leopoldine, ascended the throne. She was the late Queen Donna Maria.

PEEL, SIR ROBERT, father of the celebrated statesman, was the third son of Mr. Peel, of Peel Cross, Lancashire. He was born in 1750, and amassed great wealth in the cotton trade, became a member of parliament, and in 1801 was created a baronet. Died at Drayton Manor, 1830.

[Birth place of Sir Robert Peel.]

PEEL, SIR ROBERT, was born on 5th February, 1788. His father was a celebrated manufacturer, whose successful career was intimately connected with the development of the industrial energies of Britain during the great European war. The elder Peel left a princely fortune to be inherited by his distinguished son, and there is no doubt that the peculiar position in which he was placed had much influence on the mind of the statesman. In wealth and rank he was nominally among the aristocracy, and his own character was reserved and somewhat haughty. In the external movements of society he would feel his place a high one, and the proudest aristocracy were naturally ever willing to acknowledge a considerable position to the clever, rich, and highly educated cotton-spinner's son. Yet he would have opportunities of being conscious that he was not admitted within the sacred arena of the old feudal aristocratic families, whose generations had been intermarrying for centuries. His was a nature to see and feel this, while the history of his father's rise, and all the antecedents of his own greatness, would concur to throw his sympathies into the cause of progress and energy. He studied at Harrow and Oxford, where he early distinguished himself among the most brilliant men of his day.
 When just twenty-one years of age he entered parliament as member for Cashel, and thenceforth the sphere of his exertions and triumphs was the House of Commons, in the history of which his career will form a large feature. He was no orator, nor was he properly speaking a natural and simple debater. His manner was the artificial one of thorough training, but for an artificial manner it was a good one, and the house from his practice got to like it, though to a stranger it was generally unpleasant. He could state his case clearly and forcibly, but he seldom liked to abandon a subject until he had discussed it at great length. He avoided in a marked manner the statement of general principles, as if he feared that he might afterwards have to say or do something inconsistent with them, and he generally made out his case on the details of the matter, rather than on any wide rule or principle of political opinion. At the beginning of his parliamentary career he was appointed to serve on Horner's bullion committee, and the peculiarities of his mind were then distinctly remarked. It was seen that he went into the inquiry with opinions totally unformed—that he proceeded with the examination systematically and calmly, as if it had related to some philosophical question about the composition of metals, but that after having formed his opinions, he deemed it his function and duty to carry them resolutely into practice. In 1811 he was made under secretary for the colonies, and in 1812, while only twenty-four, he received the very responsible appointment of chief secretary for Ireland.—After carrying his celebrated currency measure of 1819, he became in 1822 home secretary. Refusing to take office under Canning, he joined the ministry of the duke of Wellington in 1828. Here by conceding catholic emancipation, against which he had previously protested, he did one of those acts which have been called tergiversation by some, and the result of honest conviction, rising above original prepossession by others. He still, however, professed to belong to the Conservative party, and he became a strenuous opponent of Earl Grey's ministry and the Reform Bill. When a Conservative government was, from mere accidental and personal causes not well explained, established in 1834, he gallantly undertook the attempt to work it, though conscious that the task was hopeless. He became prime minister in 1841 with better prospects. The position in which he was placed was that of the head of a protectionist government, established to defeat and suppress the free trade party. As circumstances developed themselves in the few critical years from 1841 to 1846, some indications of opinion created alarm among the thorough protectionists, and it was seen that the prime minister becoming convinced of the truth of free trade, was determined to carry its principles into practice. After a repeal of the corn laws and other measures in the same spirit, he resigned office to the party to whom his later opinions legitimately belonged, in the summer of 1846. He died on the 2d of July, 1850, of internal injuries caused by a fall from a horse. [J.H.B.]

PEELE, GEORGE, a dramatic writer and poet of the age of Elizabeth, was a native of Devonshire, and died some time before 1598. He took the degree of M.A. at Oxford in 1579, after which he removed to London, and is supposed to have had the ordering of the city pageants. Five of his plays are still extant.

PEGEL, M., a German savant, died 1610.

PEGGE, SAMUEL, father and son, both of the same name, distinguished as antiquarian writers—the former, a minister of the Church of England flourished 1704-1796; the latter, a barrister, 1731-1800. SIR CHRISTOPHER, son of the younger Samuel, was regius professor of medicine at Oxford, and died 1825.

PEINS, G., a German painter, 1500-1556.

PEIRCE, J., a nonconform. divine, 1673-1726

PEIRESC, NICHOLAS CL. FABRI DE, a gentleman of Florence, descended from the Fabri of Pisa dist. as an antiquarian, Oriental scholar, astronomer, and naturalist, and equally famous for his protection of the learned, born 1580, expired in the arms of his friend and biographer, Gassendi, 1638.

PEIROUSE, PHILIP PICOT, Baron De La, distinguished French naturalist, 1744-1818.

PELAGIUS, sometimes surnamed Brito, usually supposed to have been a native of that country, his Greek name being a translation of the Celtic one,—MORGAN. The opinions which afterwards advocated were probably the growth of many years, for at first during his residence in Rome, whither he came in the year 400, he was noted only for his earnest zeal and austere activities. He had even the address to hold intercourse with Augustine, when he visited Africa and also with Jerome, without his being suspected of heresy. At length the agitation commenced. Pelagius, who had meanwhile gone to the East, was accused before John of Jerusalem and the synod of Diospolis, but acquitted, though he was formally anathematized by Pope Innocentius, in A.D. 418. Other sentences were passed upon the heresiarch, and his subsequent history is unknown. His doctrines were a denial of the distinctive truths of scripture and evangelical theology,—such as original sin and depravity, moral inability, and the need of divine grace to renovate. In fact, the tenets ascribed to Pelagius, ignore the guilt of man, and but make him his own deliverer. In attempt to denude redemption of mystery, he robbed it of reality. His opponents, however, complained of his lubricity, and perhaps his own views are not to be judged of by the extreme sentiments of his pupils. Several of the works of Pelagius have descended to us, such as his 'Commentaries on Paul's Epistles,' and his 'Confession of Faith.' [J.]

PELAGIUS, a king of the Austurias, died 711. PELAGIUS, the first of the name, pope, in the reign of Justinian, 555-559; the second, 578-585.

PELAGIUS, MAGLOIRE, a man of colour, who became a general in the French army, died 1800.

PELAGIUS, ST., a convert of Antioch, 5th c.

PELETIER, CLAUDE LE, one of the most distinguished members of the ancient French magistrature, provost of merchants, and builder of the quay which bears his name at Paris, 1631-1715. His brother, MICHAEL, a learned man and councillor of state, died 1725.

PELETIER, JAMES, a French mathematician and man of letters, 1517-1582. JOHN, his brother, a theologian, died 1583. JAMES, their nephew, an ecclesiastic, executed in effigy for his all share in the death of the president Brisson, 1571.

PELL, JOHN, a learned divine and mathematician, died 1725.

tician, who settled at Breda as professor of philosophy and mathematics, and was a great correspondent of Cavendish. Besides the works published by him, his MSS. and letters, in the British Museum, occupy nearly forty folio volumes. Born at Southwick, in Sussex, 1610, died 1685.

PELLEGRIN, SIMON JOSEPH, a French ecclesiastic, kn. as a dramatic wr. and poet, 1663-1745.

PELLEPRAT, P., a Fr. missionary, 1606-1667.

PELLERIN, J., a Fr. numismatist, 1684-1782.

PELLETIER. See LEPELLETIER.

PELLETIER, B., a pharmacopolist, 1761-97.

PELLEW, EDWARD. See EXMOUTH.

PELLICAN, C., a Germ. Hebraist, 1478-1536.

PELLICER, J. A., a Span. savant, 1740-1806.

PELLICO, SILVIO, was born at Saluzza, in Piedmont, 1789. He was known in early life as a poet and dramatic writer, especially by his fine tragedy 'Francesca da Rimini.' In 1819, he started the 'Conciliator,' a literary and scientific journal, which brought him under the Austrian censorship, and in 1821, he was arrested and condemned to death with Count Gonfalonieri and others; all charged with conspiracy as members of the Carbonari societies. This punishment was commuted in the scaffold, and the patriots consigned to a horrible imprisonment; that of Silvio Pellico, chiefly passed in the fortress of Spielberg, lasting till the general amnesty of 1830. The pathetic account of his sufferings, 'Le Mie Prigioni,' produced an immense effect, and the name of Pellico, connected with those of Gioberti and Balbo, has kept alive the purest flame of patriotism that has yet burned in their unhappy country. He died in the house of the Marchesa Barolo, in February, 1854. [E.R.]

PELLIEUX, J. N., a Fr. antiquary, 1749-1832.

PELLISSON-FONTANIER, PAUL, an eminent historian and member of the French Academy, who was educated for the law, and at the age of twenty-one published a 'Commentary on the Institutes of Justinian.' He is famed also for the courage with which he defended his old professor, Fouquet, on whose disgrace he was condemned to a five years' imprisonment in the Bastille. His works are a 'History of the French Academy,' 'History of Louis XIV.,' 'History of the Conquest of Franche-Comté,' and 'Reflections upon Religious Differences.' Born at Béziers 1624, died 1693.

PELLOUTIER, SIMON, a German of French descent, au. of a 'History of the Celts,' 1694-1757.

PELOPIDAS, a famous Theban general, commander-in-arms of Epaminondas, died B.C. 364.

PELS, A., a Dutch miscellaneous wr., d. 1681.

PELTAN, T. A., a Germ. theologian, 1552-84.

PELTIER, J. G., a Fr. journalist, died 1825.

PEMBERTON, HENRY, professor of medicine at Gresham College, and a member of the Royal Society, bears a distinguished name as a mathematician and natural philosopher. He was the temporary and friend of Sir Isaac Newton. Born in London 1694, died 1771.

PEMBLE, W., a learned divine, 1591-1623.

PEMBROKE, MARY HERBERT, wife of Henry, au. of a poetical writer, died 1821.

PEMBROKE, T., a painter, about 1700-1728.

PENA, JOHN, a Fr. mathematician, 1530-1560.

PENA, JOHN NUNEZ DE LA, a Spanish historian of the Canary Islands, 1676.

PENA, PETER, a French botanist, 16th century.

PENINGTON, ISAAC, son of an alderman and mayor of London, famous as a writer among the Quakers, was born about 1617, joined that religious body 1658, and died 1679. A daughter of his wife, by her former husband, was married to the celebrated William Penn.

PENN, SIR WILLIAM, a brave and patriotic admiral, dist. in the war against the Dutch under the duke of York, born at Bristol 1621, died 1670.

PENN, WILLIAM, was born in Windsor, on the 14th of October, 1644. His father was Sir William Penn, a distinguished admiral, who boasted a high and ancient lineage. While the young man studied at Oxford, the great feud between the Puritan and Carabie party then raging was interrupted by the appearance of a new claimant to their allegiances, in a representative of the startling opinions of George Fox. From their boldness and originality, and their rejection of the authoritative restraints laid on both the other factions, this had a charm for one of young Penn's bold and original nature, and he joined the new sect resolving to brave all the consequences. A far more painful portion of them, even than his expulsion from college, encountered him in the domestic circle, where the feelings of the proud old admiral were deeply wounded by finding his son a schismatic. It was one of the veteran's maxims, however, that conscience and honour were before all things, and the spirit and manliness with which his son carried out the principles he adopted seem to have appeased his indignation. In 1668, Penn published the first of his voluminous works 'Truth Exalted,' and two years afterwards he was imprisoned, under the conventicle act, for seditious preaching. In 1677, he travelled on the continent with his celebrated brethren, Robert Barclay and George Fox. It was in the year 1681 that, in compensation for a debt to his father by the crown, he received a grant of the province on the Delaware, called the New Netherlands. It was a signally fortunate incident that in the reckless disposal of such gifts at that time, one should have fallen into hands like his. Such was the foundation of the colony of Pennsylvania, now an empire. It was commenced in a spirit of magnanimous justice, incomprehensible to that age, in an agreement with the natives, and the admission that they had claims to be considered before the colonists took absolute possession. When the relaxations with which James II. wished to purchase the assent of the dissenters to his Romish projects began, the conduct of Penn created suspicions and accusations which have clouded his fame. His position was peculiar, since it was not easy to find among the dissenting bodies any other man whose rank and importance made him so likely a medium of communication with the court, and, at the same time, the Quakers not having much harmony with the others, and being little liked by them, were more apt to accede to measures not generally acceptable to dissenters at large. Thus Penn had friendly communications with the court, and gave his support to its measures. Whether he dishonourably implicated himself, is matter of too extensive controversy to be here entered on, and reference must be made to the vindication in Mr. Hepsworth Dixon's Memoirs, published in 1851. One charge against him is that when in Mon-mouth's rebellion, some young girls of Tannton were threatened with the punishment of death for having worked standards for Monmouth, Penn became the looker for their pardon, as a pecuniary consideration in favour of the maids of honour. Mr. Dixon has given reason to suppose that the negotiator was a different person, named George Penne. After the Revolution, Penn lived under the suspicion of favouring the Jacobite cause, and his latter days were clouded. The death of his first wife in 1693, was followed by that of his eldest son. He married a second time in 1696. He was afterwards encumbered with debt, and died on the 30th of July, 1718. [J.H.B.]

[Grave of Penn.]

PENNA, L., an Italian composer, died 1693.

PENNANT, THOS., a celebrated naturalist, was born in 1726. He died in 1798. His father was the proprietor of an estate in Flintshire, north Wales, to which he succeeded at the age of thirty-seven. He devoted almost all his spare time to travelling and the study of natural history and antiquities. He is the author of many works, some of which retain a considerable reputation. His 'British Zoology' is a work of much excellence, and his 'Tour in Scotland' obtained for him a high character as an accurate observer. He made that country much better known to the English than it had hitherto been, and he assisted Lightfoot materially in his excellent work 'The Flora Scotica.' Amongst his other works we may more particularly mention his 'Synopsis of Quadrupeds,' and the 'Arctic Zoology'; his 'Tour through Wales,' and the 'Antiquities of London.' He was a fellow of the Royal and Antiquarian Societies, and many others, both at home and abroad, and corresponded with Linnæus, Buffon, Haller, and many of the distinguished men of the day. Foster has named a genus of plants after him, Pennantia. [W.B.]

PENNI, G. F., a Florentine painter, 1488-1528. His brother, LUCAS, born about 1500.

PENNICUIK, A., a Scot. physician, 1652-1722.

PENNY, EDWARD, a painter, 1714-1791.

PENNY, THOMAS, an Engl. naturalist, 16th c.

PENROSE, THOMAS, a poetical wr., 1743-79.

PENRY, or AP HENRY, JOHN, the author of the famous tract which gave him the name by which he is generally known, Martin Mar-Prelate, was born in Wales 1559; and after taking his degree at Oxford became an anabaptist, Brownist, or puritan, as he is variously called. He was executed for his opposition to the church, 1593.

PENTHIEVRE, L. J. M. DE BOURBON, Duc De, regarded as one of the most upright statesmen of France in the last century, 1725-1793.

PENTZ, G., a German engraver, 1500-1550.

PENZEL, A. J., a Ger. philologist, 1749-1819.

PEPIN OF HERISTAL, called also PEPIN LE GROS, was the stock of the second dynasty, of Carolingian line of French kings. He was grandson by the mother's side to Pepin de Landen, who governed Austrasia in the reign of Dagobert, and stood in the same relation by his father to the famous Arnaud, archbishop of Metz, who combined in his own person the characters of a warrior, statesman, diplomatist, and prince of the church. Pepin of Heristal took his surname from his seat of the Meuse, near Liege, while the Christian prefix derived from his maternal grandfather may have been chosen as a recommendation to the people of Austrasia. The Austrasians, in fact, when Ebroin mayor of the palace of Neustria, became their legal governor by the death of Dagobert II. in 680, preferred the hazard of a contest in favour of Pepin, to the yoke of the well-known tyrant, and a struggle was then begun which produced the assassination of the latter, and made Pepin of Heristal the virtual master of the Frank monarchy. It is an historical question how far Clothaire II. and the Dagoberts contributed to the elevation of this family, who at length overthrew the dynasty, but there can be no doubt about two facts,—1, that it was the period of a struggle between the local and the national powers, such as we often recognize at a later age in the history of feudalism; and 2, that the Merovingian, or first line of kings, descended from Clovis, had become a feeble, cruel, and debauched race. Thierry, who reigned nominally during this struggle, was an exception to the rule in point of feebleness; and when Ebroin was vanquished, who had tyrannized over him as well as the people, he refused to make the amende honorable to those who had been injured. It was the disaffection thus produced that armed the followers of Pepin against their common sovereign, and the king being defeated, found that he had exchanged a master hated by all his subjects for one whom they regarded as their saviour. Pepin, however, contented himself with the old title, 'Mayor of the Palace,' and not only propped up Thierry himself, but crowned three of his descendants after him, who are called in French history, Les Rois Fainéants.—'Do-nothing kings.' The real power was firmly grasped in the hands of Pepin Heristal, who subdued the tributary princes by continual victories, and consolidated the order of the state without daring to assume the pageantry of it. He died in 714, leaving his natural son, Charles Martel, to take the next step in advance, which consisted in administering the kingdom, not with the title of king indeed, but with the throne absolutely vacant. [E.B.]

PEPIN LE BREF, son of Charles Martel, and grandson of the preceding, is the first king of France of the Carolingian dynasty. He succeeded to his father's authority conjointly with his brother Carloman, in 741, and by filling the one with Childeric, a foolish prince of the Merovingian line, surnamed 'the idiot,' acquired sanction necessary to support the continued usurpation of power by his own family. While Childeric acted the part of the roi fainéant, Pepin the Short, so named from his short stature, was winning glory in the field, and in 746 was left out a competitor by the retirement of Carloman to a monastery. The clergy and the pope easily conciliated in favour of a power which seemed to preserve the church from the surrounding anarchy, and stop the progress of the Saracens, spread as far as the south of France. In 750, Pepin le Bref dethroned Childeric, and shaved off his long hair, which was an essential character of royalty with the Merovingians, confined him in a monastery. In 752 he had himself to be consecrated at Soissons, and received the pope himself (Stephen II.) as a mediator for intervention in Italy. This was the beginning of the Frankish empire, successor of the old Roman, which had ended in universal anarchy. Pepin and his queen Bertha were buried in the church of St. Denis by the pope, the king then accompanied him into Italy at the head of an army, besieged Astolphus, king of the Lombards, in Pavia, and compelled him to renounce his pretensions to the sovereignty of Italy and the exarchate of Ravenna. Another action was rendered necessary by the revolt of Rastus, who was again subdued by the emperor of the church, who also obtained a signal victory over the Saracens, reunited Aquitaine to the kingdom, and waged successful war against the Saracen princes. Pepin le Bref died in the seventh year of his reign, 768, and was succeeded by Charlemagne. It is admitted by late historians that this change of dynasty was coincident with the elevation of the eastern Franks, whose fresher blood, guided by the chiefs of the Pepin family, enabled them to push upwards to the seat of government, and take the place of their feeble predecessors. [E.R.]

PEPIN, the second son of Charlemagne, born 750, became king of Italy 781, died 810.

PEPIN, the first of the name, king of Aquitaine as the son of Louis le Débonnaire, and was in 83. Aquitaine was apportioned to him in 83. died 838. The second of the name was son of Charlemagne, died in a monastery 864.

PEIN, M., a Flemish painter, born 1578.

PELI, a rich Italian family who aimed at the sovereign power in Bologna, 14th century.

PELI, A. H., an Italian poet, 1757-1796.

PERJUSCH, JOHN CHRISTOPHER, one of the best theoretical musicians of modern times, was born in Berlin, about 1667. He came to London in 1717, and was engaged as musician at Drury Lane theatre, where it is believed he assisted in the operas which were performed there. In 1721 the university of Oxford admitted him to the degree of Doctor in Music. At the instance of George Rich he undertook to compose and adapt music for the 'Beggar's Opera.' Having written a paper on the ancient genera, which was read before the Royal Society, and published in the Philosophical Transactions, in the year 1746, he afterwards was elected a fellow of the Royal Society. He died in 1752. [J.M.]

PEPYS, SAMUEL, born in 1632, was the son of a tailor in London, but related to persons of distinction, whose patronage procured him public offices, and introduced him into aristocratic society. After having served with much ability as a clerk in the Navy Board, he became secretary of the Admiralty under Charles II., and held the place till the Revolution. He died in 1703. Pepys was one of the strangest of mortals: with great talents and activity in business he united a considerable knowledge of several of the fine arts, and a sufficient turn for science to make him no unworthy president of the Royal Society: he was a man of much shrewd observation on the follies of others and the habits of his time, and yet himself a fop and an egotist, vain to the extreme of the ridiculous, and delighting in trifling and gossiping as much as in his more serious occupations. His own character is most amusingly shown, and that of his profligate age most instructively painted, in his 'Memoirs' and correspondence. A collection of books and manuscripts which he bequeathed to Magdalen College, Oxford, contained 2,000 old English ballads, which were among the chief authorities of Percy in the compilation of his 'Reliques.' [W.S.]

PERANDA, S., a Venetian painter, 1566-1638.

PERAU, GABRIEL LOUIS CALABRE, a French writer, author of the 'Secrets of the Freemasons,' a continuation of the 'Lives of Illustrious Men of France,' and editor of editions of Rabelais, Boileau, and Bossuet, 1700-1767.

PERAULT, W., a Dominican writer, died 1275.

PERCEVAL, JOHN, fifth baronet of the family, and first earl of Egmont, was born at Barton, in Yorkshire, 1683, and died 1748. He was one of the founders of the colony of Georgia, and wrote several works of temporary interest. His son, of the same name, second earl of Egmont, was a member of parliament, and one of the privy council on the accession of George III. He was raised to the peerage by the title of Lord Lovel and Holland, and wrote some political tracts. Born at Westminster 1711, died 1770. His second son is the subject of the following notice.

PERCEVAL, SPENCER, a lawyer and statesman, the second son of John Lord Egmont, was born in the year 1762. His education appears to have been private until he entered Trinity College, Cambridge. He was called to the bar from Lincoln's Inn, in 1786. This connection was of a sort which, at that time, secured immediate success even to ordinary abilities. He was made a king's counsel in 1796, when he entered parliament. He attracted the notice of Pitt by a constitutional pamphlet, and soon found himself in the path to political or professional advancement as he might incline. In 1801 he was made solicitor, and in 1802, attorney-general. When the Grenville ministry was overturned in 1807, he led the new ministry as chancellor of the exchequer. This appointment marked the decided opposition of the new government to the tolerant views which had destroyed its predecessors. Perceval is one of the few men in the rank of statesmen, in this country, whose names are associated with rancour or intolerant religious views, and they seem in him to have sprung less from a desire to oppress than from a cold ungenial nature. One of his rivals said that he was like a fish, and the comparison seems to have been accepted by those who knew him. On the 11th of May, 1812, he was shot while passing through the lobby of the House of Commons by a man named Bellingham. Great alarm was, of course, felt that the maniac represented some political or religious combination, but it was soon discovered that his enmity was entirely on personal grounds. [J.H.B.]

PERCIVAL, THOMAS, a physician, who practised his profession at Manchester, and was dist. as an ethical and miscellaneous writer, 1740-1804.

PERCLIGIA, a Turkish visionary, who excited a commotion in Nátolia, and was put to death, declaring himself an apostle of God, in 1418.

PERCY, the family name of a follower of William the Conqueror, from whom sprang the lords of Alnwick, in Northumberland. The members of this family best known to history are—WILLIAM DE PERCY, whose grand-daughters were married to the earl of Warwick, and to the brother-in-law of Henry I. After him a HENRY DE PERCY, reign of Edward I. A second HENRY was married to the Princess Mary of Lancaster, in the reign of Edward III., and it was his sons whom Richard II. created respectively earl of Northumberland and earl of Worcester. The latter was beheaded after the victory of Henry IV., near Shrewsbury, while the son of the former, HENRY PERCY, called 'Hotspur,' fell gallantly in the battle; and his father, Northumberland, was killed in Yorkshire 1408. The son of Hotspur was restored by Henry V. to the title of earl of Northumberland, and was killed in the battle of St. Albans 1455.

PERCY, PETER FRANCIS, Baron, a French army surgeon, time of Napoleon, famous for his professional skill and devoted zeal, and the contriver of perambulating hospitals, which he organized for the army of the Rhine, 1754-1825.

PERCY, THOMAS, the well-known editor of 'Ancient English Poetry,' was the son of a grocer of Shropshire, who was educated at Oxford, and became a minister, and finally a prelate, in the Church of England. He was born 1729, obtained a vicarage in Northamptonshire 1756, and commenced his literary career by publishing a Chinese romance in 1761. The fame of his first-named publication procured him an introduction to the Percies of Northumberland, and he became, in 1765, chaplain to the duke. In 1770 he published the 'Hermit of Warkworth,' and his translation of Mallet's 'Northern Antiquities' Died at his episcopal palace of Dromore 1811.

PERDICCAS, one of the generals of Alexander the Great, killed while aiming at the sovereignty after the death of Alexander, 322 B.C.

PEREDA, A., a Spanish painter, 1599-1669.

PEREFIXE, HARDOUIN DE BEAUGMONT DE, a French prelate and historian, 1605-1670.

PEREGRINUS, a Cynic philosopher, 2d cent.

PEREIRA, D. NUNEZ ALVAREZ, a Portuguese statesman and commander, 1360-1431.

PEREIRA-DE-FIGUEIREDO, ANTONIO, a Portuguese ecclesiastic, theologian, and ecclesiastical historian, 1725-1797.

PEREIRA, G., a Spanish physician, 16th cent.

PEREIRA, JONATHAN, late physician to the London Hospital, distinguished for his knowledge of pharmacy and general science, author of 'Elements of Materia Medica.' Born of humble parentage at Shoreditch 1804, died 1853.

PEREIRE, JACOB RODRIGUEZ, a Portuguese famous as a teacher of the deaf and dumb, 1716-

PEREYRA, D., a Portug. painter, 1570-164-

PEREYRA, M., a Portug. sculptor, 1614-16

PEREYRA, V., a Spanish painter, died 161

PEREZ, A., a Spanish painter, 1660-1727.

PEREZ, A., a Spanish jurisconsult, 1585-16

PEREZ, DAVID, who was born of Spanish rents at Naples, in the year 1711, received musical education from Antonio Galli, and Francisco Mancini. He early showed an uncommon genius for music, and his progress in the art remarkably rapid. After having brought out operas at Palermo and in Naples, he was invited to Rome where he soon became extremely popular.

1752, Joseph, king of Portugal, offered him the situation of chapel-master at Lisbon, which office he accepted, and where his talents were as much prized as they had been in Sicily and Italy. He died in the service of the king of Portugal, a sixty-seven years, after having resided at Lisbon much admired and respected, during a period of twenty-seven years. Though wanting in grace, his compositions were valuable from the genius, science and power displayed in them. Like Handel, he was blind during the latter years of his life, when labouring under this severe deprivation, confined to his bed, he frequently, without the aid of any instrument, dictated compositions in several parts. Besides twelve operas, he left much sacred music, which possesses almost unequalled beauty. [J.]

PEREZ, DON ANTONIO, a Spanish statesman celebrated by the unhappy story of his love for Princess d'Éboli, mistress of Philip II., and persecution it brought upon him. He is known also as an historian. Died in poverty at Paris 1645.

PEREZ, J., a Spanish writer, 1512-1645.

PERGOLA, ANGELO DE LA, one of the remarkable Ghibeline commanders of Italy, died 1427.

PERGOLES, GIOVANNI BATTISTA, was born near Naples, about the year 1704, and was educated under Gaetano Greco, and Durante. Having discovered that music, previous to his own time, was too much loaded with mere scientific embellishment, he determined to leave the style in which he had been taught, and to adopt the more melodious and simple one of Vinci and Hasse. He composed several operas, which did not meet with much success. His sacred compositions, however, were duly appreciated, and upon these his fame now rests. He died of consumption in 1737, and no sooner was his death made public, than all the cities of Italy that had paid no attention to his works when he was alive, strove which should do most justice to them when he was dead; and every person became anxious to possess even the most trifling of his compositions. [J.]

PERI, J. D., an Italian poet, 17th century.

PERIANDER, who is one of the seven rejected sages of Greece, was a tyrant of Corinth, who succeeded his father, Cypselus, B.C. 653, and died with the reputation of an able ruler B.C. 563. He was a man of licentious manners, and, in the latter part of his reign, became a cruel ruler.

PERICLES, the greatest of Athenian statesmen, was the son of Xanthippus, the conqueror of My-Agarista, niece of the famous Cleisthenes. The date of his birth is unknown, but as he first took a share in public business in B.C. 469, we may may infer that he was born soon after the beginning of the fifth century B.C. He early gave indications of a mind capable of great achievements, and following his natural inclinations, spent his youth in retirement, devoting himself to those studies which he felt to be best calculated for fitting him to enter upon political life. His rank and talents opened to him the schools of the most celebrated teachers of their respective arts and sciences. He was taught the higher music by Terpander, who contributed mainly to train him for his political career; was initiated into the subtleties of the Eleatic school under Zeno, and especially instructed by the philosophical teaching of Anaxagoras, with whom he was long united in intimate friendship. By his intercourse with the last named philosopher, his habits of thought, and also the grand tone of his eloquence, were believed to have been formed; and an abiding effect on his character was produced by the sublime speculations which he listened to. No specimens of his eloquence remain to us; but by the unanimous testimony of ancient authors it is admitted to have been of the highest kind. In the year B.C. 469, after the ostracism of Themistocles, and at the time of the death of Aristides, Pericles engaged in the political movements of the state. His hereditary prepossessions led him to the cause of the people, and his pre-eminence combined with untiring assiduity in public action placed him at the head of the democratic party, and in opposition to Cimon, who acknowledged leader of the aristocracy. In this period till his death, the biography of Pericles is the history of his country. He aimed to bring down at the aristocracy through the council of the Areopagus, which, notwithstanding the opposition of Cimon, he succeeded in weakening of its judicial power, except in inconsequential cases. This triumph was soon followed by the ostracism of Cimon, an event which for the first time left him without a formidable rival. In B.C. 444 the power of Pericles was nearly absolute. But the boundless influence which he had thus acquired was not debased by the promotion of selfish objects. Averse to the further extension by conquest of the Athenian dominions, he employed himself chiefly in consolidating the empire already acquired, in establishing the surplus population as additional colonies, and proving, when necessary, by military achievements, which place him high as a commander, that the resources at his disposal were sufficient to maintain the position which he claimed for his country. Believing in the supremacy of Athens rested on her maritime superiority, he bestowed especial care on the navy, and maintained a well-trained fleet in constant readiness for action. But Pericles found a more congenial occupation in cultivating the arts of peace. The public funds, which had been greatly increased by his management, were expended in the erection of those magnificent temples and public buildings which rendered Athens the wonder and admiration of Greece. Architecture and sculpture attained to a degree of perfection which modern ages have in vain endeavoured to rival, poetry started into full maturity, and the drama, in the hands of Sophocles, reached the highest excellence. From these peaceful pursuits Pericles was withdrawn by the Peloponnesian war (B.C. 431), which he lived to conduct for the first two years. At the conclusion of the first campaign he delivered the funeral oration in honour of those who had fallen, a speech which, as reported by Thucydides, is one of the most remarkable of all the compositions of antiquity. During the following year Athens was visited by the plague, which carried off his two sons, his sister, and most of his intimate friends. In the middle of the succeeding year (B.C. 429) Pericles died of a lingering illness, which was perhaps connected with the epidemic, though not attended by any of its violent symptoms. [G.F.]

[Pericles—From an Ancient Bust.]

PERIER, CASIMIR, a statesman of the reign of Louis Philippe, was born at Grenoble 1777, and from 1798 to 1800, or shortly after, served in the French army. In 1802 he commenced those commercial and manufacturing speculations, by which he acquired an immense fortune; in 1816 brought himself into notice by a financial pamphlet, and in 1817 was elected one of the deputies for the Seine. From that period till 1830 he opposed the ministry, and on the 30th July became minister of the interior. He succeeded Lafitte as head of the government, in March, 1831. Died 1832.

PERIER, JAMES CONSTANTINE, associated with his brother, CHARLES, in the famous cannon foundries of Chaillot and Liege, and more lately in the manufacture of steam engines, was born at Paris 1742, and died 1818. He is author of an 'Essay on Steam Engines,' the construction of which he had studied in England.

PERIERS, B. DE, a French writer, died 1544.

PERIGNON, DOMINIQUE CATHERINE, Marquis De, a peer and marshal of France, was born 1754, became a deputy to the legislative assembly 1791, succeeded Dugommier, and distinguished himself at the battle of Escola 1794, ambassador to Madrid 1796, marshal 1804, governor of Parma and Placenza 1806, and successor of Jourdan at Naples 1808, joined the Bourbons, and became a peer after the fall of Napoleon; died 1818.

PERINGSKIOELD, JOHN, professor at Upsala, and secretary and antiquary to the king of Sweden, 1654-1720.

PERKINS, ELISHA, and his son, BENJAMIN DOUGLAS, American physicians, known as advocates of metallic tractors as a means of healing, once famous by the name of PERKINISM; the latter died 1799.

PERKINS, WILLIAM, a minister of the Church of Eng., kn. as a Calvinistic theologian, 1558-1602.

PERNETTI, DOM ANTHONY JOSEPH, a learned French ecclesiastic of the Benedictine order, author of a curious Historical Journal of a voyage to the Falkland Isles, where he accompanied Bougainville; a Dictionary of Painting, Sculpture, and Engraving, a Dictionary of Hermetic Philosophy and Mythology, and several works on physiognomy and ethnology. He also published a translation of Columella, of Wolff's Mathematics, and of some of Swedenborg's works, 1716-1801. His brother, JAMES, a priest, and historiographer to the city of Lyons, 1696-1777.

PÉRON, F., a French naturalist, 1775-1810.

PERONI, J., an Italian sculptor, 1627-1663.

PEROTTI, N., a Italian grammarian, 1480-80.

PEROUSE. See LAPEROUSE.

PERPENNA, a Roman general, and partizan of Marius, put to death by Pompey B.C. 74.

PERPINIAN, P. J., a Spanish painter and theologian, one of the best modern Latinists, d. 1566.

PERRAULT, CHARLES, a French barrister, who became comptroller-general of the royal buildings, and a member of the Academy, and acquired great celebrity as a literateur and a poet, was born at Paris 1628. He commenced that famous controversy concerning the comparative merits of the ancients and moderns, in which Boileau advocated the former and Perrault the latter. His principal work is The Age of Louis XIV. Died 1703.

CLAUDE, brother of the preceding, celebrated as an architect, mechanic, and naturalist, flourished 1613-1688. Among his artistic productions are the colonnade of the Louvre, and most of the vases which ornament the gardens of Versailles. The principal of his writings are a Translation of Vitruvius, Memoirs of the Natural History of Animals, and Medical Essays. PETER, a third brother, wrote on fountains, 1674. NICHOLAS, a fourth brother, died young in 1661, and left a treatise entitled 'La Morale des Jésuits,' which was published in 1667.

PERREAU, J. A., a French writer, 1749-1813.

PERREIN, J., a French naturalist, 1750-1805.

PERIER. See DUPERIER.

PERRIER, F., a French painter, 1590-1650

PERRIER, F., a French jurist, 1645-1700.

PERRIN, A. S., a French painter, 1761-1832.

PERRON. See DUPERRON.

PERRONNET, JOHN RODOLPH, a celebrated French engineer and bridge builder, 1708-1794

PERROT, SIR J., a naval officer, died 1592.

PERROT D'ABLANCOURT, NICHOLAS, a Fr. wr., au. of several classical translations, 1606-64.

PERRY, JAMES, known as a miscellaneous writer and journalist, was son of a man of business at Aberdeen, where he was born 1756. He came to London 1777, and was employed as a reporter on the General Advertiser and the Evening Post. In 1782 he projected and edited the European Magazine, and finally became sole editor and proprietor of the Morning Chronicle. It was at his suggestion that the modern plan of reporting was adopted, by employing a succession of reporters instead of a single one. Died 1821.

PERRY, JOHN, an English engineer and traveler, au. of 'The Present State of Russia;' d. 173

PERSEUS, or PERSES, the last king of Macedonia, was a natural son of Philip V., whom he succeeded B.C. 179. He was vanquished by the Romans B.C. 167, and died in prison at Rome.

PERSEUS, AULUS FLACCUS, a Roman satirist who directed his shafts against the general corruption of the times, and died young, 62.

PERSIUS, a Roman orator, 2d century B.C.

PERTI, J. A., an Italian composer, 1656-17

PERTINAX, PUBLIUS HELVIUS, the successor of Commodus as emperor of Rome, was the son of a charcoal burner, and was born 126, in the reign of Adrian. He was assassinated by the praetorians within three months of his elevation to the throne, 193

PERUGIUS, PIETRO, whose family name was VANUCCI, is most celebrated as the master Raphael. He was born at Città Della Pieve, in Perugia, 1446; and first distinguished himself as a 'Descent from the Cross,' painted for the church of Saint Chiara, at Florence, 1485. One of the best pictures is said to be an Infant Christ, in Albani Palace, at Rome. Died 1524.

PERUSE, J. DE LA, a French poet, 16th c.

PERUZZI, B., an Italian painter, 1481-153

PESARESE, the surname of SIMON COSMIDI, an Italian painter and engraver, 1612-16

PESCATORE, GIAMBATTISTA, an Italian painter and senator of Ravenna, died 1558.

PESCENNIUS NIGER, CALPURNIUS, a governor of Syria, proclaimed emperor of Rome at Antioch, the death of Pertinax 193, slain 195.

PESELIER, CHARLES STEPHEN, a French dramatic author and poet, 1712-1763.

PESTALOZZI, HENRY, descended from a family of Italian origin, was born at Zurich, 1 January, 1745. He was educated for the church and even commenced preaching, but for a reason abandoned this occupation when at twenty-eight years of age. He then studied the law, wrote an essay on the Constitution of Sparta, and on discovering the intense selfishness of the profession, bound himself apprentice to a farmer. With the experience thus acquired he spent the remainder of his property in the purchase and cultivation of a piece of land, and for the sake of employing the poor became partner in a cotton mill; it is probable that he was motivated by both these enterprises by the 'Emilius of Rousseau,' which afforded him a view of his true end, and the only one which he could reconcile with benevolent feelings. He began his career as an educator on his farm of Neuhof, by admitting orphan children into his own house, whom he provided with food, clothing, and education. The Helvetic government refusing to take any countenance of his projects. This was in 1775. In 1776, however, some time after publishing his 'romance,' entitled 'Leonard and Gertrude,' in which he partly developed his ideas, he was appointed by the Swiss Directory to the charge of a large number of children who had been left orphaned by the French wars. He was allowed the use of essed convent at Stantz, the capital of Under-n, and being compelled to abandon this by pproach of the French army, was transferred e canton of Berne, where the chateau of dorf, with its surrounding domain, was placed disposal. Pestalozzi availed himself of this tunity to enlarge his plans, pupils flocked to who paid for their instruction, and he was o engage assistants. In 1804, after a tem-y removal elsewhere, he established himself castle of Yverdun, in the canton of Vaud, with its surrounding estate, was generously to him by that government. This change en rendered necessary by the increase of his and Yverdun became a normal school, young men of all nations surrounded the ble philanthropist, and were instructed in w system of education. The fame of Pestaas widely spread, and his name everywhere

red. The canton of Zurich nominated him r of the Helvetic Consulta, convened by parte, and the emperor of Russia graced th the order of St. Wladimir. He continued rdun till 1825, when he retired to Neu-hof, 1826 was named president of the Helvetic of Olten. Meantime, indeed, for some ast, the institution of Yverdun had been o ruin, and soon after the retirement of zzi, his successor, M. Schmidt, was ordered e the country. The works of this great tor are 'Leonard and Gertrude,' already red, 'How Gertrude Instructs her Children,' ches on the Course of Nature in the Edu-of the Human Race,' 'Elementary Educand several others, developing his plan of on by objects, the essential principle of ch the drawing forth of the internal faculties, er may be thought of his system as a whole,
ent generation is deeply indebted to Pestar the fresher thoughts and experiments his plans suggested. It is his grand dis-to be among the first benefactors of the e first to claim for their squalid children advantage of all that is impressive in art autiful in nature—the first to share his th them, and to dwell amongst them, as a n himself, in order, as he expresses it, that ing 'Teach those harassed with poverty to en.'

[E.R.]

[Tomb of Pestalozzi]

PESTALOZZI, J. J., a physician and professional writer at Lyons, 1674-1742. ANTHONY JOSEPH, probably his son, a physician, 1703-1779.
PESTEL, F. W., a German jurist, 1724-1805.

PETAN, PAUL, a chronologist and antiquarian, flourished at Orleans, 1568-1614. His great-nephew, DENIS, commonly called Petavius, one of the most learned chronologists of his age, 1583-1652.

PETAVIUS, DIONYSIUS. See PETAN.

PETER, THE APOSTLE, whose name was originally Simon, was born at Bethsaida, in Galilee, and was about forty years of age when he became a follower of our Lord. He is supposed to have suffered martyrdom at Rome, along with Paul, 65.

PETER, the name of five saints of Rome:—
1. A bishop of Alexandria, martyred 311 under Maximinus. 2. PETER, surnamed Chrysologus, an Italian prelate, author of Sermons and Homilies, died 452. 3. An archbishop of Tarentaise, died 1174. 4. PETER NOLASQUE, founder of the order for the redemption of Christian slaves from the infidels, entitled 'The Confraternity of Mercy,' died 1256. 5. PETER OF ALCANTARA, a Franciscan friar, 1499-1562.

PETER I., emperor of Russia (next article.)

PETER II., son of Alexis Petrowitz and the Princess Charlotte of Brunswick Wolfenbittel, born 1715, succeeded Catharine I. 1727, died 1730.

PETER III., son of Anne, eldest daughter of Peter
I. and of Charles Frederic, duke of Holstein Got-torp, born 1728, was created grand duke by his sister, Elizabeth, 1742, and succeeded her 1762.
He was put to death the same year by his wife,
Catharine, who succeeded him as Catharine II.

PETER THE FIRST, czar of Russia, was born May 30, 1672. He is usually called PETER THE GREAT, nor can the epithet be justly denied to the man who gave his country sea ports, commerce, fleets, and manufactures, arts, and educational institutions; and who changed the despised and barbarous Muscovy, which our ancestors spoke of as we now speak of Timbuctoo, into the Russia whose ambitious schemes and preponderating force all the world now anxiously watches. Moreover, the exploits which Peter achieved, were mainly due to his own innate strength of character, and not to the favourable coincidence of circumstances. If it be true that the secret of greatness lies in energy of the will, in resolute endurance, and in self-sacrifice, there are few historical personages in whom its elements have been more strongly developed than in the imperial organizer of the Russian power.
Peter succeeded to the crown of Russia at the age of ten; but his half-sister Sophia, who held the regency, strove not only to keep him as long as possible from the exercise of power, but to render him unfit for it, by giving him a purposely defective education, and by placing in his way, as he grew up, every temptation to idleness and sensuality. Much of the coarseness, the vice, and the savage violence which deformed Peter's career in after life, may be traced to the taints thus early given to his moral system; the spirit must have been surpassingly strong and self-relying that could rise to any greatness in manhood, after a boy-hood and early youth of such neglect and corruption. In 1689 Peter emancipated himself from the regent's domination, and took the reins of government into his own hands. He strove hard to repair the defects of his education; he acquired, almost entirely by self-teaching, a knowledge of several foreign languages; he studied earnestly the mechanical arts, especially such as related to ship-building; his darling object being to give Russia ships and commerce, though, when he began his reign, she possessed no sea-port except that of Archangel in the northern sea. He endeavoured also to form a body of troops on the model of the armies of the civilized nations of western Europe. He exercised them in hostilities against the Turks and Tartars on his south-eastern frontier, during which he gained the important city of Azoph. In 1697, having provided for the safety of his empire, and left troops under the command of the best of the foreign officers who had aided him in his reforms, so as to curb any reactionary movements of the discontented part of his subjects, Peter travelled as a private person through Germany, Holland, and England. He laboured hard to improve his knowledge of ship-building, and other useful parts of practical knowledge. To do this the more effectually he worked with his own hands as a common shipwright in the dockyard at Amsterdam, and afterwards in the English yard at Deptford. During his absence from Russia the Strelitzes (the old Muscovite soldiers) mutinied, but were put down by General Gordon, whom Peter had left in command of his new troops. Peter hurried back to Russia, and punished the mutineers with frightful cruelty. He now proceeded with renewed vehemence in the changes of manners and dress, as well as the introduction of useful arts, which he forced upon his barbarous subjects. In his zeal to do good he was too frequently injudicious in choosing times and seasons for the work; and the least show of opposition irritated him into ferocity, which was fearfully aggravated by the habit of drunkenness, which he had acquired during his neglected youth, and from which he never set himself free. In 1700 the war between him and Charles XII. of Sweden commenced. At first the Swedes always defeated the Russians; but Peter was not disheartened. He recruited his armies; improved their discipline, and foretold that in the long run the Swedes would teach them how to win. Charles XII. neglected the coast of the Baltic; and Peter took advantage of this to pour troops into Ingria, Carelia, Livonia, and Esthonia. In 1702 he laid the foundation of St. Petersburg on the N. Not less than 100,000 lives are said to have been sacrificed in raising the future capital of Russia among the swamps, where Peter ordered its erection, and where, with characteristic pertinacity and indifference to human suffering, he urged on the completion of the work, though fully aware of its perils and difficulties. In 1709 he defeated Charles XII. in the decisive battle of Pultowa; and when the war between Sweden and Russia was ended, by the peace of Nystadt in 1721, Russia gained as part of her dominions, Ingria, Esthonia, and Livonia. Her empire was now planted along the coast of the Baltic; and her influence upon Poland, and other eastern countries of Europe, christendom, was developing itself to a paramount ascendancy. Peter was less fortunate in his wars against the Turks. In his campaign on the Pruth in 1711, his army was surrounded by the enemy; and he was only saved by the death of his empress, Catharine, who was with him, and who succeeded in either bribing or persuading the Grand Vizier of the Turks into a negotiation, by which the Russian army was permitted to retreat, and peace was restored, though at the price of the restoration of Azoph. In his family Peter experienced heavy sorrows. His first marriage produced mutual unhappiness; and his eldest son, Alexis, thwarted all his projects, and committed himself with the dissipated party, who wished to abolish all Peter's reforms and restore the Muscovite fashions. Peter compelled his son to renounce all claim to the succession; and he put him before a high court, which condemned him to death. Two days after this, Alexis died in prison. It was said that he sickened when sentenced, and that his illness was natural; but the true manner of his death is a mystery. Peter's second and favourite wife, Catharine, was a Livonian peasant girl, who married a Swedish soldier, and became a prisoner of war to Peter's favourite general, Menzikoff. Menzikoff made her his mistress; and Peter saw her and fell in love with her, and took her as his own. Seven years afterwards (in 1725) he married her; and she ruled Russia as empress after his death. Peter died in 1725. It is difficult to collect anecdotes of coarse debauchery, or of frantic cruelty, and injudicious obstinacy from the acts of his long reign. But, to estimate him fairly, his life and his deeds must be taken for all in and for their grand result upon his country's fortune must be considered. Nor must the debasing disadvantages of his early education be ever forgotten by those who sit in judgment on his character as a ruler and a man. His last words were, 'Just that in respect of the good I have striven to do for my people, God will pardon my sins.'

[House in which Peter lived at Zaandam.]

PETER, king of Castile, surnamed the Great, born 1334, succeeded his father, Alfonso XI., in 1350, assassinated, after a cruel reign, by his natural brother, 1369.

PETER I., king of Arragon, or PEDRO I., King of Navarre, reigned 1094-1104. PETER II., succeeded his father, Alfonso II., 1196; he put himself at the head of the Albigenses, was defeated and killed at the battle of Muret, 1213, by Simon de Montfort, 1212. PETER III., born 1239, succeeded his father, James I., 1276, and inherited the kingdom of Sicily by his marriage

Constance, daughter of Manfred. He took active part in the expulsion of the French, and crowned in Sicily, after the massacre of the Jani vespers, 1282; died 1285, after sustaining, jointly, a war with Charles of Anjou and Philip of France. PETER IV., born 1319, succeeded his father, Alphonso IV., 1336, died, after a fruitless war for the sovereignty of Castile, 1387.

PETER I., king of Sicily, same as Peter III. of Aragon. PETER II., son of Frederick I., was crowned 1321, during the lifetime of his father, succeeded him 1337, died 1342.

PETER I., king of Portugal, born 1320, succeeded his father, Alphonso IV., 1357; died, after an efficient reign, 1367. This prince was secretly married to Inez de Castro, who was murdered by order of his father 1339. PETER II., second son of John IV., born 1648, became regent after the death of his brother, Alphonso VI., 1667, compelled the king to recognize the independence of Portugal. On the death of Alphonso, 1683, he retained the title of king; died, while effecting the conquest of Estramadura, 1706.

PETER, king of Hungary, reigned 1038-1047.

PETER I., king of the Bulgarians, succeeded his father 927. His reign was troubled with internal dissensions, and wars with the Russians and Greeks; died 970. PETER II., obtained the throne, in association with his brother, Asan, and they were both slain about 1195.

PETER I., king of Cyprus and Jerusalem, succeeded his father, Hugh IV., 1361, and was assassinated 1367. PETER II., son and successor of the preceding, died 1382.

PETER I., duke of Brittany, succeeded by his wife with Alix, daughter of Guy, 1212, and, after death in 1221, became chief of the league of the great vassals against Blanche of Castile. He went out to Palestine 1240, accompanied Louis IX. Egypt 1248, and died on the voyage home. PETER II., second son of John VI., succeeded his father, Francis I., 1450, died 1457.

PETER, count of Savoy, surnamed 'the Little Magnifique,' succeeded his father, 1263, d. 1268.

PETER OF ALCANTARA. See above (Saints.)

PETER OF ST. ANDREW, a theologian, philosopher, and hist. of the Carmelite order, 1624-71.

PETER OF BLOIS, an ecclesiastic who settled in England in the reign of Henry II., and is considered one of the most learned men of his age, died about 1200.

PETER CHRYSOLOGUS. See above (Saints.)

PETER OF CLUGNY, an abbot of that monastery, called also PETER THE VENERABLE, and by his proper name PETER MAURICE, a distinguished scholar and Latin poet. He was born 1092 or 1094, became abbot after Hugh II. in 1122 or 1123, and in 1140 gave shelter to the unfortunate king, and interceded for him at Rome. Died 1156. His works were published in 1522.

PETER OF COTTONA, a name by which the painter, F. Berettini, is known, 1596-1669.

PETER THE HERMIT, preacher and leader of the first crusade, was born in the eleventh century, and was first known as an officer in the army of the counts of Boulogne, serving in the crusades, about the year 1071. After this he spent some years in the quiet of domestic life, and several children, and on the death of his wife became a professor of religion, and devoted his days to solitude and austere practices. About 1095 he was led by the prevalent feeling of the age to make a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, then in possession of the Turks, and was deeply impressed by the profanation of the holy places, the indignities suffered by the pilgrims, and the general oppression to which the Christian inhabitants of the East were then subject. The same feeling was universal throughout Christendom, and the popes had long cherished the design of an expedition against the Mahomedans, which it only required the enthusiasm of a man like Peter the Hermit to render practicable. Urban II. received him as a prophet, and authorized his mission. He now traversed the greater part of continental Europe, riding on an ass, his head and feet bare, his body clothed with the coarse garment of a hermit, girded round the waist with a rope, and bearing a heavy crucifix in his hand. To understand his success, we must take into account the poverty of the masses, and the alluring prospect of a residence in Eastern lands, the scenes of which were painted in glowing colours by the apostle of the holy war. Thousands of outcasts had always been ready to follow the princes in their marauding expeditions or political wars, and how much more in a war which enlisted the highest sympathies of their nature in its behalf, which received the sanction of the ministers of religion, and was regarded as the will of God! The pope summoned a council, which met at Placenza and Clermont, and making an eloquent appeal to the assembly, was frequently interrupted by their acclamations. He was acknowledged chief of the crusade, and ordered that every one engaged in it should wear a cross of red stuff. Peter, meanwhile, collected a vast body of adventurers, estimated at a hundred thousand souls, from the borders of France and Lorraine, and while Godfrey of Bouillon mustered those of higher rank in a more soldierlike and deliberate manner, proceeded with this fanatic crowd, by way of the Rhine and Danube to the East. Ignorant of the route, and without the means of subsistence, it is fearful to contemplate the disorders and sufferings of such a march. About a third part reached the mountains of Thrace, and Peter himself took refuge in Constantinople, where he awaited the coming of Godfrey of Bouillon. At the same time he induced the emperor Alexis to send troops in aid of his followers, about three or four thousand of whom were rescued. Peter accompanied the army of Godfrey, and was present at the storming of Antioch, and before the capture of Jerusalem addressed the crusaders on the Mount of Olives. He then acted a short time as vicar-general for the patriarch of the holy city—the Jesuit Outreman says, as viceroy. The latter part of his life, like the commencement, is wrapped in obscurity. It is not known when he returned to Europe, but he died in a monastery he had founded in the diocese of Liege, 1115. The movement he had commenced continued to agitate Europe for nearly two centuries, and its general effect upon the march of civilization may be pronounced almost incalculable. [E.R.]

PETER OF ST. LOUIS, a French ecclesiastic of the Carmelite order, kn. as a poet, about 1626-84.

PETER MAURICE. See PETER OF CLUGNY.

PETER NOLASQUE. See above (Saints.)

PETER OF SICILY, a political negotiator in the service of the emperor Basil in 870. He wrote a History of the Manichæans, published 1604.

PETER THE VENERABLE. See P. OF CLUGNY.

PETERBOROUGH, earl of. See MORDAUNT.

PETERKIN, ALEXANDER, son of a Scottish minister, and known of late years as a miscellaneous writer, was born in 1781. He was educated as a solicitor, and, in 1843, was engaged professionally for the Strathbogie clergymen—in the struggle which led to the disruption in the Scottish national church. Died 1846.

PETERS, BONAVENTURA, a Flemish painter, famous for his storms and shipping, 1614-1615. JOHN, his brother and pupil, 1625-1677.

PETERS, C., a German painter, 1808-1830.

PETERS, C., a learned Eng. divine, died 1777.

PETERS, F. L., a Flemish painter, 1606-1654.

PETERS, G., a Dutch painter, born 1580.

PETERS, HUGH, an English Jesuit, known as the counsellor and confessor of James II.

PETERS, HUGH, a disreputable character who connected himself with the English republican party as a pamphleteer and pulpit demagogue. He was born in Cornwall 1599, educated at Cambridge, and figured successively as an actor, a minister in the Church of England, and a preacher among the independents. Executed 1660.

PETERS, WILLIAM, a minister of the Church of England, best known as an artist, died 1814.

PETERSEN, H., a Swiss minister, died 1820.

PETERSEN, JOHN WILLIAM, born at Osnaburg 1649, and pastor at Hanover, became celebrated about 1692 for his prophetic announcements. He was then deposed, and died in obscurity. His wife, JEANNE ÉLEANORA DE MERLAN, partook in his enthusiasm, and published his life.

PETERSEN, P. N., a Ger. musician, 1761-1830.

PETHION DE VILLENEUVE, JEROME, a Girondist leader of the French revolution, was the son of an attorney at Chartres, and was himself an advocate when chosen deputy to the Tiers Etat of the Estates-General. His character placed him in a political situation between the Girondists and Jacobins, but his political and philosophical creed was the same as Brissot's, and he held it sincerely and implacably. He was one of the most zealous parties to the propagation of the 'Rights of Man' as the basis of a constitution, and it was at his instance that the Jacobin Club was reorganized—which led to the foundation of the Cordeliers, and the separation of the more violent members. The nation at this time was with the moderate party, and the influence of Lafayette was only just on the wane. Pethion profited by it, as one of the most practical men in his party, and was successively president of the National Assembly, president of the Criminal Tribunal, and mayor of Paris. In the latter function he succeeded Bailly, November, 1791, and polled twice as many votes as Lafayette. On the famous 20th of June, 1792, when the mob of Paris compelled the king to put on the red cap, Pethion and Louis exchanged angry words; the next day, however, the mayor addressed a proclamation to the people calling upon them to defend the constitution and the king, and to respect his person. He maintained his position as mayor of Paris, after victory of the Marseillais on the 10th of Aug. and the dreadful massacres of September, found it impossible to prevent the excesses that occasion. Returned to the National Convention, he was unanimously elected its first president, and voted for the king's death, but pronounced in favour of delay. From this time was identified with the Girondists by the follo of Robespierre, and included in the proscription that body on the 31st of May, 1793. was among the few who escaped the guillotine meet a more miserable fate. Having fled with B and Salles to the department of Calvados, he made a fruitless attempt to raise the people and were obliged to hide in the woods. When they put an end to their own existence, or starved to death, is not known, but the remains of Buzot and Pethion were found by the gien in a corn-field gnawed by wolves. [E

PETION, ALEXANDER SALIES, president of the republic of Hayti, was a man of colour, free at Port-au-Prince, 1770, and educated at military school of Paris. He served with distinction in the French army, and after the expulsion of the English, was an active party in the wars of the island. In 1804 Dessalines became chief of the infant republic, and having made himself emperor, was killed in October, 1806. His successor was Christophe, who also assumed kingly title, and it was against this latter Petion obtained his most signal victory on the 15th of January, 1808, a year after his own election president. This success fully established his authority as chief of the republic, and he retained the presidency till his death in 1818, when he succeeded by his friend General Boyer.

PETIS, FRANCIS, a learned French Orientalist and historian, 1622-1695. His son, FRANK, PETIS DE LA CROIX, like him, a great Oriental scholar, but also a traveller in the East, and successor as royal interpreter, 1653-1713. J. MARTE, son of the latter, professor of Arabic at the Royal College, 1698-1751.

PETIT, A., a French medical writer, 1718-1780.

PETIT, A. T., a French physician and writer on experimental philosophy, 1791-1820.

PETIT, F. P. DU, a Fr. naturalist, 1664-1730.

PETIT, JEAN LOUIS, a celebrated French surgeon, born at Paris on the 13th of March, 1711, and died in that city on the 20th of April, 1780, aged 76. Petit enjoyed a deservedly great reputation during his lifetime, and was undoubtedly one of the founders of modern French surgery. He was remarkable for his professional enthusiasm and industry; and his writings are still held in high estimation. The first edition of his work on the Bones was published at Paris, in 12mo, in 1705; but in 1758, it was enlarged to two volumes. His treatise on Surgical Diseases was a posthumous work, and published by his pupil, Dr. Lesné, in 1774, two years after the author's death. [J.N.]

PETIT, M., an advent. traveller, died 1815.

PETIT, M. A., a French surgeon, 1766-1815.

PETIT, P., a physician, distinguished as a writer on physiology, and Latin poet, 1617-1687.

PETIT, P., a dist. mathematician, 1594-1671.

PETIT, S., a philologist and theolog., 1594-1671.

PETIT-DIDIER, MATTHEW, a learned Fr. div.

late, a great friend and advocate of ultramontanism, and author of critical, historical, and theological dissertations on the Scriptures, 1697-1728. His brother, JOHN JOSEPH, a Jesuit theologian, 1664-1756.

PETIT-THOUARS, ALBERT DU, a French artist, author of 'Botanic Miscellanies,' d. 1831.

PETITOT, CL. B., director-general of the Paris University, author of several tragedies and translations, 1772-1825.

PETITOT, JOHN, a famous enameller and miniature painter, born at Geneva 1607, died 1691.

PETIT-PIED, NICHOLAS, a learned French jurist, about 1630-1705. His nephew, of the same name, a doctor of the Sorbonne, and a very zealous wr. in favour of Jansenism, 1665-1747.

PETIT-RADEL, L. F., a distinguished French architect, 1740-1818. His brother, PHILIP, a historian and Hellenist, 1749-1815. A third brother, L. C. FRANCIS, an archæologist, 1756-1836.

PETITZ, J. RAIMOND DE, author of a 'Library of Amateur Artists,' about 1715-1780.

PETIVER, JAS., surgeon to the Charter House, London, distinguished as a botanical wr., d. 1718.

PETREUS, T., a Danish Orientalist, d. 1673.

PETRARCA, FRANCESCO, was born at Arezzo in Tuscany in 1304. His father, a Florentine poet, had been exiled two years before, in the disturbance which drove out the poet Dante;

he soon left Italy for Avignon, where the papal court then resided. The son was educated there and at Montpellier, and then sent to study law at Bologne. Though Petrarch certainly loved the Æneid more than the Pandects, and copied ancient manuscripts more willingly than law papers, yet the subsequent course of his public life proves that he did not neglect professional pursuits, and that he prepared himself for being a useful man of business.

Returning to Avignon soon after he became of age, he found himself in possession of a small inheritance and indulged for some years in an alternation of classical studies and political composition, but with such gaiety (sombre, perhaps, but not the gloom on that account) as the clerical court could not find fault with. In the year 1327 he conceived an attachment to an Avignonese lady, young but already married. His attentions to her were treated much as a matter of course; the admirer was certainly never admitted even to the most innocent intimacy of modern cisbeism: there appears to have been at no time much intercourse between the two; and we do not know with certainty so much as the lady's real name. She became famous in her lifetime, and is still celebrated, as the 'Laura' of the verses in which Petrarch sang of his loves: but his passion does seem to have been little more than a flight of imaginative thought, remarkable only for the length of its duration, and for the genius of the person by whom it was entertained. About 1333 he retired for two or three years to dwell in the beautiful valley of Vaucluse, near Avignon. He himself admitted that his withdrawal to the retreat which he chose, was caused by no reason more sentimental or poetic than his disgust with the licentiousness of the papal court, and the disappointment of the hopes of preferment which the pope had held out to him. Long before this time his talents and accomplishments had procured for him not only distinguished patronage, but frequent and active employment. He now speedily quitted Vaucluse for Italy, where he became the confidential friend and diplomatic agent of several sovereigns, and skilfully executed missions not only in Italy, but in France and Germany. Though he never took orders, his employers rewarded him by ecclesiastical benefices in the north of Italy; and his longest residences were at Parma, Milan, Padua, and Venice. In 1370, when his health was already failing, through attacks of palpitation and epilepsy, he left Padua for the neighbouring village of Arquà, seated among the lovely Euganean Hills. There he built a house, still preserved, but was hardly ever free from illness till his death in 1374.—Petrarch, whose life was thus active, is immortal in the history of literature in virtue of more claims than one. He is placed as one of the most celebrated of poets in right of his 'Rime,' that is, verses in the modern Italian tongue, of which he was one of the earliest cultivators and refiners. Celebrating in these his visionary love, he modelled the Italian sonnet, and gave to it, and to other forms of lyrical poetry, not only an admirable polish of diction and melody, but a delicacy of poetic feeling which has hardly ever been equalled, and a play of rich fancy which, if it often degenerates into false wit, is as often delightfully and purely beautiful. But, though Petrarch's Sonnets, and Canzoni, and 'Triumphs,' could all be forgotten, he would still be honoured as one of the benefactors of European civilization. No one but Boccaccio shares with him the glory of having been the chief restorer of classical learning. He was himself a voluminous Latin writer, both in prose and verse; and his fame as a poet in his own day, and his coronation in the Roman capitol in 1341, rested on his celebration of the second Punic war in his epic poem 'Africa.' But his greatest merit lay in his having recalled attention to the higher and more correct classical authors;

[Tomb of Petrarch.]

in his having been an enthusiastic and successful agent in reviving the study of the Greek tongue; and in his having been, in his travels and otherwise, an indefatigable collector and preserver of ancient manuscripts. To his care we owe copies of several classical works, which, but for him, would, in all likelihood, have perished. [W.S.]

PETRE, SIR WILLIAM, a chancery clerk, employed in the visitation of the monasteries by Henry VIII., for which he received a grant of abbey lands and knighthood, died 1572.

PETRI, B., a professor of Brabant, died 1630.

PETRI, C., a Danish divine, 16th century.

PETRI, SUFFRID, historiographer of the states of Friesland, secretary to Cardinal Granvella, (see WILLIAM I. OF NASSAU), and professor of law at Cologne, author of historical and philological works, died 1597.

PETRI, or PETERSON, LAURENCE, one of the three principal Swedish reformers, first protestant bishop of Upsala, and a theological writer, 1499-1573. His brother, OLAVE, also a reformer, whose vehement addresses almost produced a civil war, author of 'Memoirs,' 1497-1562. A third of the name, JONAS PETRI, bishop of Linköping in the 17th century, was author of a Latin and Swedish dictionary, published 1640.

PETROF, WASSILJ PETROWITSCH, a famous Russian poet and philologist, appointed her reader and councillor of state by Catharine, 1736-1799.

PETRONI, R., an Italian cardinal, died 1314.

PETRONIUS, TITUS, called 'Petronius Arbitr,' a favourite of Nero, and supposed author of a fragment entitled 'Satiricon,' died 66.

PETRUCCI, PANDOLPH, a citizen of Sienna who obtained the sovereign power, and died 1512.

PETTUS, SIR JOHN, a member of parliament, and deputy-governor of the royal mines, author of some professional and other works, died abt. 1690.

PETTY, SIR WILLIAM, son of a clothier in Hampshire, and founder of the Lansdowne family, was born 1623, and being educated as a physician, became, in 1650, professor of anatomy at Oxford. His talents, however, were of the most versatile description, and he had the happy gift of turning them to some practical account in every way that promised to be a source of emolument; not satisfied with teaching anatomy and chemistry, he became Gresham professor of music; and as to inventions, a copying machine to write two letters at once, and a double-bottomed ship to sail against wind and tide, show what he was capable of. In 1652 he was appointed physician to the army in Ireland, to which he added the office of contractor for surveying the forfeited lands, one of the commissioners for their division, clerk to the council, and secretary to the lord-lieutenant, Henry Cromwell. With the wealth thus amassed, he became a member of parliament in the time of Richard Cromwell; and as he succeeded in making his peace at the restoration, his lands were confirmed to him, with the honour of knighthood in addition, and the office of surveyor-general of Ireland. Even the fire of London, which destroyed the fortunes of so many, only provoked Sir W. Petty to fresh speculations, by which he recovered his losses. He died 1687, leaving great wealth to his successors, and numerous tracts on economy, especially 'Political Arithmetic,' 'Taxes and Contributions,' and other subjects growing out of his knowledge of Ireland. For his descendant, the celebrated statesman, see SHELburne.

PETTYT, or PETYT, WILLIAM, keeper of the Tower records, author of writings on the Ancient Constitution of Parliament, 1636-1707.

PEUCER, G., a Ger. mathematician, 1525-16

PEUERBACH, G., an Austr. astron., 1428-

PEUTEMAN, P., a Dutch painter, 1608-16

PEUTINGER, C., a Gr. antiquar., 1465-15

PEYER, J. C., a Germ. anatomist, 1659-17

PEYMANN, HENRY ERNEST DE, a Dan general, commander of Copenhagen during bombardment by the English in 1807. He tried by his countrymen for signing the capitulation and condemned to death,—a punishment which was commuted to a long imprisonment; died 18

PEYRARD, F., a Fr. mathematic., 1760-18

PEYRE, MARIE JOSEPH, a French architect, 1730-1785. His brother, ANTOINE FRANCOIS, painter and architect, 1739-1823.

PEYRERE, ISAAC DE LA, a French protestant the protégé and librarian of the prince of Con author of a curious work on the 'Preadamit and the 'Restoration of the Jews,' 1594-16 His brother, ABRAHAM, a juriconsult, died 17

PEYRON, JEAN FR. PIERRE, an histor painter, and director of the Gobelins manufactory, 1744-1815. His brother, J. FRANCOIS, known as an author, 1748-1784.

PEYRONIE, F. DE LA, a Fr. surg., 1678-17

PEYROUSE. See LAPEROUSE.

PEYSSONNEL, CHARLES DE, a French antiquary and consul of Smyrna, author of Mémoires des Rois de la Bosphorus, &c., 1700-17 His son, who succeeded him as consul, was also distinguished historical and antiquarian writer of the same countries, 1727-1790. His brother JOHN ANTHONY, was appointed physician a naturalist to the island of Guadaloupe in 17 and was the first to write on the production of coral according to the received theory.

PEZ, BERNARD, a learned Benedictine of Austria, 1683-1735. His br., JEROME, 1685-1763 PEZAY, A. F. J. MASSON, Marquis De French historical writer, 1741-1777.

PEZENAS, ESPRIT, a French Jesuit, known as a mathematician and astronomer, 1692-1776

PEZRON, PAUL, a monk of Brittany, known as a chronologist, philolog., and antiq., 1639-17

PFAFF, J. C., a Lutheran theologian of Wittenburg, 1631-1720. His son, CHRISTOPH MATTHEW, a voluminous protest. wr., 1686-17

PFAFFRAD, G., a Germ. philosopher, d. 16

PFANNER, T., a Germ. archivist, 1641-171

PFEFFEL, J. CONRAD, a native of Bad distinguished as a juriconsult and diplomat, 1684-1738. CHR. FREDERIC, his eldest son, learned writer on public law, 1726-1807. THOMAS PHILUS CONRAD, young brother of the latter dramatic writer, poet, and literature, 1736-18

PFEFFERCORN, JOHN, a converted Jew, who endeavoured to persuade the emperor Maximilian to burn all the Hebrew books except the Bible, containing the principles of magic and other dangerous matter, died after 1517.

PFEIFFER, A., a Germ. Orientalist, 1640-6

PFEIFFER, J. F., a Germ. economist, 1718-

PFENNINGER, M., a Swiss designer and engraver, 1739-1810. HENRY, of the same family, painter and engraver, who executed the figure for Lavater, born 1749.

PFIFFER, or PFYFFER, L., a Swiss colonel service of France, 1530-1594. FRANCIS LOUIS, officer probably of the same family, retired from French army after fifty years' service, and executed a beautiful plan of Switzerland in relief, existing in his native Lucerne, 1716-1802. FISTER, A., a German printer, died 1462. FLUG, JULIUS, an Italian prelate, died 1564. FNITSING, M., a poet of Nuremberg, 1481-5.

FUGUER, M. A. D., a Swiss poet, 1777-1824. HEDON, a Greek philosopher, who studied at Socrates, and subsequently founded a school philosophy at Elis, since known as the Eleatic. He gave his name to one of his Dialogues.

HEDRUS, LUCIUS, a Roman slave freed by Cæsar, and known as the author of Fables, discovered to modern literature in 1596 at Rome. In the reign of Tiberius he suffered from tyranny of Lejamus. His fables are written in comic verse with remarkable purity.

HAER, THOMAS, a Welch poet, died 1560. HIALARIS, a cruel tyrant of Agregetum, in Sicily, who acquired his power about 572 B.C., and put to death by one of his own horrible deeds that of the brazen bull, 556 B.C.

HARAMOND, a half-fabulous personage, supposed to have been the first king of France, and to have reigned about 418 or 420. The Salic law is attributed to him. He was probably a chief of Franks.

HARNACES, the first of the name, king of Persia, succeeded his father, Mithridates the Great, about 185 B.C., died 157. The second, born 97 B.C., became king of Bosphorus 64, and, after conquering Pontus, was killed in battle 47.

FAVORINUS. See FAVORINUS.

PELIPEAUX, JOHN, a French theologian and historian of Quietism, died 1708.

PELIPEAUX, A. LE PICARD DE, a Venetian officer of artillery, born 1768, joined the army of Louis with the emigrants 1791, died in the French service after the siege of Acre, 1799.

PELIPEAUX, J., a Jesuit, 1577-1643.

PELYPEAUX, RAIMOND BALTHASAR, Marquis de, French governor of Canada, died 1713.

PERECRATES, a Greek poet, 5th cent. B.C.

PERECYDES, a Greek philosopher, from Pythagoras is said to have acquired his doctrine of the Metempsychosis, 6th century B.C.

PERECYDES, a Greek historian, 5th c. B.C.

PHIDIAS, a Greek sculptor and the most celebrated artist of antiquity, was the son of Charmidas, and a pupil of Ageladas of Athens, where Phidias was born, about 490 B.C., or even a year or two earlier, for according to this supposition he must have already reached the mature age of fifty before the execution of any of his most celebrated works, the Minerva and other sculptures of the Parthenon and the Olympian Jupiter. Phidias was the greatest ornament of the age of Pericles, and was eminent at Athens about 450 B.C.; the latter part of the period of Pericles, however, 444 to 429, was, probably in the best manner, the exact period of Phidias, for his greatest triumphs were achieved during the administration of the affairs of Athens by Pericles. Great patrons have generally been the instruments to carry out their schemes, and the patron is himself developed by the opportunity in some respects both positions are true, but the former is the more easily explained: the magnitude of an undertaking regulates and develops accordingly the faculties of those who undertake. Thus Pericles, Julius II., and Ludwig I. of Bavaria, all found artists of the highest genius ready to accomplish all their desires. Pericles appointed Phidias superintendent of public works. The Parthenon was completed 438 B.C., the year also in which Phidias dedicated his colossal statue of Minerva in ivory and gold, placed in the temple; the architecture was the work of Ictinus. In the following year he commenced, aided by Colotes of Paros, the great sitting colossus of Jupiter at Olympia, in Elis, also of ivory and gold; this was completed in the year 433, and was considered one of the seven wonders of the ancient world. (See Quaktemere de Quincy, Le Jupiter Olympien, &c.) The great chryselephantine works, that is of ivory and gold, are the most remarkable monuments of which the ancient records give us any account; there seems to have been no limit to the magnificence or art-glory to which the anthropomorphic worship of the Greeks might not lead them. These gigantic images, from 40 to 60 feet in height, apparently of solid ivory draped in gold, with all necessary enrichments in colour, must have more than realized the grandest notion of a human god that any of the Greek devotees can have brought to their shrines. The unparalleled height to which statuary has attained among the ancient Greeks is, therefore, to be attributed as much to the utilitarian end, the honour of religion and the stability of the priesthood, as to any æsthetic refinement, though this too did exist among the Greeks perhaps in a higher degree than any other people. The chryselephantine sculpture was the natural result of the Greek polychromy; once established the system of colouring images, the costliness must necessarily enter into the material as well as the external decoration of the image; thus we find these great images gradually progressing from rude wood and stone, to marble, and to bronze, and finally (ostensibly) to ivory. The ivory was, however, only a coating, the core of the statue was wood, the gold was real. Phidias executed six of these great works, but this of Elis cost him his life, for he was accused of having embezzled the gold given by the Elians for the draperies, &c. of the statue, and upon this accusation cast into prison, where he died within the year, 432 B.C. The accusation appears to have been found to be quite groundless; and in honour of the memory of the great statuary, the charge of the image was granted as an heir-loom to the family of Phidias, and when Pausanias visited Elis, 600 years afterwards, the descendants of Phidias still had the care of it. Another account states that it was in Athens, after his return from Elis, that he died, and that the charge in question related to the gold of the Minerva, which Pericles himself had taken off, and ordered to be weighed, and found exact; that he was finally committed on a charge of impiety for carving his own portrait on the shield of Minerva, and that he died during imprisonment for this offence. The Olympian Jupiter adorned Elis for about eight centuries, it was then removed to Constantinople, by the emperor Theodosius, and was either lost at sea, or destroyed in the fire of the Lauseion, 475 A.D. In carrying out so many and extensive works, Phidias must necessarily have had many assistants. His principal scholars were Agoracritus, Alcámenes, and Colotes. Such were his assistants probably in the extensive sculptures of the Parthenon, now in this country, and known as the Elgin marbles; brought from Athens by Lord Elgin in 1803, and purchased by the British government in 1816. We have in these wonderful works adequate testimony of the deserved reputation of Phidias, and quite sufficient to show that the arts of Greece, at least of the time of Pericles, cannot be too highly esteemed. We have in these marbles the best exposition of the ideal, and a perfect illustration of the æsthetic element of style as distinct from mere representation or imitation. The so-called Theseus, the Ilissus, the Metopes, and the Panathenaic frieze all exhibit the most perfect ideality of form, at the same time of a grand generic character. The ideal or generic development of these sculptures can only have resulted from the long experience of centuries, or from extraordinary circumstances, but partly from the combination of both. All healthy bodies, subject to similar exercise, would most probably assume much the same character: the athletic games of the Greeks, common and popular, gave their artists such opportunities of viewing the naked form in all its perfection, that the general excellence of their sculpture is not surprising. In the Elgin marbles we have doubtless all the several beauties of the athlete combined in the individual, yet so modified as altogether to obviate the sense of any special individuality, leaving only the impression of the perfect human form, illustrating its general attributes themselves in all their wonderful versatility and perfection, without suggesting for a moment the notion of a limited individual fitness or quality; always excepting when such special limit or quality is not the specific object of the individual representation, as in the Farnese Hercules, the type of muscular strength. This is the ideal in its general and special development, and which we find invariably well illustrated in Greek sculpture, but nowhere with more refined grandeur than in the works of Phidias, as exemplified in the invaluable Elgin marbles.—(Müller, Life and Works of Phidias de Phidiea vita et operibus &c., Göttingen, 1827. A very full account of Phidias and his works may be found in the Dictionary of Greek and Roman Biography, edited by Dr. Smith.) [R.N.W.]

PHILASTER, an Italian prelate, 4th century.

PHILES, MANUEL, a Greek poet, 14th century.

PHILELPHUS, FRANCIS, a celebrated Italian philologist and state secretary, 1398-1481.

PHILEMON, a Greek poet, 4th century B.C.

PHILEMON, a Greek grammarian, 12th cent.

PHILIBERT, the first of the name, duke of Savoy, succeeded his father, Amadeus IX., 1472, died 1482. The second, succeeded his father, Philip II., 1497, died 1504.

PHILIBERT-EMANUEL, son of Charles Emanuel, duke of Savoy, grand prior of Castile and Leon, and grand admiral of Spain, died 1624.

PHILIDOR, ANDRE, born at Dreux in 1726, was the son of a musician, whose real name was MICHEL DANICAN, but who, for the excellence of his performances upon the hautboy was named Philidor by the king of France. The young Andre, in childhood, entered as page in the band of the king of France, then under the direction of a chapel-master Campra. After having left the situation of page, Philidor settled in Paris, where supported himself from his income as teacher a copier of music. Besides his musical talent, had gained such a reputation as a chess player that he was induced to travel; accordingly, the year 1745, he left Paris for Holland, Germany, England, &c. During his travels he greatly improved his musical taste. In 1753 he was in England, when he set Dryden's Ode to St. Cecilia to music. He had while here devoted his attention principally to chess; and he gained extensive fame from having published his analysis of the game, which is still referred to as an authority. On his return to France, in 1754, he again resumed his musical studies, and produced music to a dramatic piece, which was performed with great success in 1759. This work laid the foundation of his musical reputation. Philidor, along with Duménil, is regarded as one of the founders of modern French comic opera. After having produced about twenty operas at the Opera Comique he came to London in the year 1779, where he produced the music to Horace's Carmen Seculare which is esteemed as his best work. He died in London in 1795. [J.J.]

PHILIP, the name of three saints:—1. an apostle, who is supposed to have preached in Phrygia, and died at an advanced age. 2. a deacon chosen by the apostles who preached in Caesarea, where he received Saint Paul 58, died 8. 3. PHILIP OF NEBBI, an Italian ecclesiastic, founder of the oratory, &c., 1515-1595.

PHILIP, son of Herod the Great and of a woman named Cleopatra, obtained from Augustus the rank of tetrarch, and governed his states with great wisdom from B.C. 4 to A.D. 33. After his death his states were reunited to Syria.

PHILIP, king of Syria, son of Antiochus VI., dethroned by Tigranes B.C. 80, died 57.

PHILIP I., king of Macedon, reigned in an obscure period of its history when it was regarded as a barbarian territory by the Greek states, B.C. 400. Nothing worthy of notice is recorded of him. PHILIP II., see next article. PHILIP III., a natural son of Philip II., reigned several years after the death of Alexander the Great, was killed by order of Olympias 316 B.C. He was called Philip Arrhidæus. PHILIP IV., surnamed his father Cassander on the throne of Macedon B.C. 296, and died 295. PHILIP V., son of Demetrius III., succeeded at the age of three years B.C. 233, his uncle, Antigonus Doson, being guardian. After the battle of Cænæ he entered into a treaty with Hannibal, and thus brought the Romans upon the stage of Grecian affairs. He was totally defeated 197, and though he obtained reasonable terms, left the struggle to his sons. Died B.C. 179.

PHILIP II., by whose valour and genius the little state of Macedon was raised to the supremacy over all Greece, was the third son of Amyntas and was born in 383 or 382 B.C. He succeeded his elder brother, Perdiccas, in the first place guardian of his infant son, but soon after became sovereign, in the twenty-third year of his age, 360; the existence of rival claimants to the crown and the exterior evils with which the state threatened, rendering his usurpation, if it may be called so, acceptable to the whole people. Philip had been detained at Thebes as a hostage from his twentieth to his eighteenth year, and was thoroughly versed in the tactics of Epaminondas, with whose house he had lodged; besides which, his brother, Cleodamas, had intrusted him with a government in Macedonia, and had allowed him to organize troops. His chief military arm was the afterwards famous Macedonian phalanx, a force organized by himself—the materials he drew upon being a mountain peasantry accustomed to poverty and toil, without cities or even fixed habitations to render peace more desirable than war to them. Thebes and Thebes had reached their highest vigour when Philip came to the throne, but the latter had lost her presiding genius in Epaminondas, and the former was seriously weakened by the 'social war' which now broke out, and which raged from 358 to 355 B.C. Philip took advantage of this troubled period to possess himself of Amphipolis, which gave him access to the gold mines of Mount Pangæus, soon a source of immense revenue to him, and the reason of his founding the new city of Philippi. The 'sacred war' carried on by the Amphictyonic council against the Phocians, gave the Macedonians another great opportunity of stepping in as armed arbitrators, and with the avowed purpose in view of humbling the power of Thebes and Athens. After the capture of Methone—the last possession of the Athenians on the Macedonian coast—between 354 and 352, Philip marched into Thessaly at the head of 20,000 men, and set himself out as the champion of Delphi, and rewarded his soldiers with laurel, which they were in the vale of Tempe. He was now joined by the famous Thessalian cavalry, and having become master of Thessaly in 352, he endeavoured to force the pass of Thermopylæ, but was repulsed by the Athenians; Philip, however, compensated himself by equipping a navy to harass the Athenian commerce. From 349 to 347 he became victor in the Olympian war, which made him complete master of the Chalcidian peninsula and doubled his power. The terror of his name provoked the Athenians of Demosthenes, who endeavoured to rally the people of Athens to form a general league against him—instead of which, each party was so anxious to succeed against the others. This state of affairs led to embassages, the members of which, with the exception of Demosthenes, were cajoled or bribed by Philip into a shameful peace, which in 346 left him master of the Phocian cities, of the pass of Thermopylæ, and in the position of arbiter to the Amphictyonic council. In the latter capacity he was really the crowned protector of the Grecian faith, and in the spirit proper to his office he once marched into Greece, but instead of acting against the profane Locians, he seized the city of Elatea, and began to fortify it. Demosthenes now exerted all his eloquence and statesmanship to raise the ancient spirit of Grecian independence, and a powerful army was soon in the field, but being without able or patriotic commanders was defeated at the decisive battle of Chaeroneia in August, 338 B.C. After this last battle for freedom, Philip was acknowledged chief of the whole Hellenic world by all the states except Sparta, and in 337 he summoned a congress at Corinth to organize an expedition against Persia. While preparing for this enterprise he repudiated his wife, Olympias, mother of Alexander the Great, and the same year espoused Cleopatra, niece of Attalus, who bore him a son, looked upon as the rival of Alexander in the succession. These circumstances led to dissensions at court, and in the year 336 B.C. to the death of Philip, who was murdered at the instigation of Olympias while engaged in a religious festival. He had several other wives or mistresses, and was addicted to intemperance; but as a king, for political and military genius, for persuasive eloquence, the general spirit of humanity, and for courage in the field, the name of Philip of Macedon may vie with any in history. At the time of his death the first division of his army had passed into Asia under the conduct of Attalus, and the young Alexander had already distinguished himself as commander of one wing of his army at the battle of Chaeroneia. [E.R.]

PHILIP, emperor of Rome, was born in Arabia about 204, and having entered into the military service of the Romans, became prætorian præfect 243. The emperor Gordian was compelled to receive him as a colleague on the throne by the army which had conquered Sapor, king of Persia; and in the following year, 244, Philip assumed the whole authority by putting his rival to death. He was killed in battle by the soldiers of Decius 249.

PHILIP, emperor of Germany, was the second son of Frederick Barbarossa. He was born 1178, became king of Swabia and Tuscany after the death of his father 1190, and emperor after the death of his brother, Henry VI., 1198. He was assassinated 1208, and succeeded by Otho IV.

PHILIP I., king of France, son of Henry I. and Anne of Russia, was born 1052, and succeeded to the throne under the guardianship of Baldwin V., count of Flanders, 1060, died, after a troubled reign, mixed up with the affairs of William the Conqueror, 1108. PHILIP II., surnamed AUGUSTUS, son of Louis VII. and of Alix, daughter of Thibault, count of Champagne, was born 1165, succeeded his father 1180, accompanied Richard Cœur de Lion to the Holy Land 1190, invaded Normandy during Richard's captivity 1193, confiscated the possessions of King John in France, after the supposed murder of Arthur, 1203, prepared to invade England at the instance of the pope 1213, turned his arms against Flanders and gained the celebrated battle of Bouvines 1214, died 1223. Philip Augustus was one of the ablest princes that ever reigned in France, both as a commander and an administrator. PHILIP III., called the Hardy, was the son of Louis IX. and Margaret of Provence. He was born 1245, and succeeded his father 1270. In 1271 he possessed himself of Toulouse on the death of his uncle, Alphonso; in 1272 he repressed the revolt of Roger, count of Foix, and in 1276 sustained a war against Alphonso X., king of Castile. The invasion of Sicily by Peter of Arragon, and the massacre of the French, known as 'the Sicilian vespers,' caused him to make war against that prince, in the course of which he died, 1285. PHILIP IV., called the Fair, or Handsome, son of the preceding by his first wife, Isabella of Arragon, was born 1268, and succeeded his father 1285. He was engaged in wars with the English and Flemings; and in a quarrel with the pope, in the course of which he was excommunicated. In 1303 the estates-general were first assembled. In 1312 he suppressed the Templars (see MOLAI); died 1314. He was an able but most despotic sovereign. PHILIP V., called the Long, second son of the preceding, was born about 1293, and succeeded to the throne in virtue of the Salic law, which excluded the daughter of his brother, Louis X., who died 1316. In his reign a cruel persecution began against the Jews, in the midst of which he died, 1322. PHILIP VI., called De Valois, was son of Charles, count of Valois, a younger son of Philip the Hardy. He was born 1293, and succeeded Charles le Bel 1328. In his reign occurred the wars with Edward III. of England, who claimed the French crown as grandson, by his mother, of Philip the Fair. Philip lost the battle of Cressy in 1346, when 30,000 men, and the chief of his nobility, were slain. He died during a truce with the English, 1350.

PHILIP I., among the Spanish kings, was the son of Maximilian I., emperor of Germany, by Mary of Burgundy. He was born 1478, and on the death of his mother, 1482, became sovereign of the seventeen provinces of the Netherlands, the right of which he transmitted to his posterity of the house of Austria. In 1496 he married Joanna, daughter of Ferdinand and Isabella, and in 1502 the young couple were acknowledged lawful successors to the crown of Spain. In 1506 they were declared joint king and queen of Castile, and Philip died the same year. He was the father of Charles V. PHILIP II., (next article). PHILIP III., son of Philip II. and Anne of Austria, born 1578, succeeded his father 1598, died 1621. PHILIP IV., son of Philip III. and Margaret of Austria, was born 1605, and succeeded his father 1621. Besides a war with the Dutch, he had to contend against the league formed against the house of Austria by Richelieu, by which he lost many provinces. In 1640 the duke of Braganza made himself king of Portugal, in 1647 Massaniello led the revolt in Naples, and in 1648 Philip was compelled to renounce all claims upon the United Provinces by the treaty of Westphalia (see article MAURICE OF NASSAU). In 1659, after the junction of Cromwell with France, and the victories of Blake, Philip concluded the treaty of the Pyrenees. In 1665 his forces were totally defeated by the Portuguese, and he died the same year. PHILIP V., second son of Louis the dauphin of France, great-grandson of the preceding, and grandson of Louis XIV., was born 1683. He succeeded to the throne of Spain by the testament of Charles II., and was proclaimed at Madrid 1700. The succession was disputed, and a league formed against it between England, Holland, Russia, Savoy, and Portugal, which led to a twelve years' war, concluded by the treaty of Utrecht 1713. By this treaty the English obtained Gibraltar and Minorca; Naples, Sardinia, the Milanese, and the coasts of Tuscany, were relinquished to the archduke Charles, who had been the rival of Philip, and was now become emperor; and the duke of Savoy possessed Sicily. Philip now married Elizabeth Farnese, princess of Mantua, and the notorious Alberoni became his minister, whom he was obliged to dismiss, in 1720, by a fresh combination. He then fell into a state of melancholy, abdicated in favour of his son, Louis, and was obliged to resume the crown in consequence of his death, 1724; died 1746.

PHILIP II., king of Spain, who projected the conquest of England by the famous 'Armada,' was the son of Charles V., emperor, and of Isabella of Portugal. He was born at Valladolid in 1527, eight years after his father's accession to the empire, and was married in succession to the Princess Mary of Portugal, 1543, and to Mary, queen of England, in the month of July, 1554, the same year in which he became king of Naples and Sicily by the abdication of his father. The most jealous precautions were taken on this occasion to prevent his assumption of any real power in this country and the temper of the people, and the queen herself, were so little to his taste, that in the course of 1555 (August) he retired to Flanders. There was a political reason for this journey, however: Charles V. was preparing to resign the empire by first investing his son with his hereditary dominions, and in the succeeding October he solemnly renounced the sovereignty of the Low Countries in his favour, at an assembly of the states-general in Brussels. About a month after, Philip received the sceptre of Spain and the Indies by the same self-abnegation of his father, and his first act was to propose a truce with France, which was broken almost as soon as concluded upon. Till September, 1556, he lived rather a debauched life, but would appear, in his Flemish dominions, and he came to England, where he had the mortification to be refused the ceremony of a coronation, and the troops he demanded in aid of his war with France. These, however, were at length conceded to him by Mary, in violation of her marriage articles, and the levy, joined to the army of Emanuel Philibert, duke of Savoy, and Count Egmont, assisted to gain the battle of St. Quintin 10th August, 1557. On the death of Mary in 1558 Philip, who was still prosecuting the war, made proposals of marriage to her successor, Elizabeth, and was refused; his military operations meanwhile greatly retarding the Reformation in the country. In 1559 the French were reduced to sue for peace, and the policy and the arms of Philip, though he was no soldier himself, were crowned by the peace of Chateau-Cambresis on the 13th of April in that year; one condition of it being the marriage of Philip to the princess Elizabeth of France, daughter of Henry II. Free from this political war, Philip now applied himself to the subjugation of the Moriscoes—the descendants of the Mahomedan conquerors of Spain—and commenced that intestine struggle which was not terminated till the reign of his successor. In the course of the year (1559) he returned to Valladolid, having appointed his half-sister, Margaret, sovereign of the Low Countries; his first act that city was to send thirty-three protestants to the stake, of whose torments he went to be an eyewitness. About the same time he transferred his seat of government to Madrid. In 1566 the revolt of the Netherlands commenced, which ended in the separation of the seven northern provinces from the crown of Spain, and their formation into a Dutch republic. This struggle lasted about thirty years till the close of Philip's reign; the principal incidents are noted in other articles, (WILLI-

OF NASSAU; MAURICE OF NASSAU). The events of this protracted struggle were varied in 1567 by a domestic tragedy—the rebellion, arrest, and suspicious death of Don Carlos, the son of Philip and his first wife Mary of Portugal. Shortly afterwards he lost the queen Elizabeth, his third wife, and about the same time the Moors of Granada revolted, whose subjugation was effected in 1570. In 1571 the archduchess Anne of Austria became his fourth wife, and the same year his natural brother, Don John of Austria, obtained a great naval victory of Lepanto over the Turks. In 1580 his troops under Alva subdued Portugal, of which, and all its dependencies, Philip now became sovereign. By this time the protestant power and its policy had become centred in England under Elizabeth, who at length openly engaged herself in behalf of the Netherlands, and everywhere threatened the security of Philip; the king at that time being ruled by our great Admiral Drake. In 1586 the pope, Sixtus Quintus, offered support to Philip, and the Invincible Armada was prepared for the invasion of England. It was commanded by the duke of Medina Sidonia, and totally defeated by the combined Dutch and English fleets, aided by a great storm in the British channel, 1588. The remainder of Philip's reign was occupied with his French wars as a party to a league, in pursuance of the same dark policy as that of Henry IV. This struggle was concluded by the peace of Vervins, 1597. (See NAVARRE). Philip died at Madrid, 13th September, 1598; having earned for himself the character of a cruel bigot, and made the most desperate efforts to sustain the preponderance of Spain in Europe, and the triumph of the papacy. No European sovereign has been able to resume the struggle on the same scale of magnificence to this day. [E.R.]

PHILIP I., count of Savoy, succeeded his brother, Peter, 1268, died 1285. PHILIP II., duke of Savoy, succeeded Charles II., 1496, died 1531. Another PHILIP, born 1278, was prince of Albania and the Morea. He began to reign over Savoy at the death of Count Philip 1285, but Charles V., his uncle, took the sovereignty, and left Philip that of Piedmont; died 1338.

PHILIP, the first of the name, count of Burgundy, succeeded his mother, Jeanne of Valois, as duke of Artois 1335, and obtained the county of Burgundy from his brother 1338; died 1346. The second, a son of the preceding, succeeded to the three counties of Burgundy, Auvergne, Boulogne, and Artois, at the age of eighteen months, and died 1361. The third, PHILIP THE HARDY, born 1328, received the duchy of Burgundy from his father, King John, 1364, and, by his marriage with Margaret of Flanders, became count of Flanders of Artois, of Rethel, and of Nevers. He was one of the princes appointed to administer the government of France during the incapacity of Charles VI., and whose rivalry with the duke of Orleans created great troubles; died 1404. The fourth, grandson of the preceding by his son John, and Margaret of Bavaria, was born 1396, and succeeded his father 1419; died 1467. He was father of Charolois, afterwards Charles the Bold. PHILIP, duke of Brabant, reigned 1427-1430. PHILIP, count of Flanders, called PHILIP OF ARTOIS, suc. his father, Thierry, 1169, died 1191.

PHILIP, elector palatine, born 1448, succeeded his uncle, Frederick, 1476, died 1508. A second of the name, PHILIP WILLIAM OF NEUBOURG, born 1615, succeeded the elector Charles 1686, died 1690.

PHILIP, duke of Parma, born 1720, was son of Philip V. of Spain and Elizabeth Farnese, and son-in-law of Louis XV. He became duke of Parma, Placenza, and Guastalla, by the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, 1748; died 1759.

PHILIP, duke of Suabia. See PHILIP, EMP.

PHILIP OF ALSACE. See PHILIP, COUNT OF FLANDERS.

PHILIP OF ORLEANS. See ORLEANS.

PHILIP THE SOLITARY, a Gr. monk, 12th ct.

PHILIP OF THESSALONICA, a Greek epigrammatist, supposed no later than the age of Augustin.

PHILIP OF THE MOST HOLY TRINITY, a famous missionary to Persia and the Indies, born at Avignon 1603, died 1671.

PHILIP OF VALOIS. See PH. VI. OF FRANCE.

PHILIPPE, C. A., a Fr. magistrate, 1614-98.

PHILIPPE, LOUIS. See LOUIS PHILIPPE.

PHILIPPI, H., a learned Jesuit, 1575-1636.

PHILIPPICUS-BARDANES, emperor of the East, proclaimed, after causing the assassination of Justinian II., 711, dethroned by the people 713.

PHILIPPIDES, an Athenian poet, B.C. 335.

PHILIPPON, BARON, the French general who defended Badajoz in 1811; 1760-1836.

PHILIPPUS OF ACARNANA, the friend and physician of Alexander the Great, whose life he saved, B.C. 333.

PHILIPPUS, the name assumed by the impostor, Andriscus, who pretended to be the son of Perseus, and became king of Macedonia.

PHILIPS, AMBROSE, descended from an ancient family of Leicestershire, known as a poet and miscellaneous writer. He was the associate of Steele, Addison, and the wits of that period, born about 1671, died 1749.

PHILIPS, CATHARINE, an accomplished lady, authoress of Translations from Corneille, 1631-64.

PHILIPS, FABIAN, a lawyer and royalist, author of several political pamphlets, and of books relating to ancient customs and privileges in England, 1601-1690.

PHILIPS, JOHN, a poetical writer, 1676-1708.

PHILIPS, RICHARD, F.R.S., F.G.S., an English chemist, died 1851.

PHILIPS, THOMAS, a Roman Catholic minister and theologian, author of the 'Study of Sacred Literature,' 'Life of Cardinal Pole,' &c., d. 1774.

PHILISTUS, an ancient historian, supposed to be a native of Syracuse, about 431-356 B.C.

PHILLIP, ARTHUR, an English naval officer, first governor of Botany Bay, 1738-1814.

PHILLIPS, EDWARD, son of Anne, the sister of Milton, and of Edward Phillips, secondary in the crown office, was born 1630. He was educated by his illustrious uncle, of whom he wrote a life. The best known of his works is a complete collection of the Poets, with observations upon them, in which it is supposed Milton assisted him. His brother, JOHN, at first a political adherent of his uncle, afterwards wrote in favour of the restoration. Dates unknown.

PHILLIPS, MORGAN, or PHILIP MORGAN, a Roman Catholic controversial writer, 16th century.

PHILLIPS, THOMAS, R.A., a distinguished portrait painter and writer on art, born at Dudley, Warwickshire, 1770, died, after co-operating in the foundation of the Artists' General Benevolent Institution, 1845.

PHILO OF BIBLOS, a Greek historian, chiefly known as translator of Sanconiatho from the Phœnician into the Greek language, fragments of which have been preserved in the works of Eusebius. He flourished in the reign of Nero.

PHILO OF BYZANTIUS, a Greek architect, au. of a Treatise on Machines of War, abt. 3d. ct. B.C.

PHILO, JUDÆUS, was born of Jewish parents at Alexandria, not long before the commencement of the Christian era. He was a devotee of the Platonic philosophy, and it tinges all his interpretations of the sacred books. In A.D. 41, he was sent as chief deputy from the Jews in Alexandria to the emperor Caligula, in order to defend them against Apion, who had charged them with the crime of disloyalty. Again did he go to Rome in the reign of Claudius. Several of the writings of Philo have escaped the wreck of time, such as his treatise De Mundi Opificio; his 'Allegories of the Law,' full of strange fancy and wild interpretations, his book 'On Dreams,' and numerous tracts on biblical subjects, filled with Platonism and allegory. His works have been edited by Turnebus, fol., Paris, 1552; by Mangey in 2 vols. fol., 1742; reprinted under the care of Pfeiffer, at Erlangen, in 1820, and by Richter in 8 octavo vols., Leipzig, 1828-30. [J.E.]

PHILO OF LARISSA, a philosopher of Athens, who quitted that city on the success of the arms of Mithridates and went to Rome, where he had Cicero for a disciple.

PHILODEMUS, an Epicurean philos., B.C. 100.

PHILOLAUS: a later Pythagorean: born at Crotona, or Tarentum, towards the close of the fifth century before Christ. Aresas, a probable disciple of Pythagoras, was his master; so that we receive the doctrine from Philolaus, only as it appeared to the third generation. (Article PYTHAGORAS). It has been repeated once and again that Philolaus, divined the true theory of the Universe, and was the virtual predecessor of Copernicus. Nothing can be more false. In his scheme indeed, not the Earth, but FIRE is placed in the centre of the Universe: that Fire, however, is not the SUN, which, on the contrary, he makes revolve around the central ære. The scheme, in so far as it can be understood, is altogether fantastic, based on no observation or comparison of phenomena, but on vague and now unintelligible metaphysical considerations. The only predecessor of Copernicus in Antiquity, was Aristarchus of Samos, whose remarkable conjectures appeared first, in the Editio Principes of Archimedes—published after Copernicus wrote. [J.P.N.]

PHILOPOEMEN, called the last of the Greeks, was really their last great commander. He was born in Arcadia B.C. 253, became in 210 generalissimo of the Achaean League, and conquered the Spartans—at which time he abolished the laws of Lycurgus. The greatest of his victories in this long struggle was the battle of Mantinea. He was put to death by poison when a prisoner of the Messenians B.C. 183, the same year that proved fatal to Hannibal and Scipio.

PHILOSTRATUS, FLAVIUS, a Greek rhetorician, author of 'Lives of the Sophists,' 'Comment on the Heroes of Homer,' and a descriptive work on art, entitled 'Icones,' known about 193. Another PHILOSTRATUS, his nephew, wrote a work similar to the 'Icones,' and bearing the same title. He was known about 217.

PHILOTHEUS, a patriarch of Constantinople, author of several learned works, died about 1371.

PHILOXENUS, the name of three Greeks, the most ancient a didactic and burlesque poet, 4th c. 380 B.C. The second, a painter, was contemporary with Apelles, and is known to have executed a battle-piece, B.C. 316. The third, called also XENAIAS, was a bishop of Heliopolis, and writer in favour of the Syrian Jacobites, d. A.D. 518.

PHILPOT, JOHN, son of Sir Peter Philpot, an sheriff of Hampshire, known as a learned Calvinist writer and minister of the Church of England, burnt in Smithfield in the reign of Mary, 1555.

PHILPOT, or PHILIPOT, JOHN, a herald and antiquarian, assistant of Camden, and editor of his Remains, time of James I.; died 1641.

PHLEGON, a Greek historian, 2d century.

PHOCAS, emperor of the East, 602-610.

PHOCION, a famous Athenian general, statesman, orator, and diplomatist, chief of the aristocratic party at Athens, and a great opponent of Philip and Alexander. He was put to death by poison B.C. 317, and afterwards honoured by the regrets of his countrymen.

PHOCYLIDES, a Greek poet, 4th cent. B.C.

PHOTIUS, one of the most illustrious men of his age, was born of noble parents in the early part of the ninth century. He was also connected with the marriage of his brother with the royal family. He held various secular offices under the emperor, such as that of proto-a-secretis, or chief justice, and the captaincy of the royal life guards. His literary attainments were of a very high order, the result of diligent and continued study. But he rose suddenly and unexpectedly to the summit of ecclesiastical dignity. The patriarch Ignatius had been deposed and banished, and Photius, though a layman, was elected in his room. In less than a week he summarily passed through all the inferior grades of office, was in as many successive days, monk, reader, sub-deacon, deacon, presbyter, and finally patriarch. This questionable procedure was confirmed by two councils, one in 858, and the other in 859. But, in 862 Pope Nicolaus, in consequence of a dispute about jurisdiction, declared the election void, and excommunicated Photius and his adherents. Photius, however, retained his place, but a schism was produced between the Eastern and Western churches. The emperor Michael III. was assassinated in A.D. 867, and Photius, murderer and successor, Basil I., exiled Photius, brought back Ignatius his predecessor, and in a general council held at Constantinople, in 869, the transaction was solemnly ratified. When Ignatius died, in 877, Photius was elevated to his former position, and his restoration was sanctioned by the head of the Western churches. Photius immediately laboured by the machinery of popes and councils, to have all the previous proceedings against himself declared null and void, and on the point, he incurred again the anathema of the church. Ecclesiastical intrigue and manœuvre, and truth and right in those days determined the story. Leo VI. succeeded Basil in 886, and he immediately, but probably on unjust grounds, deposed the restless patriarch to Armenia, where he remained in exile till his death. The date of his death is unknown, but some place it in A.D. 891. Photius was a scheming diplomatist, keenly alive to national interests, but not without a happy mixture of magnanimity and decision. His weapons of self-defence and self-aggrandizement were those of the church in which he lived, suppleness and chicanery, a jealous watch over all rivals, and the unscrupulous use of every means to enjoy, retain, and increase the most of the imperial favour and patronage.

Photius had been a voracious reader, and was an accomplished critic. His Myriobiblon or Bibliotheca is a review and epitome of ancient Greek literature in 280 divisions, and contains notices of many rare and valuable works which themselves have been lost. The best edition is that of Bekker, Berlin, 1824, 2 vols. 8vo. Numerous other works were composed in the long life of this illustrious prelate and statesman, and many of his treatises have been collected. We have his Compendium, his Amphilochia,—a theological treatise in the form of question and answer—his collection of sermons, Homilies, a tract on the Procession of the Holy Spirit, one against the Manichæans, Commentaries on St. Paul's Epistles, and a Catena on the Psalms, &c., but many of these still slumber in obscurity. No collected edition of his works has appeared. Had Photius been a professional writer, his interrupted leisure, he could scarcely have written more, and when we reflect on his long and eventful life, on his chequered and absorbing career, as courtier and patriarch, polemic and exile, statesman and preacher, we cannot surely without admiration of his industry and erudition.

[J.E.]

PHRAHATACES, a king of Parthia, succeeded his father, Phraohates IV., and killed in the year 9. PHRAHATES I., king of Parthia, succeeded his father, Priapatius, 178 B.C., and, dying soon after, left his kingdom to his brother, Mithridates. PHRAHATES II., son of Mithridates I., reigned about 127 B.C. PHRAHATES III., about 70-58 B.C. PHRAHATES IV., obtained the crown by killing his brother, Orodes, 37 B.C., and was killed in turn by his son, Phraohates, A.D. 9. PHRAHATES V., in the preceding, was absent at Rome when his son usurped the throne, and was invested with the sovereignty by Tiberius. He departed for Syria to begin his kingdom while Abraham III. reigned in Rome, and died on his journey 35.

PHRANZO, G., a Greek historian, 15th cent. PHYGIO, F. C., a German divine, died 1543. PHYNICUS, three distinguished Greeks:—1. The earliest, an Athenian writer of tragedy, contemporary with Æschylus, 5th century B.C. The second, a comic poet of Athens, known B.C. 430. The third, surnamed ARRHABUS, a sophist and philosopher of Bithynia, 2d century.

PHYNIS, a Greek musician, 5th century B.C. PI PHILIP N., a French chemist, 1721-1799. PICENTI, D. G., an Ital. antiqu., 1684-1754. PICCI, an Ottoman admiral, 16th century. PIAZZA, C., an Italian painter, 16th century.

PIAZZA, JER. BARTHOLOMEW, an Italian convert to the Church of England, formerly a judge of the inquisition, author of an historical account of the inquisition and its proceedings, d. abt. 1745.

PIAZZA, P., an Italian painter, 1547-1621.

PIAZZI, J., an Italian astronomer, 1746-1826.

PICARD, J., a French astronomer, 1629-1682.

PICARD, L. B., a Fr. dramatist, 1769-1828.

PICARD, M., a German savant, 1574-1620.

PICART, STEPHEN, a French engraver, 1631-1721. His son, BERNARD, a designer and engraver, author of 'Illustrations of the Religious Ceremonies of all Nations,' 1663-1733.

PICCADONI, J. B., superior-general of the order of Minors, a theologian and philoso., 1766-1829.

PICCART, M., a Germ. philologist, 1574-1620.

PICCINI, NICOLAI, was born at Bari in Naples in 1728. This composer has been regarded as the most fertile and original that the school of Naples ever produced. Like many other musicians, he was first meant to be brought up to the church, but the ruling passion frustrated all parental intentions. He studied in the conservatory of San Onofrio under Leo and Durante. In 1758 he was invited to Rome, where he brought out several operas. In Dec. 1776, he arrived at Paris, where he, in the course of a year afterwards, found himself opposed to Gluck, who about this time effected a revolution in French music. For some time the musical feuds of the admirers of the Italian and the German kept Paris in a ferment. Gluck was, however, at the termination of the war, pronounced victor. At the breaking out of the French Revolution, he returned to Naples, but the ministry there having forbidden him to appear in public, he remained almost a close prisoner in his own apartments. In 1799 he returned to Paris, when the Emperor Napoleon appointed him inspector in the National Conservatory of Music, which situation he held till the time of his death, which took place in 1801. [J.M.]

PICCINI, JOSEPH, eldest son of the preceding, known as a dramatic writer, 1758-1826.

PICCOLOMINI. See PIUS II.

PICCOLOMINI, CARDINAL, the name by which JAMES AMMANATI is best known, a famous name in the history of Italy, 1422-1479.

PICCOLOMINI, ALESSANDRO, archbishop of Patras and coadjutor of Sienna, known as a philologist, 1508-1578. FRANCESCO, a relation of the preceding, known as a learned writer, 1520-1604.

PICCOLOMINI, ALPHONSO, duke de Montemariano, an Italian adventurer who ravaged the states of the church, and was hung 1591.

PICCOLOMINI, OCTAVIA, an Austrian general of the same family as the preceding, 1599-1656.

PICCHAT, M., a French dramatist, 1786-1828.

PICHEGRU, CHARLES, was born in 1761, of parents in a humble rank of life, in Franche Comté. He was educated for the army at the Military College of Brienne, where he was monitor to Napoleon Buonaparte. The Revolution found him in the rank of adjutant; and he rose rapidly during the campaigns of 1792 and 1793. At the end of that year he obtained the chief command of the army of the Rhine, which was then disorganized by a series of reverses. Pichegru restored discipline and spirit; gained the victory of Haguenau, Dec. 23, 1793, and drove the allies before him into the Dutch territory. The severity of that winter made the passage of the frozen rivers practicable, and in January, 1794, Pichegru invaded and conquered Holland. He captured not only towns and fortresses, but also some of the Dutch fleet, which was frozen up in the Texel. Pichegru sent his cavalry over the ice; and the strange spectacle was presented of ships being attacked and taken by horse soldiers. Pichegru was favourable to the restoration of the Bourbons, and entered into a secret negotiation with their emissaries for this purpose. The French Directory suspected him, and recalled him from his command. He took part in the unsuccessful attempts at reaction in Paris in 1797, and was exiled to Guiana. He escaped thence to England, where he was well received. In 1804 he came secretly to Paris with other royalists; but he was arrested by Buonaparte's police and thrown into prison. He was found dead, in his bed there, on the morning of the 6th April, 1805. The Imperialists said that he had committed suicide; the Royalists, that he had been murdered. There may be too much cause to suspect that Pichegru came foully by his death; but we believe Napoleon's assertion at St. Helena, that he, at least, was personally free from guilt in the matter. [E.S.C.]

PICHLER, CAROLINE, one of the most prolific novelists and dramatic wts. of Germany, 1769-1843.

PICHLER, G., a Germ. theologian, died 1736.

PICHON, J., a French missionary, 1688-1751.

PICHON, T., a French writer, 1700-1781.

PICHON, T. J., a Fr. theologian, 1731-1812.

PICKEN, ANDREW, a Scottish novelist and miscellaneous wr., born at Paisley 1788, died 1833.

PICPAPE, N. J. P. DE, a Fr. Jesuit, 1731-93.

PICTET, BENEDICT, professor of theology at Geneva, author of a History of the Twelfth and Thirteenth Centuries, 1655-1724. His relation, JOHN LOUIS, an astronomer, 1739-1781.

PICTET, MARK AUGUSTUS, a naturalist and philosopher, president of the Society for the Advancement of the Arts, at Geneva, 1752-1825. His brother, CHARLES PICTET DE ROCHEMONT, a political negotiator, agriculturist, and miscellaneous writer, 1755-1824.

PICTON, SIR THOMAS, a gallant officer, descended from an old family of Pembrokeshire, entered the army as ensign in 1771, and, after serving in the West Indies, rose to the rank of colonel, and became governor of Trinidad in 1797. His next services were at the capture of Flushing, of which also he was appointed governor in 1809. He afterwards distinguished himself in the Peninsular war, at Badajoz, Vittoria, Ciudad Rodrigo, and other great actions. Killed at Waterloo 1815.

PICUS, MIRANDULUS. See MIRANDOLA.

PIDOUX, J., physician of Henry III., d. 1610.

PIERCE, EDWARD, a famous painter of altarpieces, ceilings, and architecture, died about 1715.

PIERQUIN, J., a French priest, died 1742.

PIERRE, CORNELIUS DE LAPIDE, a learned Jesuit, an. of commentaries on the Bible, d. 1637.

PIERRE, J. B., a French painter, 1714-1789.

PIERRES, P. D., a French printer, 1741-1808.

PIERSON, C., a Dutch painter, 1631-1714.

PIERSON, J., a philologist, 1731-1759.

PIETRES, B., a Flemish marine painter, 1614-1652. JOHN, his brother, same profes., b. 1625.

PIETERS, G., a Dutch painter, born 1580.

PIETRE, S., a French physician, died 1616.

PIETRI, P. DA., an Italian painter, 17th ce.

PIETRO, M. DI, an Ital. cardinal, 1747-182.

PIGALLE, J. B., an Italian sculptor, 1714-

PIGANIOL-DE-LA-FORCE, J. AIMAR

French literature and geographer, 1675-1753.

PIGAULT-LEBRUN, G. C. ANTOINE, a f tile novelist and dramatic writer, 1753-1835.

PIGHIUS, ALBERT, a Dutch mathematic and Roman Catholic controversialist, born ab

1490, died 1542. His nephew, STEPHEN VINAI a learned antiquarian, 1520-1604.

PIGNA, GIAMBATTISTA, a learned Italian, l

torian of the house of Este, 1529-1575.

PIGNATELLI, F., a Neapolitan statesman

1732, capt.-general of the Two Sicilies 1789, vic

general of the kingdom of Naples 1806, died 18

PIGNONE, S., an Italian painter, 1612-169

PIGNORI, L., an Ital. antiquary, 1571-16

PIGNOTTI, LORENZO, professor of nat philosophy at Pisa, distinguished as an histori and the most celebr. of Ital. fabulists, 1739-18

PIGRAY, PETER, a French surgeon, died 16

PILATUS, LEONTIUS, a monk of Calabria, d at the revival of letters in Europe, 14th century

PILES, ROGER DE, a Fr. art-writer, 1635-17

PILKINGTON, JAMES, a learned English p late, created bishop of Durham by Elizabeth I, the Marian persecution, 1520-1575.

PILKINGTON, LETITIA, a lady of Dutch traction, born in Dublin 1712, and married to

Rev. Samuel Pilkington. She wrote several p

some poems, and her own "Memoirs." She w separated from her husband in consequence irregular conduct, and was supported some time contributions obtained for her through the inter of Cibber. Died 1750.

PILET, C. M., a Fr. biographer, died 1826

PILON, F., an Irish actor, 1750-1788.

PILON, G., a French sculptor, died 1590.

PILPAY, an Indian fabulist, Braham, and co ncillor of state to one of the rajahs, said to h lived 2,000 years B.C. His fables were transla into French by Galland in 1704, and by the A

Dubois in 1826.

PIMENOFF, a Russian sculptor, died 1833.

PINA, RUY DE, a Portug. historian, died 15

PINART, M., a French Orientalist, 1659-17

PINAS, J., a Dutch painter, 1597-1660.

PINDAR, the greatest of the Greek lyric po was born, according to the best authorities,

Cyncephale, a village of Boeotia, between The and Thespia, B.C. 518, and died B.C. 483, a completing his eightieth year. As is the case w most of the celebrated authors of antiquity, few particulars respecting his life have been tr

mitted to us, and even these are derived from s ancient biographies of uncertain authority value. According to one of these, he was the of Daiphantus and Cleidice, and was born dur

the time of the celebration of the Pythian ga

(August or September), the latter fact bei

rived from one of his own fragments. He s to have been twice married, and to have had son and two daughters. His family, which clai descent from Cadmus, ranked among the nob

in Thebes, and enjoyed a hereditary celebrity skill in music, especially for flute-playing, a p fession which, at that time, was held in high re

ion in the Boeotian capital. The youthful poet, whom the family talent had descended, at first applied himself to that branch of poetry which is best adapted to the accompaniment of the lyre; and his father, who had observed in him the indications of poetical genius, sent him to Athens, where, under the tuition of Lasus of Hermione, founder of the Athenian school of dithyrambic poetry, he received that instruction in the art which was necessary to enable him to attain distinction. While at Athens, he likewise availed himself of the instructions of Agathocles and Apollonius. Returning to Thebes in his twentieth year, he further profited by the instructions and advice of Myrtis and Corinna of Tanagra, two women who at that time enjoyed great celebrity at Thebes, and with both of whom he afterwards rendered unsuccessfully for the musical prize. Pindar commenced his career as a composer of choral odes at the early age of twenty, and his reputation soon extended to all parts of the Hellenic world. The productions of his muse were eagerly sought by different states and princes to commemorate remarkable events; the tyrants and wealthy men of Greece paid homage to his superior genius; and the free states vied with each other in honouring him as the great lyric poet of his age. Athens, Ægina, and Opus conferred upon him the honour of electing him a public guest; the inhabitants of Ceos employed him to compose for them a choral song, to the exclusion of two celebrated poets of their own; and by the order of the priestess at Delphi, he received a portion of the banquet of the heoxenia. Pindar manifests in his works a strong religious feeling, and entertaining a profound reverence for the gods, rejects those forms of ancient legends which ascribes to them the vices and immorality of mortals. He dedicated a temple to the Great Mother near his own house at Thebes; and erected statues to Jupiter-Ammon, and Mercury in the market-place. Extraordinary honours were paid to him after his death. The Athenians erected to him a statue of brass, representing him with a diadem and a lyre, and a book upon his knees; while the Lacedæmonians, when they took Thebes, spared his house and tomb; and the same mark of veneration was afterwards shown to his memory by Alexander. Only a small portion of his works have come down to our time, and these, with a single exception, all belong to one class, the Epinician or triumphal odes, celebrating respectively the victories obtained in the four national games of Greece, the Isthmian, Pythian, Nemean, and Isthmian. Besides these, he wrote dithyrambs, hymns to the Muses, dirges, drinking songs, mimic dancing songs of maidens, and panegyrics on princes, of which we possess numerous fragments. The estimate of Pindar as a poet must be formed from his Epinician odes alone, though it is evident from the testimony of the ancient writers, and particularly of Horace, that he was equally celebrated in the departments of poetry. The subjects which he selected for his muse do not appear, at first sight, to be well fitted for sublime poetry; the genius of the poet, summoning to its aid the splendid mythology of the oldest times, and the many exploits of the heroes and demigods, invests the object of his panegyric with a fascination which seems really genuine. 'He is chiefly remarkable for the gigantic boldness of his conceptions and the daring sublimity of his metaphors, which stamp him the Æschylus of lyric poetry. The flights of his imagination are not, however, like those of the great tragedian, mingled with the intensity of human passion, which, while they carry us beyond ourselves, still come home to the heart. He has the light without the heat, his splendours dazzle, but do not warm us. There is little of human feeling in his works.' [G.F.]

PINDEMONTE, IPPOLITO, Count, an Italian poet, biographer, and miscellan. wr., 1753-1828.

PINE, JOHN, a highly talented English engraver, appointed Blue Mantle in Heralds College, and engraver of the royal signets, 1690-1756. His son, ROBERT EDGE PINE, a portrait and historical painter, died 1790.

PINEAU, G. DU, a French lawyer, 1573-1644.

PINEAU, S., a French surgeon, 1550-1619.

PINEDA, J. DE, a Sp. theologian, 1557-1637.

PINEL, LE P., a French priest of the oratory, known as a controversial writer, and for his visionary enthusiasm, died before 1777.

PINEL, PHILIP, a celebrated physician of Paris, distinguished for his treatment of the insane, and his valuable works on the subject, 1742-1826.

PINELLI, GIANVINCENZO, a great collector of books and manuscripts, and patron of literature, born at Naples, of Genoese descent, 1535; died 1601. MAFFEO, sometimes confounded with the preceding, also a learned bibliopole, and friend of Morelli, flourished at Venice, 1736-1785.

PINELO, ANTONIO DE LEON, a laborious writer on Spanish America, born in Peru 17th ct.

PINET, ANTHONY DU, lord of Noroy, a miscell. writer and defender of protestantism, 16th ct.

PINGERON, J. C., a French writer, died 1795.

PINGRE, A. G., a Fr. astronomer, 1711-1796.

PINI, E., an Italian naturalist, died 1825.

PINKERTON, JOHN, a native of Edinburgh, dist. as a poet, antiquarian, and geogr., 1758-1826.

PINKNEY, WILLIAM, an eloquent lawyer and statesman of America, distinguished as a political negotiator for the state of Maryland, and as a member of the senate, 1765-1822. His son, EDWARD COATE, a naval officer, known to literature as a poet, 1802-1828.

PINSON, —, a French surgeon, famous as a modeller of anatomical subjects in wax, 1745-1828.

PINSON, or PYNSON, RICHARD, an early English printer, who was originally servant to Caxton, and introduced the Roman letter into this country, died about 1530.

PINSSON, F., a Fr. juriconsult, 1612-1691.

PINTO, F. M., a Portuguese traveller, 16th ct.

PINTO, H., a Portuguese divine, died 1584.

PINTO, ISAAC, a Portug. economist, died 1787.

PINTURRICHIO, BERNARDINO, a famous Italian painter, scholar of Perugius, and associate in the labours of Raphael, 1454-1513.

PINZI, J. A., an Ital. numismatist, 1713-1769.

PINZON, ALONZO, VINCENT YANEZ, and MARTIN, three brothers, Spaniards, who had commands in Columbus' first voyage, and by whose exertions mainly it was that a sufficient number of men were induced to risk their lives on the perilous enterprise. Vincent Yanez was the most distinguished of the brothers; he made several voyages, on the most important of which he sailed in December 1499, and discovered Brazil, and the river Amazon, three months before Cabral took possession of South America for the crown of Portugal. [J.B.]

PIOMBO. See SEBASTIANO.

PIOZZI, ESTHER LYNCH, a distinguished name in the literary circle of Dr. Johnson, was the daughter of John Salusbury, Esq., of Bodvel in Carnarvonshire, where she was born 1739. In 1763 she married Mr. Thrale, a brewer, and member of parliament for Southwark, and this gentleman having made the acquaintance of Dr. Johnson, the latter became a constant visitor at their house, at Streatham, in Surrey. In 1784 Mrs. Thrale, after a three years' widowhood, married Gabriel Piozzi, an Italian music-master, with whom she went abroad; this match cost her the friendship of the great moralist, who had been greatly opposed to it. In 1786 she published 'Anecdotes of Dr. Johnson during the Last Twenty Years of his Life,' and in 1788 her correspondence with him. Her other literary productions consist of poems and fugitive pieces of a miscellaneous description; the chief of them is her poetical story, entitled 'The Three Warnings.' She returned to England after the death of Piozzi, and died at Clifton, near Bristol, 1821.

PIPELET, F., a French surgeon, 1722-1792.

PIPER, CHARLES, Count, councillor of state, and minister to Chas. XII. of Sweden, 1646-1716.

PIPER, FRANCIS LE, an English painter, of Walloon descent, died about 1740.

PIPPI. See ROMANO.

PIPPING, H., a Germ. theologian, 1670-1722.

PIRANESI, GIAMBATTISTA, Cavaliere, was born at Rome in 1707; he studied some time in Venice as an architect, but settled in Rome, and henceforth devoted himself to archeology, and etching the various ruins and monuments of Rome, in which he was assisted by his son, the CAV. FRANCESCO PIRANESI; and together they have produced the most extraordinary and interesting work, as a whole, that we possess on the magnificence of the ancient Romans. Yet it must always be borne in mind that the archaeological was secondary to the artistic element in their admirable etchings, and much is supplied by enthusiasm and imagination, as well as what has been afforded by the actual monument; but the existing ruins as they were, are powerfully and faithfully given, and even the ornamental fragments have their pictorial truth, if not their exact proportions or details. The elder Piranesi died at Rome in 1778; the son at Paris in 1810, he was born at Rome in 1750. The son completed what the father commenced: the early editions are the most valued; a complete collection is very rare, as all the monuments or series were published separately, and was worth, before the publication of the new Paris reprint, between three and four hundred pounds. The new edition in 29 volumes, atlas folio, published at Paris, 1835-37, is worth about £70; it contains plates by some other artists besides the Piranesi, and some modern as well as ancient monuments. [R.N.W.]

PIRES, THOMAS, a Portuguese ambassador to China,—the first European who ever went there in that capacity; the date of his mission 1517.

PIRINGER, B., a Germ. engraver, 1776-1821.
PIRON, AIME, a French apothecary, distinguished as a poet, 1640-1727. His son, ALEXIS, a poet, dramatic author, and man of wit, 1689-1773.

PIROT, E., a French theologian, 1631-1713.

PIRRO, R., a Sicilian historian, 1577-1651.

PISAN, C. DE, an Italian poetess, died 1420.

PISANI, N., a Venetian admiral, distinguished in the third war between the Venetians and Genoa, from 1350 to 1354, when he was taken captive with all his fleet by Paganino Doria. He was released at the conclusion of peace 1355, and died in obscurity. VICTOR, son or nephew of the preceding, obtained a victory over the Genoese at Antium in 1378, and was beaten by Lucien DE VENEZIA in 1379. After three months' imprisonment at Venice he was restored to his command, and captured the whole Genoese fleet at Chioggia. Died 1380.

PISANO, the surname of several distinguished artists of Pisa, very important in the early history of art in Italy. GIUNTA PISANO, or GIUNTA GIUSTINO of Pisa, is the earliest known Tuscan painter, and a crucifixion painted by him in the church of Santa Maria degli Angeli, at Assisi, about the year 1236, is still preserved; it is admirable in impasto and absolutely great as a work of art compared with anything we know of this period in Italy. Giunta was anterior to Cimabue. This shows how little reliance is to be placed on local and partial histories, especially where individuals are made heroes of. This picture, of which a fac-simile has been published by the Düsseldorf painter, Ramboux, in his 'Outlines from Trachtenberg illustrating the Old Christian Art in Italy,' shows that so far from Cimabue being the father of Italian painting, he was scarcely equal to Giunta, certainly inferior in style of drawing. If an individual has the credit of reviving painting in Italy it must belong to Giunta Pisano, for anything we know yet, to the contrary; he is said to have won the palm with the Greeks about 1210. There was not only an influx of Greek artists into Italy, after the Venetian capture of Constantinople in 1204, but we know of no Greek works equal to this crucifixion by Giunta. There are several other works preserved, and the progress of the art was evidently very slow, even down to the time of Masaccio, notwithstanding the great impulse given to it by the works of Giotto. Giunta was not noticed by Vasari. NICCOLA PISANO was equally distinguished as sculptor and architect, and must hold the same rank in the former art that Giunta does in painting. He distinguished himself as early as 1225 at Arezzo, where he executed the celebrated tomb of the Countess Matilda. He executed the church of the Frari at Venice, and was the pioneer of the Renaissance in Italian sculpture and in architecture. He died in 1278. GIOVANNI PISANO, the son and assistant of Niccolò, and likewise one of the greatest of the Italian sculptors and architects of Italy, died at Pisa in 1309, and was placed in the same tomb with his father in the Campo Santo. ANDREA PISANO was another early artist of Pisa, but nearly a century later than Giunta; he was a sculptor, architect, and the friend of Giotto, a few years senior. Andrea was born about 1280. Of his works still extant by Andrea 'the bronze' is the Baptistery of St. John (see Ghiberti).

the most important. These two gates are still perfect; the exact date of their execution is disputed, whether they were finished in 1330, or only commenced in that year. The reliefs are from the life of John the Baptist, and the general design of the gate is said to have been made by Giotto; but Giotto's share, if any, must have been more that of the architect than the sculptor, though even defining the panels and indicating the subjects; he can scarcely have had more to do with the design than his, or his name would have been more intimately associated with them. The work appears to have been modelled by Andrea and his son Nino, and the castings commenced by some Venetian artists in 1330, and the complete gates to have been finished and gilded in 1339, with the exception of the decorations of the architrave, which were added many years afterwards by Vittorio, the son of Lorenzo Ghiberti, in order to make them harmonize with the other two sets of gates executed by his father. The gates of Andrea were originally the centre of the Baptistery, opposite to the cathedral, but were afterwards removed to the side, to give place to the more beautiful work of Ghiberti, in the year 1424. Andrea was made citizen of Florence, and died there in 1345; he was buried in the cathedral Santa Maria del Fiore. All three sets of gates have been well engraved in outline by Uffizi, Le tre Porte del Battisterio di Firenze. Florence, 1823.—(Vasari, Vite de' Pittori, &c. 1. Flor., 1846, seq.; Cicognara, Storia della Scultura; Rumohr, Italiensche Forschungen; Uffizi, Storia della Pittura Italiana.) [R.N.W.]

PIANSKI, G. C., a Ger. philologist, 1725-90.

PISISTRATUS, a citizen of Athens who raised himself to the sovereign authority in the time of Solon, to whom he was related, B.C. 560. Compelled to retire from the city by the conspiracy of Clearchus and Lycurgus, he returned soon after by offering a compromise, but was obliged to retire again, and suffer an exile of eleven years, which he spent in making preparations to recover his authority. In the eleventh year he reappeared at the head of an army and regained his power, which he retained till his death, B.C. 527. He was a beneficent ruler, and did much to promote the rise of Greek literature. We owe to him the poems of Homer in their present form, Pisistratus having collected them, as they were scattered in detached parts throughout Greece, and digested them into order.

PISSAREFF, A., a Russian poet, 1801-1828.

PISSIEU, ANNE DE. See ESTAMPES.

PISTORIUS, JOHN, a Ger. controversialist, son of a Lutheran divine of the same name, 1546-1608.

PITCAIRNE, ARCHIBALD, an eminent physician, born and educated at Edinburgh, and eventually settled there after holding a professorship at Edinburgh. He founded his medical system upon his knowledge of mathematics, and wrote several learned works in support of it. Among his more general writings may be mentioned a vindication of the claims of Harvey, 1652-1713.

PITHOIS, C., a French writer, died 1676.

PITHON, PETER, a French magistrate, probably learned as a juriconsult and philologist, and the first to publish the laws of the Visigoths. He is represented by De Thou as one of the first men of his age, as well for probity, candour, and real liberty, as for the extent of his learning, the soundness of his judgment, and his political wisdom; born at Troyes 1539, died 1596. His brother, FRANCIS, also a juriconsult, 1543-1621.

PITISCUS, BARTHOLOMEW, a German mathematician and astronomer, 1561-1613. His nephew, SAMUEL, a learned philologist, 1637-1717.

PITOT, HENRY, a French mathematician, tactician, and engineer, especially of canals, 1695-1771.

PITROU, R., a French engineer, 1684-1750.

PITS, JOHN, a native of Southampton, who went to France, and becoming a catholic was protected by the cardinal of Lorraine, known as a theologian and biographer, died 1616.

PITT, CHRISTOPHER, an English clergyman, author of miscellaneous poems, and a translation of Virgil, Vida's Art of Poetry, &c., 1699-1748.

PITT, THOMAS, the founder of the family of the great earl of Chatham, was born in Dorsetshire 1653, and towards the end of the century became governor of Fort St. George, in the East Indies. He made a large fortune, chiefly owing to his possession of a diamond, by which he cleared considerably more than £100,000. In 1716 he was appointed governor of Jamaica. He sat in four parliaments for Old Sarum and Thirsk, and died 1726. His eldest son, ROBERT PITT, father of William, earl of Chatham, d. 1727. See CHATHAM.

PITT, WILLIAM, the second son of the great Lord Chatham, was born at Hayes in Kent, on the 28th of May, in the year 1759. He was educated at home under private tuition until at the age of fourteen he entered at Cambridge. His biographers are profuse in their testimonies to his precocious capacity and readiness in acquiring knowledge. He was indeed saturated with tuition of all kinds, and taught from his earliest youth by his haughty father to consider himself the hope of the country. He thus acquired at the age when young men are just ridding themselves of boyish shyness an austere self-possession, which imparted to everything he did an air of wisdom and authority. He never knew the nature of diffidence, and the easy assurance with which he took whatever duty or office presented itself, is supposed, not without good reason, to have deceived the world as to the extent of his capacity. In January, 1781, he was returned to parliament for Appleby, and at once threw himself into the business of the session with the confidence of an old debater. He boldly adopted the projects of reform, then rising into shape in Britain side by side with the discontents in France, and in 1782 brought on his motion for a reform in the representation of the people. On the accession of Lord Shelburne's administration in July, he was made chancellor of the exchequer, and this invitation to retire from the party who were deemed utopian theorists, showed that a well-founded reliance was placed in his ambition, overcoming his reforming propensities. It was in the December of 1783 that King George dismissed the coalition ministry, and placing young Pitt at the head of the cabinet, conducted with his able championship that battle in which the crown defeated the political aristocracy. Among the statesmen of the day, Dundas, afterwards his right hand man, had the sagacity to see beforehand that he would be victorious, and to sacrifice other prospects for a participation in his fortune. Once established in power, he ruled through seventeen of the most eventful years of European history. When his reign began he had not quite abandoned his old reforming views, and being well versed in the newly promulgated philosophy of Adam Smith, he was partial to the principle of free trade. But the French revolution drove him back from all progressive projects, and the frightened country submitted to a sort of ministerial and parliamentary despotism. The great conflict in which the young minister of a constitutional country measured his strength with the young military despot of France, is matter of history familiar to all. That Pitt, although perhaps his powers have been somewhat exaggerated by panegyrists, showed great resources cannot be denied. His readiness in debate and promptness in comprehending business, have seldom been equalled. What chiefly surprises people of the present day in the history of his career, is the vast amount of dissipation, and especially of drinking, with which his great labours were diversified; but perhaps his frailties have, like his abilities, been exaggerated. It was said of him that he never was truly young, that he never had the freshness, naturalness, and openness of youth; it is certain that he grew old before his time, and he died of a broken and exhausted constitution, on the 23d of January, 1806. [J.H.B.]

PITTACUS, one of the seven sages of Greece, was a native of Mitylene, in the isle of Lesbos, where he was born about B.C. 650. He was invested with the sovereign power by the people of Athens, and voluntarily abdicated after re-establishing the authority of the laws. Died abt. 570 B.C.

PITTERI, J. M., a Venetian engraver, 1703-87.

PITTIS, T., an English divine, died 1687.

PITTON, J. S., a Fr. historian, about 1620-90.

PITTONI, J. B., a Venet. painter, 1687-1767.

PITTS, WILLIAM, an English artist, 1790-1840.

PIUS I., pope and saint of Rome, is supposed to have commenced his pontificate, or rather bishoprick, about 152 or 153, and to have died 157. The date of his reign, however, as given by other authorities, is from 127 to 142. He was succeeded by Anicetus. PIUS II. (ÆNEAS SYLVIVS PICCOLOMINI), born 1405, succeeded Calixtus III. 1458, died 1464. He was a great theologian, diplomatist, canonist, historian, orator, and, in fact, a pontiff universally accomplished. He made great efforts to organize a crusade against the Ottomans. PIUS III. (ANTONIO TODESCHINI), enjoyed a pontificate of twenty-five days, 1503. PIUS IV. (GIOV. ANGELO MEDICI, or MEDICINO, of Milan), succeeded Paul IV. 1559, died 1565. In his reign the council of Trent finished its sittings, which lasted from 1545 to 1563. PIUS V. (MICHELE GHISLERI), born of an obscure family in Piedmont 1504, succeeded the preceding 1566, he died 1572. In his reign, the bull In Cœna Domini was published, which claims privileges for the clergy irreconcilable with the civil authority; he was succeeded by Gregory XIII., and canonized by Clement XI. in 1713. PIUS VI. and PIUS VII. (following articles.) PIUS VIII. (FRANCESCO XAVIERO CASTIGLIONI), born near Ancona 1761, suc. Leo XII. 1829, and d. after reigning twenty months 1830. His successor was Gregory XVI.

PIUS VI., pope of Rome, by name GIOVANNI ANGELO BRASCHI, descended from a noble family, was born at Cesena 1717, and succeeded Cleme XIV., better known as Ganganelli, 15th Februar 1775. The first five years of his reign were occupied with public works and economical projects—among others the draining of the Pontine marshes, which helped to embarrass his finance and impoverish the state. In 1780 his politic troubles commenced by the accession of Joseph the power of the empress Queen Maria Theresa the new emperor being bent on separating the church from the papal jurisdiction. This he did by suppressing a great number of monasteries, forbidding any intercourse between the remainder and Rome, and taking upon himself the nomination of bishops—even of those in Italy. The agitator intrigues, and social troubles consequent on the proceedings, kept the pope fully occupied till the French revolution; and then, the invasion of Italy the French occasioned him still greater difficulties. In 1791 Avignon was united to France, the pope pretended to a neutrality which he did not observe, heavy contributions were imposed on him, a Ferrara, Romagna, and the Bolognese, were incorporated with the newly-formed Cisalpine republic the price of peace, in fine, was the revocation of the papal edicts launched against the Jansenists, and the acknowledgment of the civil constitution of the French clergy. Some disorders in Rome between the French and Italians, in course of which the French general Duphot was shot, led to the expedition of Berthier, who arrived in Rome on the 10th of February, 1798, and on the 15th proclaimed it a republic. The Vatican was now occupied by the French troops, the apartment in which the pope sat plundered before his eyes, a even the ring stolen from his finger. He was taken prisoner, and being carried to France, died there in August, 1799. [E.F.]

PIUS VII., successor of the preceding, by name GREGORIO LUIGI BARNABA CHIARAMONTI, a man of noble descent, and a native of Cesena, was born 1740. He became a cardinal in 1785, and in that character propitiated the favour of the French in the period of his predecessor's humiliation. At the fall of Pius VI. the papacy was taken under the protection of the coalesced powers, and just about the time of his death the combined troops of Austria, Russia, and Naples, had succeeded in extinguishing the Roman republic. Cardinal Chiaramonti was elected pope, and took the name of Pius VII., at Venice, on the 13th of March 1800; at the same time he appointed Cardinal G. salvi his secretary. The power of the French revolution was now grasped by the hands of a master spirit, and instead of destroying the papacy Napoleon was resolved on moulding it to his purposes by whatever force might be necessary. This great man knew that a nation could not subsist without a religion, and that the genius of the French demanded it rather as an institution than an internal life. By the concordat of 1801, he restored catholicism in France, and bound Pius VII. to recognize the independence of the French church. In 1804 the pope was induced to crown the emperor at Paris, hoping, perhaps, to detach him from his purpose of extending the same principles of independence to Germany and Italy. This effort Pius VII. had the mortification to fail in, as he still resisted the policy of the emperor, ter, in 1808 and 1809, united all the states of a church to the French empire, and on being communicated, arrested the pope himself, and really carried him prisoner to Fontainebleau. Here, on the 25th of January, 1813, the pope signed a concordat granting all that Napoleon demanded, but retracted again, when the French on after were expelled from Germany. He now imprisoned and awaited the issue of events, and was restored to his capital on the 24th of May, 1814, by the coalition of the protestant states, in the house of Austria, against Buonaparte. Gonsalvi now resumed his functions as papal secretary, with a people reduced to servitude under princes who were the mere tools of Austria, and a papal conclave at Rome, who governed by a system of mere terror and corruption—and without the slightest regard for the privileges and prosperity of the papal subjects. In 1817 Pius VII. revoked the concordat of 1801, and concluded a treaty one with the French crown, one effect of which was the restoration of Avignon. This year, he commenced the persecution of the secret societies of patriots, known as the Carbonari, but was a little deterred by the revolutions of 1820 and 1821 in Spain, Naples, and Piedmont; the patriots at the same time being soothed by the friendly disposition of Gonsalvi. Affairs were in this feverish state when the aged pope died, as the result of an accident, on the 20th of August, 1823. His successor was Leo XII. [E.R.]

AVANTI, G. F., an Italian savant, 1689-1764.

ALIX, MARY, an Eng. dramatist, d. about 1720.

EXODATUS, a king of Caria, in Asia Minor, or known as the father of Mausoleus and Artabanus, whose names are familiar to history. He reigned in the 4th century B.C.

PIZARRO, FRANCISCO, the conqueror of Peru, was the illegitimate son of a Spanish colonel of infantry and a peasant girl of Estremadura. He was born at Truxillo about 1571. Neglected by his parents, he was suffered to grow up in ignorance and idleness. But he had a strong frame and a bold spirit; and, stirred by the marvellous tales with which Spain was filled about the newly-discovered world beyond the Atlantic, Pizarro left home for Hispaniola, and served for many years in the perilous and painful expeditions which Balboa, Pedrarias, and others, led into the interior and to the western coast of the American continent. Pizarro was fifty years old before he conceived the means of undertaking his great enterprise against the Peruvian empire, the wealth and splendour of which had long been rumoured among the Spanish settlements on the isthmus of Darien, and which no European had previously dared to attack; so formidable were the reports of its power, and so terrific were the hardships of the voyage and march, which were to be overcome before the frontier of Peru could be reached. Pizarro's associate in his enterprise was Diego Almagro, a soldier of fortune like himself. The first attempt against Peru was made in 1524, but produced nothing beyond the discovery of some islands and part of the coast of the Pacific, though the sufferings of the adventurers were extreme. Pizarro sailed again for Panama in 1526; and succeeded in exploring part of the Peruvian territory, and in conquering the wealthy city of Tumbes. Nothing but the most heroic constancy on the part of Pizarro could have overcome the toils and sufferings which he and his little band experienced. On one occasion he and a few followers were detained for several months on an almost barren island. Worn down with famine, cold, and disease, many of the Spaniards wished to abandon the disastrous enterprise and return to Panama. Pizarro assembled them, and traced with his sword a line on the sand from east to west; then turning towards the south, he said, 'Comrades, on that side are toil, hunger, nakedness, the drenching storm, battle, and death. On this side are ease and safety; but on that side lies Peru with its wealth; on this side is Panama and its poverty. Choose, each man, what best becomes a brave Castilian. For my part, I go to the south.' Saying this, Pizarro stepped across the line, and thirteen of his band followed. At the head of this scanty but determined remnant, Pizarro persevered; and the arrival of succour soon enabled him to leave the scene of suffering and trial, and to gain ocular proof of the value of the great prize which he aimed at. In 1528, Pizarro sailed to Spain, and there sought and obtained from Charles V. ample authority and rank for conducting the conquest of the great South American empire, the existence and results of which he was now able to demonstrate. But it was left to the adventurers themselves to provide the means of conquest; and when Pizarro, in January, 1531, sailed from Panama, on his third and last expedition, he had only 180 men under his command, 27 of whom had horses. Some reinforcements reached him after he had landed on the coast near Peru; but the whole force, with which he ultimately advanced into the heart of that empire, did not exceed 110 foot soldiers, 67 cavalry, and two small pieces of artillery called falconets. With this force (aided, however, largely by fraud) Pizarro overthrew the dominion of the Peruvian Incas, which extended over 35 degrees of latitude, over many millions of an orderly, industrious, civilized, and wealthy population, and which was supported by large armies of well disciplined and veteran soldiers. Pizarro, after a march of great difficulty across the mountain chain of the Andes, reached the city of Caxamalca, near which the Peruvian Inca, or sovereign, Atahualpa, was encamped with numerous forces. Pizarro persuaded Atahualpa to visit the Spanish camp, and then suddenly attacked the Peruvians who attended their monarch, and after a frightful massacre succeeded in making the Inca his prisoner. The submission of part of the empire was now easily effected, as the Peruvians obeyed implicitly the commands which their captive monarch issued at the Spaniards' dictation. After immense quantities of gold had been extorted from the natives as a ransom for their sovereign, Pizarro brought him to trial under a charge of exciting insurrection against the Spaniards, and put him to death. Pizarro then set up another member of the Peruvian family as Inca, and marched upon Cuzco, the capital of the empire. The Spaniards now encountered frequent and obstinate resistance from the natives; but the terror of the European fire-arms, and of the cavalry, told strongly in favour of the invaders; though consummate generalship and indomitable bravery were also required. Pizarro's skill was ever ready in each emergency, and his courage was a quality in which the Spanish soldier was never deficient. Unhappily, he was equally signalized by insatiable avarice, remorseless cruelty, and habits of brutal license and outrage. Cuzco was taken by the Spaniards; and a desperate attempt, which the Indians made a few years afterwards to recapture it, was ultimately repulsed, though not till after the European power in Peru had been brought to the very brink of destruction. Feuds and civil war soon broke out among the conquerors: and Almagro, Pizarro's old comrade, was put to death, after being defeated in a pitched battle which he and his partizans fought against Pizarro's adherents. Pizarro, who now bore the title of marquess, ruled Peru for some time with almost royal power. He had founded the city of Lima as the new capital of Peru, and he devoted himself to its adornment, to planting European settlements in various parts of the provinces, to sending out expeditions of discovery beyond the frontier, and to working the mines, with which the conquered regions abounded. The lot of the natives under him was miserable; and though he lavished wealth and land on his own favourite followers, he treated the other Spaniards, especially those who had followed Almagro, with harshness and contempt. A conspiracy was at last formed against him by some of the surviving friends of that chief. They suddenly attacked Pizarro in his palace on the 26th June, 1541, and killed him after a desperate resistance. [E.S.C.]

PIZZI, J., an Italian writer, 1719-1790.

PLAAT, ANDR. H. J. VANDER, a famous Dutch engineer and hydraulic mechanician, 1761-1819.

PLACE, CL. DE LA, a French priest, 17th ct.

PLACE, FRANCIS, a native of Durham, dist. for his etchings of landscapes, &c., died 1728.

PLACE, FRANCIS, well known as a politician, was born in humble circumstances 1772, and began his public career as secretary to the Constitutional Association, which numbered Hardy and Horne Tooke among its members. He afterwards participated in the agitation for every great measure of reform, and especially in that for the abolition of the corn laws. He was also a great promoter of inventions and the industrial arts. Died 1854.

PLACE, J. DE LA, a Fr. protestant, 1596-1665.

PLACE, PETER DE LA, in Latin Platianus, or Platea, a French jurisconsult, historian, and magistrate, born about 1520, killed at the massacre of St. Bartholomew 1572.

PLACE, P. A. DE LA, a French novelist and dramatic writ., once editor of the Mercury, 1707-93.

PLACENTINUS, or PLACENTIUS, PETER, author of a Latin poem, entitled 'Pugna Porcorum,' in 360 verses, every word of which begins with a P, died about 1548.

PLACETTE, J. DE LA, a Fr. protes., 1639-1718.

PLACIDIA, daughter of Theodosius the Great, born at Constantinople about 388, became, in second nuptials, the wife of Constantius, a general of Honorius. Her son by him became emperor of the West under the title of Valentinian III., but the government was really administered by the empress-mother Placidia. Died at Rome 450.

PLANCHE, R. DE LA, a Fr. historian, 16th ct.

PLANCHER, URBAIN, a learned Benedictine of St. Maur, au. of a history of Burgundy, d. 1750.

PLANCIUS, P., a Flem. protestant, 1552-162

PLANCUS, LUCIUS, a Roman tribune and consul, supposed founder of Lyons, died about 1

PLANCY, W., a French Hellenist, died 1568.

PLANER, J. J., a German botanist, 1745-178

PLANK, T. J., a German historian, 1751-188

PLANQUE, F., a French physician, 1696-176

PLANT, J. T., a German writer, 1758-1794.

PLANTA, JOSEPH, minister of the German R formed church in London, librarian of the Briti Museum, and historian of the Helvetic Conf deracy, 1744-1827.

PLARTIN, C., a French printer, 1514-1589.

PLATEN, D. F. DE, a Pruss. general, 1714-8

PLATER, F., a physician of Basle, 1536-161

PLATIERE, IMBERT DE LA, a French gener known as the marshal de Bourdillon, died 1567.

PLATINA, the commonly received name of BA TOLOMEO DE SACCHI, an Ital. historian, 1421-8

PLATNER, JOHN ZACHARY, an eminent en gical writer and professor at Leipzig, 1694-174 His son, ERNEST, a physician, moralist, and met physician, 1744-1818.

[Plato—From an Ancient Gem.]

PLATO, born at Athens or Egina about 4 a.c.; died in his eightieth year. There is no other name in Speculative Philosophy like Plato's. I stands to the whole world of Thought, as Shakespeare in Modern Times; not unapproachable, neither unapproached, but possessing an unchallengeable and scarcely explicable supremacy. is very wonderful—the catholic power and insight of this illustrious man, the entireness of his knowledge and sympathy, and of course the reach of his intuitions. M. COUSIN has recently claimed him as an Eclectic; falsely, if by the epithet, would indicate a philosopher who selects; wandering through all by-gone speculations, he found a piece here and a piece there, and he fused them cunningly, so that neither Sect nor solitary Thinker might feel that he or it had no part in him: but, with truth in the highest degree, if he desired to claim for the mind Plato a range so vast, a power to adventure deep and soar so high, that, what all schools pre-existent, and that have flourished since, saw or partially, he saw completely, and so could round off their contentions, and adjust their correspondences into one grand Orb. The first and eral view we can take of him, tends directly towards such an estimate. Greece—and the preceding and subsequent World as well—was divided between two opposing inclinations, that evolved two hostile camps; the one searching after Unity, the other finding in Phenomena the secret of Things. PLATO, grasped both, with all the force of his powerful and perfectly balanced mind: he comprehended both sides of the medal of life. Athirst, at every moment of his life, and every movement of his mind, for intercourse with that Absolute Good, which is the Universal Giver, and for whose sake all things are,—he yet sympathy as thorough, with every discurtendency of the Intellect, rejoicing in its vagaries and distinctions, loving Art and Politics, Human Interests and Laws, no less than the most mundane philosopher of them all. Turn to the phase of the Mind of Plato towards Modern Science, there is no feature of our ever shifting cosmogony—not an event amid the buzz, and whirling around us—on which he would not have shed some welcome light: carry him to Egypt, to the land of Menu—there too, he would have felt at home, only aloft, because nearer the centre of Universal Life, than those already absorbed, emotional Eremites. Notice his Theodicee. On the one hand, MATTER, the slave of Necessity, and itself without Order; on the other, GOD, Intelligence, Freedom, transforming and organizing for us this rude Substance—incited by his Eternal Reason: the Idea of Good labouring ever more to emerge through multiplying forms into clearer and clearer expression: hence that march ever onwards; hence, also, the possibility of Wisdom and Philosophy. From the extreme beginnings of thought, what School which has ascended among the mysteries, ever elaborated a fairer Synthesis? It is not merely the profundity, but this very consciousness of Plato, which renders the due comprehension of him, arduous. A System, one can at any time survey; but a noble and a full grown edifice in variety as well as reach, a type of the incomprehensible Universe: didactic Thinkers, even so great as ARISTOTLE, may by dint of earnestness be gone round and round; but what formula is adequate for a SHAKSPEARE, or a GOETHE? A Genius, instinct with Poetry as with Knowledge, with which Science is not higher than Art, and which permits no single Faculty to be exclusive: can be defined only by its unexhausted Inquiry over the unfolding of the World, and therefore belongs essentially to the category of the Incomprehensible. Nevertheless the student must be continually warned against those ordinary comments of ordinary interpreters of Plato. No man wrote more clearly. The Truths he utters, are hard to realize; but the Expression is transparent as a mountain brook: no marvel though Plato has been held in this country obscure, seen at a similar charge is laid, and moderately approved, against a writer of a much more orderly, but in distinctness and precision not inferior to old Euclid himself,—IMMANUEL KANT! It is seen, that Plato is a Mystic, and veils, or disguises faces Truth, through the excesses of his imagination. Plato is as real as his immortal Master: he is not a Mystic, unless SOCRATES was one; imagination, he has to overflowing. BEAUTY hovers ever over him, and immortal fragrance is shed on the fluttering of her wings. The music of his periods reminds one of the murmuring of the Bees on Hymmetus: But Plato's sense of Beauty, only led him nearer to the Centre and Cause of Existence; and his Imagination—unlike fashionable freaks of Fancy—was the purest and loftiest phase of the REASON: it helped him to the discernment of pure Truth, because liker than any other Faculty in the Finite Mind, to the Creative Thought which preluded the birth of these myriads of gorgeous Worlds.—In proceeding to give an account of Plato's writings, we desire to acknowledge our obligations to the sketch by MR. MAURICE. Unless, in one or two points, at which we may detect the presence of the general Theory of the accomplished Writer, that sketch quite surpasses in its method and sympathy every other known to us:—on behalf of SCHLEIERMACHER, an exception might indeed be entered; but we cannot be detained by AST or SOCHER. Taught by SOCRATES, it could in no wise fail, that Plato, should discern, equally with his Master, that the first step in Philosophy, is to persuade men to ascertain that they know what they talk of—that they really comprehend the significance of the propositions on whose behalf they are prepared to contend. No form or vehicle for teaching could so well subserve this purpose as the Dialogue: it was the written representative of the unforgotten way-side interrogatories of Socrates; and in the hands of Plato—who, as we have said, held Reality as firmly as he held Speculation—the Dialogue was no fiction, but an actual ascent, through the obstructions of Individual Character and Virtues, up towards unseen and manifold Truths, lying as a substratum underneath the most vague and confused Opinion. How superbly, in this respect, each dialogue unwinds! Never to discourage, far less to countenance the faintest element of Doubt, but to awaken the Conscience, and show Mankind that, superior to shadow-land, there is Reality and Light;—for this, and no lesser purpose, Plato followed his immortal Master, and constructed and exemplified that unrivalled Dialectic. In the first (speaking according to Method, not to Time) class of the Platonic Dialogues, we find accordingly, an earnest effort to establish the cardinal Truth, that even beneath Fantasy there is Substance; that beneath whatever end, has been seriously pursued as a true end by Humanity, there is something, which if disentangled from the adventitious, would appear adequate as a purpose to arrest the attention of a healthful mind. While fusing in this way the Cyrenaic, Cynic, and Megaric Schools,—i.e. divesting them of their speciality and exaggeration, Plato, once and again, demonstrates that the main error betokened by incomplete systems, is not the mere incompleteness of such assertions as—'Pleasure is the Good'—'Self-denial is the Good'—'Being is the Good'; but that it lies in the carelessness, often amounting to moral inaptitude for all Inquiry, which hinders men from distinguishing between the reality inhering in the proposition they maintain, and its simple accidents. And his invariable inference is, that the mental condition adequate to Inquiry, is indeed a high moral attainment; for that he only who governs himself, who has subjected himself to continuous discipline, and can restrain his lower Nature, will ever be capable of that highest exercise of the Faculties which conducts to Truth. It may be asserted with all justice—that, which, ages afterwards, BACON accomplished for Physical Investigations, by his masterly exposition of the misleading Idola, Plato in the course of his Dialogues has thoroughly accomplished, in a way not less masterly, for the wider and more arduous sphere of Moral and Social Inquiry. Men have long practically acknowledged the authority of the dicta of Bacon: unhappily they are as yet little skilled in the precepts of the more ancient Organon.—In the second class of the Platonic Dialogues, we are led to a more difficult order of contemplations;—our Inquirer now passing to the Ante-Socratic Philosophers, and discoursing of Xenophanes, Parmenides, Heraclitus. It is singular that extremes almost always meet:—Xenophanes and Heraclitus, or—still farther down—Protagoras, no sympathy can bind them, and yet we can trace a closest resemblance. Did not Xenophanes simply inculcate, that, of BEING however real, Man can know nothing? And Protagoras, holding by the flux of Heraclitus, only went to say, that, immersed amid notions, and subject to temperament and circumstance, each Man is reduced to frame a Universe for himself. Plato confronted, while, in one sense, accepting both; and during the polemic that ensues, we find gradually coming out into prominent relief, that chief peculiarity of what we may term his Metaphysics, viz.: the DOCTRINE of IDEAS. Most true, with Xenophanes, that BEING, or the Parmenidean ONE, is not representible or expressible, by the floating confused notions which occupy the sensual understanding: nevertheless, is not the existence of these very notions—these efforts, however imperfect, of the Understanding, to express it,—proof that there is in Being a reality to be expressed; nay that attributes belong to it, in so far answering to these notions? So also with Protagoras; it is very certain that men practically differ as to the Actions and Forms, entitled to rank under the Categories of Justice, Goodness, and Beauty. but is there not inherent in all men, conviction of the existence of a very Just, a very Good, a very Beautiful,—else, whence sprung those imperfect notions, and what upholds them? Thus far, it is evident that Plato merely asserts the reality of what in modern nomenclature we term Absolute Truths; but thereupon the question arises, what are these, and whence come they? How does the Mind reach them? Can knowledge reposing on mere Negations, or on the Contingent, ever take on the character of the Absolute? Many of our Modern Philosophies have remained satisfied with asserting the existence of Absolute Truths, and offering an enumeration of them. KANT, it will be recollected, went farther—he found the Origin of the characteristics of Universality and Necessity, in Laws or Conditions of the Thinking Organism: that element of our Judgments, he said, is absolute, which—irrespective of their subject-matter—depends on the mind's own essential structure:—absolutum, with him has thus a purely subjective origin. The immortal Greek adventured beyond both. Too scientific to remain with mere enumerations; neither was he arrested like KANT at the boundary of mere subjective knowledge considered that Absolute Truths or IDEAS, duct us towards the mist-enshrouded coast of TOLOGY—directly connecting the FINITE with the INFINITE. The general cast of his remarkable conception, is the following. Of things that exist, there are pure forms or archetypes, imperfectly discerned by our senses, sensual understanding; but in the cognition which alone, Knowledge, as distinguished from Opinion, consists. This Form, or Archetype Idea, is a Thing's very Essence: it is the reality belonging to it. Far from being a notion or conclusion framed by the Mind, it is wholly independent of the perceiving mind; and is felt in so, whenever true Knowledge is attained. It therefore, is not a system-builder; his loftiest attainment reaches no higher than this,—through endeavour, through discipline, through virtue may see what is. Neither, however, are the substantial archetypal Forms, in themselves independent. Every Idea depends on some one prior to it, and the root, consummation, and many of all, is in the Idea of that Supreme Perfect Being, to whom, as Thoughts, they long; and in whose proper Eternity alone, they can be thought of as Eternal. Assuredly we need not defend this Platonic system here; scarce we fear, have the few words permitted us, availed to offer more than a vague hint of it. Let the student, however, ponder well, on what Knowledge must have meant, as conceived by Plato—how lofty the aim of his Dialectic—how real objects, and how worthy the energies of, perhaps the most gifted speculative Genius who has left an impress upon the Earth! Nay, much lower our reader has made himself acquainted, through History, with its various proposals regarding this thorny problem as to Knowledge, let him reflect on what these have offered, in relation to that which our Human Spirit demands—and say which of them all, has recognized the conditions of that problem—or—down even to this later day—succeeded in satisfying these, better than Plato's?—Of the chief class of the Dialogues, we have no space to say anything adequate. Having established the nature of Knowledge and the way to attain it, Plato proceeds to search after Unity in the sphere of Inquiry—in reference to Man, Society, and Nature. Of Plato's Physics as unfolded in that puzzling and wonderful Timæus, we do not speak:—let us just glance at his method of results in social speculation, as set forth in the Republic—earnestly recommending to the English reader, the study of the work itself, by aid of the recent translation by Messrs. Vaughan & Dicks of Cambridge. The dialogue opens, as usual, dramatically. But as soon as the characters are defined, the question is mooted whether Justice is something eternal, or the mere Creature of Society—that is, whether Society has a basis in the principle of Unity, independent of shifting facts. What then is Justice in a State? As shown in the first two books, there cannot be two kinds of Justice—a private Justice and a state Justice—the bond which unites man to his fellow, and the other, is the bond which bestows on every Society its proper degree of coherence. In illustratake up the picture of an actual Society, and criticise its arrangements. Nowhere is Plato less a mere speculator than in this part of the Republic. So far from being an Utopian, he starts with the premise that every selfishness exists, and every evil result of it: and his practical question is, under what conditions Society may nevertheless cohere? Would it at the ensuing discussion had been accepted as a lesson, by all Time! Not concerning himself with reward or police regulations for the repression of evil, Plato inquires, what are the Principles of life in any possible Society, and how they may best be developed? And his extensive treatment of this momentous subject has caused the Republic sometimes to be accounted a formal Essay on Education. Classes are named as essential to all living Societies—the Magistracy representing the Idea of Wisdom—Guardians representing the idea of Fortitude—and the Masses, subsisting through operation of desire, self-restraining and subduing. Underneath all which, lies the fundamental conception of Justice, that, by the assertion of whose Supremacy, he preluded the whole. Here are parts of this superb dialogue so far reaching, that the conflicts and consequent morals of Modern Civilization can hardly as yet find appreciation for them. We refer especially to what has been termed Plato's Communism—his views of the ultimate relation of the classes. Concerning Problems, whose practical solution lies in the Future, it is wisest not to pronounce over absolutely: suffice it to refer only to indignation to the uses made of his doctrines here, to disparage his great name.—Again turning to the Dialogue itself, we must close this brief notice. The wisdom of Plato has taught and enriched the most learned and the greatest of past times: there is no healthier exercise for the earnest of now, than the study of his works. Nay there are errors all around us—errors in practical and speculative Politics, errors in speculative Religion—having their roots deep in the imperfect portions of our Modern Civilization, which can find nowhere other corrective.—The best edition of the works of his immortal Greek, is the recent one by Silbaum. [J.P.N.]

PLATO, a Greek poet, 5th century B.C.
PLATOFF, or PLATOW, COUNT, a famous champion of the Cossacks, distinguished against the Turks in Moldavia, and during the French invasion of 1812, born about 1763, died 1818.

PLATON, BEFFSCHIN, a Russian prelate, and distinguished theological writer, 1737-1812.

PLAUTUS, TITUS MACCIUS, regarded as the father of Latin comedy, is supposed to have been of Etruscan parentage, and was born in Umbria about 250 or 224 B.C. About twenty-one of his plays are still extant, the vast number attributed to him having been reduced within that limit by the critic Valerius Maximus. These have been frequently translated into Italian, French, German, and English, and Plautus has devoted an essay to the life and writings of Plautus. Died B.C. 184.

PLAYFAIR, JOHN, Professor, first of Mathematics, and then of Natural Philosophy in the University of Edinburgh; born 10th March, 1749, at the manse of Benvie, Forfarshire; died at Edinburgh, 19th July, 1819. Mr. Playfair, the son of a Scottish clergyman, was destined for the Church; and indeed he occupied the living of Liff and Benvie, for a few years after the death of his father in 1773; but his scientific and literary tastes, and the power he could bring to the illustration of whatever scientific subject arrested his attention, quickly embarked him on a different and very distinguished career. His bent towards Science, manifested itself quite early in life; for, previous to the date just mentioned, he had stood, although a young man, competitor for several Chairs in our Scottish Universities: in his earliest attempt in Marischal College Aberdeen, he was defeated only by the veterans Trail and Hamilton. From the manse of Benvie, he passed, after a short interval of connection with Mr. Ferguson of Raith, to the joint professorship (in company with Dr. Adam Ferguson) of Mathematics in Edinburgh; and from that year—1785—he devoted himself, with remarkable success, to the advancement and adornment of all leading inquiries concerning the Laws of Nature. Were proof needed of Playfair's unresting activity in the path of his affections, surely that is ample which the pages of the Edinburgh Review and of the Edinburgh Philosophical Transactions, will, to posterity, always afford. But activity was not his chief characteristic. With the instinct of a Mind placed above the Inquiry of its time, and therefore desecrating its headlands, or the points at which it was passing farthest into the unknown, he seldom thought or wrote, unless on those questions on whose solution in either way, depended the shape and course of some opening and future science. To Playfair, Scotland owes its introduction to the arduous works of Laplace; it was he who first publicly explained the value and criticised the methods of great National Surveys; he was the exponent of the labours of Maskelyne, in determining the density of our globe; earliest he broke ground on the subject of Imaginary quantities, and renewed discussion on Porisms; he led the way in Modern Geology by his masterly Illustrations of the Huttonian Theory of the Earth; and he left as a model for Scientific Histories, that exquisite, although unfinished 'Dissertation on the Progress of Mathematical and Physical Science,' which prefaces the recent Editions of the Encyclopædia Britannica. Playfair was distinguished by yet higher attributes. No man ever excelled him in the power of effective exposition; and this is equivalent to asserting that he had that appreciation of Method, which appertains only to minds of the highest order, for it involves an almost instinctive power of separating between the important and the unimportant, and seizing the features of that Harmony, which underlies all phenomena. An intuition, we say; for the gift seems inexplicable, unless as an expression more or less distinct, of that correlation between Mind and the external Universe, which LEIBNITZ designated as a Pre-established Harmony. But even these excellencies, great and rare as they are, do not in our estimation equal another—viz.: the exquisite temper and wholeness of the Man. The memory of Playfair has yet scarcely faded amid the best circles of Edinburgh; and affection for him, is, with many, as an heir-loom or favourite tradition that will descend. He was an example, in all things, of what culture—apart from mere attainment—can make a Man. The finest passage of the Roman Orator in his Archias, or the well-known lines of OVID:—

ingenuas didicisse fideliter artes, Emollit mores, nec sinit esse ferus;

when laid beside practical life and actual character, seem oftener a satire than a laudation; but Playfair might have recited them and never blushed. Mild and manly, liberal generous and sedate, the best of the rising minds of his time thronged around him, and drew strength and fair resolve from the symmetrical nature they contemplated. It is a good thing to advance science by original discovery; but infinitely greater that scientific thought should advance and emancipate the Man. Our Scottish Metropolis was at that period rarely fortunate. Beside Playfair, Dugald Stewart taught,—a man of corresponding equality and command of temper, of singular openness and moral reach. Others resembled them; for, in virtue of their power of assimilation, two Minds so distinguished, could not stand alone. Nor must we omit from the list, Professor John Millar of Glasgow—author of the Historical View of the English Government. It is not too much, to say that by giving tone and expansion to the hearts and intellects around them, and growing up under their care, these remarkable persons have exercised most important influence on the recent progress of Britain, and thus on the destinies of the world. May Scotland never present herself under another garb! We have certainly no ambition to ejaculate,—

*Roma! Roma! Roma!
Non è più come era prima!*

[J.P.N.]

PLAYFAIR, WILLIAM, brother of the preceding, an ingenious inventor and author, 1759-1823.

PLAYFORD, J., a writer on music, 1613-1693.

PLEE, A., a French botanist, died 1825.

PEYEL, J., an Austrian pianist, 1757-1833.

PLINY, the Elder, (Caius Plinius Secundus,) a distinguished writer on natural history and botany, was born A.D. 23, most probably at Novocomum, the modern Como (though Verona disputes with it the honour of being his birth-place). He died in A.D. 79. Inferior in grasp of intellect, but ranking only second to Aristotle as a natural historian, the name of Pliny shines out through the mist of antiquity with particular lustre. In his youth he served in the army, and in his more mature years held some important appointments in the state. Possessing an extraordinary aptitude for collecting information, and endowed with an amazing love for study, his whole life was devoted to the prosecution of scientific pursuits. Rising before day-break, the early part of the morning was employed by him as his time for transacting business. The rest of the day was spent in study, and even during his meals, while taking his bath, or while on a journey, he had a reader attending him, to read from some favourite author. He took notes from every work he read, for he used to say, 'There was no book so bad but what might afford something valuable to be derived from it.' His writings were numerous, but the only one that has reached our times is his famous 'Natural History.' This great work is a perfect mine of observations; though unfortunately the true and the fabulous are mixed up in nearly equal proportions. It contains, he says himself, extracts from no fewer than 2,000 volumes, from authors of all kinds, travellers, historians, geographers, philosophers, and physicians. He departed of it to the natural history of animals, at the four books which treat of them, he has amass an immense number of facts, such as they were known and believed at that time. The arrangement he adopts is according to their scientific importance. The part which treats of botany occupies a much larger space; ten books containing the history of plants, and five, the remainder derived from them. It is unfortunately impossible now to recognize many of the plants he has described; but his merits as a botanist or zoologist are not to be judged of by comparing his knowledge with ours, but by recollecting the age in which he lived, and the effects which his works have had in keeping alive the knowledge of nature during dark ages which succeeded him. His death is remarkable. During a tremendous eruption of Mount Vesuvius, Pliny, who had then the command of the fleet, wishing to save the poor inhabitants of the country, in the neighbourhood of the volcano, and, at the same time, anxious to examine in person the awful phenomenon, sailed to the coast of terror, and was unfortunately suffocated by noxious fumes. It is generally believed that this was the same eruption of Vesuvius that destroyed Herculaneum. [W]

[Pliny the Younger—From an Ancient Bust.]

PLINY, the Younger, a nephew and adopted son of the preceding, distinguished as an orator, historian, and statesman, was born at Como in A.D. 62. His mother, Plinia, was a sister of Pliny the Elder, and he remained under the care of the latter till his eighteenth year, when the eruption of Vesuvius took place, which proved fatal to his protector. He began his career as a Roman advocate the year following, and in the reign of Emperor Trajan held a government in Bithynia. The time of his death is uncertain.

PLOT, ROBERT, a native of Kent, author of 'The Natural History of Oxford and Staffordshire,' 1640-1696.

PLOTINUS, the most famous teacher of the new Platonic school, was born at Lycopolis gypt about A.D. 204. The original bent of his mind was to speculation, and he had prosecuted his studies under Ammonius Saccas, at Alexandria, for eleven years, when, in his thirty-ninth year, he joined the expedition of Gordian against the Parthians, as a means of enabling him to study philosophy of the East. At the emperor's death he found his way back to Antioch, and afterwards went to Rome, where he taught for six-and-twenty years with great popularity, and where he gradually developed his system and composed many books, which were corrected and arranged by his pupil Porphyry. He died in Campania in A.D. 274. Porphyry divided his master's 54 books into six heads, or sections of nine. The metaphysics of Plotinus are obscure in their subtlety, though Plato is his acknowledged guide and pattern. He held that in order to perfect knowledge, the subject and object must be united, that the intelligent agent and the thing understood—the apprehending and the apprehended, must not be in separation; the spirit having everything spiritual within itself. Great stress was laid by him upon pure intuition, as some one of its gleams even the absolute and unconditioned might be discovered. Out of the spirit he developed the soul, which is brought into contact with the sensuous world. Plotinus had learned Eclecticism from Ammonius, but he added to it mysticism peculiar to himself, while he attempted to clothe Paganism in the garb of a philosophical theism. Probably towards the end of his life his transcendental visions and extacies were the result of a diseased organization, which had been reduced and emaciated by continued abstinence. His system acquired great popularity in subsequent years, and sometimes opposed Christianity was often modified it. Creuzer's edition of Plotinus in 8 vols. 4to was printed at the Oxford University press in 1835, and the Enneads appeared in a Latin translation by Marsilius Ficinus, Venice, 1492. [J.E.]

PLUQUET, G., a Ger. metaphys., 1716-90.
 PLUQUET, C., an English Jesuit, 1743-1821.
 PLUQUET, EDMUND, a Catholic lawyer, author of 'Commentaries and Reports,' 1517-1584.
 PLUQUET, FRANCIS, an Irish barrister, known as a historian and miscellaneous writer, d. 1829.
 PLUQUET, NOEL A., a professor of rhetoric at Lyons, distinguished as a naturalist and man of letters, and for his opposition to the bull 'Unigenitus.' He is author of 'Spectacle de la Nature,' 9 vols., 'Histoire du Ciel, Idées des Poètes, des Philosophes et de Moïse,' 2 vols., 'La Mécanique des langues,' and some lesser works, 1688-1761.
 PLUQUET, L., an Eng. botanist, 1642-1710.
 PLUQUET, C., a French botanist, 1646-1706.
 PLUMPTREE, JAMES, a Church of England minister, known as a miscellaneous wr., 1770-1832.
 PLUNKET, OLIVER, a Roman Catholic priest, executed on a false charge of treason, 1681.
 PLUNKET, WILLIAM CONYNHAM, Lord, was one of the Rev. Thomas Plunket, pastor of a Presbyterian congregation, Enniskillen, Ireland. He was born there in 1761; and after practising with success as a barrister, became a member of the Irish parliament, under the patronage of Lord Clonmell. He soon distinguished himself in opposition to the government, and especially in relation to the legislative union, notwithstanding which he appeared for the crown on the prosecution of the patriot, Emmett, and addressed the jury with inhuman earnestness, in order to dissociate himself, it is said, from the failing fortunes of those who were once his friends. Promotion followed as a matter of course. In 1803 he became solicitor-general for Ireland, and two years later attorney-general, from which time his rising fortunes were associated with those of Grenville and Fox in the government. In 1806-7 he was a member of the Whig cabinet with Lord Grenville and the late Earl Grey, and for many years afterwards was attached to the political interests of the former. The discontent which pervaded the country at the period of the Manchester massacre, and, in fact, to the end of the Castlereagh government in 1822, found no sympathy in the bosom of Lord Plunket, who earned the gratitude of the Tories by his oratorical services in the extenuation of their errors, and the defence of their policy. As the first law officer of the Irish government during the viceroyalty of Lord Wellesley, in the time of Canning, he shared in their general unpopularity, but somewhat later he acquired great credit by promoting the act of catholic emancipation. In 1827 he was raised to the peerage, and from that time to 1830 was chief justice of the Common Pleas in Ireland. After the retirement of Wellington, Lord Plunket had no further share in the legislation of the country, but remained chancellor of Ireland under the Whigs for many subsequent years, being succeeded in that office by Lord Campbell. His public life ended in 1841, and he died at the advanced age of eighty-nine in January, 1854. [E.R.]

PLUQUET, FRANCIS ANDREW ADRIAN, a learned French abbé, author of a 'Dictionary of Heresies,' 'Essay on Luxury,' and 'The Classical Books of the Chinese,' 1716-1790.

[Plutarch—From an Ancient Gem.]

PLUTARCH (PLUTARCHUS), was a native of Chaeronea, a city of Boeotia. The time of his birth is uncertain. From the few facts which he has recorded of himself, we learn that he was studying philosophy under Ammonius, at Delphi, when the Emperor Nero made his progress through Greece in the twelfth year of his reign, A.D. 66. His family was one of some importance in Chaeronea, and members of it had held the highest civic offices in their native city. Of the events of his life very little is known. It appears from his writings that he visited Italy and Rome, perhaps more than once; and that he delivered lectures in his vernacular language on philosophy, in the imperial city, during the reign of Domitian, which were attended by most of those who pretended to be employed in the study of philosophy. It is probable that the substance of these lectures was afterwards embodied in his moral writings. At a late period in life he began to read the Latin authors, having, as he states, during his residence in Italy, been prevented from acquiring a knowledge of the language by the circumstance of 'having so many commissions to execute, and so many people coming to him to receive his instructions in philosophy.' The latter part of his life was spent in honour and comfort in his native city, where he passed through various magisterial offices, and enjoyed the honour and emoluments of a priesthood. He had four sons and a daughter. The time and circumstances of his death are unknown; but his intellectual attainments and character have been transmitted to us in his works. The great work, which has immortalized the name of Plutarch, is his 'Parallel Lives,' which contains the biography of forty-six distinguished Greeks and Romans. The Lives are arranged in pairs, each pair containing the life of a Greek and a Roman, followed by a comparative estimate of the two. In a few cases the comparative estimate is omitted or lost. Besides these there are four other biographies which were written by Plutarch, and a life of Homer, which is sometimes attributed to him. Fifteen other biographies have been lost. Few of the ancient writers have attained so extensive celebrity as Plutarch. His 'Parallel Lives' have delighted and instructed every successive generation since they were given to the world; and are equally acceptable to people of every age and class. As materials for history they have been found not altogether trustworthy; but the chief object of the author was to delineate character as exhibited by the events of a man's life, whether these were important or trifling, and without a strict regard to the order in which they occurred. His other writings, which amount to upwards of sixty, are comprehended under the title of 'Moralia,' or 'Ethical Works;' though some of these are of an historical or anecdotal character. In all his writings a moral end is apparent. 'A kind, humane disposition, and a love of everything that is ennobling and excellent, pervade his writings, and give the reader the same kind of pleasure that he has in the company of an esteemed friend, whose singleness of heart appears in everything that he says or does.' [G.F.]

POCHARD, J., a French theologian, 1715-1786.

POCOCK, EDWARD, son of a minister of the Church of England, bearing the same name, was born at Oxford 1604, died 1691. He is greatly distinguished as an Oriental scholar, and for his learning as a theologian. His eldest son, EDWARD, published, in 1671, the 'Life of Hai Ebn Yokdan,' translated into English by Ockley; and his son, THOMAS, a translation from Menasseh Ben Israel 'On the Term of Life,' 1699.

POCOCK, SIR G., a brave admiral, 1706-1762.

POCOCK, ISAAC, a native of Bristol, first known as an historical painter, and afterwards a prolific writer for the stage, 1782-1835.

POCOCKE, RICHARD, a native of Southton, who became bishop of Ossory and Meath, is known as the writer of travels, 1704-1765.

PODESTA, J. B., an Italian Orientalist, 17

POELENBURG, CORNELIUS, a Dutch landscape painter, employed by Charles I., 1586-1 POERNER, C. G., a Ger. chemist, 1732-1

POGGI, S. M., an Ital. dramatist, 1685-17

POGGIANI, J., an Italian writer, 1522-15

POGGIO-BRACCIOLINI, a philologist, historian, one of the first promoters of Italian literature, 1380-1459.

POHL, J. C., a German physician and writer on vampyres, 1706-1780. J. EMMANUEL, his son, a physician and botanist, 1746-1800.

POHL, J. E., an Austrian botanist, 1784-

POILLY, FRANCIS, a French engraver, 1

1693. NICHOLAS, his brother and pupil, 1

1696. J. BAPTIST, son of Nicholas, died

FRANCOIS, brother of J. Baptist, died 1723.

POINSINET, A., a French dramatist, 173

POINSINET-DE-SIRRY, LOUIS, a French dramatic wr., translator, and antiquar., 1733-

POINTER, J., an English historian, last c.

POIRET, PETER, one of the greatest mystic writers produced in the protestant church, was at Mentz, where his father was a sword-maker,

1646, and became pastor of Amveil, in the city of Deux-Ponts, 1672. He was a master of Latin, Greek, and Hebrew languages, but had no taste for a merely scholastic divinity; he studied the philosophy of Descartes, and during the years that he retained his pastoral charge, published a work on Cartesian principles, entitled

'Cogitationes Rationalia de Deo, Animâ, et which produced a considerable sensation, and was attacked by Bayle. In 1676, the conquest of Louis XIV. occasioned Poiret's retreat to Hamburg, where he became acquainted with

Madame Bourignon, and through her experiences, in the first place, with the grounds of the mystic philosophy, the further study of which led him to point out the defects of the philosophy of Descartes, whose admirers have applied to his criticism the proverb of the viper and the fig. He published a digest of the mystic philosophy, including the experience of Madame Bourignon, wrought into a system, under the title of 'De Æconomia

Divina, or universal system of nature. The principle is abstraction, or the preference of a present illumination to reason; the same in essence as the quietism of Molinos, the annihilation of the philosophy, and the divine vision of Boehme.

In all these cases we are presented with a vast store of experience, demonstrating the existence of a super-sensual wisdom, as manifested to the present sceptical age in some rare examples of ecstacy, the physical preparation being really the same, though produced by different means. In 1684, when Poiret removed to Rheinsburg, in the neighbourhood of Leyden, where he died in 1745. A complete list of his works would be useless without a description of them, for which we are not space. The curious may consult the catalogue of his works, in the Memoirs of J. P. Nicéron, published at Paris 1727-1745.

POIREY, F., a French theologian, 1584-1

POIRIER, G., a learned ecclesiastic, 1724-1803.
 POIRSON, J. B., a Fr. geographer, 1761-1831.
 POISSON, N. J., a Fr. theologian, died 1710.
 POISSON. See POMPADOUR.
 POISSON, RAIMOND, a French actor and dramatic author, died 1690. His son, PAUL, an excellent comic actor, 1658-1735. PHILIP, son of al, an actor and dramatic author, 1682-1743.
 RNOULT, br. of Philip, a comic actor, d. 1753.
 POISSON, D. S., a French analyst, 1781-1840.
 POISSONNIER, PETER ISAAC, a physician and chemist, one of the first to read chemical lectures at Paris, and to devise the means of procuring fresh water from the sea, 1720-1798.
 POITEVIN, J., a Fr. astronomer, 1742-1807.
 POITIERS, DIANA OF. See DIANA.
 POITIERS, P. DE, a Fr. theologian, died 1205.
 POIVRE, N., a French naturalist, 1719-1786.
 POIVRE, PETER, a French ecclesiastic, known as a traveller and philosophical observer, 1715.
 POIX, L. DE, a French Orientalist, 1714-1782.
 POLANEO, C., a Spanish painter, 17th cent.
 POLANO, P., a doge of Venice, 1130-1148.
 POLE, REGINALD, the famous cardinal and papal legate in the reign of Queen Mary, was a younger son of Lord Montacute, cousin of Henry V. He was born at Stourton castle, in Staffordshire, 1500, and after completing his studies in the English and Italian universities, appeared at the court of Henry VIII. in 1525. In 1529 he went to Paris to avoid any share in the discussion of the king's divorce, but when Henry had resolved to submit the question to the foreign universities, the unlucky step caused his selection of Pole to present him in that city. Instead of yielding, he honestly returned home, and in 1531 refused the bishopric of York, which was offered him on condition of compliance. The king having dismissed him in anger, he consulted his safety by leaving the kingdom, and rejoined the company of distinguished men he had known at Padua and Venice. The literary circle in which he moved was formed by Caraffa, Sadolet, Gilberto, Fregoso, archbishop of Salerno, Bembo, and Contarini. These men even embraced the doctrine of Justification, and in their social meetings discussed the means of forming the papacy—their great principle being to preserve the unity of the church under papal government. In Italy, during the reign of Mary VIII., Reginald Pole rose to great distinction, and, on the accession of Paul III. in 1546, was raised to the cardinalate, as were his friends just mentioned. On the death of Paul, in 1549, it was almost determined to put the triple crown on his head. His place in English history is mentioned under the date 1553, that of the accession of Queen Mary, who at once invited him to England, and gave him the place of Cranmer, who she deposed, as archbishop of Canterbury. He lived in London, dignified as papal legate, in November, 1554, and was received by Mary in the presence of her husband, Philip II. of Spain, at Paul's cross. On this occasion, as we read in the correspondence of Bullinger, he addressed the queen with the salutation of the Virgin—'Hail full of grace,' &c. He advocated moderate measures in the council, as may be supposed from his humane disposition and his inclination to popular opinions. After his death, we find Paul

IV. complaining that England might have been retained with ease had Cardinal Pole been supported in his measures. In 1556, Pole was created chancellor of both universities, Oxford and Cambridge, having previously been ordained priest, and inaugurated into his archbishopric—the latter after the burning of Cranmer, which took place in March of that year. It is curious that Cardinal Pole survived the queen only a few hours. The circumstance is thus satirically alluded to in a letter addressed to Bullinger by E. Sandys,—'We yesterday received a letter from England, in which the death of Mary, the accession of Elizabeth, and the decease of Cardinal Pole is confirmed. That good cardinal, that he might not raise any disturbance, or impede the progress of the gospel, departed this life the day after his friend, Queen Mary, (17th November, 1558.) Such was the love and harmony between them, that not even death itself could separate them. We have nothing, therefore, to fear from Pole, for dead men do not bite.'—(Letters from the archives of Zurich, published by the Parker Society.) Some allowance must be made for the asperity of party, for no one can doubt the sincerity, humanity, and learning of Cardinal Pole. Ranke shows that he injured himself in Italy by boldly stating the doctrines of the Gospel at the council of Trent in 1545. [E.R.]

POLEMBERG. See POELENBURG.

POLEMO, three distinguished Greeks:—1. A philosophical teacher, who had for his disciples Zeno and Arcesilas, and who differed but little from Aristotle, died B.C. 270. 2. A geographical and historical writer, surnamed Periegetes, about 200 B.C. 3. A native of Laodicea, one of the most celeb. rhetoricians at the beginning of the 2d cent.

POLEMO, the first of the name king of Pontus, under the triumvirate of Mark Antony, died 1. The second, his son and successor, was recognized king by Caligula 39, and deposed by Nero 65.

POLINI, J., a Venetian antiquar., 1683-1761.

POLHEM, CHRISTOPHER, Count, a Swedish engineer, member of the Academy at Stockholm, and contributor to its transactions on subjects of commercial economy and mechanics. The great works over which he presided are the docks at Carlscrona and the Trollhetta canal. The celebrated Swedenborg was his coadjutor, 1661-1751.

POLI, G. S., an Italian physiologist, 1746-1825.

POLI, M., an Italian chemist, 1662-1714.

POLIER, A. L. H. DE, a Fr. Orient., 1741-95.

POLIGNAC, JULES, Prince De, whose name, as the minister of Charles X., king of France, has acquired an European interest from the revolution of 1830, was descended from an ancient family, which suffered with the other noblesse of France by the establishment of the Republic in 1792. He became known to the political world as a party to George's conspiracy against Napoleon in 1804, and was rewarded with the title of prince by the pope of Rome for his devotion to the church after the restoration of Louis XVIII. From 1823 to 1829 he resided in London as ambassador, and then returned to head the administration which provoked the revolution of July. After a short imprisonment and exile, he was allowed to reside in France. Died in the sixty-fourth year of his age, 1847.

POLIGNAC, MELCHIOR DE, archbishop of Auch, and cardinal, was born at Languedoc 1661.

He received the purple on going to Rome as a diplomatist. Died 1741.

POLIGNAC, YOLANDE MARTINE GABRIELLE DE POLASTRON, Duchesse De, a favourite of the queen Marie Antoinette, and gouvernante of the royal children, 1749-1793.

POLITIAN, or POLIZIANO, ANGELO, an Italian scholar who became tutor to the children of Lorenzo de Medici, and was appointed by him canon of Florence. He wrote a 'History of the Conspiracy of the Pazzi,' and edited a collection of Greek epigrams, 1454-1494.

POLK, J., an American lawyer and statesman, b. 1795, elected president of the U.S. in 1844, d. 1849.

POLLAJUOLO, ANTONIO, a painter, sculptor, engraver, and goldsmith of Florence, 1426-1498.

POLLEXFEN, SIR HENRY, an eminent lawyer and member of parliament, acted as counsel for the seven bishops in 1688, and was knighted after the revolution, and appointed chief justice of the Common Pleas; died 1692.

POLLICH, J. A., a Ger. naturalist, 1740-1780.

POLLINI, C., an Italian botanist, 1783-1833.

POLLINI, J., an Italian historian, 16th cent.

POLLIO, CAIUS ASINIUS, a Roman consul, and friend of Augustus, most celebrated as the patron of letters, and for the protection he afforded to Virgil and Horace; died in the year 3, aged eighty.

POLLIO, TREBELLIVS, a wr. of Roman history, only fragments of whose works remain, about 300.

[Birth-place of Robert Pollok.]

POLLOK, ROBERT, was born in 1798, in Renfrewshire, where his father was a small farmer. After having worked for some years on the farm, he determined on becoming a preacher; and, adding a little Latin to the elementary education he had previously received, he entered, at the age of nineteen, on a five years' course of study in the university of Glasgow. Afterwards, while he was a student of theology, he published two or three little prose tales of a religious cast; and then, also, he was working up many of his poetical fragments into his 'Course of Time.' This energetic and ambitious poem appeared in the spring of 1827, and speedily obtained a popularity which it is not likely soon to lose. Its deeply religious character recommended it to serious persons; and it was admired by critics for the many flashes of original genius, which light up the crude and unwieldy design, and atone for the narrow range of thought and knowledge well as for the stiff pomposity that pervaded diction. There are in it a few passages which strikingly and most poetically imaginative, some which are beautifully touching. The did not long survive to enjoy his fame, or to pursue his profession, to which he was admitted, preacher in the United Secession Church, soon after the publication of his poem. He already shown symptoms of consumption, which became more decided; friends, gained for him a genius, furnished him with assistance for going to Italy; but he was able to travel no farther than Southampton, where he died in September, 1827, before completing his twenty-ninth year. [V]

POLLUX, JULIUS, two Greek writers, a times confounded together,—the earlier, a grammarian and sophist, born in Egypt about 180; the later, an historian of the 4th century.

POLLO, MARCO, was the son of a Venetian merchant, Niccolo Polo, and was born about the year 1250. Some months before his birth, his father Niccolo, and uncle Maffio, resolved to try the experiment of opening a trade with the Tartar princes who had lately established themselves in the East of Europe. For this purpose they sailed for Constantinople with a valuable cargo of goods, which they disposed of to great advantage, and investing the proceeds in rich jewels, they crossed the Black Sea, and travelling to Bagdad on the Volga, placed these at the service of a Tartar prince there. He rewarded them with more than the value of the jewels; and as they were well satisfied with their gains they now wished to return home. This they could not accomplish on account of the breaking out of a war between the two princes whose territories lay on their route. They accordingly travelled round the north end of the Caspian, and reached Bokhara in six years. Here they remained three years; and were then induced to accompany a Persian embassy to the Grand Khan, Kublai, who then held his magnificent court at Kamenfu, in Chinese Tartary. He received them into favour, and promoted them to honour. This wise prince, like others of his race, held the liberal maxim, which has received in our own day much favour among statesmen, that all forms of faith which are professed by great numbers of persons should have encouragement and support. Accordingly, in prosecution of his purpose he commissioned one of his grandees, and the two Poli, on an embassy to the lord of the Christians, requesting his holiness to send wise men to instruct his people in the religious arts of the Western world. The Tartar noble died by the way; but the Poli pursued their journey in safety, exhibiting the Khan's ordered seal upon a golden tablet, which he had given them as a passport. In 1269, having been ten years by the way, they reached Acre, and on the day after arrived in Venice. Marco was now in approaching manhood, and his mother having died in giving him birth, his father's ties to his native city were less binding. Accordingly, in 1271, the two brothers started on their return to the court of Kublai, taking young Marco with them, and bearing letters from Pope Gregory X. They reached Tai-yuen-foo in safety, where the emperor was then residing. Young Marco was received by the highest favour, and was employed on many important missions both in China proper, Tartary, and the adjoining countries. He held three years the high office of governor of the province of Yau-tchoo-foo, in S.E. China. He thus enjoyed opportunities which no European has ever possessed, of becoming acquainted with the country and its institutions. Polo's travels were one time regarded as of no value, but his accuracy in relating what he himself saw, has since from time to time in later years confirmed in a remarkable manner. The best edition of his works is said to be that by Count Baldelli, 4 vols. Florence, 1827. It contains a map of Africa, drawn in 1351, and another with the routes followed by the Poli in Asia marked upon it. The Arabian and Chinese maps which Polo brought home are thought to have suggested to the Portuguese the passage by the Cape. The three Poli remained seventeen years in China; Kublai refused to let them depart, till at length his grand-nephew, reigning in Persia, sent ambassadors to demand to ask in marriage a young princess of the blood royal. It was found impossible for her to proceed by land, and Marco having just returned from a voyage to India, and represented the safety of the passage, the Khan reluctantly consented to the request of the ambassador, to let the Poli accompany them by sea to Persia, with the young princess destined to be their master's bride. A fleet of 4 ships was prepared, the Poli were loaded with presents, empowered to act as the Khan's ambassadors at the European courts, and entreated to return after they had visited their friends. The fleet reached Ormuz in eighteen months—and three Venetians arrived in their native city in 1299 after an absence of 24 years. They found themselves forgotten of all their old friends and acquaintances, but a display of their enormous wealth, at a great feast which they gave, speedily procured a greater accession of new friends than could be found to be quite convenient. Marco was offered his return taken prisoner in a sea-fight with the Genoese, in which he commanded a galley. He was carried to Genoa, and detained 17 years; but treated with great kindness so that his history became known. He sent to Genoa for his papers, and employed his leisure in setting his notes into shape. On his return, he lived a settled and respectable life, and died at an old age. His father lived till 1316, and left a second family by a young wife. [J.B.]

POLWHELE, RICHARD, a minister of Truro, Cornwall, known as an antiquarian, biographer, historian, and poet. His Histories of Devon and Cornwall are highly esteemed; 1759-1838.

POLYENUS, a Greek author, 2d century.

POLYBIUS, a celebrated Greek historian, who distinguished himself in public affairs during the wars of the Achaean league, born about 204 B.C., died 122.

POLYBIUS OF COS, a medical writer, pupil and successor of Hippocrates, 5th century B.C.

POLYCARP, ST., one of the most illustrious and patient of the Christian fathers, burnt alive in the persecution under Marcus Aurelius, 167.

POLYCLES, a Greek sculptor, 4th century B.C.

POLYDORUS, a Greek sculptor, 5th ct. B.C.

POLYCRATES, a tyrant of Samos, put to death by Orontes, time of Cambyses, 6th century B.C.

POLYCRATES, bishop of Ephesus, 2d century.

POLYDORUS, VIRGILIUS, an Italian historical writer, who was sent to England by Alexander VI., to collect the tax called Peter's pence, and obtained a living in the Church of England. His works are a 'Collection of Proverbs,' a Treatise on Prodiges, and particularly a History of England. He was a friend of Erasmus, and flourished about 1470-1555.

POLYGNOTUS OF THASOS, the earliest recorded painter of Greece, who has attained great fame, appears to have been settled at Athens about 463 B.C., whither he had accompanied Cimon after his conquest of Thasos. With Polygnotus painting was fully developed in all the essential principles of art, though his style might still want the delicacies of execution which distinguished the period of refinement about the time of Alexander the Great. The first portrait on record is the picture of Elpinice, the sister of Cimon, and his own mistress, which Polygnotus introduced in the 'Rape of Cassandra,' painted by him, in the 'Poecile' at Athens, a celebrated portico illustrated with the history of the Athenians, and where the philosophers and others used to meet and gossip. Polygnotus seems to have been a complete painter, though established quite a generation before the execution of the Elgin marbles; his style was, however, doubtless, somewhat similar to the style of those great works, ideal or generic. There is a memorable passage in the Poetics of Aristotle, speaking in the very highest terms of this great painter. Aristotle says, comparing him with two of his contemporaries:— 'Dionysius paints men as they are, Pauson worse, and Polygnotus better than they are.' Many other Greek writers speak of him in the highest terms. Lucian enumerates him among the four greatest colourists of the Greeks, these being Polygnotus, Euphranor, Apelles, and Aëtion. The greatest works of Polygnotus were the two extensive series of pictures (tempera paintings) executed on the two principal sides of the Lesche, or public hall at Delphi, attached to the Temple of Apollo, as a convenient place of meeting for the various Greeks from every part, who were in the habit of visiting Delphi, for the sake of consulting the oracle there, which was the most famous of all the Greek oracles. These pictures, executed most probably on panels of larch, and inserted into the walls, represented on one side, the war of Troy, and, on the other, the Descent of Ulysses into Hades to consult the Soul of Tiresias. Popular and general subjects which were necessarily interesting to Greeks of every race, and thus the most appropriate subjects for the decoration of so purely a national building. They were known as the 'Iliad' and 'Odyssey' of Polygnotus, though he had consulted all other traditions, as well as Homer, in their composition. The popularity of these works was so great that the Amphictyonic Council (the deputies from the Greek cities who met every spring at Delphi) voted Polygnotus public hospitality throughout Greece, that is, including all cities in league, and in these towns, should the business of Polygnotus ever call him, he was entitled to be maintained at the expense of the municipality. So great an honour has been conferred apparently only on one man since, Apollodorus, the grammarian. Some similar attention, though in this case doubtless purely personal, seems to have been paid to Albrecht Dürer, in his journey in the Netherlands, in 1520-21; he speaks in every case of being entertained by the Nurnberg Consul in the several great towns he visited. Great as the art of Polygnotus was, it does not seem to have approached that dramatic truth of representation which distinguishes the works of Raphael, or many less considerable of the moderns. His art was representative almost as much as imitative, its object seems to have been chiefly ethic; objects and events are indicated rather than absolutely presented, but, of course, this is more strictly true of the accessories; a house for instance, or a wall, represented a city; a man throwing down the stones of the wall, the destruction of the city; a tent, an encampment; the striking or taking down a tent, a departure; a ship, a fleet; a few captives, a conquest; a few warriors, an army; and a few dead bodies, a victory. The ultimate value of works of this class depends upon the merit of the execution; perfectly treated they may be made perhaps more impressive than an actual dramatic representation, as the very nature of the treatment compels the mind to reflection, one of the highest objects of all high art.—(Böttiger, Ideen zur Archæologie der Malerei; Wornum, Epochs of Painting Characterized.) [R.N.W.]

POLYHISTOR. See ALEXANDER, SOLINUS.

POMBAL, SEBASTIAN JOSEPH CARVALHO-MELHO, Marquis De, an arbitrary Portuguese statesman, 1699-1782.

POMERIUS, J., a moralist, 5th century.

POMET, PETER, a French chemist, 1658-1699.

POMEY, FRANCIS, a French Jesuit, 1618-1673.

POMFRET, JOHN, whose poetical works are now seldom read, was born in Bedfordshire 1667, and became rector of Malden, in that county. He published a volume of poems in 1699, the most popular of them being his 'Choice,' a picture of happiness founded on affluence and tranquillity. Some additional compositions were published after his death. That event was the consequence of an attack of small-pox, while awaiting in London his institution to a richer living in 1703.

POMIS, D. DE, a Jewish writer, 1525-1587.

POMPADOUR, JEANNE ANTOINETTE POISSON, Marquise De, a mistress of Louis XV., in whose favour she succeeded Madame de Chateauroux, 1744. She was then twenty-two years of age, and was created Marchioness the year following, with a pension of 240,000 francs. She was a woman of boundless extravagance, but gave great encouragement to arts and literature, did much to promote the establishment of the porcelain manufacture, and the military school, and aided powerfully in the suppression of the Jesuits, died 1764.

POMPEI, G., an Italian poet, 1731-1788.

POMPEY, CNEIUS, surnamed 'The Great,' son of Pompeius Strabo, a Roman general, was born 106 B.C. He distinguished himself against the enemies of the Roman senate, both within the state and without, and at last fell in the struggle against Cæsar for absolute power. The events which mark his career are briefly these. Like his father, under whom he commenced his military career, serving against Marius, Pompey ranged himself with the aristocratic party of the republic.

He was in his twenty-third year only when raised three complete legions, 60,000 men, at own expense, and took the field in behalf of —at that juncture returning from his expedition against Mithridates. By his twenty-sixth Pompey had defeated the remains of the Mithridatic party in Cisalpine Gaul, Sicily, and Africa, at his return to Rome, B.C. 83, was hailed Magnus the great—by Sylla; his audacious perseverance also procuring for him the honours of a triumph. On the death of Sylla in B.C. 78, Pompey was proconsul to Spain, where the plebeian war continued by Sertorius, and after a four years arduous struggle, he remained master of the country, his opponent having been betrayed and assassinated. He returned to Italy in time to give the finishing blow to the similar victories of Cæsar and in B.C. 70 Pompey and Crassus were elected consuls. In possession of this office he received the tribunitial power, and afterwards dismissed his army, remaining at Rome as a private citizen. In the beginning of the year B.C. 67, he was entrusted with extraordinary powers, in order to destroy the lawless bands and the piratical adventurers who infested the coasts of the Mediterranean, and having effected this, he was made absolute dictator in the East, and superseded Lucullus in the command against Mithridates. The latter was completely routed in B.C. 66, and soon afterwards coming master of Asia Minor, pursued his conquests through Syria and Palestine as far as the Red Sea. For these services he obtained a magnificent triumph at Rome, and in B.C. 60 joined Cæsar and Crassus in the triumvirate, the first of whom gave him his daughter Julia in marriage. Succeeding events caused Pompey to draw close to the senatorial party, and with him, as the representative of the patrician republic, went Cato, the enemy of the ambition of Cæsar. In B.C. 54 Cæsar died, in the year following Crassus was slain in Asia, and now the hostility between Cæsar and Pompey rapidly developed itself. The former, being applied for the consulship refused to permit himself in Rome as a private citizen, and a decree of the senate declared him a public enemy to whom he resigned his command. Instead of doing this, Cæsar crossed the Rubicon with his troops in B.C. 49, and Pompey, accompanied by Cato, Cæsar, and the other nobles of Rome, fell back to Greece, where the great battle of Pharsalia decided his fate. Pompey was advised to seek an asylum in Egypt, then ruled by a sovereign he had protected, Ptolemy XII. He was received with pretended friendship, but treacherously murdered as soon as he had stepped ashore, B.C. 48, his head being cut off, it was sent to Cæsar, who turned away from it and could not restrain his tears. Pompey fell, and with him the republic of Rome, for want of the art of government and the brilliance of his early victories carried him to power, but the remembrance of his greatness in the field was a poor compensation for the anxiety that prevailed at Rome.

POMPEY, CNEIUS, son of the preceding, endeavoured to carry on the war against Cæsar. He was defeated at Munda, and soon after B.C. 45.

POMPEY, SEXTUS, younger son of Pompey the Great, continued the war after the death of is brother, and the subjugation of Spain by Cæsar. He made himself master of Corsica, Sicily, Sardinia, and Achaia, and rendered himself formidable as a naval commander against the second triumvirate. Being at length defeated and taken prisoner, he was k. at Miletus, by order of Antony, B.C. 35.

POMPIGNAN, JOHN JAMES LE FRANC, MARQUIS DE, a French scholar and poet, whose works consist of dramas, moral discourses, odes in imitation of Virgil, and many pieces opposed to the new philosophy, 1709-1784. His br., J. GEORGES, a poet and writer on incredulity, 1715-1790.

POMPONAZZI, PIETRO, a famous Italian philosopher, who argued that the immortality of the soul cannot be proved by any natural reasons, depends solely on revelation, 1462-1524.

POMPONIUS-LÆTUS, JULIUS, the Latinized name of a learned Italian antiquary, 1425-1497.

POMPONIUS SEXTUS, a Roman jurist, 2d ct.

POMPONIUS. See BELLIEVRE.

POMPONNE or POMPONE, SIMON ARNAULD, MARQUIS DE, a Fr. statesman and diplo., 1618-99.

PONA, FRANCESCO, an Italian writer, 17th ct.

POND, JOHN, an astronomer, born about 1767, succeeded Maskelyne as astronomer-royal, 1831, d. 1836.

PONJATOWSKI, PRINCE JOSEPH, nephew of Count Stanislaus, born 1763, distinguished himself in arms under Kosciuszko, the Polish patriot, became minister of war to the provincial government established at Warsaw in 1806. In 1809 he defended the grand duchy against the army of Finland. In 1813 he was named marshal of France, during the battle of Leipzig, and displayed great skill and gallantry in covering the retreat of the French. He was drowned in the Elster while endeavouring to effect his own escape two days afterwards, 19th October.

PONJATOWSKI, STANISLAUS, Count DE, father of Stanislaus Augustus, king of Poland, a man of Cracovia, and a companion-in-arms of Charles XII., flourished 1678-1762.

PONJATOWSKI, STANISLAUS AUGUSTUS, son of the preceding. See STANISLAUS AUGUSTUS.

PONJATOWSKI, PRINCE STANISLAUS, a second nephew of Count Stanislaus, distinguished as a master of arts and letters, of which he was a generous protector; born at Warsaw, 1754, d. Florence, 1832.

PONJANSKI, A. L., a Polish poet, died 1742.

PONS, a count of Toulouse, reigned 1037-1060.

PONS, a count of Tripoli, reigned 1112-1137.

PONS, J. F. DE, a Fr. literature, 1683-1733.

PONS, J. L., a Fr. astronomer, 1761-1835.

PONSONBY, SIR FREDERICK CAVENTISH, brother of the earl of Besborough, and distinguished as a cavalry officer, was born 1783. He entered the army as cornet in 1800, and became remarkable for his gallant bearing in the peninsula. He was present at the battles of Talavera, Barossa, Vimiera, Salamanca, and Vittoria, and terminated his brilliant career on the field of Waterloo, died 1837.

PONSONBY, GEORGE, younger son of John Ponsonby, speaker of the Irish House of Commons, died as a lawyer and statesman, 1755-1817.

PONSONBY, SIR WILLIAM, a British cavalry officer, born 1772, killed at Waterloo after a brilliant successful charge against the Fr., 1815.

PONTANUS, J., a Bohem. savant, 1542-1626.

PONTANUS, J. ISAAC, a Danish philologist and histor. of the city of Amsterdam, 1571-1639.

PONTANUS, the common name of J. JOVIER.

PONTANO, one of the most elegant and fertile Latin writers of the 15th century, distinguished as a poet and historian, 1426-1503.

PONTAS, J., a French casuist, 1638-1728.

PONTE, L. DE, a Spanish ascetic writer, known to Fr. literature as DUPONT, 1554-1624.

PONTIANUS, a pope of Rome, 230-235.

PONTIUS, an ecclesiastical writer, 3d century.

PONTIUS, the Latinized form of PAUL DUPONT, an engraver of Antwerp, born 1596.

PONTIUS, CONSTANTINE, a learned Spanish divine, died in prison while awaiting his execution as a protestant, 1559.

PONTOPPIDAN, ERIC ERICSON, a Danish prelate, known as a theologian and Latin poet, 1616-1678. ERIC, his grandnephew, a prelate and antiquary, 1698-1764. J. LOUIS, brother of the latter, a theologian, died 1799.

PONTORNO, JACOPO, whose proper name was CARRUCCI, an eminent Ital. painter, 1493-1558.

PONTOUX, C. DE, a Fr. writer, 1530-1579.

PONZ, ANTHONY, a Span. painter, 1725-1792.

PONZIO, PAUL, an Italian sculptor, 16th cent.

POOL, H., a Dutch poet, 1689-1733.

POOL, J. VAN, a Dutch portrait painter, 1666-1745. His wife, RACHEL, daughter of Ruysch the anatomist, also a painter, 1664-1750.

POOL, M., a Dutch engraver, born 1670.

POOL, or POOLE, MATTHEW, author of a work highly valued by theological students, entitled 'Synopsis Criticorum,' was a presbyterian divine, born at York 1624. He was ejected from his living when the act of uniformity was enforced in 1662, and in 1666 made himself obnoxious to another large party by attacking the Roman Church. After this occurrence he retired to Amsterdam, where he died 1679.

POPE, ALEXANDER, was born in May, 1688, in London. His father was a linen-draper in Lombard Street, and, having spent his youth at Lisbon, had embraced the Roman Catholic faith, which his son, in an easy way, retained as it was taught to him. Pope inherited bodily feebleness from both parents: his father was deformed, and his mother gave him his headaches and his Jacobitism. He was a very sickly child, and hardly less so in manhood: he never grew to be taller than about four feet; and his deformity and weakness of limbs were so great that, for many years before his death, he could not dress or undress himself. In these circumstances Pope gathered his scanty education, and wrote poems which placed his name first in the brilliant literature of his time; nor was he prevented by his infirmities from taking, in aristocratic society, the place which, in that age of patronage, was won by his literary celebrity and secured by the agreeableness of manner he had when his temper was not chafed. The poetic endowments of Pope were very fine; and there occur in his works short passages that are among the gems of our poetry, and felicitous images and turns of expression that have become household words. In fact no poet furnishes so many brief quotations as he does; a distinction which he owes in part to the epigrammatic pointedness of his diction, and to the singular skill of his versification. But many of the striking lines and phrases which thus come into the mouths of every one, are either cold in feeling or positively unpoetical in matter: they are apt expressions of worldly shrewdness, not effusions of imaginative susceptibility. His rhythm, too, which in its way is perfect, has a mannerism and a monotonous smoothness, which make it more than doubtful whether, even in his favourite ten-syllable rhymes, he deserves to be held as having really improved on the manly and varied melodies of Dryden. The steadiness, likewise, with which he adhered to the themes and forms that had become fashionable under the guidance of that celebrated poet, made it impossible for Pope's real and unquestionable genius to develop itself freely; and his principal poems are, both by the nature of their subjects and by the cautious and dissertative character of their tone, so very uncongenial to the poetical taste of our century, that it is not wonderful his writings should now be neglected and his place in the file of our poets degraded below his due. Yet, though the fact is little noticed, it was not without efforts in another direction, that Pope resolved to write for the drawing-room instead of the world; it was not till he had exercised his youthful fancy on higher topics and in worthier forms, that he contented himself with gaining celebrity as an admirable writer of didactic and familiar verse, and as one of the very best of all poetical satirists.—His education, ill begun at home by a Jesuit, was continued with little more success at school; where, till the age of twelve, he learned hardly more than to admire Ogilby's clumsy translation of the Iliad, and Sandys' polished version of Ovid. The remainder of his youth was spent at Benfield, in Windsor Forest, where his father, having retired from business, had purchased a house and a few acres of land. Here the young poet was left to educate himself. He never became an accurate scholar, even in Greek, Latin, or French, which were his only studies beyond English literature; but the sickly boy devoured books eagerly, acquired much literary knowledge, and wrote verses which his father encouraged and corrected. The 'Ode to Solitude,' printed among his works, dates from his twelfth year; before he was fifteen he had, likewise, made his translations of the first book of Statius, and of Ovid's Epistle of Sappho; and at this time, also, by producing his 'Imitations of English Poets,' he showed some love for those old masters whom afterwards he so unwisely neglected. Now, likewise, he wrote a comedy, of which we know nothing; a tragedy on the story of Saint Genevieve; and an epic poem called 'Alexander,' which is described as having been an imitation of the Odyssey, and was preserved by him till, in the height of his fame, his friend Atterbury made him burn it. An inclination to linger in the purer fields of poetry was indicated also, though accompanied by little originality of invention or strength of poetic feeling, in the works by which he first introduced himself to the public. These were the 'Pastorals,' printed in 1709, (when the writer was in his twenty-first year), but written a good while before, and already admired in manuscript by persons of rank to whom he had become known. They were received with great applause. In the 'Essay on Criticism,' which appeared in 1711, he stepped at once into that dissertative school of poetry, which his chief efforts were always afterwards made. The 'Essay,' with all its weakness of principles and barrenness of poetical elements, is only a wonderful production for a boy, but res equal, in many points, to anything he subsequently wrote. His celebrity was effectually and deservedly secured in 1712, by the first edition of his 'Rape of the Lock.' When, in his twentieth year, he republished this poetic immortalization of fashionable trifles, with the addition of supernatural machinery, he had given to our language a mock-heroic poem, superior to Boileau

[The residence of Pope.]

'Lutrin' and to everything else of the sort. In interval between these two versions of the 'Rape' appeared 'The Messiah,' 'The Temple of Fame' (founded on Chaucer), the 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day,' and 'Windsor Forest,' (probably written earlier). The poems which have now been made have more of the essence of poetry than any of Pope's later works.—During a second period, tending through more than a dozen years, his employments were prompted by the necessity of securing a livelihood. His father, affected by political panic, had refused to invest his savings in any way, and had lived on the capital, which was already nearly exhausted; and all Pope's wit had as yet gained him scarcely £150. He now undertook his Translation of the Iliad, which occupied him for more than five years, and, published by subscription (from 1715 to 1720), produced to the author more than £5,000. It was received with an admiration which will readily be yielded by readers who can forget the original. But it produced a quarrel with Addison, from whom Pope, closely allied both by opinion and friendship with Swift and the Tories, always stood at a distance. Pope's poor edition of Shakespeare was published in 1725; and his Odyssey, of which only two books were translated by himself, appeared in 1726 and the next, adding considerably to the fortune he had made by its predecessor. He was now hotly engaged in those squabbles with the small authors of his day, which embittered the rest of his life. In 1727, in three volumes, 'Miscellanies,' partly written by Swift and others, he declared open war on his enemies by the treatise 'On the Art of Sinking in Poetry.' The next year he himself took the crowning step of his revenge

728, by issuing his tremendous satire 'The Dunciad.'—In 1715, when the Iliad had secured for him the prospect of independence, he became the possessor of the villa at Twickenham, which became famous as his residence for the last thirty years of his life. Here his father died soon, and his mother one year afterwards. Both were keenly regretted by their son, whose affection for his family and for few friends was as strong as the jealousy and irritability which continually entangled him in quarrels out of doors. From this pleasant retreat, after the publication of the Dunciad, he fired off a good many squibs on his critics; and, among other squibs, he altered his great satire, dethroning its original hero, Theobald, (who had edited Shakspeare better than he had), and putting Colley Cibber in his place. But the principal employment of those years was the composition of a new series of satires, in which he emulated the half-prosaic poetry of Horace's epistles with great success; while he took a more ambitious flight in ethical dissertations, for which he was philosophically very poorly qualified, though he gave much grace and sweetness to the expression of his crude opinions. The poems of this group embrace, besides some minor pieces, the 'Essay on Man,' setting forth, after Bolingbroke, a theory of optimism, the consequences of which he certainly did not understand; the 'Epistle on Taste,' which landed him, for the first time, in squabbles with the great; the 'Imitations of Horace,' with translations from the same poet; and the 'Universal Prayer,' published in 1718. In 1737 he published selections from his 'Correspondence,' containing letters, many of which are very elegant but very artificial pieces of prose writing. He was engaged to the last in his war with the dunces; for he contributed to Arbuthnot's wonderfully witty 'Memoirs of Martinus Scribbles,' which appeared in 1741. His frail body, which had held out longer than might have been expected, was quite unable to support him into old age. Asthma and the beginnings of dropsy warned him for several months, that the end was at hand. He set himself to meet the catastrophe with calm equanimity, and died in May, 1744, some days after having completed his fifty-sixth year. [W.S.]

POPE, SIR THOMAS, a Roman Catholic statesman and friend of Sir Thomas More, born in Oxfordshire 1508, fnd. Trinity College 1554, d. 1558.

POPE, WALTER, an English physician, known as a novelist and miscellaneous writer, died 1714.

POPHAM, SIR HOME RIGGS, a naval officer, born in Ireland 1762, most celebrated for his expedition against Buenos Ayres, for which he was rewarded after a trial, the charge being that he acted without sufficient authority. He was afterwards commander-in-chief on the Jamaica station, and died 1820.

POPHAM, SIR J., an Eng. judge, 1581-1607.

POPÆA, a Roman empress, wife of Nero, who took her from her second husband, Otho, 62. Killed by a kick from Nero when pregnant, 65.

POREUS, PETER, a Dutch painter, born about 1511, died 1583. His son, FRANCIS, a portrait painter of rare excellence, 1540-1580. FRANCIS, 'the younger,' son of the latter, and possessor of his name, 1570-1622.

PORCARI, STEFANO, a gentleman of Rome, executed for conspiracy against Nicholas V., 1453.

PORCQ, J. C., a French theologian, 1636-1722.

PORDENONE, the common name, taken from his birth-place, of GIOV. ANTONIO LICINIO REGGILLO, a Venetian painter, 1483-1540. BERNARDINO, who bears the same surname, a relation and pupil of the preceding, 16th century. GIULIO, one of his nephews, also a scholar of his, 1500-1561. J. ANTONIO, brother of the latter, died 1576.

POREE, CHARLES, a French Jesuit and rhetorician, 1675-1741. His brother, C. GABRIEL, a canonist, 1685-1770.

PORLIER, JUAN DIAZ, surnamed El Marquesito, a Spanish general, born at Carthagena, in South America, about 1775, hung for conspiring against Ferdinand VII., after attempting to restore the constitution, 1815.

PORPHYRY, one of the Neoplatonists, and early opponents of Christianity, was born A.D. 233, probably in a Tyrian colony, settled in Batanea. His original name was Malchus, the Shemitic term for a king, but Longinus, his master, gave him the appellation of Porphyry, in allusion to the purple vestments of royal persons. He studied under Origen and under Longinus in his youth, but at thirty years of age attached himself, at Rome, to Plotinus, whose works he arranged and corrected. Leaving Rome, where his thoughts had often reverted to suicide as the speediest means of freeing his spirit from its present prison-house, he went to Sicily, where he wrote his attack on Christianity. He seems to have returned to Rome, and he died about the year 304. Porphyry was a man of great abilities and erudition, and his elegant style contributed in no small degree to the popularity of the Plotinian philosophy (PLOTINUS). His asceticism may be found in his treatise 'On Abstinence,' and the strange but not uncommon union of superstition and scepticism may be seen in his doctrine of demons, in his ascription of the power of miracles to Plotinus, and in his record of a special extacy enjoyed by him in his sixty-eighth year, in which he was privileged to gaze upon the unveiled Divinity. He laboured to find discrepancies in the Scriptures, and he made a special assault upon the authenticity of the book of Daniel. The history of the gospels was also subjected to similar treatment. His 15 books against Christianity were ordered to be destroyed by the emperor Theodosius, so that we are only acquainted with their nature and contents through the replies made to them by such writers as Eusebius and Jerome. Besides his philosophical and antichristian works, Porphyry wrote commentaries on Homer, and treatises on a great variety of miscellaneous subjects. [J.E.]

PORPORA, NICOLÒ, born at Naples in 1689, was the celebrated pupil of the no less celebrated Alessandro Scarlatti. In early life he left home and composed and brought out operas with great success in Vienna, Venice, Dresden, and several other continental cities. In 1773 Porpora was engaged as composer and director of the operas established in opposition to Handel, but in spite of all the science, talent, and industry which he brought to the task he had undertaken, the London public heard his compositions with an indifference which, it is said, 'amounted almost to contempt.' Porpora, therefore, quitted England in disgust and returned to Italy, where he became one of the principal masters in the Conservatory at Venice. He late in life retired to Naples, where he died in great poverty at the age of 82. Porpora was particularly fortunate as a singing master, and amongst his most celebrated pupils were Farinelli, Mingotte, and Caffarelli, besides many other dramatic vocalists. [J.M.]

PORPORATI, A., an Ital. engraver, 1741-1816.

PORQUET, P. C. F., a French poet, 1728-1796.

PORSENNA, a king of Etruria, 6th cent. B.C.

PORSON, RICHARD, an eminent scholar and critic, professor of Greek in the university of Cambridge, was born at East Raston, in Norfolk, where his father was parish clerk, 1759. He became professor in 1793, and two years later commenced the Greek editions on which his reputation rests, by the publication of Euripides. Died in the office of librarian to the London Institution, 1808.

PORTA, BACCIO DELLA, better known as Fra Bartholomeo di San Marco, an Italian painter, friend and scholar of Raphael, 1469-1517.

PORTA, GIAMBATTISTA, an Italian of noble family, dist. as a natural philosopher, 1540-1615.

PORTA, JAMES DELLA, an Italian sculptor and architect, died about the end of the 16th century. His nephew, WILLIAM, a sculptor, same age. J. BAPTISTE, his relation and pupil, 1542-1597. THOMAS, br. of the latter, dates unknown.

PORTA, JOSEPH, called Porta del Salviati, a painter of the Florentine school, about 1520-1570.

PORTA, or PORTIUS, SIMON, an Italian philosopher, pupil of Pomponazzi, 1496-1554. Another SIMON PORTIUS, published Greek lexicons, 17th century.

PORTAL, A., a French physician, 1742-1832.

PORTAL, P., a French accoucheur, died 1703.

POTALIS, JEAN E. MARIE, councillor of state and minister of religion under Napoleon, 1746-1807.

PORTE, ABBE J. DE LA, a French compiler, author of 'Esprit de l'Encyclopédie,' 1713-1779. His nephew, SEBASTIAN, deputy to the assembly, the convention, and the council of 500, died 1823.

PORTE, A. DE LA, a Fr. statesman, 1787-92.

PORTE, M. DE LA, a French writer, 1530-71.

PORTE, P. DE LA, a valet in the service of Anne of Austria and Louis XIV., author of 'Memoirs of the Reigns of Louis XIII. and Louis XIV.,' 1603-1680.

PORTE-DU-THEIL, FRANCIS JOHN GABRIEL DE LA, an antiquarian and Hellenist, 1742-1815.

PORTER, ANNA MARIA, a popular novelist, was the daughter of a military officer, who died soon after her birth. She resided in the neighbourhood of London with her mother and sister, and died at Bristol while making a tour for the re-establishment of her health in 1832. Her works are 'Artless Tales,' written before she was twelve years old, 1793-1795, 'Walsh Colville,' 1797, 'Octavia,' 1798, 'The Lake of Killarney,' 1804, 'A Sailor's Friendship and a Soldier's Love,' 1805, 'The Hungarian Brothers,' 1807, 'Don Sebastian,' 1809, 'Ballads and Poems,' 1811, 'Recluse of Norway,' 1814, 'The Village of Mariendorp,' 'The Fall of St. Magdalen,' 'Tales of Piety,' 'The Knight of St. John,' 'Tales Round a Winter's Hearth,' and some others.

PORTER, JANE, elder sister of the preceding, was born 1776, and commenced her literary career in 1803, by publishing her first novel, 'Thaddeus of Warsaw.' This interesting fiction became highly popular, and Miss Porter ever after retained its celebrity it brought her. The principal of her other works are 'The Scottish Chiefs,' 'The Pastor's Friend,' 'Duke Christian of Luneberg,' 'Tales Round a Winter's Hearth,' (to which the sisters contributed in common), 'The Field of Forty Footsteps,' a 'Sir Seaward's Diary.' She went to Petersburg with her brother, Sir R. K. Porter, and after a was left companionless by his death in 1842, residing generally at Bristol. Died 1850.

PORTER, SIR ROBERT KEHR, brother of a popular novelists, and himself distinguished as artist, author, and diplomatist, was born at Durham in 1780. After exhibiting some historical pictures in London he went to Russia as painter to the emperor, and while there married a daughter Prince Scherbatoff. On leaving Russia he joined the army, and was with Sir John Moore at the battle of Corunna, receiving the honour of knighthood in 1813. From 1817 to 1820 he was travelling in the East, and in 1826 was appointed consul at Venezuela, where he resided till 1841. He then obtained leave of absence with the intention of visiting St. Petersburg and London, and died the former city, of apoplexy, 1842. His works 'Travelling Sketches in Russia and Sweden,' 'Letters from Portugal and Spain,' 'A Narrative of the Russian Campaign,' and his travels in Georgia, Persia, Armenia, and ancient Babylon.

PORTER, F., an Irish theologian, died 1702.

PORTER, GEORGE RICHARDSON, an English economist, 1793-1852.

PORTES, P. DES, a French poet, 1546-1600.

PORTEUS, BEILBEY, successively bishop of Chester and London, was born at York in 1711 and raised to those sees respectively in 1776 and 1787. He was a man of great literary abilities. His principal work is a 'Life of Archbishop Staker,' an edition of which, with the other productions of his pen, was edited by his nephew late Dr. Hodgson, dean of Carlisle and rector of St. George's, Hanover Square. Died 1808.

PORTUS, FRANCIS, an eminent Italian scholar and classical critic, 1511-1581. His son, ARMILO, a distinguished Hellenist, died 1610.

PORY, JOHN, an English traveller and translator of Leo Africanus, sec. to the colony of Virginia from 1619 to 1621; time of his death unknown.

PORZIO, L. A., an Ital. physician, 1639-1707.

POSADAS, F., a Span. theologian, 1644-1707.

POSIDONIUS, a Stoic philosopher, who taught at Rhodes in the time of Mithridates, 1st cent. B.C., and to whom Plutarch was indebted for materials of some of his Lives, especially the Marius, with whom Posidonius was acquainted. Another POSIDONIUS flourished at Alexandria about 260 B.C. He was a famous astronomer, well versed in the physical sciences.

POSSELT, E. H., a Ger. historian, 1763-1811.

POSSEVIN, ANTHONY, a learned Italian Jesuit and diplomatist, 1534-1611. His brother, J. JUSTI, a man of letters, 1520-1549. ANTHONY, their nephew, a physician and Latin poet, 1711-1781.

POSSIDIUS, ST., an African prelate, 4th cent. See POSIDONIUS.

POST, F., a Dutch painter, about 1621-1680.

POSTEL, WILLIAM, a remarkable visionary, acknowledged to be one of the most learned men of his age, was born in Normandy 1510. He ent to the East to collect curious MSS. by Francis, and on his return was appointed professor of mathematics and languages. He was banished from France through the influence of the queen of Navarre, and died in a monastery 1581.

POSTHUMUS, AULUS, a Roman dictator, consular with Virginius, B.C. 496. See POSTUMUS.
POSTLETHWAYT, MALACHI, a member of the Antiquarian Society, and writer on commercial subjects, died 1767.

POSTUMUS, MARCUS CASSIANUS LATINUS, Gaulish general and governor of that province, who was proclaimed emperor in 257, massacred 267.

POTAMO, a Platonic philosopher, 3d century.

POTEMKIN, GREGORY ALEXANDROVITSCH, Russian prince and field-marshal, was born at Volensko of a noble family in 1736. He entered the army when young, and possessing great personal advantages attracted the notice of the empress Catharine, with whom he became a special favourite. He greatly distinguished himself by his victories over the Turks, especially by his conquest of the Crimea, 1783, and of the cities of Bender, Otchakow, and Kilianova, 1787-1790. These successes, and the favour of the empress, vested him with despotic authority in the Russian empire. He died of an epidemic distemper during the conquest of Jassy, 1791.

POTENGER, or POTTINGER, JOHN, a barter, poet, and miscellaneous writer, 1647-1733.

POTENZANO, F., an Italian poet, died 1599.

POTERAT, MARQUIS DE, one of the secret agents of French diplomacy during the revolution, as b. in 1740, and was one of the state prisoners delivered from the Bastille in 1789. Died 1808.

POTIER, R. J., a French jurist, 1699-1772.

POTIER, C., a French comedian, 1775-1838.

POTOCKI, CLAUDIA, wife of Count Bernard Potocki, remarkable for her personal sacrifices in the exercise of benevolence, especially during the Polish struggle of 1830-3; born in Posen 1802, died in exile at Geneva, worn out with grief, 1836.

POTOCKI, COUNT IGNATIUS, grand marshal of Lithuania before the destruction of Poland, and fellow-patriot of Kosciuszko, was born 1751. In 1811 he took refuge in Saxony, and published a political tract upon the establishment and fall of the constitution,—returning, however, to share in the last struggle for independence. He then passed the time in the prisons of St. Petersburg and Warsaw, and died at Vienna 1809.

POTOCKI, COUNT JOHN, a Polish ambassador in the interest of Russia, author of a 'History of the Primitive Russians,' &c., 1769-1815.

POTOCKI, COUNT STANISLAUS, minister of foreignship and public instruction for the grand duchy of Warsaw, known as a publicist, 1757-1821.

POTOCKI, COUNT STANISLAUS FELICIE, a Polish nobleman, in the Russian service, 1750-1805.

POTOCKI, V., a Polish poet, 17th century.

POTT, J., a German chemist, 1692-1777.

POTT, PERCIVAL, a surgeon of London, author of many valuable professional works, 1713-1788.

POTTER, BARNABAS, an English prelate, born Kendal about 1579, died 1642. CHRISTOPHER, nephew, an eminent divine and partizan of Charles I., born about 1591, died 1646.

POTTER, F., a learned divine, 1594-1678.

POTTER, JOHN, author of the well-known

'Antiquities of Greece,' was a son of Thomas Potter, a linen-draper of Wakefield, where he was born about 1674. He died archbishop of Canterbury 1747. He published the first volume of his 'Antiquitates,' and a beautiful edition of Lycophronis Alexandra, before reaching his twenty-fourth year, in 1697. His theological works were published in 3 vols. at Oxford 1753.

POTTER, PAUL, a Dutch painter, 1625-1654.

POTTER, ROBERT, a famous Greek scholar and translator of the Church of England, 1721-1804.

POUCHET, F. A., a Fr. theologian, 1666-1723.

POUCHET, L. E., a Fr. economist, 1748-1809.

POUGENS, MARIE CHAPLER JOSEPH DE, a distinguished painter, and philological and archaeological savant, 1755-1833.

POUGET, B., an Italian cardinal, 1280-1351.

POULAT, J. B., a French poet, died 1705.

POULLE, LOUIS, a Fr. preacher, 1702-1781.

POUPART, FR., a Fr. anatomist, 1661-1709.

POUPET, C. DE, a Fr. statesman, 1470-1529.

POUQUEVILLE, F. C. H. L., a celebrated French traveller and historian, 1770-1838.

POURCHOT, E., a Fr. philosopher, 1651-1734.

POUSCHKINE, ALEX., a popular novelist, poet, and historian of Russia, born at St. Petersburg 1799, killed in a duel 1837.

POUSSIN, NICOLAS, was born at Andelys in Normandy, about June 19, 1594, of a noble family of Soissons. He learnt painting under Quintin Varin of his native place; then, when only eighteen years old, tried his fortune in Paris, and in 1624, in his thirtieth year, settled in Rome, where, with the exception of a visit paid to France in 1640-2, he dwelt the remainder of his life. He died there, Nov. 19, 1665. Poussin, though by birth a Frenchman, must almost be accounted among the painters of Italy; his style is peculiar, 'no works of any modern,' says Sir Joshua Reynolds, 'have so much of the air of antique painting as those of Poussin.' His pictures have been compared with coloured bas-reliefs, a term not inexpressive of his style. His peculiar leaning to this sculptural treatment may in some measure be explained by his close intimacy with his friend Duquesnoy, the sculptor, known as Fiammingo; they lived in the same house together at Rome. His colouring, compared with his drawing, is inferior and mannered, which is somewhat remarkable, considering that he studied in the school of Domenichino at Rome, whom he considered to be the best painter of his time. 'The Seven Sacraments,' painted twice by Poussin, are among his most celebrated works, and both sets are now in England, one at Belvoir Castle, the other in the Bridgewater Gallery, London. His works are very numerous; the prints that have been engraved after his principal pictures only, amount to upwards of two hundred. Some of his best works are in the British National Gallery, as the 'Bacchanalian Festival,' No. 42, finely engraved by Doo, which constitutes an excellent exponent of his style, with all his merits and peculiarities in perfection. He was a skilful landscape painter also, indeed one of the ablest of the landscape painters of Italy, though the greater fame in this department of his younger brother-in-law, GASPAR DUGHET, who took the name of POUSSIN, has eclipsed the reputation of Nicolas. GASPAR POUSSIN was born of French parents in Rome, in 1613, and died there in 1675; like Claude he was exclusively an Italian painter. The National Gallery possesses also some of the finest works of this artist. The sombre character of his landscapes is in some measure due to the dark grounds on which he painted.—(Bellori, Vita di Nicolo Pussino, &c., Rome, 1672. Wornum, Descriptive and Historical Catalogue of the National Gallery, &c.) [R.N.W.]

POUTEAU, CL., a French surgeon, 1725-1775.

POWELL, DAVID, a famous Welch antiquarian and minister of the church, about 1552-1590. His son, GABRIEL, cel. as a controversialist, 1575-1611.

POWELL, E., a popish divine, executed 1540.

POWELL, G., an English actor, died 1714.

POWELL, G., a Welch scholar, 1561-1620.

POWELL, SIR JOHN, an eminent lawyer and judge, dist. at the trial of the seven bishops, d. 1696.

POWELL, W., an English actor, died 1769.

POWELL, W. S., a learned divine, 1717-1775.

POWER, TYRONE, was the son of an Irish gentleman, of the county of Waterford, and was born 1795. His mother was left a widow in his infancy, and removed to Glamorganshire in South Wales, near the town of Cardiff, where there was a theatre. Here Power first appeared as Romeo; the next notice we have of him is his attempting Orlando at Monmouth, after which he returned to the maternal retreat. On his return, some time after, to the stage, he began to discover his unsuitability for tragedy, and went into the comic line, and tried his juvenile strength in Mercutio, Benedict, Charles Surface, and Belcover; occasionally, however, we find him doing pathetic parts, such as Alonso, at Newport in the Isle of Wight. At Margate also he served alternately under both muses; but, on the Kentish circuit generally, appears principally to have adhered to Thalia, though at Newcastle-upon-Tyne we find Melpomene again in the ascendant; and at Dublin he actually made his débüt as Romeo, to which he added Jeremy Diddler. In 1818 Mr. Power retired from the stage, probably disgusted with its difficulties; but in 1821 we find him making a new essay at the Olympic and Astley's theatres, which latter he quitted for the Lyceum, where he appeared on 2d July, 1822, as Robert Haythorn, in 'The Turnpike Gate.' In 1823 he was appointed manager of the Olympic, and soon after was granted an appearance at Drury Lane, but produced no effect. Next year, at the Adelphi theatre, Mr. Power was enabled to make a stand in a new part called Valmondi, and to achieve a triumph as Paddy O'Halloran, in a neglected Irish farce. It was with great unwillingness that he undertook the part, which, nevertheless, proved the stepping-stone to his fortune. He soon found it to his advantage to devote his abilities exclusively to the delineation of Irish characters. As an Hibernian representative Mr. Power enjoyed a rich brogue, a smart and vivacious air, a whimsical leer that lighted up the jokes that came trippingly from his tongue, and a voice for singing in which he could indulge in the broadest patois. These qualities he exhibited in 'The Irish Tutor,' in Murtoch Delany, Phelim O'Flannigan, Rory O'More, Pierce O'Hara, O'Plenipo, and a host of other characters, written expressly for him. His triumphs were witnessed within the walls of the three London theatres, Old

Drury, Covent Garden, and the Haymarket. 1840 Mr. Power migrated for America, whence never returned. After a most profitable career notwithstanding ill health, he embarked in the steam-ship 'The President,' which sailed from New York 11th March, 1841. It had 123 souls on board. On the 12th a great storm occurred which raged for two days and three nights. Whether, as suspected, the vessel foundered while beating between Nantucket shoals and George Bank, remains unknown. Nothing more was ever heard of that fatal bark and its numerous tenants:—

'There is no ray
By which her doom we may explore;
We only know she sailed away,
Was seen, but never heard of more.' [J.A.B.]

POWNALL, THOMAS, a distinguished antiquarian, and statesman, 1722-1805.

POYET, B., a French architect, 1742-1824.

POYET, W., chancellor of France, 1474-1548.

POYNET, or PONET, JOHN, successive bishop of Rochester and Winchester, 1516-1566.

POYNINGS, SIR EDWARD, a statesman of the reigns of Henry VII. and Henry VIII.

POYNTER, W., a theological writer, died 1820.

POZZETT, P., an Italian savant, 1769-1816.

POZZI, J. B., an Italian painter, 16th century.

POZZI, J. H., an Italian poet, 1697-1752.

POZZI, STEFANO, a clever Italian painter, 1701-1768. His brother, JOSEPH, a painter, died 1760.

POZZO, ANDREA, an Italian Jesuit, dist. as a painter, architect, and writer on art, 1642-1700.

POZZO, C. DEL, an archæologist, died 1657.

POZZO, COUNT J. DEL, an architect, b. 1711.

POZZO-DI-BORGO, CHARLES ANDREA Count, a native of Corsica, distinguished as statesman in the interest of the 'Holy Alliance' was born in Corsica, 1764, and first became conspicuous as a partizan of the English in the tir of Paoli. When Corsica was incorporated with France, Pozzo-di-Borgo became a political employé of other governments, and contributed his services—especially as a general and ambassador in the Russian service—to the overthrow of Napoleon. He was a man of great political ability and foresight. After the fall of Napoleon, from 1814 to 1830, he acted as Russian ambassador in Paris, and since then he was living about twenty years ambassador in London. Died in Paris, 1840.

PRADES, J. M. DE, a Fr. theologian, 1720-80.

PRADIER, JAMES, a distinguished French sculptor, 1792-1852.

PRADO, B. DE, a Spanish painter, died 1593.

PRADO, J., a Spanish commentator, 1547-96.

PRADON, N., a French poet, 1632-1698.

PRADT, ABBE DOMINIQUE DE, distinguished as a political writer and diplomatist, was born in Auvergne 1759, became a deputy of the ecclesiastical order to the estates-general 1789, having previously published the first of his political pamphlets entitled 'Antidote to the Congress of Rastadt.' After urging a coalition of Europe against the French republic he became a Buonapartist, and assisted at Napoleon's coronation as king of Italy. After the fall of Napoleon he became an adherent of the Bourbons. Died 1837.

PRAM, C., a Danish poet, 1756-1821.

PRASLIN, CÆSAR GABRIEL DE CHOISEUL

De, a statesman and peer of France, cousin of the Duc de Choiseul, 1712-1785.

RAT, A. DU, a French cardinal, 1465-1535.

RATILLI, F. M., an Ital. antiquary, d. 1770.

RATO, J. DE, an Ital. philologist, died 1782.

RATT, CHARLES, earl of Camden, chancellor of the Rockingham administration, 1714-1794.

RATT, SIR C., a peninsular officer, 1771-1839.

RATT, S. J., a novelist, 1749-1814.

RAXILLA, a Greek poetess, 5th century B.C.

RAXITELES, a famous Grecian sculptor, author of works in bronze and marble, 4th cent. B.C.

RAXITELES, a disting. carver, 1st cent. B.C.

RAY, G., an historian of Hungary, 1723-1801.

REISSNITZ, VINCENT, a celebrated Prussian discoverer of the water cure, 1799-1851.

REMONTVAL, PETER LE GUAY DE, a French writer and mathematician, 1716-1767.

RESTET, J., a Fr. mathematician, died 1690.

RESTON, JOHN, a learned puritan of the Church of England, author of a 'Treatise on the Infant,' 1587-1628.

RESTON, T., a dramatic writer, died 1598.

RESTON, W., a Scotch writer, 1742-1818.

RETI, M., an Italian painter, 1613-1699.

REVOST, CL., a Fr. theologian, 1693-1752.

REVOST, I. B., a Genev. natural., 1755-1819.

REVOST, P., a French painter, 1764-1823.

REVOST, P., a French literateur, 1751-1839.

REVOST D'EXILES, ANTHONY FRANCIS, a miscellaneous writer and novelist, translator of Eliza Harlowe and Sir C. Grandison, 1697-1763.

REVOST D'EXMES, FRANCIS LE, a French writer and dramatic author, 1729-1793.

REVOST DE LAJANNES, M., a French jurist and prof. of jurisprudence, 1696-1749.

REVOST-SAINT-LUCIEN, R. H., a French writer on public law, 1740-1808.

RICE, JOHN, a native of London, who went to Florence and became superintendent of the museum to the grand duke, and professor of Greek at Pisa; author of Scripture and Classical Commentaries, 1600-1676.

RICE, SIR JOHN, an eminent antiquarian, author of a Defence of British History in answer to Polydorus, died about 1553.

RICE, DR. RICHARD, a native of Glamorgan, who attained eminence as a dissenting minister, financial and political writer, 1723-1791.

RICHARD, JAMES CAWLES, well known for his Researches into the Physical History of Man, was born in Herefordshire, 1786. From 1841 to 1845 he was in practice at Bristol as a physician, and then removed to London on receiving appointment as commissioner on lunacy. He died 1848.

RICHARD, R., a Welch divine, died 1644.

RIDEAUX, JOHN, D.D., bishop of Worcester, born at Stoward, Devonshire, 17th September, 1657. His father not being in circumstances to give him the advantages of a liberal education, he was indebted to the liberality of a Christian lady in the parish, who sent him to a grammar school, where he acquired an elementary knowledge of the Latin and Greek languages. Having an unquenchable thirst for learning, he travelled on foot to Oxford and supported himself by some menial services after college, his time being divided between the offices of the kitchen, and the study of elegant literature.—A person of such energy and devotion to the pursuit of knowledge could not but rise to distinction, and accordingly his great eminence procured his election as a member, till in due course he became rector, of the college. In 1615, he was appointed regius professor of divinity, with which office was then associated that of canon of Christ church, and afterwards he filled the high and more influential station of vice-chancellor for a series of years. His last and highest step in the ladder of preferment was his consecration to the see of Worcester in December, 1641. Amid all this dignity of station, however, he was not exempt from trouble, for his devoted loyalty to the cause of Charles I. exposed him to many hardships, and ultimately reduced him to such poverty that he was obliged to sell his library for the maintenance of himself and family. He was a man of mild, amiable, and unassuming manners, of great piety and such profound and extensive learning, that he was called by his contemporaries 'the Pillar of orthodoxy.' But he was withal the merest child as to knowledge of the world, and so regardless of pecuniary matters, that he involved his family in great difficulties by his imprudence or carelessness about money. He died at Bredon in Worcestershire, 30th July, 1650, leaving to his children no legacy but 'God's blessing and a father's prayers,' as he expressed it in his will. [R.J.]

RIDEAUX, HUMPHREY, D.D., a divine of as great celebrity as the preceding, was born at Padstow in Cornwall in 1648. He began his education at Westminster school, from which he was sent to Oxford. He distinguished himself at that university by his scholastic acquirements; and it was during his residence there that he became author, by the publication of the 'Marmora Oxoniensia,' or the ancient inscriptions from the Arundelian marbles, a work which procured him the patronage of the lord chancellor Finch, afterwards earl of Nottingham, through whom he was appointed a prebend, and afterwards dean of Norwich cathedral. Having become disabled through constitutional infirmity from discharging the public duties of the ministry, he was obliged, under a conscientious sense of duty, to resign his offices in the church, and devote himself entirely to the cultivation of sacred literature. His 'Connection of the Old and New Testament with the History of the Jews and Neighbouring Nations,' and his 'Life of Mahomet,' have long been held in high repute, and obtained an extensive circulation. He died November, 1724. [R.J.]

PRIESTLEY, JOSEPH, was born at Fieldhead, near Leeds, in 1733, where his father was a woollen cloth manufacturer. From the poverty of his parents he obtained only a medium education; but he became a dissenting preacher, and continued in this vocation with various degrees of success till 1767, when he settled in a chapel at Leeds, and commenced his great literary and chemical career. In perusing the works of this remarkable man it is impossible to fail being struck with his intense love of truth. In his scientific note-books he registers every fact as it appeared to his senses; in his political and theological writings he fearlessly states his opinions as they are brought out by his cross-examination of his own thoughts and meditations, and that liberty of independent thought giant literature.—A person of such energy and devotion to the pursuit of knowledge could not but rise to distinction, and accordingly his great eminence procured his election as a member, till in due course he became rector, of the college. In 1615, he was appointed regius professor of divinity, with which office was then associated that of canon of Christ church, and afterwards he filled the high and more influential station of vice-chancellor for a series of years. His last and highest step in the ladder of preferment was his consecration to the see of Worcester in December, 1641. Amid all this dignity of station, however, he was not exempt from trouble, for his devoted loyalty to the cause of Charles I. exposed him to many hardships, and ultimately reduced him to such poverty that he was obliged to sell his library for the maintenance of himself and family. He was a man of mild, amiable, and unassuming manners, of great piety and such profound and extensive learning, that he was called by his contemporaries 'the Pillar of orthodoxy.' But he was withal the merest child as to knowledge of the world, and so regardless of pecuniary matters, that he involved his family in great difficulties by his imprudence or carelessness about money. He died at Bredon in Worcestershire, 30th July, 1650, leaving to his children no legacy but 'God's blessing and a father's prayers,' as he expressed it in his will. [R.J.]

PRIESTLEY, JOSEPH, was born at Fieldhead, near Leeds, in 1733, where his father was a woollen cloth manufacturer. From the poverty of his parents he obtained only a medium education; but he became a dissenting preacher, and continued in this vocation with various degrees of success till 1767, when he settled in a chapel at Leeds, and commenced his great literary and chemical career. In perusing the works of this remarkable man it is impossible to fail being struck with his intense love of truth. In his scientific note-books he registers every fact as it appeared to his senses; in his political and theological writings he fearlessly states his opinions as they are brought out by his cross-examination of his own thoughts and meditations, and that liberty of independent thought which he claims for himself, he determinedly demands for others. In his scientific career his object was uniformly to question nature by every possible experimental investigation, and to state his results as he obtained them. He laid the basis of the chemistry of the gases, and of those modes of investigation in the pneumatic branch of the science which are still pursued. He discovered a great variety of facts in this department of the science. To him we are indebted for the knowledge of oxygen, binoxide of nitrogen, sulphurous acid, fluosilicic acid, muriatic acid, ammonia, carburetted hydrogen, and carbonic oxide. England has produced few men endowed with greater versatility of talent than Priestley. Whether we view him as a pneumatic chemist, a theologian, an electrician, a historian, a politician, his writings bear the impress of an original mind, uncontrolled by any tendency to follow in beaten tracks, but constantly panting for new fields of investigation. It will ever remain a stain upon the name of England that this noble-minded man, this honour to humanity, should have been compelled by persecution, on account of his religion and politics, to flee his native country. He died in America in the year 1804. [R.D.T.]

PRIEZAC, D. DE, a Fr. jurists., 1590-1662.

PRILESZKY, J. B., a learned Hungarian Jesuit and hagiographer, born 1709.

PRIMATÍCIO, or LE PRIMATICE, F., an Italian architect and painter, 1490-1570.

PRIMEROSE, GILBERT, a Scottish divine, chaplain to James I., and minister of the French church in London, author of 'Jacob's Vow,' and other theological works, died 1642. His son, JAMES, a physician and medical wr., d. abt. 1660.

PRINCE, J., a biographical writer, 1643-1723.

PRINCE DE BEAUMONT, MADAME LE, a French lady, settled as a teacher in England, author of several works, died 1780. Her brother, JOHN BAPTIST LE PRINCE, a painter, 1733-1781.

PRINGLE, SIR JOHN, a Scottish physician, eminent as a natural philosopher and professional writer, born 1707, president of the Royal Society 1772, died 1782.

PRINGLE, THOMAS, a Scottish poet and miscellaneous writer, was born at Blacklaw, Teviotdale, 1789. He began life as a clerk, and having attracted the notice of Scott as a magazine writer, soon after adopted literature as a profession, and endeavoured to establish a newspaper at Edinburgh. Failing in this, he emigrated to the Cape of Good Hope, and, returning to England in 1826, became secretary to the Anti-Slavery Society. He was afterwards known as editor of the popular annual, 'Friendship's Offering,' and in 1834 published his 'African Sketches,' followed by his 'Narrative of a Residence in South Africa.' Died 1834.

PRINSEP, JAMES, an Asiatic antiquarian, secretary to the Asiatic Society of Calcutta, 1800-40.

PRILOLO, B., a French historian, 1602-1667.

PRIOR, MATTHEW, whose period of authorship was contemporary with the last years of Dryden and the earliest stage of Pope, was a pleasing poet, possessing little vigour or originality, but remarkable for his skill in versification, and his gay and easy grace of imagery and diction. His occasional epigrams and his lively but indecent tales, are his best productions; though there is merit, also, in his semi-metaphysical poem 'Alma, or the Progress of the Soul,' and in his attempt at religious poetry, 'Solomon.' His poems were only the recreation of a man actively engaged in public life. Born 1664, he was the son of a joiner in London. The accident having directed the attention of Lord Dorset to the boy's studious habits, education was procured for him; and, on leaving Oxford, he distinguished himself, under the government of King William, a dexterous diplomatist in several foreign missions. Deserting his political party, like so many men of higher rank in that slippery time, he shared, in the latter part of his life, the vicissitudes and dangers of the Tories. He lived till 1721. [W.]

PRIOR, T., an Irish economist, 1679-1751.

PRISCIAN, a famous Roman grammarian, master of a school at Constantinople, 4th cent.

PRISCILLIAN, a Spanish heresiarch of the fourth century. The errors which misled him were imported by one Marcus from Egypt. Priscillian had both wealth and influence, so that his conversion gave eclat to the novel heresy, and not a few were seduced by his eloquence and ampler. After long contests, the matter was brought before a council at Saragossa, 380, and the most prominent of the sect were communicated. That Priscillian might have sacred shield thrown over him, he was made by the sect bishop of Avila. By a rescript of Gratian the party was condemned and banished, though the decree was afterwards recalled. Under Gratian's successor, Maximus, the Priscillianist leaders were summoned to Bourdeaux for trial. Priscillian himself appealed to the emperor, and business was committed to Evodius, a minister of state. The spiritual offence was brought before a civil tribunal, and at Treves, in 385, Priscillian was put to the rack, and induced to make sad confessions, not only of error, but of hideous impiety. At length he was executed, and the sword of execution fell upon his adherents, who flourished a season in spite of the cruelties to which they were subjected. The heresy of Priscillian was a strange mixture of Gnostic and Manichaean absurdities, combined with allegorical interpretation and mystical rhapsodies. Sabellianism, or denial of a personal distinction in the Godhead, was a further characteristic of the system. The sect were also severe ascetics, and necessarily so from their opinions of the origin and essence of matter, and, therefore, the accusation of their indulgence in lasciviousness and unnatural lusts seems an imputation of their opponents. But they held a high morality in reference to the obligation of speaking truth, and resorted to dissimulation in the defence of their dogmas. [J.]

PRITCHARD, H., an English actress, 1711-1782.

PRITZ, J. G., a German divine, 1662-1732.

PROBUS, MARCUS AURELIUS VALERIUS, a native of Pannonia, who served in the Roman army, and became emperor after the death of Marcus Aurelius 266. He distinguished himself by several victories over the barbarians in Gaul, and was killed by his mutinous soldiers 282.

PROBUS, M. V., a Latin grammarian, 2d cent.

PROCACCINI, ANDREA, a pupil of Carlo Maratti, painter to the king of Spain, 1667-1734.

PROCACCINI, ERCOLE, an historical painter of Bologna, born 1520, died about 1591. His ns were his pupils:—CAMILLO, one of the first tists of that age, 1546-1626. GIULIO CESARE, fine imitator of Correggio, 1548-1626. CARLO NTONIO, celebrated for his landscapes, fruits, and flowers, dates unknown. The son of the latter, illed ERCOLE the YOUNGER, studied under his ole, Giulio Cesare, and painted flowers with eat skill, 1596-1676.

PROCIDA, GIOVANNI DI, a native of Palermo, chief of the conspiracy against the French known the 'Sicilian Vespers,' about 1225-1302.

PROCLUS, born at Byzantium 412 A.C.; died Athens 485. Esteemed by some the most werful thinker of the Alexandrian School—opinion in which we cannot concur. His works, however, are very numerous: an excellent edition many of them, we owe to M. Cousin.

PROCLUS, patriarch of Constantinople, d. 447.

PROCOPE-COUTEAU, the received name of COLTELLI, a French physician and dramatic ter, 1684-1753.

PROCOPIUS, a martyr and saint, 4th century.

PROCOPIUS, a Greek theologian, 5th century.

PROCOPIUS, a Greek historian, 6th century.

PROCOPIUS, DEMETRIUS, a Greek writer, author of an account of the learned Greeks of sient times, last century.

PROCOPOWITSCH, FEOPHAN, called the Asian Chrysostom, an archbishop of Novogorod, 11-1736.

PRODICUS OF CEOS, afterwards settled in ALEXIS; where, in the times of Socrates, he professed Wisdom, and taught like the other Sophists.
His success, in one sense, was great; for he accumulated a large fortune—having adapted his lectures to all classes of purchasers;—the poor man paid his lesson for one drachma, while the rich were charged fifty drachmas a-head. Prodicus at last fell under the lash of Aristophanes; and it is understood that, for the crime of Atheism, he was condemned to the fate of Socrates;—most strange association!—Respecting Prodicus himself, there is a certain dispute: the general rumour from An-tistis being, that his life was not a pure one, and that the money acquired by the teaching of Virtue was dissipated by Pleasure. Mr. Grote, the accomplished historian, has recently questioned this on grounds, some of which appear of weight, but not, as a whole, carry full conviction. To Prodicus, it is true, we owe that famous apologue
—the Choice of Hercules. It is not safe, however, to infer from any abstract teaching concerning Virtue, the character of the Teacher: it is rather the character of the Teacher that gives value to the Teaching; inasmuch, that even an imperfect teaching, provided it presents the sincerity of its soul, will ever contain more to instruct and elevate, than extremest purism, which is only —words or prudery. Neither must the inculcation of abstinence from what is called worldly pleasure, or of asceticism, in any form, be confused with the Teaching of VIRTUE. True virtue consists in the influence of habits on the Soul; and its chief characteristic is, the purpose for which either knowledge or habits are striven for.
The celebrated sneer of Gibbon—That the virtues of the clergy are more dangerous to society than the vices—strikes deeper perhaps than that acute philosopher thought. Certainly the Asceticism in his eye, was the efficient cloak of all practical vice: but who can misinterpret even the sincere asceticism, and almost unparalleled devotion of the JESUIT; or discern in it, aught other than the sacrifice of his own being—just as he would sacrifice the whole world—to an immoral and most hazardous lust of Dominion?—The question now started is vastly more important, than in its bearing on the personal character of PRODICUS. It involves, the entire problem regarding the position of the 'SOPHISTS,' a class of Teachers in Athens, of which Prodicus may be taken as a supreme instance. That these Teachers formed no School is unquestionable; and it was only the sheerest folly, and a gross libel on the Athenian people, through which, they were ever imagined, banded, by malice prepense, to unfold and make popular an 'Art of Lying.' The persons so called, had little connection with each other, taught varying and often opposing doctrines, and assuredly they believed—in a sense—what they taught.—Let us look more minutely at the phenomenon.—And first, as to the so-called 'Art of Lying.' On nothing does greater confusion of thought exist in society, than with respect to the import of the phrase—'Speaking Truth.' It is the meanest who in any age choose to distribute what they know to be false;—even although it has become a question of strange casuistry, how far the false in Fact, may be Truth in principle and reality.

Truth-speaking is not synonymous with the utterance of our existing convictions: it involves inextricably, the far profounder question,—with what impartiality, under what solitudes of conscience, have these convictions been acquired? And this again touches on the still deeper Inquiry.—In what spirit, and for what purpose may the Soul of Man present itself—as a recipient—before the great Universe? Suppose, for instance, that Truth or Knowledge is sought, merely as an arm whereby to accomplish some specific external purpose, is there much reason to believe that either will be attained in their purity? If Virtue is sought, so that it subserve Power; and Knowledge, so that it enable its possessor to acquire social or professional standing, is it likely that the quest for either will be successful?
Are the conditions of any actual country or phase of civilization, so full and absolute, that the Mind in its search for Truth, may safely say, that it desires, and will receive nothing except what can be turned to account, under these conditions? Now the so-called Sophists or public Teachers of Athens, publicly avowed the purpose of enabling young men to obtain power in the State. This, was the coveted prize—the profession prepared for;—and in subservience to this end, and to no other, they taught. One thing only, could follow: the effort after knowledge became a struggle for effect;
the pursuit of truth, the culture of Rhetoric; contests of words, obscured the importance of things; and Conscience is like the unsunned snow;—let a breath touch it, and its virgin whiteness disappears.
—But, if this state of things was fatal to the discernment of TRUTH, much more certainly, did it render growth in WISDOM, impossible. Wisdom is the property of harmony and nobility of Soul;
and no more the result of Knowledge per se, than of the exercise of the meanest mechanical employment. The assertion may seem harsh, if not paradoxical; but ask History—nay, circumspice. Does knowledge emancipate? Are special acquirements, coveted for special ends, the very slightest guarantee against a poorness of sentiment and heart, of which one finds the exact congener among the rudest and most illiterate?—In this direction, it would appear, lay the error of the popular Teachers of Athens; and—with whatever individual exceptions—where have ever lived any extensive class of Teachers, who, at these Sophists are entitled to cast a stone? The pure and large Mind of SOCRATES perceived the destructive error; and against it, his life was a protest.—‘Make yourself virtuous and noble,’ was his cry, ‘and your uses will come!’ A message so terrible and overturning, that it has never been delivered in any age even in part, without ruin to the Prophet. In Athens it led to Death: but in Athens it was heard, and permitted to initiate a Revolution. In that great Democracy, the Prophet had to contend with Men, but not with Institutions; therefore, although he fell, he succeeded. (Article SOCRATES). [J.P.N.]

PRODICUS, a heretic of the 2d century.

PROKOPHIEV, IVAN PROKOPHIEVITSCH, a famous Russian sculptor, 1758-1828.

PRONY, GASPARD C. F. MARIE, Baron De, a learned engineer, physician, and mathematician, professor at the polytechnic school, 1755-1839.

PROPERTIUS, SEXTUS AURELIUS, a Latin poet, of the age of Ovid and Virgil, who shared with them the friendship of Mæcenas, d. about 12.

PROSPER, ST., a learned theologian and historian of the 5th century, known for his opposition to the Pelagians. He was a native of Aquitaine, and survived Augustine, to whom he wrote in 427. Another PROSPER, who lived about the same time, was a native of Africa, and wrote on the call of the Gentiles. A third, called PROSPER PITO, was a poet and chronicler, and lived in Gaul towards the end of the 4th century. His works are often confounded with those of St. Prosper.

PROTAGORAS; one of the most celebrated of those Teachers of Athens, called Sophists. We have spoken of them under the article PRODICUS. In its chief features, the philosophy of Protagoras, resembled that of Locke. He denied the Absolute; and his maxim was that Man, or each Man, is the measure of all Truth.

PROTOGENES, a Greek painter, 336 B.C.

PROUDHON, J. B. V., a Fr. jurist, 1758-1838.

PROVENZALE, MARCELO, an artist in mosaic, cel. for his portrait of Paul V., 1575-1639.

PROYART, L. B., a Fr. histor., abt. 1743-1808.

PRUDENTIUS, AURELIUS, a Christian, and native of Spain, author of valuable poems, b. 348.

PRUDHOMME, L., a Fr. journalist, au. of ‘The Errors and Crimes of the Revolution,’ 1752-1830.

PRUDHON, P. P., a Fr. painter, 1760-1823.

PRYCE, WILLIAM, a physician and mineralogist, author of a Cornish Vocabulary and Grammar, last century.

PRYNNE, WILLIAM, famous in the history of English puritanism, was born of a good family at Swanswick, in Somersetshire, 1600, and became a barrister at law, and member of Lincoln’s Inn at the time when Dr. Preston, a celebrated puritan divine, was lecturer there. It was the period when the illegal operations of the Star Chamber, and the courts of high commission had reduced England to a despotism equal to that of France, while manners of the age were a scandal to religion and good morals. Marshall, Manton, Calamy, Burdett and other preachers in London, kept alive the spirit of earnest piety and love of freedom, which soon after produced the commonwealth—the mere sight of Burton, as Neale remarks, was a sermon against oppression. Prynne, who was a person of sour temper and austere practices, remarkable for his indefatigable application to study, began to write in 1627, and in 1632 he published ‘Histriomastix,’ a tedious work of more than thousand pages, full of learning and curious questions, and written against plays, masks, dance, and especially against women-actors. Some passages in this work were supposed to be levelled against the queen, who had acted in a past performed at Somerset House; and the language of the book was certainly, like most others of the age, anything but refined and complimentary. The real cause of offence in the eyes of Archbishop Laud, who originated the prosecution against Prynne, was, of course, far other than this libel matter, namely, the opposition of Prynne and entire party to the Arminian system and the jurisdiction of the bishops. The information included both the aspersions of the author against the queen and the lords of the council, for their all in the diversions of the age, and his commendation of ‘factious persons.’ The cause was tried before the Star Chamber, and the condemnation of Prynne was a matter of course. After a full hearing he was sentenced to have his book burnt by the common hangman, to be degraded from the bar, and turned out of the society of Lincoln’s Inn; to be degraded at Oxford, to stand twice in pillory, at Westminster and Cheapside, and to lose one of his ears at each place, to pay a fine of £5,000, and then to be imprisoned for life. It must have been a moderate sentence in the eyes of some of the lords of the council, for the earl of Dorset addressed their prisoner in these words: ‘Mr. Prynne, I declare you to be a schismatic in the church, a sedition-sower in the commonwealth, a wolf in sheep’s clothing; in a word, omnium malorum nequissimus. I shall fine you £10,000, which is more than he is worth yet less than he deserves. I will not set you at liberty, no more than a plagued man or a dog, who, though he can’t bite will foam; he is far from being a social soul that he is not a rational soul. He is fit to live in dens with such beasts of prey as wolves and tigers like him; therefore, I condemn him to perpetual imprisonment; and for corporal punishment I would have him branded in the forehead, slit in the nose, have his ears chopped off.’ The sentence was executed, and the general raid against nonconformity caused many to seek refuge in Holland. In 1639 Prynne, though in prison, wrote another book entitled ‘News from Ipswich’ against the system of Laud, (see LAUD), and being condemned again to another fine of £5,000, and to lose the remainder of his ears, had the very stumps hacked off and was branded on both cheeks in the presence of indignant thousands, on the 30th of June, 1640. In this last sentence Burton the famous preacher and Bastwick the physician, were included with him.

the former was accompanied on his road to on by a vast concourse of the populace. In 1640 one was chosen member of the long parliament Newport, and was then released by order of the House of Commons, together with his fellow-sufferers, and they entered London in the midst of a pompant procession which met them some miles from town. The House of Commons likewise voted a money in compensation, which they never got, in consequence of the disturbed state of the times. Eternal punishment these men had undergone except the spirit of the nation, and prepared it for the change of government, yet Prynne was no party to those measures, and when Colonel Pride took possession of the house, he was among the excluded members; he also published a 'Memento' just before the trial of the king, for which he was imprisoned by the parliament. His subsequent history is that of an enemy of Cromwell, and having been in the restoration of Charles II., he was appointed chief keeper of the records in the Tower, and died in that office at his chambers in Lincoln's Inn in 1669. Wood calculates that he wrote a sheet of paper for every day of his lifetime after reaching his estate. His custom was, when he studied, to sit on a long quilted cap, which came an inch over his eyes, serving as an umbrella to defend him from too much light; and seldom eating a morsel, would every three hours or more be munching a roll of bread, and now and then refresh his fasted spirits with ale. To this (says the Duke of Neale) Butler seems to allude in his address to his muse:—

Thou that with ale or viler liquors
Didst inspire Withers, Prynne, or Vicars,
And teach them, though it were in spite
Of nature and their stars, to write.

His works amount to forty volumes, folio and quarto. The most valuable, and a very useful performance, is his 'Collection of Records' in four volumes. [E.R.]

PRZEMYSŁAS, a king of Poland, who seized the crown on the death of Lesko VI. 1295, and was assassinated 1296.

PRIPCOVIUS, SAMUEL, a Polish statesman and diplomat of the Socinians, b. abt. 1592, d. 1670.

PRILMANAZAR, GEORGE, generally regarded as the assumed name of a singular character, devoted to the literary world in the time of Dr. Johnson, who at one period associated with him. He was supposed to have been born in France about 1779. He was the principal author of the 'Universal History,' and wrote a volume of Scriptural allusions to a version of the Psalms, and his own Memoirs. Died 1763.

PRIMENITUS, the last Egyptian king named by Herodotus, suc. his father, Amasis, B.C. 525, expelled by Cambyzes after a reign of six months.

PRIMIS, a king of Egypt, 599-594 B.C.

PRIMETICHUS, a king of Egypt, who reigned thirty-four years, during fifteen of which he was supposed to divide his power with eleven other kings. He reigned alone from 652 to 614 B.C., and was succeeded by his son, Necho. Another SANMETICHUS reigned 400-397 B.C. A king of Corinth, of the same name, reigned 585-562 B.C., after whose time the republican form of government was established.

PSAMMUS, a king of Egypt, 819-810 B.C.

PSAMMUTHIS, a king of Egypt, 380-379 B.C. PSAUME, N., a French theologian, 1518-1575.

PSELLUS, MICHAEL CONSTANTINE, a Greek physician, known as a classical commentator and mathematician, about 1105. Another PSELLUS, called MICHAEL THE ELDER, wrote a work, 'De Operatione Dæmonum,' in the 9th century.

PSINACHES, a king of Egypt, who is said to have reigned from 1021 to 1013 B.C.

PSUSENNES, the first of the name, king of Egypt, 1077-1037 B.C. The second, 1013-979 B.C.

PSYCHRISTUS, a physician of the 5th cent.

PTOLEMY (SOTER) I., king of Egypt, natural son of Philip of Macedon, and an officer of Alexander the Great, succeeded to the government of Egypt on the death of the latter B.C. 324. He took the title of king 307, and raised the new capital of Egypt to the highest importance as the centre of commerce and learning. The museum and library founded by him gave birth to the famous Alexandrian school. Died B.C. 283. PTOLEMY (PHILADELPHUS) II., eldest son of the preceding by Berenice, began to reign in conjunction with his father 285, and became sole king 283. His reign fully sustained the reputation of the former, especially by his generous patronage of letters, one example of which is the Septuagint version of the Hebrew Scriptures, which he caused to be executed. Died B.C. 247. PTOLEMY (EUERGETES) III., son and successor of the preceding, continued his policy, and carried his victorious arms into Syria, Cilicia, and the whole country to the shore of the Euphrates. He restored the idols and much of the wealth ravished by Cambyzes, and died, after a short reign, B.C. 222 or 221.

PTOLEMY (PHILOPATOR) IV., son and successor of the preceding, whom he was suspected of having murdered, was a cruel and debauched character. He was named Philopator (lover of his father), ironically. He caused his wife, Arsinoe, who was also his sister, to be put to death, and sustained a furious war with Antiochus the Great, whom he defeated near Gaza. Died B.C. 205. PTOLEMY (EPIPHANES) V., son of the preceding, was born B.C. 210, became king 205, and was poisoned by his courtiers 180. He brought the Romans into Egypt by appealing to them for protection against Antiochus the Great. He left three children—

Ptolemy Philometor, Ptolemy Physcon, and Cleopatra, who was successively the wife of her two brothers. PTOLEMY (PHILOMETOR) VI., son of the preceding and Cleopatra of Syria, was born B.C. 186; commenced his reign at the age of five years 181, protected by his mother. He was defeated by Antiochus, and compelled to admit his brother to a share in the government 171. Died of his wounds, fighting against Alexander Balas in Syria, 146. PTOLEMY (EUERGETES) VII., brother of Philometor, became guardian of the young king, Ptolemy Eupator, and the year after superseded him on the throne by espousing the queen mother, Cleopatra, 145. He then killed Eupator, and continued his reign, stained with debaucheries and cruelty, till 117 or 116 B.C. PTOLEMY (SOTER) VIII., son of the preceding and Cleopatra, succeeded 116, and sustained a war against his mother, who preferred her other son, Ptolemy IX., till 106. After the death of Cleopatra and the expulsion of Ptolemy IX., who had usurped the throne in 88, he assumed the sovereign authority, and died 81 B.C. He left the crown to his daughter, Berenice, called also Cleopatra. PTOLEMY (ALEXANDER) IX., second son of Ptolemy VII. and Cleopatra, usurped the kingdom a short time during the reign of the preceding, and was dethroned, after murdering his mother Cleopatra, 88. PTOLEMY (ALEXANDER) X., son of the preceding, succeeded Ptolemy VIII. 81, under the patronage of the Romans in the time of Sylla. He married Berenice Cleopatra, whom he caused to be assassinated, for which he was himself massacred after a reign of nineteen days. PTOLEMY (AULETES) XI., a natural son of Ptolemy VIII., was the only descendant of this line of princes after the tragedy just mentioned. He assumed the royal authority 81 B.C., but was not acknowledged king till 59. In 58 he was obliged to fly from Alexandria, and was in Rome, soliciting assistance to re-establish himself, till 55. He was then restored by Gabinius, the governor of Syria and lieutenant-general of Pompey, and died 52. PTOLEMY (DIONYSIUS) XII., eldest son of the preceding, succeeded to the throne conjointly with his sister, Cleopatra, under the protection of Pompey, 52. He became a partizan of Cæsar in the civil wars, and after the battle of Pharsalia caused Pompey to be assassinated, who sought refuge in his states, 48. Aspiring to be sole king, he then took arms against Cæsar, who had decided that Cleopatra should continue to reign with him, and was drowned in the Nile while flying from the field of battle, B.C. 47. PTOLEMY XIII., younger brother of the preceding, was eleven years of age when Cleopatra was left sole mistress of Egypt by his death. She was compelled to marry him by Cæsar, and he reigned with her till his death, 44 or 43 B.C. PTOLEMY (CÆSARIUS) XIV., an illegitimate son of Cæsar and Cleopatra, obtained the title of king from the Roman triumvirs, B.C. 42. He was killed by order of Augustus at the age of eighteen, B.C. 30.

PTOLEMY, two kings of Macedonia:—the first, surnamed Alorites, a natural son of Amyntas II., usurped the throne to the prejudice of his brother, Perdicas, B.C. 371, and was dethroned by Pelopidas 368. The second, surnamed Craunus, eldest son of Ptolemy Soter and Euridice, succeeded B.C. 284, and was killed in battle with the Gauls 280.

PTOLEMY APION, king of Cyrene, and all the Libyan dependencies of Egypt, was a son of Ptolemy VII. and his mistress Irene, and succeeded 117 or 116 B.C. by the will of his father. He died B.C. 96, and bequeathed his estates to the Romans, who declined the bargain for a time, and gave the people their liberty.

PTOLEMY PHILADELPHIUS, a son of Antony and Cleopatra, was made king of Syria, Phœnicia, and Cilicia, by his father B.C. 32. He never reigned, however, but lived at the court of Juba, king of Numidia, having first graced the triumph of Augustus together with his brother, Alexander, and his sister Cleopatra.

PTOLEMY, king of Cyprus, a natural son of Ptolemy VIII., succeeded to the sovereignty of that island at the death of his father B.C. 81. The Romans having resolved to reduce his kingdom to a province, he was poisoned B.C. 58.

PTOLEMY, king of Mauritania, son of Juba II. and Cleopatra, daughter of Mark Antony and of the last Cleopatra of Egypt, began to reign or 20 B.C. Killed by order of Caligula A.D. 41.

PTOLEMY, one of the petty sovereigns reigned in Syria after the fall of the Seleucides, succeeded his father, Menneus, probably as a priest, 86 B.C. After the conquest of Mithridates the Great, he was protected by Pompey, and about 21 B.C. He was succeeded by his Lysanias, at whose death the Lebanon sovereignty was given to Cleopatra.

PTOLEMY, an Egyptian priest and historian, flourished in the reign of Augustus.

PTOLEMY, CLAUDIUS, one of the most distinguished men of Science of Antiquity: he lived during the first half of the second century; his works on Astronomy and Geography continued authorities and text-books for four hundred years. In consequence of the close connection between Ptolemy and Hipparchus, &c. discoveries he reported, and whose labours he continued, it is difficult to detect Ptolemy's personal desertings: but Delambre has evidently done injustice from a desire to exalt Hipparchus. A larger portion of the Planetary theory, as then represented by the scheme of Epicycles, is unquestionably due to him; and his great work—Almagest, or Syntaxis, is the only complete systematic work on Astronomy which the ancients produced. As a geographer, Ptolemy is distinguished from Strabo: the work of the latter confined to descriptive geography; while that of Ptolemy is mathematical. A very admirable edition of it has recently appeared in Germany. The Astronomical and Chronological works of Ptolemy, along with the Commentaries of Theophrastus, were edited and published along with a French translation, in six handsome quarto volumes by the Abbé Halma. [J.]

PTOLEMY OF LUCCA, the ecclesiastical historian, assumed by BARTOLOMEO FIADONTI, an historian of the 14th century.

PUBITSKA, F., a Bohemian hist., 1722–28.

PUBLICOLA, PUBLIUS VALERIUS, son of Collatinus as consul and founder of the Roman republic, 509 B.C., died 501.

PUBLIUS SYRIUS, a Latin poet or dramatist, of whose writings some fragments, or more, at least, are preserved in the works of Seneca. He was a native of Syria, and went to Rome in the condition of a slave about 50 B.C.

PUCCI, F., an Italian theologian, died 1541.

PUCELLE, R., a French lawyer, 1655–1711.

PUCELLE. See JOAN OF ARC.

PUFFENDORF, SAMUEL, a historian, jurist, and naturalist, was born at Chemnitz in Saxony in the year 1632. He was educated at Leipzig for the protestant ministry, but the bent of his mind was in another direction. Through the instrumentality of his elder brother he entered the diplomatic service of Sweden. In the course of his duty he was detained at Copenhagen during the rupture between Sweden and Denmark, and said to have been during this period of enforced leisure that he turned from the practice of the theory of diplomacy and international relations. In the year 1660 he published his well-known 'Elementa Jurisprudentiæ Universalis,' and twelve years afterwards, the still better known 'De Jure Naturæ et Gentium.' He wrote some orical works, chiefly directed to gratify his own employes, which have only been known because they were written by the author of the treatise on the law of nature and nations. This work owed its existence in a great measure to the original labours of Grotius. Puffendorf had a clear and systematic mind, and a great capacity for seeing and developing views which were rational and plausible, if not profound. In this he resembled the Scottish school of philosophers with him his works, and especially a small ethical treatise 'De Officio Hominis et Civis,' were marked of great authority. His views on the anomalous position of the German empire created great controversy, and such political influence has been rare for theoretical writers to possess. He died at Berlin, where he had been employed by the elector of Brandenburg, in 1741. [J.H.B.]

PUGATSCHOFF, JEMELJAN or YEMELKA, a Cossack general, who obtained military rank in the Prussian and Austrian armies, and afterwards committed himself off as Peter III., emperor of Russia.
He took the field in 1773, and, soon at the head of 6,000 men, he was marching on Moscow, when he was betrayed and executed 1775.

PUGET, L. DE, a French naturalist, 1629-1709.

PUGET, PETER, one of the greatest artists produced by France, distinguished as a sculptor, architect, painter, and ship-builder, 1622-1694.

PURSON, FRANCIS, an architect and painter, d. 1707.

PURGE, WILLIAM OWEN, a Welch literateur, author of a Lexicon and other works, 1760-1835.

PUGIN, A., a French designer, died 1832.

PUGIN, AUGUSTUS NORTHMORE WELBY, was the son of a French gentleman who fled to England at the period of the revolution. He was born in 1783, and commenced his professional career as a painter and decorator at the Theatre Royal, Covent Garden: he published his first work, on
'Chic Furniture,' in 1835, and 'The Glossary of Ecclesiastical Ornament' in 1844. Died 1852.

PUSAYE, COUNT JOSEPH DE, a French officer of noble family, who sat as a deputy in the states-general, and, being proscribed by the republic, induced the English government to undertake the expedition to Quiberon; died in England 1827.

PUSSEY, L., a Fr. geometrician, 1769-1843.

PUSSEY, A., a Fr. medical writer, 1789-1804.

PUSSEY, J. B., a dramatist, 1762-1821.

PULCHERIA, ELIA, saint and empress of the East, was daughter of Arcadius and Eudoxia. She was born at Constantinople 399, and governed the empire under the name of her brother, Theodosius, from the age of fifteen to the year 447, when she was deceased. After the death of Theodosius in 450, she was proclaimed empress, and ruled with Marcianus, with whom she married, till her death in 453. She was a woman of exemplary conduct, and has the credit of assembling the council of Chalcedon in 451.

PULCI, LUIGI, an Italian poet, 1431-1487.

PULGAR, F. DE, a Spanish historian, 1436-86.

PULIGO, D., an Italian painter, 1475-1527.

PULLER, R., an English cardinal, restored the university of Oxford, 12th cent.

PULNEY, R., a dist. botanist, 1730-1801.

PULNEY, WILLIAM, earl of Bath, descended from an old family of Leicestershire, was born 1681 and commenced his career in parliament in 1705. He became a privy councillor and secretary of war at the accession of George I., being then a friend and partizan of Walpole. He afterwards became the enemy of that minister, and was associated with Bolingbroke as editor of the Crafts- man. Died 1764.

PULZONE, S., an Italian painter, 1550-1588.

PUNT, J., a Dutch painter, 1711-1779.

PUPIENUS. See MAXIMUS CLODIUS.

PURCELL, HENRY, the greatest of English musicians, was born in 1658, as it is believed, in Westminster. His father and uncle were both musicians, and gentlemen of the Chapel Royal at the Restoration. It is known that Purcell's father died in 1664, so that the young musician could not have received much benefit from his instructions.
It is not a little to be wondered at that there is no account of from whom he received his first lessons in musical art, though from the circumstance that he was entered as one of the children of the chapel when Cook was master, it is inferred that he had under him commenced his education. He is supposed, also, to have received lessons from Pelham Humphreys, and afterwards from Dr. Blow, on whose tombstone was inscribed that he had been 'master to the famous Mr. Henry Purcell.' While still a boy, Purcell composed several Anthems that were thought worthy of being performed, and some of these juvenile essays in composition are in use in the English cathedrals to the present time. At eighteen years of age he was appointed organist at Westminster Abbey; and at twenty-four he was promoted to one of the three places of organist to the Chapel Royal. After this his fame was spread far and wide, and his sacred compositions were sought after with greediness and listened to with a feeling akin to religious rapture. From this period until thirty years after his death, his songs took precedence of all others, and only at length gave way before the fashionable operatic songs of the greater Handel. The works of Purcell embrace every species of composition then known, and all were far beyond those of his contemporaries. Purcell's first dramatic writings were to the songs in Nahum Tate's 'Dido and Æneas.' He afterwards composed music for Nat Lee's 'Theodosius, or the Force of Love,' which was performed at the Duke's theatre in 1690. In the same year he composed music for the 'Tempest.' In 1691 he set the songs of Dryden's, 'King Arthur' to original music.
In 1692 'The Indian Queen,' by Sir R. Howard and Dryden was brought out with music by Purcell.
He next wrote music for D'Urfey's 'Don Quixote.'
In D'Urfey's 'Pills to Purge Melancholy' several of his songs are published, as also in Playford's
'Singing Master.' In 1695 he composed music for 'Boadicea.' He also wrote airs, overtures, and interludes for many dramas. He composed three cantatas, two of which 'Mad Bess' and 'From Rosy Bowers,' are still ranked as unrivalled works of their kind. After his death, which happened in November, 1695, his widow collected and published his works in 2 volumes folio, under the title of 'Orpheus Britannicus.' It is said of Purcell 'that his anthems far exceed in number those of any other composer, and would alone have furnished sufficient employment for a moderately active mind, and a life of average duration.' Purcell's remains were deposited in Westminster Abbey, where a tablet to his memory may be seen, with the following inscription, said to be from the pen of Dryden:—'Here lies Henry Purcell, Esq., who left this life, and is gone to that blessed place, where only his own harmony can be exceeded. Obiit. 21mo die Novembris, Anno ætatis suæ 37mo Annoq. Domini 1695.'

[J.M.]

PURCHAS, SAMUEL, a native of Essex, editor of a collection of voyages and travels, abt. 1577-1628.

PURE, M. DE, a French writer, 1634-1680.

PURI, D., a Swiss philanthropist, 1709-1786.

PURI, J. P., a Swiss traveller, last century.

PURVER, ANTHONY, a poor rustic of Hampshire, who mastered the Hebrew, Greek, and Latin languages, and executed an English version of the Scriptures, which was printed at the cost of Dr. Fothergill. While engaged in these studies he settled at Andover as a schoolmaster, and finally became a preacher among the quakers. Born about 1702, died 1777.

PUSCHKIN, A. S., a Russian poet, 1799-1837.

PUSSOT, H., a French jurist, 1615-1697.

PUTTEN, HENRY VAN DER, called in Latin Ericurus Puteanus, and in French Dupuy, a learned Dutch writer and poet, 1574-1646.

PUTTENHAM, GEORGE, an Oxford scholar, kn. as a poet in the age of Elizabeth, d. abt. 1600.

PUTTER, J. S., a Germ. publicist, 1725-1807.

PUY, A. J. DU, a Fr. statesman, 1753-1832.

PUY, H. DU. See PUTTEN.

PUY, LOUIS DU, a Fr. literateur, 1709-1795.

PUY, PIERRE, DU, a learned French antiquarian, historian, and theologian, 1582-1651.

PUY-SEGUR, JAMES DE CHASTENET, Viscount De, a French officer, who was at thirty battles and a hundred and twenty sieges without ever receiving a wound. He was born in 1600, and is author of Memoirs relating to the period, 1617 to 1658; died 1682. His son, JAMES FRANCIS, commander-in-chief in the French Netherlands and marshal of France, author of 'The Art of War,' 1655-1743. The son of the latter, FRANCIS MAXIMUS DE CHASTENET, Marquis de Puysegur, a lieutenant-general, and writer on church property and the military art in China, 1716-1782. His second son, ANTHONY HYACINTHE ANNE DE CHASTENET DE PUYSEGUR, better known as the Count de Chastenet, a navigator and archæologist, 1752-1802. P. L. DE CHASTENET, Comte De Puysegur, son of the marshal, an officer and minister of war, 1727-1807. J. AUGUSTUS, brother of the latter, a distinguished prelate and deputy of the estates-general, 1740-1803. ARMAND MARIE JAMES, son of the minister of war, camp-marshal and physician, famous for his zeal in the propagation of animal magnetism, 1782-1825.

PUZOS, N., a French accoucheur, 1686-1753.

PUY, or PYE, H. J., a native of London, successor of Wharton as poet-laureate, 1745-1813.

PYLE, THOMAS, a minister of the Church of England, known as a Scripture commentator, and partizan of Hoadley in the Bangorian controversy, 1674-1756.

PYM, JOHN, member for Tavistock in all the parliaments of Charles I., and leader of the House of Commons during the struggle preceding the parliamentary war, was born in Somersetshire, 1584, and educated at Oxford. He was the orator of the day, and such was his popularity, that he was called 'King Pym.' The events which in his career fill a considerable space in English history. In 1626-1628 he was among those who managed the impeachment of the duke of Buckingham and Dr. Manwaring—the latter for his mon on the regal prerogative, in which he argued that the consent of parliament was not necessary for the levying of taxes, and that the Divine require implicit obedience to the king. In Pym and his party came into close relation with the Scotch Covenanters. When the parliament met, 3d November, 1640, he harangued them on the grievances of the nation, which immediately took into consideration instead of the king's speech; thus he was the Mirabeau of English Tennis Court. About a week afterwards he made a more studied and more impetuous course on grievances, and impeached the earl of Strafford not only of crimes against the state of immoralities; he was also one of the managers of his trial, as, in short, he was always at the head of the public business, and knew more of parliamentary matters than any man living. In February, 1641, he spoke against Archbishop Laud on the occasion of his impeachment, and after the election of that prelate he became chairman of a committee appointed by the House of Commons during the recess, which lasted from 9th September to 20th October, by which committee the sovereign authority was in some measure exercised.

At the next great event, beginning of 1642, was the impeachment of the five members, Hollis, Hazen, Hampden, PYM, and Strode, who were demanded by the king for treasonable practices, and detected by the city; on this occasion the king of London, apprehensive of his personal safety, Pym, therefore, saw the commencement of a final struggle between Charles I. and his parliament, but he died before any decisive advantage had been obtained, on the 8th of December, about a month after he had been appointed lieutenant of the ordnance. It was reported that the royalists that the cause of his death was bus pediculosus; and in order to disprove this calumny his body was exposed for several days to the public gaze; afterwards, it was attended to in Westminster Abbey by most of the members and commons in parliament. Shortly before his death Pym published a 'Vindication' of his conduct. After alluding to the divisions formed by the bishops, and their encouragement of the malignants, he adds:—'For these reasons I have my opinion for abolishing their functions, which conceive may as well be done as the dissolution of monasteries, monks, and friars, was in King Henry the Eighth's time;' he concludes with declaring that he was not the author of the present divisions; with acknowledging the king for his sovereign; and with the honest conviction that when he was persecuted as a traitor merely in the service of his country, no man could blame him for taking care of his own safety by flying to the protection of parliament, who were paid to make his cause their own. The puritanism shall attend Pym's deathbed, and in the funeral sermon which he preached before parliament, passed the highest eulogium on the strict morality, piety, and serenity of the departed patriot and statesman. It is admitted that Pym was one of Sir Joshua Reynolds.

John Pym.

Sir Walter Raleigh.

The Right Hon.^{ble} William Pitt.

st to urge the necessity of appealing to the word. On the restoration of Charles II., Pym's body was dug up in Henry the Seventh's chapel, with those of about twenty others, including the allant Admiral Blake, the mother of Cromwell, and his daughter Mrs. Claypole, and transferred to the neighbouring churchyard. He is said to have left several children, and his lady, who died in 1720, is reported to have been a highly accomplished woman. [E.R.]

PYNAKKER, A., a Dutch painter, 1621-1673.

PYNSON, RICHARD. See PINSON.

PYRA, J. E., a German poet, 1715-1744.

PYRRHO, born at ELIS, where he lived about the year 340 B.C. Plato was then dead: disputations had arisen in the ACADEMY, which had not the fortune to obtain a second master: ARISTOTLE attacked it on all sides; and philosophy was in confusion. In the midst of these quarrels, a remarkable person we have named arose, and claimed as the dogma of his Philosophy and rule of Life—'I know nothing about it and I maintain.' Of a man who wrote nothing, and whose character must be gathered from scraps preserved by auditors, it is impossible to speak with decision; but to his power over his contemporaries, and, therefore, to his genius, the singular calmness of his name bears ample testimony. Great mistakes have prevailed regarding the doctrines of Pyrrho:—notable Greeks had never so little common sense, as a personage like what he is vulgarly imagined to have been:—the stories about his doubting the evidence of his senses, and valiantly butting against any post or rock in his way, are simply absurd—even more so than the similar myths, once prevalent regarding the shrewd and sagacious compatriot DAVID HUME! We shall learn the nature of Pyrrho's scepticism, through reflection on his position. The same he propounded, or rather the resource to which he fled, was simply a tertium quid, in reference to AFFIRMATIVE and NEGATIVE systems, prevailing in his time. Now what were these? Nothing but the very conflict waging in philosophy around ourselves—the conflict, viz., between Idealism and Sensualism—between doctrines of the Absolute, and of the dependence of the Mind on all its functions, on the shows and events of external Nature. There are two Schools, said Pyrrho,—whose systems, viewed from their different points of sight, appear equally probable; and the relation of the strength of the arguments sustaining them seems to be—par. Is it not likely then, that the problem sought to be solved, is really insoluble by the human faculty—and therefore, that the true position, of the problem is one of Indifference? In the principle of a Scepticism of this sort, there is certainly nothing dangerous: it involves little more than we find in the antinomies of KANT: assuredly it has firmer ground, than thousands of popular dogmatisms on either side. There is no reason whatever to suppose that Pyrrho's doctrines went beyond this:—he denied subjective certainty, or sought to weaken the evidence of consciousness.—One caution to the student may be repeated:—he ought not in case to credit the follies, attributed to these sceptical Greeks; for, if eminently speculative, they were, in their quality of natural Artists, eminently clear and practical also. There is a maxim of Coleridge's, which should, in no attempt at interpretation, be at any time lost sight of:—'Never suppose that you understand a man's Ignorance, until you are sure that you are not ignorant of his Understanding.' [J.P.N.]

[Pyrrhus—From an Antique Bust.]

PYRRHUS, son of Æcides, and king of Epirus, one of the most illustrious generals of antiquity, was born about 318 B.C., and was left an orphan in childhood under the protection of Glaucias, king of Illyria. He was placed on the throne of his ancestors by force of arms when about twelve years of age, and reigned peacefully five years, when advantage was taken of his absence to transfer the crown to his great uncle, Neoptolemus. After serving in the army of Alexander the Great, and greatly distinguishing himself at the battle of Ipsus, B.C. 301, Pyrrhus recovered his dominions, which he shared with his rival, and then caused the latter to be put to death. He next contended with the Romans for possession of the dominions of Alexander the Great, and became master of Macedon. Among his principal battles was that of 279 B.C. against the Roman consuls Sulpicius and Decius. He was killed, gallantly fighting, at the siege of Argos, B.C. 272. The life of Pyrrhus is one of the most interesting written by Plutarch. [E.R.]

PYTHAGORAS lived, according to the chronology of CLINTON, about 570 B.C. CICERO tells us, he settled in Magna Græcia, in the fourth year of TARQUINIUS SUPERBUS, or when ROME had begun to rise—between 520 and 530 B.C.:—One of the most august Forms of which we can descry any outline, through these long twenty-four centuries; nor, if we reflect, how thickly the mists have settled around all acts and Actors of that far past, can it be wonderful, that, as if his Shadow only, is now to be discerned.—Before attempting to lay down on a modern canvas, even a space for that Shadow, we must consent to a few principles of applicable historic criticism. And, foremost of all, it is imperative that we disconnect not only with Reality or Fact, but also with the pretensions, and therefore with the reputation of this memorable Teacher, every shred of the marvellous that so soon got fastened to his name. Not merely the story of the golden thigh—a myth of the vulgarst kind, and valuable only as evidence that such myths spring up and endure,—but also those manifold traditions concerning his supernatural instruction; for assuredly in the tales of his initiation in the cave of the Cretan Jupiter, or that his system of morals flowed direct from inspired lips at Delphi, there is nothing beyond incidents of travel occurring to one who thirsted for all knowledge; and disfigured through the slavish veneration of disciples, who, instead of being fed by his genius, succumbed to his authority, and slid insensibly into such modes as those, of rendering reason for their ultimate formula and final appeal—the αὐτοῖς ἰσχύει.—Next, and with equal decision, we reject as binding on Pythagoras, the logical schemes constructed by his followers, even so early as the times of Philolaus. The schools founded on the name of an illustrious Master, never retain his genius; and as in default of power of Insight, and the difficult power of Thought, there remains the easy exercise of Logic, it uniformly befalls—as already we have required to assert—that the letter of the original teaching becomes substituted for its spirit; symbols and figures of speech at first simple and catholic, are adduced in defence of mere dogmas and phantasms; and—worst of all—effective and living Morals, touching on the practical relations of Man with Society and God, are displaced by arid Theory. This is the process by which, in the words of a remarkable writer of our own day, WISDOM, is dried for sale and exportation; and has not its pestilence followed the steps of all mighty Instructors, whose feet have ever touched the soil of our World? Let us not charge to Pythagoras, that doctrine which defines the Physical World by the number five,—the Vegetable by the number six,—the Animal by seven,—Human Life by eight,—Ultramundane Life by nine,—and the Divine Life by the Δέκα, or TEN! The Mind that has left so great a remembrance, and which fills that imposing portion of the sphere of Antiquity, did not gain its influence over the working Manhood by its time, through the concoction or preaching of enigmas like these!—Lastly: we must not approach these ancient philosophies, or undertake their interpretation, as if they were inherently mysterious, or different in kind, from the aspirations of great and sincere Thinkers of our own day:—The concealed lore of Egyptian priests, the secrets at Eleusis or Samothrace, were neither knowledge nor philosophies, but presumption and pretence, founded on the abuse of both. Greatness in Antiquity, is like Greatness now,—its foremost affection being for the simplicity of Truth; and to the right apprehension of what that Greatness was, there is no path save one. The Ingenuous alone can understand the Ingenuous:—The worthy Seeker, will ever carry along with him, faith in Greatness and reverence for it; but this conviction, also,—that, to whatever extent careful criticism of the influences and circumstances, within which an Ancient Teacher lived, does not enable us to translate his thoughts into the universal language of the Heart and Reason of Humanity, to that same extent must he be held as severed from the Present, and therefore effaced from its Past.—Under such dim but guiding lights, let us, as best we may, and with rapid crayon, proceed to sketch the features of the Crotonian statesman and sage. And FIRST,—as to the position from which Pythagoras started. He could have no starting point except the fundamental Idea of the Ionian School, which, in an enlarged sense, is the fundamental Idea of all Greek philosophy—viz. beneath the endless forms and singular changes of outward things, there is some great Unity or Principle,—just as the unfathomed and deep sounding ocean, rests underneath the billows that chase each other across its surface, and die in ripples on the shore. Now the Ionians, or the physical school, sought this principle in a common physical element; and, on the ground of imperfect observation or ruder experiments, one imagined that all forms of substance could be traced to transformations of Water; another to modifications of Air and a third laid it down that Fire is the universal substance or Force. This form of the general conception, must be taken as our first systematic statement of that problem, which still occupies Chemical Analysts: it is the glory of Pythagoras that he struck out a new mode of the grand search, and laid the foundation of the Physical Sciences, which look not for elements, but relations, and, through these, for ultimate Laws—indicating primal Forces. The most consummate and inventive Mathematician of that epoch—found in NUMBERS, the expression of the relations of Quantity, and in GEOMETRY, an organ that could evolve the relations of Form. It were simply foolish to pretend, that he proceeded far, in the reduction of phenomena within such relations; but the idea of a possible science in this direction took strong hold of his masculine intellect and Greek imagination; and he embodied the conviction, in the dogma of his School. These convictions were deepened, and his conception of the character of the Universe vastly enlarged, by what we must consider either a most fortunate guess, or a capital discovery. Struck, as could not fail, by a Samian, by that unsurpassed music, which he floated around him from infancy, in the chanted Lyrics, and great Epics of Troy, he seems to have discerned that HARMONY was representable by NUMBER; and hence the second fundamental belief of his Philosophy, that Harmony too is sacred and one of the first principles of Things. It may not be said, that in the expression of truths so deep, an Inquirer, even sagacious as Pythagoras must always have avoided fantastic expressions and mystical forms; but then his notions were correct at their root, and his faith a living and practical one: he looked at the scheme of Things around him, no longer as perplexing, but as mighty order and a solemn music, and he bent wonder and adoration! Should the student desire a tangible and veritable image of such a philosophy, he must not go to Philolaus, or Antiquarian Critics, but to the writings of JOHN KEPLER. He too, spoke strangely in his youth; but those dreams about relation and harmony, conducted him in the end to a πρῶτη, ἡ ἀληθής—to Laws which produce the epoch of Newton, and raised him into an everlasting Name.—The sage and Lawgiver of Croton stands, however, towards the ancient and modern world alike, in a second aspect—one that shows him on a platform quite above any which belong mere Speculative Physics. First, or at least not clearly in the Greek world, he felt and asserted the indestructible personality of the Human Soul, and that the ground of its Existence, is its Moral State. Children laugh at the doctrine of the Metempsychosis; but observe what it really signifies, and the angust verities it includes. It is an avowment, in the first place, of the independence of the Ego, or of the SOUL, not merely of rounding and changing accidents, but of its present and apparent Life,—an idea, which, in its majestic proportions can take possession of no mind, without making it great. Pythagoras, used none of these proportions. The soul is assured by its moral conditions, and its fates conform correspond with these. If it has done well its duty in its existing state, if it has been taught and elevated by experience, Death is the step towards some loftier form and more expanded sphere: if, on the contrary, in the conflict of right and wrong, it has done the wrong, and is doomed to be a slave of passion, what fate is possible but descent, and the shape of grovelling creatures? Be it remembered, this metempsychosis is our earliest practical representation of the notion of Immortality; nor is there a truer account anywhere, at so primal an age, of Man's Moral relation with the Gods. The history of the Soul, indeed, is supposed confined to this Earth; and therefore, the modes of Terrestrial Life, are taken actually presenting that History. No sublime Relation announcing a purely spiritual Existence, had descended to illumine Pythagoras: and Worlds beyond this, were not then imagined;—he knew not that the lights of the midnight Vault shone through Orbs, stretching upward and upward, through serene Ether, and—through every variety of circumstance and condition—merging into the Infinite. Surely it is no slight honour, and was enough to uphold his confidence that knowledge came to him from a Higher Source, that the mind of that illustrious Greek, reached so deep an insight, and could sustain so large a belief.—Realize now and combine the two foregoing conditions,—those warm and vague speculations concerning the Harmony of the Universe, and that profound conviction of Man's large destinies, and the paramount import of his Moral Nature;—could a great Soul possessed by both, remain in inaction, or be satisfied with mere speculative teaching? Pythagoras, appears to have added that highest attribute of Humanity—WISDOM, or the power practically to understand Mankind, and therefore to influence our Human Fates. Hence, his memorable effort in Magna Græcia to found a new Moral Commonwealth—the first and the best Utopia, of which we have any record; the excellence of its aim flowing from the character and principles of its Founder, and its sagacity demonstrated by its great success. Ignorance and external circumstance eventually prevailed to crush it; but many ages elapsed, ere the fame of the great confederacy of Crotona, faded in Greece. We know little that is certain, of the positive laws of that Confederacy; but its foundation was this,—as Harmony is the rule of Universal Nature, and the cause of its Stability, so must it be the rule of all Human Societies, which fulfil their object and may reach permanence. It is not easy to refuse assent to such a conception; neither can one overlook that while it involve; the germ of all Utopias, framed from that time until now—it expresses also, that which, as it becomes realized, constitutes the history of Civilization. It is probable that Pythagoras, like his successors, hoped too much from mere laws and external conditions of Order, and trusted too little to that inner and unseen order, which ordains that the ultimate sum of the World, shall be worked out by the efforts, and even through the imperfections of the Individual;—nevertheless, his august Name must stand far up in that bright roll of Worthies, who have practically held by Reason, and not despaired of Humanity.—Let the great Shade, have all honour. [J.P.N.]

PYTHEAS, a celebrated mathematician, astronomer, and geographer, born in the Greek colony of Marseilles, then called Massilia, in the time of Alexander the Great. He is famous for his voyages of discovery, which are said to have extended as far as Iceland.

PYTHODORIS, a queen of Pontus, wife of Polemon I., and queen regent during the minority of her son, Polemon II., beginning of the Christian era.

Q

CADE, M. F., a Prus. philologist, 1682-1757.
 CADRATUS, a bishop of Athens, known as one of the early apologists for Christianity, 2d ct.
 CADRIO, FRANCIS XAVIER, a learned Italian Jesuit, author of a 'History of Poetry,' 1695-1756.
 CAGLIATI, PAOLO, the earliest dramatist who introduced music on the stage at Rome, 1606.
 CAGLIO, G., an Italian painter, cel. abt. 1693.
 CAGLIO, LORENZO, a native of Italy, who accompanied his father to Vienna, and was educated and practised there as an architect, 1730-1800. His son, GIOVANNI MARIA, and his nephew, GIULIO and GUISEPPE, were distinguished painters, and flourished from about 1750-1810. DOMINICO, the son of Guiseppe, called the Maletto of Germany, 1786-1837.
 QAINI, FRANCISCO, an Ital. painter, 1611-1800. His son, LUIGI, a pupil of Guercino, 1643-1717.

QUANZ, J. J., a Germ. musician, 1697-1773.
 QUARENGHI, G., an Ital. painter, 1744-1817.
 QUARIN, J., an Austrian physician, 1733-1814.
 QUARLES, FRAN., an Engl. poet, 1592-1614.
 QUARREY, J. H., an ascetic writer, 1580-1656.
 QUATREMAIRE, J. R., a Benedictine of the congregation of St. Maur, kn. as a critic, 1611-71.
 QUATROMANNI, SERTORIUS, a miscellaneous Italian writer and classical translator, 1551-1606.
 QUELLINUS, E., an em. Flem. painter, 1607-78. JOHN ERASMUS, his son and pupil, 1630-1715.
 QUENSEL, CONRAD, a Swedish mathematician, 1676-1732. A relation of his, of the same name, author of 'The Swedish Flora,' 1768-1806.
 QUERENGHI, ANTONIO, a learned Italian, author of Italian and Latin poems, 1546-1633.
 QUERINI, ANGELO MARIA, a famous Italian cardinal and man of letters, 1680-1759.

QUERLON, ANNE GABRIEL MEUSNIER DE, a French scholar, editor, and journalist, 1702-1780.

QUERNO, C., a Neapolitan poet, died 1528.

QUERSTEDT, J. A., a Ger. divine, 1617-1688.

QUER Y MARTINEZ, JOSEPH, a Spanish physician, au. of 'The Flora of Spain,' 1695-1764.

QUESADA, DON, a Spanish general and royalist, murdered by the populace in 1836.

QUESNAY, FRANÇOIS, sometimes called the father of the school of French economists, was born in the village of Ecquevill in 1694. He was of peasant origin, and raised himself to notice by his acquirements as a physician. He was attracted from his obscure retreat to Paris, where he came under the notice of the potent Pompadour, whose patronage of the philosophical physician was one of the best acts of her life. He published some professional works, but his book on the most advantageous method of governing mankind, published in 1768, is the achievement with which his name has been chiefly connected. At the root of his opinions lay a view long influential from its plausibility, that as the means of human subsistence, clothing, and generally the necessities of life come from the earth, agriculture must be considered the only productive kind of industry, all others being secondary, as they merely modify what it brings into existence. He inferred from this that the peasantry class ought to be encouraged, to the neglect, or even the prejudice of others. His works have strikingly illustrated the view, that in such matters good is done by earnestly pushing opinions, however extravagant, since it was from Quesnay's teaching that the internal free trade in agricultural produce promoted by Turgot, and the abolition of the feudal exactions, were derived. He died in December, 1774. [J.H.B.]

QUESNEL, ABBE, a Fr. controversialist, last c. QUESNEL, BARON, one of Napoleon's generals, born 1775, found drowned in the Seine 1815.

QUESNEL, PASQUIER, a famous theologian of the Jansenist party, born at Paris 1634, died at Amsterdam, where he had taken refuge, 1719.

QUESNOI, F. DU, a Flem. sculptor, 1592-1646.

QUETIF, J., a French bibliographer, 1618-98.

QUEVEDO Y VILLEGAS, FRANCISCO GOMEZ DE, a Spanish politician, best known as a poet and satirist, born at Madrid 1580, died 1645.

QUEVEDO, P., a Spanish prelate, died 1818.

QUICK, JOHN, an Eng. comedian, 1748-1831.

QUICK, JOHN, a nonconf. divine, 1636-1706.

QUIEN DE LA NEUFVILLE, JAMES LE, a French historian of Portugal, appointed director of the posts in French Flanders, 1647-1728.

QUIGNONEZ, FRANCISCO DE, an eminent Spanish cardinal and liturgical writer, died 1540.

QUILLET, C., a French poet, 1602-1661.

QUILLOT, C., a French quietist, 17th century.

QUIN, JAMES, a celebrated actor, was the son of an Irish barrister. He was born in London 1693, but educated in Dublin. His mother, unfortunately, turning out to be a bigamist, poor Quin was treated as illegitimate, and inherited nothing of his father's fortune. In 1715, with his prospects thus blighted, and his education unfinished, he sought and obtained an engagement at Drury Lane, which he quitted in 1717 for the theatre in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, acquiring there great reputation in the stately characters of tragedy; such as Cato, Coriolanus, and Zanga, & the stronger parts in comedy, among which was Sir John Brute, Volpone, Falstaff. Subsequently acting at Covent Garden, and in 1735 at Drury Lane, under Fleetwood, he received higher terms than any actor had previously commanded. His pre-eminence he retained until the appearance of Garrick, of whom he could not conceal his envy and though he consented to act with the new performer in 1747 at Covent Garden, yet the result was so little favourable to his own position, that it is evident he gradually prepared for his final retirement. Quin was one of the admirers & patrons of Thomson, the poet of 'The Seasons' and, while unknown to him, spontaneously presented him with one hundred pounds to deliver him from an arrest; and after the poet's death appeared in his tragedy of 'Coriolanus,' and spoke prologue written by Lord Lyttelton, on which occasion the actor is said to have displayed uncommon sensibility. He closed his career in 1751 in the character of Falstaff, which he performed for the benefit of his friend Ryan. His celebrity in this part was very great, and there can be no doubt from the accounts we have of it, that it was a masterly and intellectual performance. He died at Bath, where he had resided for many years, 1766. His monument in Bath cathedral bears an epitaph written by Garrick, in a spirit of appreciation highly honourable to both actors. [J.A.]

QUINAULT, PHILIP, a celebrated lyric poet, and opera writer, 1635-1688.

QUINAULT-DUFRESNE, ABRAHAM ALEXANDRE, a celebrated French actor, 1695-1767. His sister JEANNE FRANCOISE, an actress and literary friend of Voltaire, died 1783. JEAN BAPTISTE, brother of both the preceding, and an actor, died 1781. Some others of the family were also distinguished on the stage.

QUINCY, C. SEVIN, Marquis De, a French officer and historian, flourished about 1660-1723.

QUINCY, JOHN, an English physician and medical writer, died in London 1723.

QUINETTE, M., a Fr. politician, died 1821.

QUINQUARBOREUS. See CINQ-ARREBS.

QUINTILLIANUS, MARCUS FABIUS, a famous teacher of eloquence in the reign of Galba and his successors, was born about 42, probably of a Spanish family settled in Rome. The younger Pliny was one of his pupils, and in the reign of Domitian was intrusted with the education of two of the emperor's grand-nephews. His work 'De Institutione Oratoria,' is one of the most valuable relics of antiquity. It has been translated into English by Guthrie and Patsall. Date of his death unknown.

QUINTILLUS, MARCUS AURELIUS CLAUDIUS, a Roman emp., who reigned seventeen days, 268.

QUINTINIE, JOHN DE LA, a celebrated writer on horticulture, and director-general to the gardens at Versailles, 1626-1688.

QUINTUS CURTIUS RUFUS, a Latin historian, supposed to have flourished in the 2d century.

QUINTUS SMYRNEUS, called also QUINTUS CALABER, a Greek poet of the 5th century.

QUINZANO, or QUINTIANUS, the commonly received name of J. F. CONTI, surname Stoa, an Italian poet and philologist, 1484-1554.

QUIRINI, A. M., an Ital. cardinal, 1684-1754.

QUIRINO, P., a Venetian traveller, 15th century.

QUIROGA, J., a Spanish Jesuit, 1707-1784.
QUIROS, A., a Spanish missionary, died 1622.
QUIROS, H. B., a Spanish canonist, last cent.
QUIROS, H. B., PEDRO FERNANDEZ DE, a celebrated Spanish navigator, d. at Panama 1614.
QUIROS, T., a Spanish missionary, 1599-1662.

QUISTORP, JOHN, a German minister and Lutheran professor of divinity, 1584-1648. His son, of the same name, also a divine and professor, 1624-1669.

QUITA, DOMINGOS DAS REIS, a Portuguese poet, cele. for his elegies and pastorals, 1728-1770.

R

RABANUS MAURUS, was born of French parents at Mayence in A.D. 776. On the completion of his early studies at Fulda in Hesse, he was made a deacon in 801, and he betook himself the following year to enjoy the tuition of the famous Alcuin. It is also apparent from his writings that he had in his youth made a pilgrimage to Palestine. In his twenty-fifth year he became head of the convent school at Fulda, where his successful teaching drew around him many pupils, and not a few of the nobility intrusted him with the education of their sons. In 822 he was consecrated abbot, but he still directed the seminary, which supplied many able teachers for the Frankish and German churches. On a complaint of the monks that his absorption in literary pursuits hindered the discharge of his more active convent duties, he retired in 842, after a presidency of thirty years. He was, however, drawn out of the voluntary seclusion in 847, on being made a bishop of Mayence. In this situation he was a thopposer and persecutor of Gottschalk, in consequence of his doctrine of predestination. Rabanus died in A.D. 856. His influence was great among the churches in the diffusion of practical religion, and he had several illustrious disciples. His erudition and general attainments were respectable for the age in which he lived, and as a lecturer, he instructed his scholars in general literature and science as well as theology. He wrote commentaries on all the canonical books and many of the apocryphal ones, and left behind him numerous treatises, sermons, and letters. A collected edition of the most of his works was published at Cologne, 1627, in 6 folios. [J.E.]

RABAUT, PETER, a French protestant minister, 1717-1795. His son, JOHN PAUL, a protestant minister, and deputy to the constituent assembly at the convention, author of numerous political works, 1743-1793. JAMES ANTHONY, brother of the latter, also a minister and deputy, 1744-1808. A third brother, RABAUT DUPOIS, known only as a politician, died 1808.

RABBE, ALPHONSO, a French journalist, historian, and biographical writer, 1786-1830.

RABELAIS, FRANÇOIS, is, of all humourists, the most variously original, and the most remarkable for combining wit and humour; but he is also the most unscrupulously audacious, and for many reasons by far the most difficult to be understood. They are traditionally attributed to him many adventures, most of which are nothing more than practical jokes, or sayings profane or licentious borrowed from his writings. The facts which we know in regard to his life, few as they are, sufficiently make us wonder how it was, that he not only escaped the stake and the scaffold, but was a parish priest to the hour of his death.—He was a poor parents, about 1483, at Chinon in Touraine; and the time he spent in a conventual school at Angers, is said to have been put to profit in no way, unless by making him intimate with his school-fellow Du Bellay, who was afterwards a cardinal, and his zealous patron and protector. He next became a friar in a convent of the Cordeliers; and there he was a hard student, but is said to have been both dissolute and satirical. At all events, he eloped, studied medicine at Montpellier, took a doctor's degree, practised as a physician, lectured with success, and published, besides other works, translations from Hippocrates and Galen. While he was going through this stage in his history, the patrons he had gained obtained permission for him to transfer himself to the order of the Benedictines. He attended Cardinal Du Bellay when he was sent as ambassador to Rome in 1536; and on his return to France his patron procured for him a prebend, and the curacy of the village of Meurton, near Paris. He is believed to have died in 1553, and to have then been about seventy years old.—His famous romance appeared in successive fragments: it is a characteristic specimen of his oddities, that the second book, being published in 1533, preceded the first by two years; and the third book was printed in 1546. When it had proceeded thus far, remonstrances from the clergy induced Francis I. to have it read to him: he pronounced it harmless; and the author continued to be protected by Henry II. The fourth book, in which the attacks on the church, and sneers at religion itself, became yet bolder, appeared only in 1552; and it was not till 1564 that the publication was completed by the whole of the fifth book. The romance commonly goes by the name of its earliest parts:—"The Inestimable Life of the Great Gargantua, Father of Pantagruel, a Book Full of Pantagruelism." Gargantua is a royal giant: the heroes of most of the adventures are Pantagruel, his son and successor, a good easy king; and his favourite Panurge, the quintessence of buffoonery, sarcasm, and knavery. It is not easy to discover anything which Rabelais either believed or respected; and his satire, with all its enigmatical coverings, tells terribly both on civil and on ecclesiastical governments. But there is in it a large fund of good sense; and the humour and fun, with all their depravity, are often irresistibly comic. [W.S.] RABENER, T. W., a Ger. moralist, 1714-1771.

RABUS, PETER, a Dutch critic, 1660-1702.
RABUTIN, ROGER, Count De Bussy, a French wit and satirist, time of Louis XIV., 1618-1693.
RACAN, HONORAT DE BUEIL, Marquis, a distinguished poet and disciple of Malherbe, 1589-1670.
RACHEL, the younger daughter of Laban, and wife of Jacob. She was the mother of Joseph and Benjamin, and died at the birth of the latter.
RACINE, BONAVENTURE, a learned French priest and ecclesiastical historian, 1708-1755.

RACINE, JEAN, contests with his immediate predecessor, Corneille, the glory of being the greatest among the French Tragic Dramatists. Submitting implicitly to the code of laws laid down by the critics of his time, he did much towards making the Regular or Classical School of the Drama acceptable and permanent, by imparting to his tragedies all the perfection which it is possible to conceive genius as giving to works constructed on so narrow a model. His grace and melody of diction are exquisite; and his refined tenderness of feeling, often melting into profound pathos, breaks out through all the barriers imposed by the unities, and the simple plots, and the monotony of the rhymed Alexandrine verses.—Racine was born in 1639, at La Ferté-Milon, in Picardy, where his father was a tax-collector. The most important part of his education was received in the school of the Port-Royalists, whose earnest piety and severe morality received no discredit either from the writings or from the conduct of their pupil. In his twenty-first year he celebrated the marriage of Louis XIV., in a poem which gained him the favour of the king, exhibited not long afterwards by a pension, and followed by many other benefactions. He began his dramatic career in 1663; but his first two tragedies, though not unsuccessful, really deserved the poor opinion expressed of them by Corneille, of whom they were little more than imitations. Racine's fine genius shone out with all its brightness in 1667, when 'Andromaque' was played; and for ten years more he continued to produce, almost annually, plays, constituting a series of masterpieces, and exhibiting so little inequality that critical opinions are still divided as to their comparative merit. The first of these was the highly-finished comedy, 'Les Plaideurs'; but the success of this piece did not tempt the poet to diverge again from the tragic drama. 'Britannicus' appeared in 1669, and was followed by 'Bérénice' (in which Racine measured lances with Corneille), 'Bajazet,' 'Mithridates,' the very skilfully constructed 'Iphigénie,' and 'Phèdre,' the work in which the dramatist's power in painting the tenderness and fire of love is most strikingly displayed. In 1677, when the 'Phèdre' came on the stage, Racine and Boileau received honorary appointments as historiographers royal. The dramatist seems to have meditated making the office real; and he is said to have been deterred from publishing histories by a rebuke, which some of his memoranda drew on him when they were communicated by his patroness, Madame de Maintenon, to the king. At all events he ceased, for twelve years, to write dramas, and never again wrote for the public stage. Some would have it that he was disgusted by the critical warfare which had been kindled by his latest plays; others assert him to have been influenced by the religious impressions which, beyond doubt, now acted on him more and more strongly. He made a happy marriage, superintended carefully the instruction of his children, and was much engaged in serious studies. He wrote a short 'History of Port-Royal.' In 1689 'Esther,' the first, and much the weaker, of his two sacred dramas, was played by the young ladies of St. Cyr. In 1699, the clerical directors of that school having prohibited stage-playing to the pupils, he sent 'Athalie' to the press, and had the mortification to find that it was too devout and earnest for the taste of the public. If no works had ever been written except plays, and if there were no playwrights but those of France, the assertion would be true which Voltaire makes as to this noble drama—that it comes nearer to perfection than any of literary work which ever issued from the hands of man. It was the last effort of its admirable author. He died from abscess of the liver, in great pain, but with placid resignation, in 1699. [W.]

RACINE, LOUIS, son of the preceding, distinguished as a poet and miscellaneous wr., 1692-1771.

RACLE, L., a French engineer, 1736-1791.

RADAGAIUSUS, leader of one of the German hosts by which Italy was invaded at the beginning of the 5th cent. Beheaded by Stilico 404 or 405.

RADCLIFFE, ANN, a once popular novel writer, whose maiden name was Ward, was born in London, 1764, and at the age of twenty-three married William Radcliffe, a graduate of Oxford, afterwards proprietor and editor of the English Chronicle. The fashion of her romances was superseded by that of the new school, headed by Sir Walter Scott, but they must always be esteemed principal of their class. Her great forte was the description of scenes of terror, the surprise of sight or unseen danger, and the excitement of suspense. Her first performance was 'The Castle of Athlin Dunblaine,' followed by 'The Sicilian Romance,' 'The Romance of the Forest,' 'The Mysteries of Udolpho,' and 'The Italian.' She also published 'Travels through Holland and along the Rhine' in 1793. Died 1823.

RADCLIFFE, JOHN, founder of the library of medical and philosophical sciences at Oxford, was an English physician, born at Weymouth, 1650. He took his diploma in 1682, having settled in London, became, in 1686, physician to the princess Anne of Denmark. He was also occasionally employed by William III., by Anne when she succeeded him as queen, but was not in great favour with either of them. He died in 1714, leaving £40,000 for the purpose mentioned.

RADEGONDA, a princess of the Franks, became the wife of Clothaire, and died in a monastery of St. Croix, founded by her, 587.

RADEMAKER, two Dutch painters—GERRIT RADEMAKER flourished 1672-1711. ABRAHAM, 1675-1738.

RADER, M., a Jesuit of Tyrol, 1561-1634.

RADET, STEPHEN, one of Napoleon's generals, by whom Pius VII. was escorted from Rome as a prisoner in 1809, 1762-1825.

RAEBURN, SIR HENRY, a Scottish portrait painter, second only to Sir Thomas Lawrence as a portrait painter, was born at Stockbridge, Edinburgh, 1756. He became president of the Edinburgh Academy of Painting, and when George IV. visited his northern capital in 1822, received the honour of knighthood, and soon after the appointment of first portrait painter to the king in Scotland. Died 1823.

RÉMOND, F. DE, a Fr. historian, 1540-1618.

RAFFAELLE. See RAPHAEL.

RAFFENEL, C. D., a French wr., 1797-1868.

RAFFLES, SIR THOMAS STAMFORD, distinguished as an administrator, traveller, and naturalist, was the son of Benjamin Raffles, a merchant in the West India trade, and was born at amaica, 1781. He gradually rose from the position of a clerk in the India House to that of lieutenant-governor, first of Java, and afterwards of Port Marlborough in Sumatra. In 1819 he established the British settlement and free port of Singapore, and founded a college there for the encouragement of Anglo-Chinese and Malay literature. His principal work is a 'History of Java,' which he sent home to England valuable collections of objects in natural history, and on his return founded the Zoological Society, of which he was first president. Died 1826.

RAGGI, A., an Italian sculptor, 1624-1686.

RAGHIB PACHA, MOHAMMED, grand vizier of the Ottomans, a diplomatist and writer, 1702-67.

RAGOTZKI, the name of several princes of Transylvania:—1. GEORGE, whose name is sometimes spelt Racoczi, an ally of the Swedes during the thirty years' war, 1630-1648. 2. GEORGE the younger, joined the Swedes against Poland 1659, and fighting against the Turks 1669. 3. FRANCIS, author of a liturgy used throughout Hungary, died 1766. 4. FRANCIS LEOPOLD, the most famous of the family, conspired with Louis XIV. to deliver the Hungarians from the yoke of Austria, and was declared protector of Hungary in 1704. Being defeated by the peace of 1713, he renounced his estates, and retired to Turkey; 1676-1735.

RAGUENET, FRANCIS, a French writer on ecclesiastical subjects, au. of a 'History of Oliver Cromwell,' and a 'Life of Turenne,' 1660-1722.

RAGUET, G. B., a French writer, 1668-1748.

RAGUSA, J., a Sicilian Jesuit, born 1665.

RAHN, JOHN HENRY, a name common to three families of Zurich:—1. A voluminous writer of Swiss history, 1646-1708. 2. A physician, 1709-1766. 3. A physician, 1749-1782.

RAHN, J. H. G., a Prussian jurist, 1766-1807.

RAJEVSKI, A., a Russian historian, 1813.

RAIKES, ROBERT, the founder of Sunday schools in England, was a native of Gloucester, where he was born in 1735. He succeeded his father as proprietor of the Gloucester Journal, a paper in extensive circulation. He was a man of great piety, and, besides attendance on the ordinary duties of public worship, was long in the habit of attending early morning prayers every week-day at the Cathedral. As might be expected from a man of such devout and eminently Christian character, he was distinguished for his benevolent support of every scheme and institution which was directed to ameliorate the condition or advance the interests of humanity. To him belongs pre-eminently the high distinction of originating Sunday schools; and the idea of those institutions was first suggested to his mind by witnessing the painful spectacle of youthful profligacy and dissipation which the streets of Gloucester as well as other large towns in England, exhibited on the Lord's day. At that time, it had long been a subject of complaint among farmers and others that they suffered more from the depredations of juvenile delinquents on that day, than on all the other days of the week together. The lower classes universally allowed their children to roam at large on the highways and the fields, where they came in such numbers that the country people were obliged to remain at home to watch their property. Mr. Raikes himself was unexpectedly led to witness a similar scene, for having occasion, early one morning, to go to a plebeian part of the town of Gloucester, where was a large pin manufactory, he was greatly shocked by multitudes of poor children running wild and riotous in the streets, and swearing such horrid oaths, as afforded sad evidence of the ignorance and depravity that prevailed amongst the class to which they belonged. He resolved on making some attempt to reclaim them from this state of moral degradation, which seemed so extensively prevalent, and to give those wretched little creatures the benefits of, not only a secular, but a moral and religious education. After revolving the subject long and anxiously in his mind, he at length prepared to reduce his scheme to practice. Having engaged the services of four women, accustomed to teach poor children, at the rate of one shilling a-day, and who were to receive and instruct as many as he should bring every Sunday, he began the operations of his school. But there were more difficulties lying in the way than he imagined, chiefly from the backwardness of the poor, and their indifference to send their children. A beginning, however, was made with a few, others soon followed, and the schools began to prosper. Reading, being marched to church under the care of their teachers, and after church, the repetition of the catechism for an hour, constituted the regular routine he established. 'With regard to the rules to be observed, all the children were required to come to school as clean as possible. Many were at first deterred, because they wanted decent clothing, but this was not to be supplied. Although without shoes or in a ragged coat, all were welcome,—the only condition being clean hands, a clean face, and the hair combed.' Numbers pressed to the schools, the children varying from six years old to twelve or fourteen. Little rewards were distributed amongst the younger, and good places were procured for the older children, and both of these produced the effect of exciting emulation. Such was the scheme which this Christian philanthropist devised for the moral and religious improvement of the poor; and it soon drew general attention in England, from the beneficial results it produced. Similar institutions were ere long commenced in most of the large towns of England. A Sunday School Association was formed for the benefit of the poor children in the metropolis, and Mr. Raikes in consequence of his zeal and merits, was enrolled an honorary member. A far higher honour awaited this benevolent gentleman, in its being publicly certified after a long series of years, that not one of the scholars at his institution in Gloucester, had ever been either in the city or the county prisons. Mr. Raikes died in 1811. [R.J.]

RAIMBACH, ABRAHAM, a native of London, celebrated for his line engravings of Sir David Wilkie's pictures, 1776-1843.

RAIMOND, J. H., a Fr. architect, 1742-1811.

RAIMOND, Sr., the third general of the Dominicans, known as an ascetic writer, 1175-1275.

RAIMONDI, GIAMBATTISTA, a great Oriental scholar, born at Cremona, in Italy, 1540. He founded an Oriental press, under the patronage of the cardinal Medici, at Florence, and put all the Oriental books in order at Rome. From these circumstances, the college of the Propaganda took its rise. His Arabian Grammar was pub. in 1610.

RAIMONDI, MARC A., a friend of Raphael, and fndr. of the It. school of engrav., 1488-1546.
RAINBOW, E., an English prelate, 1608-1684.
RAINE, M., a distinguished scholar, 1760-1810.
RAINOLDS, J., a learned Eng. div., 1549-1607.
RAITCH, J., a Servian historian, 1726-1801.
RAJALIN, T., a Finnish admiral, 1673-1741.
RAKUBAH, or RAGUBAH, peischwah or prince regent of the Mahrattas, distinguished in the events which agitated the Mahratta kingdom in 1772 and 1782. Died in obscurity.

RALEGH, CAREW, son of the great historical character noticed below, was born in the Tower of London 1604, and made several fruitless efforts to regain the forfeited estates of his father. He received a pension of £400 a-year, however, and in 1659 became governor of Jersey, by favour of General Monk. He wrote a vindication of his father. Died 1666. His cousin, WALTER RALEGH, became chaplain to Charles I., and was stabbed by his gaoler 1646.

[Birth-place of Raleigh.]

RALEGH, SIR WALTER, born A.D. 1552, was the most remarkable man of that remarkable period, which is commonly called the Elizabethan age. He was of an ancient Devonshire family, and was educated at Oxford and the Temple. He then served for some years as a volunteer under Coligni and Condé, in France, and afterwards under the prince of Orange in the Netherlands. In 1579 he first displayed that zeal for maritime discovery and colonization, which is the most brilliant feature in his character. He joined an expedition to America, which was designed to found a colony in Newfoundland, but was beaten back by a superior Spanish force. He then served in Ireland, and highly distinguished himself against the Irish rebels and their Spanish auxiliaries. In 1582 he appeared at Elizabeth's court, and was very graciously received. His reputation for soldiership, his learning, which was varied and profound, his eloquence and ready wit, and the personal advantages and accomplishments, in which he was pre-eminent, all combined in raising him high in his sovereign's favour. In 1583 he accompanied his half-brother, Sir Humphrey Gilbert, in another voyage to North America, which proved most calamitous, and in which Gilbert perished. Raleigh still persevered in his schemes for extending England's dominions beyond the Atlantic, and in 1585 he sent out another expedition which discovered Virginia. He was one of the most trusted and most trustworthy of the nation's heroes of England, who defended her in 1588 against the Spanish Armada. In 1589 he served in the expedition against Portugal under Drake and Norris. The young earl of Essex was associated with the troops employed on this occasion, and was in a quarrel between him and Raleigh as to the operations of the forces, that the unholy jealousy between those two originated. A short time afterwards Raleigh fell under Queen Elizabeth's displeasure on account of certain lewd passages between him and Miss Throgmorton, whom he subsequently married. He was imprisoned for a time, but was soon released, and gradually recovered the queen's favour. In 1591 he organized and led an expedition to Central and South America, in the hope of discovering Eldorado, the golden land, in the existence of which all of that age firmly believed; nor were we who have witnessed the discoveries of gold in California, deride that belief as visionary and wholly unfounded. Raleigh sailed to Guiana, the neighbouring districts; he explored the river Amazon for 400 miles from its mouth; and he wrote an account of his voyage and the new country explored by him, which is remarkable for the precision and graphic beauty of style which it displays. During the latter years of Elizabeth's reign Raleigh joined Cecil in intriguing against Essex, and he had the evil gratification of witnessing his rival's ruin and death, little thinking that he himself to experience the retribution of a similar fate. James I. on his accession, at first treated Raleigh with favour; but Cecil, who had in the late queen's reign overthrown Essex by Raleigh's aid, was now determined to put down Raleigh, and the king's mind was soon poisoned against Walter. Deprived of his dignities and lucrative appointments, Raleigh seems to have listened to the schemes of other disaffected men for altering the line of succession to the crown; but the charge on which he was tried and convicted in 1603, being a traitor in the pay of Spain, was unproved and unfounded. He was sentenced to death, his property was confiscated; but James kept him a close prisoner in the Tower for twelve years, during which time he wrote his great work, 'The Discovery of the World.' In 1615 James released him and permitted him to sail on an expedition to Guiana. This enterprise proved disastrous, and Raleigh's return home he was arrested, and James resolved to put him to death under the old sentence of treason that had been passed on him in 1603. There can be no doubt that James was mainly induced to commit this disgraceful act by his desire to win the favour of the Spanish court, which never forgot the services that Raleigh had done for England against Spain, and now clamoured for the blood of the English hero. Sir Walter was beheaded on the 28th October, 1618, in the sixty-sixth year of his age. The versatility of genius of this great man is almost unparalleled. He was an excellent classical scholar, and read in metaphysics and divinity, besides being generally conversant with the literature of his own and other modern countries. His writings are eloquent and vigorous; and he the author of several poems, small in length, but great in beauty. He was eminent in the mechanical arts; and was the originator of many important improvements in ship-building. He was a daring navigator and explorer of new countries; and he was unwearied in his zeal for extending the commerce, and for creating the colonial power of England. He was a sage, as well as a bold captain by sea and by land; he was a skilful (though not always a successful) politician; and he was pre-eminent in all personal accomplishments and courtly graces. He was also a liberal promoter of intellectual energy and eminence in others; and he was the patron and personal friend of many of the most distinguished writers who adorned that bright epoch of English literature. [E.S.C.]

RALPH, JAMES, a native of Philadelphia, known as a political and historical writer and poet, came to this country in 1725, died at Chiswick 1762.

RAMAZZINI, BERNARDO, an Italian physician, poet, as a poet and professional writer, 1633-1714.

RAMBERG, J. H., an engraver, last century.

RAMBOUILLET, a branch of the Angennes family, distinguished by the names of—JAMES, a favorite statesman of Francis I., died 1562.

MARLES, son of James, better known as the cardinal de Rambouillet, author of Memoirs, 1530-1637. CHARLES, grandson of James, and Marquis de Rambouillet, camp-marshal and ambassador, 1577-1652.

RAMBURES, DAVID DE, commander-in-chief of the French archery, distinguished by his military services, and killed at the battle of Agincourt, 1415.

RAMBAU, JEAN PHILIPPE, was born at Avignon in 1683. After having become acquainted with the rudiments of music, he composed a musical entertainment, which was received with great applause when it was performed at Avignon. He then received the situation of organist of the cathedral church of Clermont in Auvergne, where he commenced his investigations into the principles of music. His fame as a theorist chiefly depends on his work 'Demonstrations of the Principles of Harmony,' which was published at Paris in 1710. From the principles enunciated in this work his countrymen style Rameau 'The Newton of Harmony.' About this period he was called to Paris, where he was appointed director of the opera. The king of France conferred upon this eminent theorist the ribbon of the order of St. Michel, and raised him to the rank of nobility. Rameau died in the year 1764. Besides his very numerous theoretical works he composed many operas, ballets, sonatas, concertos, songs, &c., &c. [J.M.]

RAMMEL, PETER, a member of the French army, and general of brigade, killed at the age of thirty in the campaign of the Rhine, 1761. His father, JOHN PETER, a distinguished general of the empire, was born in 1770, and assassinated at the second restoration in 1815.

RAMELLI, A., a French engineer, 1531-1590.

RAMESSES, or RAMSES, a name common to several Egyptian kings, who reigned from the 17th to the 13th century B.C. Ramesses V. is supposed to be the same as Sesostris.

RAMÉY, C., a French sculptor, 1754-1838.

RAMLER, C. W., a German poet, 1725-1798.

RAMMOHUN ROY, RAJAH, a philosopher and reformer of British India, was born at Bordouan in the province of Bengal, 1774, or between that and 1780. He belonged to the Brahmin caste, of the class esteemed for their learning and purity of blood, and seems to have devoted himself when quite young to the study of the sacred literature of the Hindoos. His endeavour was to discover the pure theism of the primitive revelation, and to separate it from the corruptions of the priesthood, and though great hopes were entertained of him by Christian missionaries, there can be no doubt that he regarded some parts of their system as equally idolatrous with the changes that had taken place in the religion of the Hindoos. He adopted the philosophy and the pure morality of the precepts of the Saviour, but accepting no system of faith that was proffered to him, he applied himself to the study of the Hebrew Scriptures in the same independent spirit that he had examined the Vedas of his own country. Rammohun Roy, however, was not a speculative believer, but a practical reformer, and in political sentiments a republican. He had risen from the position of clerk in the office of the tax-collector of Rungpore to that of dewan, or chief native superintendent of the revenue, the highest office that a Hindoo could hold under the British government. In this official situation he acquired such a fortune as enabled him to rank with the zemindars, or proprietors, and applying himself to administrative as well as religious reform, he eventually effected a change in the English jurisprudence of Bengal. Circumstances led to his residence at Calcutta, where he became a political writer and journalist in his native language, and boldly adopted revolutionary principles, at the same time not forgetting the reserve of a statesman. In 1830 he was created rajah by the great Mogul, and sent on a mission to England for the settlement of his claims against the East India Company. He effected this object with great diplomatic skill, and while here he took an enthusiastic interest in the progress of the reform agitation, and the hopes it held out for the better government of India. He was claimed at this time as a convert to Christianity, and though generally considered a Unitarian, he usually attended the services of the Established Church. His Christianity, it should be remembered, was based on a profound acquaintance with the metaphysics of the Hindoos, and on his researches into the primitive theism; and though an ingenious countryman of our own, Thomas Maurice, had long since endeavoured to show the similarity between the Christian Trinity and the triad of Brahma, Vishnou, and Shiva, there are few orthodox Calvinists who would be disposed to agree with him. Rammohun Roy did not survive his acquaintance with European manners long enough to master the whole of this problem, but being attacked by sudden illness at Bristol, expired there on the 27th of September, 1833. As his biographer in the Gentleman's Magazine observes:—'When it is considered that Rammohun Roy was in a great degree self-taught, the extent of his acquirements must be admitted to have been remarkable. He was a thorough master of the Sanscrit language and of the Arabic; he was an exceedingly good Persian scholar, and quoted the Persian poets liberally, appropriately, and gracefully; and of course, he well understood the Hindoo and Bengali tongues. He had read a great deal of English literature, chiefly historical; and he wrote in our language with grammatical accuracy and ability.

He was a quick and keen observer of character, and in the ordinary course of life discreet and prudent.' It may be added that his superiority to the native Hindoos generally, his vast knowledge, his independence of habit, and his well-known patriotism, gained for him the highest consideration in his own country. [E.R.]

RAMOND DE CARBONNIERES, LOUIS FRANCIS ELIZABETH, a Fr. naturalist, 1755-1827. RAMOS, H., a Sp. mathematician, 1738-1801.

RAMSAY, ALLAN, with the exception of Burns, the most thoroughly national of the Scottish poets, was born in 1685, at Leadhills in Lanarkshire. His father was in the employment of Lord Hoptoun at the lead mines, and is said to have been descended from a branch of the family of the earls of Dalhousie, a circumstance of which the poet was naturally vain, and which shines out in his works in the form of respect and attachment to the claims of 'gude bluid,' and gentle ancestry. His father died early, and his mother marrying again, he was sent to Edinburgh, and bound apprentice to a wigmaker, then a profession of a higher grade than in our times. Ramsay continued to pursue this humble avocation for several years after his apprenticeship was finished. In 1712, his first poetical production appeared, being an address 'To the most happy Members of the Easy Club,' Auld Reekie being then and long after, noted for its commercial clubs and associations. In 1716, he published an edition of James the First's poem of 'Christ's Kirk on the Green,' having added a second canto himself, and in two years after, a third. He now abandoned his original profession, and commenced business as a bookseller in Edinburgh, a more congenial and fitting occupation for the poet and literary man. In 1720, he published himself, a collection of his poems, by subscription, and by which he is said to have realized four hundred guineas, a very large sum considering the times, and which establishes the early and wide popularity which he had acquired. The most of the pieces in this collection had been issued by Ramsay as they were written, in sheets at a penny a-piece, and the good folks of Edinburgh had come to look upon them as a luxury, quite as necessary as 'caller haddies' or strong ale. Allan issued the first volume of his well-known 'Tea Table Miscellany' in 1724, and three more volumes at short intervals afterwards; about the same time he published 'The Evergreen, a collection of Scots poems, wrote by the Ingenious before 1600.' The magnum opus of this ancient writer made its appearance in 1725, 'The Gentle Shepherd,' the finest dramatic pastoral ever published. In a soft and gentle sweetness of expression, and in a rich exhibition of old Scottish manners and habits, interspersed with dramatic touches of nature and character, no Scottish poem has maintained a more permanent or a higher place in the national mind and affections.—Some of the higher class poems of Burns can alone compete with it in this respect. In 1730 he published his 'Thirty Fables,' in which the story of 'The Monk and the Miller's Wife,' though somewhat broad in style, and previously told by Dunbar, greatly increased his reputation as a poet and painter of national manners. He appears to have withdrawn from the labours of composition, and to have given himself up to enjoyment of the select literary society of the eminent men of his time and country, by whom conversation and talents were highly appreciated. He erected a house for himself on the north side the Castle Hill, which is still we believe in existence, and where he died in 1758, at the advanced age of seventy-two, full of years and honour. [T.]

RAMSAY, ALLAN, son of the preceding, distinguished as a painter and writer on art, 1709-

RAMSAY, ANDREW MICHAEL, better known as the Chevalier Ramsay, was born at Ayr 16 and educated at Edinburgh. He was converted to the Roman Catholic faith by Fenelon in 1710, rose to distinction under his patronage as governor to the duke of Chateau Thierry, and the prince of Turenne. After this he went to Rome as preceptor to the children of the Pretender, called there James III., and, returning to Scotland, was admitted into the family of the duke of Argyll. He died at St. Germain-En-Loire, the retreat of the ex-Stuarts, 1743. His principal works are a 'Life of Fenelon,' 'The Voyages of Cyrus,' 'Discourse upon Epic Poetry,' a 'History of Marshal Turenne' and a 'Discourse on Freemasonry,' of which or in France, he was grand chancellor. He wrote the French language with remarkable purity.

RAMSAY, DAVID, an American physician, member of congress, distinguished as an historian, born 1749, shot by a maniac 1815.

RAMSAY, J., a Scottish divine, 1733-1789.

RAMSDEN, JESSE, a native of Yorkshire, as an optician and instrument maker, 1735-18

RAMUS, or LA RAMEE, PETER, a celebrated French philosopher, mathematician, grammarian and philologist, k. on St. Bartholomew's day, 1564. RAMUSIO, or RAMNUSIO, G. B., a Venetian traveller, geographer, and historian, 1485-1557.

RANCE, ARMAND JOHN LE BOUTHILIER, an ascetic writer, most celebrated as the reformer of the monks of La Trappe, 1626-1700.

RANCHIN, F., a French physician, 1560-1

RANCHIN, HENRY, author of a metrical version of the Psalms in French, published 1697.

RANCK, —, a Spanish painter, last cent.

RANCONET, AIMER DE, a famous antiquarian, and master of Roman jurisprudence, d. 17. RANCONNIER, J., a French missionary, Paraguay, author of Letters, published 1636.

RANDALL, J., an English divine, died 162

RANDOLPH, THOMAS, an English dramatist, an. of the 'Muses Looking-Glass,' 1605.

RANDOLPH, THOMAS, a minister of the Church of England, born at Canterbury, where his father was recorder, 1701, vice-chancellor 1759, archdeacon of Oxford 1707, Margaret professor of divinity 1768, died 1783. He wrote several theological works. His son, JOHN, 1749, was successively bishop of Oxford, Bath and London, and a distinguished Greek scholar; died 1783.

RANDOLPH, SIR THOMAS, born in Kent 1585, distinguished as ambassador to France, Russia, and Scotland, in the reign of Elizabeth. He was author of Letters, which have appeared in various collections, and of an account of his Embassy to Russia, inserted in Hakluyt's Voyages. Died 1604.

RANFAING, MARIE ELIZABETH DE, a religious founder, better known as the venerable other Elizabeth, 1592-1649.

RANNEQUIN, RENNEQUIN, or SWALM ENKIN, inventor of a famous hydraulic engine, known as the machine of Marly, 1644-1708.

RANTZAU, JOSIAS, Count De, a French marshal, distinguished in the German and Flemish wars, and as the chief instrument by whom the protestant religion was established in Denmark. Died at the Bastille, where he had been confined by the czar, 1650. HENRY, of the same family, an orloger, 1526-1598.

RAOUL, or RODOLPH, son of Richard, duke of Burgundy, succeeded Robert, duke of France, with the title of king, 923; died 936.

RAOUL, a duke of Lorraine, 1328-1346.

RAOUL, archdeacon of Poitiers, 12th century.

RAOUL OF CAEN, a French historian, 11th ct.

RAOUL-GLABER, a Fr. chronicler, 11th cent.

RAOUL. See ROLLO.

RAOUX, J., a French painter, 1667-1734.

RAPHAEL, SANTI or SANZIO, was born at Urbino, in the Contrada del Monte, April 6, 1483. His father, Giovanni Santi, gave him his first instructions in his art, and after the death of his parents, he was placed by his uncles, in 1494, with Piero Perugino, the most celebrated painter of the Umbrian school, and then engaged on some frescoes in the Sala del Cambio at Perugia. In October, 1494, Raphael removed to Florence, and appears to have made this city his head-quarters until he was called to Rome in 1508; with the exception of a few months passed at Perugia, in 1505, and a short interval at Bologna the following year, he resided constantly at Florence. The works executed by him during this period are said to be in the Florentine manner, those executed previously, in his first or Perugino manner, of which the 'Coronation of the Virgin,' now in the Vatican, and the 'Spozalizio,' or 'Marriage of the Virgin,' in the Brera at Milan, are fine examples; of his second or Florentine manner, 'The Entombment,' in the Borghese Gallery at Rome, is the best example. The 'St. Catherine' in the National Gallery is the same manner. During his stay in Florence, Raphael made the acquaintance of Fra Bartolommeo, and that of Francia at Bologna, from both of whom he had every opportunity of improving himself, independent of the enlarged views he must have gained by moving from a provincial town to so important a city as Florence, then superior even to Rome as a school of painting. The Brancacci chapel alone was a school of art, and in 1506 Raphael had with other masters the opportunity of studying the world-renowned cartoons of Michelangelo and Leonardo da Vinci, in preparation for the Council Hall. With such opportunities he could not but enlarge his manner, and we accordingly soon find in Rome a very much greater treatment of form, than even in the best of his Florentine works, though the first of his great frescoes in the Vatican is in his Florentine style. Raphael was invited to Rome by Julius II. through his countryman Bramante, and he was already residing there in the beginning of September, 1508; Michelangelo paid his third visit to Rome in the same year, a coincidence which was doubtless of considerable advantage to Raphael, the younger man, the rivalry of Michelangelo being an invaluable stimulus to him. The first fresco of the Vatican stanze or dwelling rooms, was the Theology or 'Dispute on the Sacrament' as it is called: this was completed in 1509. In the same room called the Stanza della Segnatura, are the frescoes of 'Poetry,' 'Philosophy,' the celebrated 'School of Athens,' and 'Jurisprudence,' all completed in 1511; his third or Roman style commences with the 'School of Athens.' In the second chamber, known as the Stanza dell' Eliodoro, are, the 'Expulsion of Heliodorus from the temple of Jerusalem,' his grandest work, the 'Mass of Bolsena,' the 'Attila,' and 'St. Peter delivered from Prison,' all finished in 1514, the two former in 1512 during the pontificate of Julius. The third chamber, finished in 1517, called the Stanza dell' Incendio, was painted almost wholly by Raphael's scholars; the great works of the Vatican stanze, for which those chambers are so renowned, are comprised in those of the first two chambers mentioned. The fourth, really the first on entering, called the Stanza di Costantino, was nearly entirely executed under the direction of Giulio Romano after Raphael's death. It is worthy of remark, that the ceiling of the Sistine chapel by Michelangelo and the most celebrated frescoes of the Stanze, those painted by Raphael himself, were executed simultaneously between 1508 and 1512, and during the pontificate of Julius, no real lover of art himself, and who little suspected the almost inexhaustible source of wealth which his simple undertakings were destined to prove to his country in after generations. The slow progress of the Vatican frescoes after the painting of the second chamber, was owing to the numerous commissions Raphael received from Leo X., who succeeded Julius, besides many from other art patrons in Rome and elsewhere. Raphael executed, between 1512 and 1520, besides numerous Madonnas, holy families, portraits, &c., the following great works and masterpieces;—the St. Cecilia, at Bologna; the Madonna di San Sisto, at Dresden; the Spasimo, at Madrid; the Cartoons, at Hampton Court (1515-16); the frescoes of the Farnesina (1518), and his last and most celebrated oil picture 'The Transfiguration.' In addition to these labours, from 1515 he had the chief charge of the building of the new Basilica of St. Peter; he was appointed caposchietto on the 1st of August of that year, by Leo X. This unrivalled painter died at Rome on his birth-day, April 6, 1520, aged exactly thirty-seven years; and after lying in state, with his own picture of the Transfiguration at his head, he was buried with great pomp in the church of Santa Maria ad Martyres, the ancient Pantheon, commonly called in Rome the Rotonda. The inscription on his tomb, written by his friend the Cardinal Bembo, and, therefore, deserving of all reliance, concludes with the following lines:—

[Residence of Raphael.]

Vixit An. xxxvii., Integer Integros.
Quo die natus est, eo esse Desiit
Viii. Id. Aprilis, MDXX.

He lived exactly thirty-seven years: he died on the same day of the year that he was born, April 6, which in 1520 happening to fall on Good Friday, led to the popular error that Raphael was born also on Good Friday, 1483, which fell in that year on the 28th of March; should such have actually been the case, and the inscription of the cardinal be wrong, the 28th March must be substituted for April 6, mentioned above as his birth-day. Raphael is said to have left property to the amount of about 16,000 ducats, a very large sum in those days when money had nearly ten times its present value. He bequeathed his painting materials, works of art, &c., to his two favourite pupils, Gianfrancesco Penni, and Giulio Romano, on condition that they should complete his unfinished works. Raphael was never married, but is said to have been engaged to Maria Bibiena, the niece of the Cardinal Bibiena, who, however, died before him. He was of a slight build, sallow in complexion, with brown eyes, and about five feet eight inches high. His tomb was opened in 1833 and the skeleton found entire with all the teeth perfect; a mould was taken from his skull. His numerous school was completely dispersed after the sack of Rome in 1527, but Giulio Romano revived it in some measure at Mantua. Besides the above mentioned painters, Pierino del Vaga, Polidoro da Caravaggio, and Benvenuto Tisio, commonly called Garofalo, were among his most distinguished scholars; the last has been not inappropriately styled the miniature Raphael. It is matter of common regret that Raphael was removed so prematurely, as is assumed, from the world, many concluding that it is beyond our power to realize the perfection to which he might have carried his art had he been longer spared to prosecute it; this is, however, less than doubtful. Raphael if not too successful to improve, was far too much occupied ever to have had the remotest chance of surpassing his previous great works; the later frescoes of the Vatican were neglected, and besides the important charge of St. Peter's from 1515, he was appointed at the close of the following year superintendent of antiquities, and of the excavations of Rome. He trusted almost entirely to assistants in his latter paintings: the cartoons at Hampton Court are perfect exponents of his later executions, and it would have been impossible for him to have returned to a more elaborate style: neither was it desirable. The rivalry of Sebastiano del Piombo, ardently encouraged by Michelangelo, appears to have given a transitory impulse to renewed efforts at executory skill, but with no real advantage to his own characteristic style. Though more elaborate in composition and more highly finished, the 'Transfiguration' is not equal for simple sublimity and grandeur to the 'Madonna San Sisto,' executed some years before. Raphael did not escape the pernicious any more than good influence of Michelangelo, whose style admirably adapted to his own character and subjects, but very inappropriate to Raphael's; the sequences were injurious. In the Stanza dell'Arcidiacono we already find a loose slovenly style of design, heavy and vulgar, exhibiting mere physical ethics, sentiment being sacrificed to limb. Great art, to approach Raphael's, must consist of something more than vigorous limbs. Raphael's great works are unrivalled, but it is not probable, considering all the circumstances, that he would have equalled them again in his days of grand much less have surpassed them. As it is, his glories soar above that of all his competitors, not excepting Michelangelo himself; and notwithstanding that in individual qualities he was surpassed several, he is universally acclaimed the prince of painters, and chiefly for those lofty sentiments and qualities of his works which all can feel but few can describe. In all his works the treatment is subordinate to the conception. He has scarcely been approached in propriety of invention, composition, or expression; and is almost without an equal in the natural simplicity and grandeur of his forms for moral force in allegory and history unrivalled for fidelity in portrait unsurpassed, and for simplicity and grandeur of conception inferior to Michelangelo alone. The prints after Raphael's works, including drawings amounting altogether to nearly 900, are extremely numerous and well known: from Marc Antonio downwards, no painter has perhaps been better rendered. His biography is likewise many and voluminous, in Italian, French, German, and in English: one of the latest and the great work of Passavant, Rafael von Urbino und sein Vater Giovanni Santi, Leipzig, 1838, is the largest and most complete in every respect. There are besides:—Vasari, Vite de' Pittori, in which the notice of the Florentine edition of the Raccolta Artistica, 1852, is very complete; for Vita inedita di Raffaello da Urbino illustrata con note da Angelo Comolli, Rome, 1790; Notizie di Raffaello Sanzio aus Urbino, by Don Carlo, Rome 1822; Rehberg, Rafael Sanzio aus Urbino, München, 1824; Quantremere de Quincy, Histoire de la vie et des Ouvrages de Raphael, Paris, 1829; Longhena, Istoria della vita e delle opere di Raffaello Sanzio, &c., del Sig. Quantremere de Quincy, Milan, 1829; Pungileoni, Elogio Storico di Raffaello Santi da Urbino, Urbino, 1829-31; D'Adda, Appendice a l'ouvrage intitulé Histoire de la vie et des ouvrages de Raphael, &c., Paris, 1853; and in English Duppa, Life of Raphael Sanzio, London, 1816. Raphael is scarcely represented in the National Gallery, notwithstanding that we have a specimen of each of his three manners: The Vision of a Knight, St. Catherine, and the portrait of Julius II. The fragment of cartellino belonging to a second and inferior series of works by Francis I., is not by the hand of Raphael. The magnificent cartoons at Hampton Court, these cannot be too highly valued, do not give an adequate idea of the exquisite sentiment which pervades the majority of his greater masterpieces. The cartoons, however, at Hampton Court are of such commanding grandeur of style that ey have been almost intuitively admitted now for ree centuries as the inalienable type for apostolic presentation. [R.N.W.]

RAPHELENG, or REPHELENGIUS, the commonly received name of FRANCIS RANTENGHIEN, learned Orientalist of French Flanders, 1539-97. His son, FRANCIS, author of Latin poems d notes upon Seneca, published 1587.

RAPIN, N., a French poet, died 1608.

RAPIN, R., a learned Jesuit, 1621-1687.

RAPIN-THOYRAS, PAUL DE, best known as a author of an English history, was a nephew of e celebrated Pelisson, and son of James Rapin ur de Thoyras, descended from a noble family Savoy. He was born in 1661, and came to gland on the revocation of the edict of Nantes 1685. He subsequently entered into the service the prince of Orange, and was with him in the h wars. On the death of that prince he retired Wesel, in the duchy of Cleves, where he comed his history. He is considered an impartial d well-informed historian. Died 1725.

RAPP, JOHN, a general and peer of France, s born at Colmar, in Alsace, 1772; and was ccessively aide-de-camp to Desaix and Buonate during the consulate. He was employed by e latter in the subjugation of Switzerland, and tly distinguished himself at the battle of Anlitz, and the defence of Dantzic. He finally ched himself to the Bourbons, and died 1821.

RASCAS, P. A., a Fr. antiquarian, 1567-1620.

RASCHE, J. C., a Ger. numismatist, 1733-1805.

RASCHI. By this name is known SOLOMON s JARCHI, one of the most learned rabbins of s Israelitish wanderers, who is said to have been at Troyes in Champagne, 1040, and to have d there 1105. Other places have claimed the our of his birth, and his surname is variously t, as Isaaki, Isarchi, Jarhi, Racca, Raschi, s Raski. He was remarkable for the precocity his talents and the largeness of his mind: this, well as his adventurous disposition, may be aised from the fact that he commenced, when ut thirty years of age, the extensive programme his travels, intended to embrace every known etry in the world, in order to collect materials the history of his scattered people. In pursuit his object he visited his brethren in Italy, Ept, Greece, Asia Minor, Palestine, Armenia, Pha, Tartary, Muscovy, and Germany; he was duded from using his materials, however, by monides, who considered the design impolitic at time. He settled at Troyes, therefore, and dted his acquirements to biblical commentaries arabbinical learning. Dr. Clarke says, Raschi ote a commentary on the whole Bible so compely obscure in many places, as to require a large comment to make it intelligible.' On other hand, it must be admitted that the uphysics and philosophy of the rabbis is little stood, and though much obscurity may be sted in a mass of writing on traditional and ulative knowledge, it is undeniable that the ish learning abounds in marks of genius and in profoundly philosophical reflections. Raschi s buried at Troyes, but when the Jews were n out of France they carried his remains with th, and reinterred them at Prague. [E.R.]

RASCHID. See HAROUN-AL-RASCHID.

RASCHID-EDDIN, a Persian historian, physician, and vizier to the sultan Ghazan-Khan, 13th c.

RASES, an Arabian historian of Spain, 9th ct.

RASORI, J., an Italian physician, 1766-1837.

RASPE, R. E., a Ger. antiquarian, 1737-1794.

RASTALL, JOHN, an early English printer, author of several curious and learned works, and brother-in-law of Sir Thomas More, died 1536.
His son, WILLIAM, a judge, died 1565.

RATCLIFFE, R., an English dramatist, d. 1553.

RATCLIFFE, THOMAS, earl of Sussex, known as a statesman and ambassador, died 1583.

RATRAMN, a French theologian, 9th century.

RATSCHKY, J. F., a German poet, 1757-1810.

RATTE, S. H. DE, a Fr. astronom., 1722-1805.

RAU, CHRISTIAN, otherwise Ravis, Ravias, or Rave, a Prussian Orientalist, 1603-1677.

RAU, J. E., a Prussian theologian, 1695-1770.

RAU, J. J., a German Hebraist, died 1745.

RAU, J. J., a German anatomist, 1668-1719.

RAU, SEBALD, professor of Oriental languages at Utrecht, 1724-1818. SEBALD FOULQUES
JEAN, his son, a poet and Orientalist, 1765-1807.

RAULIN, J., a French preacher, 1443-1514.

RAULIN, J., a French physician, 1708-1784.

RAUWOLF, L., a German botanist, died 1596.

RAUZZINI, VENAUIO, an excellent musician, and esteemed the greatest pianist of his time, was a native of Rome. In early life he went to Vienna, and afterwards to Munich, where he resided for several years. In 1774 he was engaged as one of the principal singers at the opera in London. After some time he retired to Bath, where he for many years managed the concerts. He composed several operas and a great variety of detached compositions, which were highly popular. He was long classed amongst the first scientific musicians who had made this country their home. Amongst his pupils may be mentioned Madame Mara, Mrs. Billington, and Messrs. Braham and Incedon. Rauz-zini, who was universally esteemed and beloved in private life, died in 1810, aged 62 years. [J.M.]

RAVAILLAC, FRANCIS, the assassin of Henry IV. of France, was a Roman Catholic fanatic of singular character, born at Angouleme 1578, or 1579. His naturally gloomy temperament was deepened by a lawsuit, followed by an imprisonment for debt, in the course of which he is said to have been haunted by visions, and acquired such a morbid nervousness, that the very name of a Huguenot would excite him to fury. It is not without a certain risk that one expresses any belief in reports of this nature except as symptoms of disease, but it is impossible to overlook the historical evidence bearing on the circumstances alluded to. The king himself also had a pre-sentiment of his fate, and repeatedly gave expression to it; even the courtiers for some time before the event were in a state of preternatural excitement. The design of Ravillac, meantime, was the secret of his own bosom, and he took advantage of the queen's coronation, on the 14th of May, 1610, to put it in execution. Henry IV. was proceeding in his carriage along the Rue de la Ferronnerie when some obstruction occurred, and Ravillac stepping on the wheel, struck his noble victim through the window; he stabbed the king twice through the heart, and death was instantaneous. The assassin made no attempt to escape, but stood still with the bloody knife in his hand, and would have been cut down by one of the gentlemen, but the duke d'Epéron interposed, and he was arrested. Application of torture failed to wring any confession from him implicating others, and he was torn to pieces by horses in the Place de Grève, on the 27th of the same month. The moral complicity of the catholic league in this tragedy cannot be doubted; the fanaticism of the enemies of Henry IV. put the knife in Ravallac's hand by a much surer method than that of bargain and sale. The death of Henry was followed by the regency of Marie de Medici. [E.R.]

RAVENET, SIMON FRANCIS, a French engraver, 1706-1774. His son, SIMON, an engraver, born about 1755.

RAVENNA, M. DA, an Ital. engraver, 16th ct. RAVENNE, J. DE, a scholar of Petrarch, and one of the restorers of letters in Italy, 1350-1420.

RAVENSCHROFT, THOMAS, a composer and publisher of music, famous for his Psalm tunes and works known to musical antiquaries, 17th ct.

RAVESTYEN, JOHN VAN, a Dutch portrait painter, born about 1580. His son, ARNOLD, born at the Hague in 1615, was also a portrait painter, and in 1661 was chosen chief of the Society of Arts in his native place. NICHOLAS, of the same family, a painter of history, 1661-1750.

RAVIS, or RAVIUS. See RAU.

RAVISIUS-TEXTOR, whose proper name was J. TIXIER DE RAVISI, professor of rhetoric at the college of Navarre, 1480-1524.

RAWENDY, AHMED, an Arabian savant, author of a new doctrine of metempsychosis, died 905.

RAWLET, J., an English painter, 1642-1686.

RAWLEY, W., an English divine, who acted as chaplain and secretary to Lord Bacon, 1588-1667.

RAWLINSON, CHRISTOPHER, a famous master of Saxon and northern literature, 1677-1733.

RAWLINSON, SIR THOMAS, mayor of London in 1706, when he repaired and beautified Guildhall, 1647-1724. His eldest son, THOMAS, a remarkable collector of books and MSS., the supposed original of Addison's Tom Folio, died 1725. RICHARD, a fourth son of Sir Thomas, an eminent antiquarian, died at Islington 1755.

RAWSON, SIR W., an English oculist, d. 1829.

RAY, REV. JOHN, a very celebrated botanist and zoologist, was born at Black Hetley, in Essex, in 1628. He died in 1705. Few events in Ray's life were striking or remarkable. His father filled the humble station of a blacksmith, but was able to give his son a good classical education. At the age of sixteen he went to the university of Cambridge, and in 1660 was ordained both deacon and priest at the same time. He held a fellowship in Trinity College for a number of years; but, in 1662, he was deprived of this by his scruples in conforming to the celebrated Bartholomew Act. During his residence at Cambridge, he had acted as tutor to many gentlemen of high rank, amongst whom especially was the son of Sir Francis Willoughby. Upon his being forced to leave the university, he travelled with his pupil through various parts of England, and on the continent, and on his return took up his abode for the most part at his friend's house, Middleton Hall, in Warwickshire. Mr. Willoughby was an ardent student of natural history, and Ray, whose name had already become famous as a botanist, assisted him in his studies. His kind patron and friend died in 1672, in prime of life, leaving two infant sons whom he confided to the care of Ray, appointing him on his executors, and leaving him an annuity of a-year. He soon afterwards married, and finally settled in his native village. The books which he published on botany are numerous; and his second edition of the 'Synopsis Methodica Stirpium Britannicarum,' has been said by an eminent botanist to be of all the systematical and practical florae of country, the most perfect that ever came under observation. His method of classifying plants a natural one, distributing them according to number of their cotyledons, and has formed the basis of that system, which is now, under the name of Jussienan, universally received by botanists the present day. He is termed by Haller, 'the greatest botanist in the memory of man;' and Sir James Edward Smith, he is said to be the most accurate in observation, the most philosophical in contemplation, and the most faithful in deduction, amongst all the botanists of our own, or of any other time.' As a zoologist, Ray is also very high. Up to his time naturalists were satisfied with Aristotle's classification of the animal kingdom. Ray, however, conscious of its defects and daring to think for himself, invented and founded on the structure of the Heart. He declares Ray to be the first true systematical classifier of the animal kingdom, and both he and Linnaeus themselves deeply indebted to his labours, in succeeding systematic arrangements. We conclude this brief notice of this justly celebrated man in the words of a learned botanist: 'We readily acknowledge we are proud of being able to call our countryman, for he was in all respects as great as he was great.' Plumier dedicated a genus of plants to the memory of John Ray, under the name Jan-Raia. Linnaeus changed it to Ra-jania. Sir J. E. Smith has more lately with better propriety adopted the name Raiana. [V.]

RAY-DE-ST.-GEINEZ, JAMES MAR, a French tactician, author of a military history of Louis XIV., 1712-1777.

RAYMOND, several counts of Toulouse:—RAYMOND I., reigned 852-865. RAYMOND II., reigned 918-923. RAYMOND III., son and successor of the preceding, created duke of Aquitaine and count of Auvergne by Raoul, king of France, 923-930. RAYMOND IV., born 1042, succeeded his brother William IV., in 1088, as count of Toulouse, and count of Narbonne, and marquis of Provence; in 1096 he went to Jerusalem with the first crusade, but refused the crown proffered to him after the capture of the city; died in Syria 1105. RAYMOND V., born 1134, succeeded his father 1148, died 1181. RAYMOND VI., son of the preceding, born 1154, succeeded 1194, and, being a friend of the papal legates, was twice excommunicated 1208 and 1211, and despoiled of his estates by Simon de Montfort 1218, died 1222. RAYMOND VII., son of Raymond VI., and last count of Toulouse, was born 1197, and after struggling with his father for the recovery of his possessions, vanquished Simon de Montfort in 1224. He was so enfeebled by continual wars, however, that he submitted to a humiliating peace with the pope and the king of France in 1229. He died 1242, leaving his estates his only daughter, Jeanne, who had married phonso, count of Poitiers, brother of Louis IX.

RAYMOND, J. M., a Fr. general, dist. in the voice of the native princes of India, 1755-1798.

RAYMOND, J. M., a Fr. chemist, 1756-1817.

RAYMOND, ROBERT, Lord, solicitor-general the reign of Anne, and successively attorney-general and chief justice of the King's Bench in the reign of George I.; died 1732.

RAYMONDI. See RAIMONDI.

RAYNAL, JAMES, a French historian of Toulouse, 1723-1807. His brother, FRANCIS, a Greek scholar, 1726-1810.

RAYNAL, WILLIAM THOMAS FRANCIS, a French historian and political writer, was born at Geniez, in the Rouergue, 1711, and acquired European reputation by his 'Philosophical History of the Two Indies.' He was a great partizan of the encyclopédistes, and a man of remarkable benevolence. His other historical works are of note. Died 1796.

RAYNAUD, T., a Fr. theologian, 1583-1663.

RAYNOUARD, FRANCOIS JUSTE MARIE, a French dramatic writer and philologist, 1761-1836.

RAZI, a celebrated Arabian physician, died 923.

RAZOUX, J., a French physician, 1723-1798.

RAZZI, G. A., an Italian painter, 1479-1554.

RE, PHILIP, an Italian agriculturist, 1763-1817.

READING, an English divine, 1588-1667.

REAL. See SAINT REAL.

REAL, ANDREW, a Fr. politician, 1765-1832.

REAL-DE-CURBON, GASPARD DE, a French writer 'On the Science of Government,' 1682-1721. His nephew, BALTHAZAR, an ecclesiastic and learned writer, 1701-1774.

REAL, PHILIP FRANCIS, Count, an ally of France during the French revolution, 1765-1834.

REALINO, B., an Italian Jesuit, 1530-1616.

REAUMUR, RENE ANTOINE FERCHAULT DE, a celebrated French physician and naturalist, was born at Rochelle, 1683, and died 1757. He has the merit of reducing thermometers to a common standard, and the thermometer of 80 degrees, invented by him in 1731, still bears his name. He was successful in several new applications of chemistry to different branches of manufacture, especially that of porcelain and steel. His principal works are 'Memoirs of his Discoveries,' 'The History of Insects,' and a 'History of the Auriferous Rivers of France.' He was also the discoverer of the trinitite mines in Languedoc.

REBENTISCH, J. FREDERICK, a German astronomer, disting. as a wr. on botany in 1804-1805.

REBOLLEDO, BERNARDINO, Count Di, a Spanish soldier, poet, and diplomatist, 1597-1677.

REBUFFI, P., a French jurist, 1487-1557.

RECCHI, N. A., a botanist of Naples, 16th ct.

RECHENBERG, ADAM, a learned theologian and philologist of Leipzig, 1642-1721.

RECHTERS, T., a Dutch painter, 1700-1768.

RECORDE, ROBERT, a native of Pembroke, and one of the first mathematicians in this country to adopt the system of Copernicus, d. 1558.

REENTRIELM, or REENTRIELM, JAMES, a Jewish antiquarian, b. at Upsala 1644, d. 1691.

RESDALE, JOHN FREEMAN MITFORD, Esq., a distinguished lawyer and statesman, who assisted at the trial of Hardy and Horne Tooke, and finally became lord chancellor, 1748-1830.

REDI, FRANCESCO, an eminent natural philosopher, poet, and philologist of Italy, 1626-1697.

REDI, J., an Italian painter, 1665-1726.

REDING, ALOYS, Baron Von, landemann and general of the Swiss at the period of the French invasion, born 1755, repulsed the French on the plains of Morgarten, 1798, became chief of the central government, 1801, died 1818.

REDMAN, or REDMAYNE, JOHN, a dignitary and theol. of the English Church, 1499-1551.

REDOUTE, P. J., a Flemish pain., 1759-1840.

REED, ISAAC, a miscellaneous writer and dramatic critic, born in London 1742, died 1807.

REED, J., a dramatic writer, 1723-1787.

REES, ABRAHAM, D.D., whose encyclopædia is well known, was born in Montgomeryshire, 1743, and educated as a dissenting minister in the academy of Hoxton. He was teacher of mathematics at that institution from 1762 till its dissolution in 1784, and soon after taught philosophy and theology in the new college at Hackney. He was employed as editor of Chamber's Cyclopædia in the period 1776 to 1786, and some years later edited the great work known by his name in 45 volumes 4to. Dr. Rees died in 1825, having at that time been minister of the chapel in Old Jewry about forty years. Rees's Cyclopædia is still valuable as representing the state of knowledge just at the commencement of modern progress.

REEVE, CLARA, daughter of a clergyman of Ipswich, distinguished as a novelist, 1723-1808.

REEVE, JOHN, one of the most popular actors on the London stage, famous for his representation of burlesque character, was born in London, 1799, and made his first appearance at Drury Lane, in the character of 'Sylvester Daggerwood,' in 1819. The principal scene of his later performances was the Adelphi theatre in the Strand. Died 1838.

REEVES, JOHN, successively a barrister and magistrate, author of 'Thoughts on the English Government,' and of a 'History of the Law of Shipping and Navigation,' 1752-1829.

REEVES, W., an English divine, 1668-1726.

REGA, H. J., a French physician, 1690-1754.

REGGIO, F., an Italian astronomer, 1743-1804.

REGILLIANUS, QUINTUS NONIUS, a Roman emperor, elected 261, killed 263.

REGINALDUS, VALERIUS, otherwise RENAUD or REGNAULD, a Fr. Jesuit and casuist, 1540-1623.

REGIOMONTANUS. See MULLER.

REGIS, JEAN BAPTISTE, a French Jesuit and missionary to China, in the period 1708-1715. He is author of a Latin translation of the Y-King, and of a map of the country. His nephew, JOSEPH CHARLES, known as a man of letters, 1718-1777.

REGIS, J. F., a French preacher, 1597-1640.

REGIS, P., a French physician, 1656-1726.

REGIS, PIERRE SYLVAN, whose proper name was LEROY, a Cartesian philosopher, 1632-1707.

REGIUS, H. LEROY, or DUROY, a physician and Cartesian philosopher of Utrecht, 1598-1679.

REGIUS, URBAIN, or LE ROY, a learned reformer, poet, and professor of rhetoric, died 1541.

REGNARD, JEAN FRANCOIS, a comic poet, who ranks next to Moliere in French literature, and is remarkable for his adventurous life, 1647-1709.

REGNAULD, MICHAEL LOUIS STEPHEN, called 'Regnault of Saint Jean D'Angely,' a Fr. magistrate and member of the estates-general, 1760-1819.

REGNAULDIN, THOMAS, a French sculptor, and member of the Academy, died 1706.

REGNAULT, J. B., a Fr. painter, 1754-1829.

REGNAULT, N., a Fr. physician, 1683-1762.

REGNIER, CLAUDE AMBROSE, duke of Massa, a French statesman at the period of the revolution and the empire, 1746-1814.

REGNIER, E., a Fr. mechanician, 1757-1825.

REGNIER, a French Latin poet, 1589-1663.

REGNIER, M., a French satirist, 1573-1613.

REGNIER-DESMARAIS, FRANCIS SERAPHIN, a French writer, author of poems in his own language and in Latin and Italian, secretary to the Academy, and one of the most active editors of the dictionary, 1632-1713.

REGNIER-DESTOUBET, H. F., a French writer and advocate of the Jesuits, 1804-1831.

REGULUS, MARCUS ATILIUS, a Roman general, consul B.C. 256, killed at Carthage 251.

REGULUS - SERRANUS, CAIUS ATILIUS, consul of Rome B.C. 257, obtained the naval victory of Lipari in the war with the Carthaginians.

REHFELD, C. F., a Germ. physician, 1735-94.

REHNSCHOLD, CHARLES GUSTAVUS, a distinguished senator and field-marshal of Sweden, 1651-1722.

REICHA, ANTOINE JOSEPH, a celebrated musical composer and theorist, was born at Prague in 1770, and received his education at the university of Bonn. Between the years 1794 and 1807 he lived at Hamburg, at Paris, and at Vienna, where he produced several works which were eminently successful. In 1808 he revisited Paris, when he gave a course of lectures on composition, which were well attended. His career as an operatic composer then commenced. After the death of Mehul he was appointed professor of the Conservatoire de Musique, where he instituted a new and greatly improved method of tuition, which has had great effect over all Europe in improving the study and advancing the knowledge of music. In May, 1835, he was admitted a member of the National Institute, and he died in May, 1836. [J.M.]

REICHARD, H. A. OTTOCAR, a statesman and literateur, dukedom of Gotha, 1751-1878.

REICHARD, H. G., a German philologist, 1742-1801.

REICHARDT, CHRISTIAN, author of 'The Science of Agriculture and Gardening,' 1685-1775.

REICHARDT, JOHANN FRIEDRICH, was born at Königsberg in Prussia, in the year 1752. This composer, whose talents developed themselves in a remarkable degree even in early infancy, studied for two years at the university of Königsberg, under the great philosopher Emanuel Kant, and afterwards two years at the university of Leipzig. He then travelled through Germany, and on his return to Prussia he was appointed Director of Salt-works under government. Reichardt was chapel-master under three kings of Prussia, namely, Frederick the Great, and Frederick William II., and III. He was also manager of the French and German theatres, and conductor of the orchestra to the king of Westphalia, and member and correspondent of several learned societies. He composed an immense number of literary and musical works, the list of which is much too long to be given here. His musical works embrace all classes of compositions, operas, sonatas, and concertos for the harpsichord, concertos for the violin and violoncello, chorv songs, odes, overtures, and church music. He died in the year 1814. [J.]

REICHENBACH, GEORGE OF, a distin. m. of optical instruments and telescopes, 1772-1818.

REICHSTADT, NAPOLEON FRAN. CHAR

JOSEPH BUONAPARTE, Duc De, only son of poleon and his Austrian bride, Maria Louisa, born at Paris, 20th March, 1811. His birth an event of great political importance, and Napoleon himself announced it to the crowds thronged the Tuileries with the ambitious words—'C'est un roi de Rome!' Napoleon, at this time at the height of his power, was preparing for the struggle which every one foresaw must take place with the might of Russia, and as usual with him he anticipated the coalition by a sudden invasion of the North. The young king of Rome had completed his third year when the disasters of Moscow and Leipzig opened the gates of Paris to the allied armies, and was with his mother Maria Louisa at Blois when the capital capitulated, 30th March, 1814. The emperor was exiled to Elba, and his wife and son conveyed to Vienna, where the young prince received the title of Duc de Reichstadt, a petty principality of Bohemia, and was confided to the care of the count Dietrichstein. His father made vain attempts to recover possession of the child, for whose existence he had paid a heavy price in the divorce of Josephine, and his second abdication in 1815, he endeavoured to secure his succession as Napoleon II. The Bonapartes, however, were restored by the allied sovereigns, Maria Louisa became duchess of Parma, and mistress of Count Neipperg, and her son was consigned to oblivion at the court of his grandfather. The eyes of Europe were often turned upon the young Napoleon as he grew to manhood, and displayed some of the rare qualities possessed by his father; the governments of Louis XVIII. and Charles X. also may be supposed to have been alarmed at his existence at the court of Vienna as a perpetual menace. Whatever hopes or fears may have excited were set at rest by his death in 1818, when a rapid decline terminated his life at the early age of twenty-one. The duc de Reichstadt bore a strong resemblance to Napoleon; finely chiselled mouth and chin, the massive forehead, and the deep brilliancy of his eyes, were remarkably alike; the same may be said of his capacity for the penetration of character, and his general temperament. He applied himself assiduously to military and historical studies, especially to all that concerned the career of his father, but he had no real freedom at the court. His portrait was almost the last object that he gazed upon, as St. Helena gazed upon, whose last testament is an evidence how much he still hoped for the child of his ambition:—'I recommend I never to forget that he was born a French prince and never to permit himself to become an instrument in the hands of the sovereigns who oppress the peoples of Europe. He must never be forgotten in the ranks of those who combat with France, in any manner annoy her. Let him adopt for motto, "All for the French people."' [E.]

REID, THOMAS, born at Strachan in Kincardineshire, 26th April, 1710; died in Glasgow, 10th October, 1795: the illustrious founder of

SCOTTISH SCHOOL' in Philosophy. The events of Reid's Life were few, but most honourable to him; and the entire tenor of his Life, that which fitted an unobtrusive, but earnest, and successful thinker into Truth. Under the influence of early impressions, his thoughts naturally turned towards Philosophy, and the profession of the Church; and he completed the studies needful to that end at Marischal College, Aberdeen. But about this time, Hume's Treatise on Human Nature astonished and troubled Philosophy. Until then, REID accepted Locke, and even the startling deductions of Berkeley did not alarm him. But Hume went much farther. Along with the Materialist, he had banished those Spiritual conceptions which Reid held in greatest account; he denied, Personality, and therefore the Liberty and Responsibility of Man. The sincere Scottish Clergyman, felt and knew, that, in a Philosophy whose conclusions were so false, the most serious error lay inhere; and that, as its Logic showed no flaw, the fault must lie in the foundations. Soon after, in 1763, his great work appeared—the 'Inquiry into the Human Mind on the Principles of Common Sense,'—that vigorous protest on behalf of our Human Consciousness, which determined the long subsequent course of Scottish Philosophy. Preceding the publication of this work, Reid had left Marischal (in 1752) for the Chair of Moral Philosophy in his Alma Mater; but the reputation established by the 'Inquiry,' procured him translation to a more important sphere;—he was chosen in 1764 to succeed Adam Smith in the corresponding Chair in the University of Glasgow. In 1777 and 1788, he published his Essays on the Intellectual Faculties, and the Active Powers. Philosophy has recently obtained the classic edition by SIR WILLIAM HAMILTON.—We shall state as succinctly as possible the characteristics of Reid's Reform. The first fallacy in the system of Locke and his successors, at which he struck, was the doctrine of Perception. The problem, in that way does the Mind reach the external world,—had always been held fundamental in Philosophy. And a favourite mode of conceiving it was this—certain Images or Ideas, intermediate between mind and matter—representing the latter, and apprehensible by the former—constitute the bridge between these two contrasted substances. In being the case, said BERKELEY, we do not perceive Matter or the External World at all; and, said, HUME, we perceive and can know nothing save Ideas. The various forms and modifications of this cumbersome and purely fantastic conception have recently been scientifically arranged and expanded by Sir William Hamilton; who has now, afresh that Reid's solution of the vexed problem is the only tenable one. Perception, said he, is not a representation, but a presentation. We do not reach it, from Sensation, through any medium; the world—the cause of the sensation—appears in the mind along with the sensation itself, and with the same evidence. The root or beginning of all our knowledge is thus essentially Intuition:—the Intuition is as immediate as the Act that gives rise to it. (Article LEIBNTZ.) And by this simple solution, which is but the assertion of a fact—attested to be such by Conscience—Reid dispersed the perplexities of preceding Thinkers, and ought to have prevented the rise of many of the ambitious and baseless schemes in which Germany has since then been unhappily so fertile.—Reid's next point, touched the rationale of our JUDGMENTS. According to Locke, a Judgment is the mere comparison of terms or ideas furnished by simple apprehension:—we receive ideas, said that Philosopher, altogether from Sensation; the Mind compares these Ideas; and, from this comparison, results knowledge or judgments. Reid overthrew this doctrine also. Judgments, he said, are not mere abstract terms; neither mere statements of the identity or discordance of abstract terms. They come from analyses of concrete notions by the Mind, acting according to its own inherent Laws, and under the sway of principles, belonging to its constitution, and of which none of its operations are independent. This doctrine of Judgment, led our Inquirer, inevitably, to a farther and yet higher question, viz.: What are those Laws? What those Fundamental Principles of the Reason? Reid replies, by a summary of First Truths, or Truths of Common Sense; and next by an analysis of the Faculties. Very few persons will now be disposed to say, that in the details or phraseology of these replies, Reid's system is unimpeachable. The name Faculty, was perhaps unfortunate, and no scientific, precise, or exhaustive method, guided his research after First Truths;—he merely enumerates a few principles, which he says are evident to Common Sense. Nevertheless, the solution offered is correct in the main; and it is not an exaggeration, that it overturned Sensationalism in this country. He carried with him the same method into Moral Investigations, re-establishing on surest foundations, the Personality and Liberty of Man.—It is of moment that a correct apprehension be obtained of the exact place occupied by Reid and the Scottish School generally, in the history of later Mental Philosophy. That he stands among the foremost of that class of Thinkers who have contended with Scepticism in all its forms, and Sensationalism under whatever modification, does not require to be reasserted: the really important question is, what is the relationship of Reid's system to those of other Modern Leaders, who, in so far as his main object is concerned, have made common cause with him? Among the great men, whose general aim was identical with Reid's, we easily distinguish two—DES CARTES and KANT: let us fix, then, the relations between Cartesianism, our Scottish Reform, and the Critical Philosophy. Now, it is not to be doubted that the foundation—the starting point of unquestionable certainty—is—in all these systems—the same: neither is the glory of having first descried that Common Sense Foundation, to be withheld from the illustrious Frenchman. Previous to the labours of Des Cartes, the metaphysicians of Modern Europe, had discerned no absolute starting point; their schemes usually reposed on some abstract and often fanciful postulate; nor can more forcible illustration be given of the merit of Des Cartes' achievement, than the subsequent aberrations of SPINOZA. The foundation, whose claims and sufficiency are so fully vindicated in the Treatise on Method and the Meditations, is simply this:— it is a First Truth—possessed of an Absolute Certainty, from which the certainty belonging to all other Truth is derived—that I, a Thinking Subject, exist. This Ego, then, being our first or primary sphere of observation and scrutiny;—what find we there? And in establishing this foundation and putting this question, Des Cartes spread out the entire domain of Psychology. Sciences are built up slowly; and psychological observation is peculiarly difficult: Des Cartes did not advance far with the superstructure; he left hints merely and separate truths; and he often erred. The earliest subsequent progress may most justly be attributed to REID, for Locke, with all his acuteness, was not a sound Psychologist,—he started from a Theory regarding the Origin of our Ideas. Consciousness, said Reid, which assures us of the existence and personality of the Thinking Subject, declares in a manner equally imperative, the phenomena and attributes of that Subject. It tells in the first place, of certain Faculties, or modes of action—demanding faith for the operations of these Faculties. And it declares secondly, the existence of certain absolute principles or beliefs, from which in none of its actions, the Ego can shake itself free: principles which, when mixed up with the subject-matter of sensations, give rise to equally imperative contingent truths. As already indicated, Reid was rather a sound Thinker than possessed of the Scientific Spirit. Although therefore he discovered the foregoing Truths, and fully appreciated and unfolded their importance, he penetrated no farther. He descried fundamental facts in Psychology, but he never entertained an idea that Psychology—any more than any other branch of Inquiry—cannot be elevated into a Science, if attention be confined to examination of its separate fundamental Facts. That loftier question was beyond him—What is the Organic Structure of the Intellect of which these facts are products or phenomena? In other words,—In what way are principles possible, which are not evolved by our faculties, but rather govern them, seeing that no faculty can construct any notion which does not pre-suppose these principles? And again,—How comes it, that knowledge relative to the nature and action of the Faculties of an Individual Mind, can ever assume to be Absolute? It is into this arduous Sphere of pure Science that KANT boldly entered, and where his triumphs have been won. His arrangement or classification of the Mind's Modes of Energy (Faculties) is simpler and better discriminated than Reid's; he has traced the absolutism of First Truths to the fact, that a priori or constituent Laws, govern the Mind's action in every Mode of its Energy; and he has exhausted the list of such Truths, by detecting these a priori Laws.—Such, the relationship among these remarkable Thinkers. It has been signally unfortunate for the progress of Philosophy in Scotland, that we have not been disposed to regard our countryman as a contributor merely. Not satisfied with recognizing his immense merits, we have supposed that he sounded all the depths of Psychologic knowledge;—thus wilfully shutting up our sympathies from the memorable advances achieved since his time. Of late years, indeed, we have been growing sensible of our mistake. [J.P.N.]

REIFESTEIN, JOHN FREDERICK, a Prussian painter and improver of the art, 1719-17.
 REIFFENBERG, FRANCIS DE, a French Jesuit, historian, theol., and Latin poet, 1719-17.
 REIGNY, L. A. B., a French writer, 1757-17.
 REIL, J. C., a Germ. physiologist, 1759-18.
 REIMAR, or REIMARIUS, HERMAN SAMU, a philologist and naturalist, professor of philosophy at Hamburg, 1694-1748. His son, J. HENRY, a physician and naturalist, 1729-1801.
 REIMMANN, JAMES FREDERICK, a German savant, author of a 'History of Logic,' 1668-17.
 REINA, F., a French writer, 1770-1825.
 REINBECK, J. G., a German theologian, philosophical disciple of Wolf, 1682-1741.
 REINECCIUS, C., a theologian and Hebrew editor of a Bible in four languages, 1668-1752.
 REINECCIUS, REINIER, an antiquarian disciple of Melancthon, one of the restorers of historical studies in Germany, 1541-1595.
 REINEGGS, J., a German traveller, 1744-17.
 REINER, W. L., a German painter, 1686-17.
 REINESIUS, THOMAS, a learned physician and archaeologist of Gotha, 1587-1667.
 REINHARD, F. VOLKMAR, a protestant theologian and moralist of Sulzbach, 1758-1812.
 REINHART, C. F., Count, a diplomatist, member of the Institute, and peer of France, 1751-17.
 REINHOLD, C. LEO, a Ger. philos., one of the first to enforce the doctrines of Kant, 1758-17.
 REINHOLD, ERASMUS, a German astronomer and professor of mathematics, 1511-1553.
 son, of the same name, who was a physicist, wrote on geometry, and on a new star which appeared in Cassiopeia, 1575.
 REISER, A., a German theologian, 1628-17.
 REISKE, JOHN JAMES, an eminent philologist and Arabic scholar of Saxony, 1716-1774.
 wife, ERNESTINA CHRISTINA, was a Latin Greek scholar, and aided her husband in his labours, 1735-1798.
 REITZ, FREDERICK WOLFGANG, a German philologist and editor of some classics, 1733-17.
 REITZ, JOHN FREDERICK, a learned philologist, 1695-1778. His brother, G. OTHO, a writer, 1702-1769.
 RELAND, A., a Dutch Orientalist, 1676-17.
 RELTAN, RICHARD, a Church of England minister, naturalist, and classical editor, 1755-17.
 REMARD, C., a French bibliopole, 1766-17.
 REMBERSUS, one of the first promoters of Christianity in Denmark, d. abp. of Hamburg.
 REMBRANDT, GERRITZ, commonly called BRANDT VAN RHYN, was born in his father's house on the banks of the Rhine between Leyden and Kowkerk, near Leyden, June 15, 1606. He was the pupil of Jacob Van Swanenburg, with whom he remained three years; he studied also Pieter Lastman at Amsterdam, and Jacob Pieter Haarlem. He settled at Amsterdam in 1632, and appears to have died there, according to Immers, July 19, 1664, but no register of his burial has yet been discovered. Rembrandt was equalled as an etcher and a painter; his paintings amount to nearly 400: they are dated from 1628 to 1661. The chief characteristic of his art is forcible light and shade. He is well represented in the National Gallery; and his influence has been more direct upon the British school of painting than that of any other master.

rs than that of any other master.—(Immerzeel, intekeningen op de Lofredd op Rembrandt, so De Levens en Werken der Hollandsche en laansche Kunstschilders, &c., 1843; Bartsch, Peintre graveur; Burnet, Rembrandt and his rks, 1848.) [R.N.W.]

REMER, J. A., a Germ. historian, 1736-1804.

REMI, or REMIGIUS, the name of two saints the Roman calendar:—1. An apostle of the anks who baptized Clovis, and became arch-bishop of Rheims, died 533. 2. An archbishop of ons, who was of Gaulish origin, and wrote inst Godeschalvus, presided at the council of lence 855, died 875. A third of the name, led REMI, or REMIGIUS of AUXERRE, was a medietic monk and commentator, died 980.

REMI, A., a French poet, 1600-1646.

REMI, J. H., a French jurist, 1738-1782.

REMONDI, BALTHASAR M., a Venetian bishop ante, disting. as an Orientalist, 1698-1777.

REMUSAT, CLAIRE ELIZABETH JEANNE, ntess De, lady of the palace to the empress phine, authoress of an Essay on Female Edu-on, 1780-1821.

REMUSAT, JEAN PIERRE ABEL, professor of Chinese and Tartar languages at the college of nce, author of a Chinese Grammar, and some able translations, 1788-1832.

REMUSAT, P. F. DE, a Fr. writer. 1755-1803.

RENANUS. See RHENANUS.

RENARD, J. A., a French architect, 1744-73.

RENAU D'ELISAGARAY, BERNARD, a fa-ns naval engineer and architect, au. of 'Theorie e. Manœuvre des Vaisseaux,' 1652-1719.

RENAUD, the first of the name, count of Bur-y, reigned 1027-1057; the second, succeeded y, died in the Holy Land, 1097; the third, eeded 1126, died, and was succeeded by his ghter, Beatrix, 1148.

RENAUD, the first of the name, count of Bar, ed 1105-1149, and sustained a long struggle y the emperor Henry V. The second, succeeded rother, Hugh, 1155, died 1170.

RENAUD, L., a French preacher, 1690-1771.

RENAUD, or REGNAULD. See REGINALDUS.

RENAUDIE, GODFREY DE BAPAY, Seigneur eia, a party to the conspiracy of Amboise, 1560.

RENAUDOT, THEOPHRASTUS, a physician and aphor, founder of the 'Gazette de France,' 164-1653. The 'Gazette' was continued by his ons, ISAAC and EUSEBIUS. EUSEBIUS, his onson, was a learned Orientalist and ecclesi-astical historian, 1656-1720.

RENAULT, A. C., a young woman, executed at P for attempting the life of Robespierre, 1794.

RENAZZI, P. M., an Italian jurist, 1747-1808.

RENE OF ANJOU, the last of his dynasty who n in the throne of Naples, and the father of Margaret of Anjou, wife of Henry VI., king of land, was born at the castle of Angers in 1409, and succeeded his brother as duke of Anjou and of Provence, 1434. He had previously be-ome duke of Lorraine by his marriage with Isa-ell the heiress of that state, and had suffered a ng captivity, and been deprived of the succession y his competitor, Anthony, count of Vaudemont. He is still the prisoner of that polite gentleman who he succeeded to the duchies of Anjou and rovence in 1434, and when the death of Joan II.

of Naples in 1435, gave him a claim to the Two Sicilies. These events, and the warlike employ-ment they promised to René, were a sufficient in-ducement for Anthony to rid his hands of him, and the heir of Naples and Sicily was permitted to fight his way to the throne. The succession was disputed by Alfonso of Arragon, who took Naples in 1442, and chased René back to Provence. But the conquests of the English had also de-prived him of his whole heritage in France, and René found himself a titular king of some of the fairest portions of the earth, and duke of Anjou, Maine, and Bar, without a province under his own command. Such was his position when the duke of Suffolk negotiated the marriage of René's daughter with Henry VI., and it is thus alluded to in the taunts put in the mouth of York by Shakspeare:—

'Thy father bears the type of king of Naples,
Of both the Sicils and Jerusalem;
Yet not so wealthy as an English yeoman.
Hath that poor monarch taught thee to insult?'

Margaret, however, if poor, was a finely accom-plished woman, and possessed the heroic spirit of many others of her sex in that age; her father, René, also was distinguished by many of the quali-ties of a good and wise king, whose lot was cast in evil times; and he was called 'the good King René' by his subjects of Provence. Anjou and Maine were restored to him by the treaty with Henry VI., but Louis XI., in 1473, deprived him of the former, and attached it definitively to the French crown. It was according to the necessity and the spirit of the times, for the European monarchies were then absorbing the old feudal lord-ships and petty sovereignties into themselves, and forming the national monarchies, such as France became in the next century under Louis XIV. René died at Aix in Provence, 1470, and so lately as 1823 a marble statue was erected to him in that city. He was the last count of Provence, that portion of his hereditary dominions having been annexed to France at his death. [E.R.]

RENE II., duke of Lorraine, born 1451, suc-ceeded to the duchy in right of his mother, daughter of René of Anjou, 1493, died 1508.

RENEE OF FRANCE, duchess of Ferrara, second daughter of Louis XII., was born 1510. In 1528 she married Hercules II., duke of Ferrara, and was distinguished for her love of letters, and her friend-ship for Calvin and the protestants. Died 1575.

RENNEL, MAJOR, an East Indian officer, and distinguished geographical writer, 1742-1830.

RENNELL, THOMAS, dean of Winchester, and son-in-law of Sir William Blackstone, regarded as one of the most accomplished men of his age, author of Sermons, 1753-1840. His son, of the same name, born at Winchester 1787, became in 1811 editor of the 'British Critic,' and published about the same time his 'Animadversions on the Unitarian Version of the New Testament;' d. 1824.

RENNEVILLE, CONSTANTINE DE, author of a 'History of the Bastille,' in which he had been confined on a charge of treason; born at Caen 1650, died in England 1724.

RENNEVILLE, SOPHIE, a French lady, author of works on education, 1771-1822.

RENNIE, JOHN, a distinguished civil engineer, and the first perhaps who in the execution of

